From various parts of the flooded territory there come the reports of further inundations, while from others the news is more encouraging and the refugees are watching anxiously as the waters abate, taking note of every fall even of a fraction of an inch. In the districts where the flood has continued to rise new rescue work has been immediately undertaken. A despatch from Morgan City stated that as the water had risen over two inches in twenty-four hours a steamer and a barge had been sent out to do further rescue work. From Napoleonville the committee was notified that there were fifty-odd families marooned on the banks of the Atakapas Canal, in the rear of that city, who were in the most pitiable need.

The government's aid to the flood sufferers has now practically reached its conclusion. Various dates have been set, ranging from June 1 to June 15, for the absolute cessation of the distribution of rations. About June 1 the number of refugees cared for by the government was greatly reduced and only in those sections where the water still prevented all attempts at the rehabilitation of the farms and plantations has the government continued the distribution of supplies. The problem of relief and employment for the destitute occupied the attention of a group of senators and representatives from the inundated parishes who held a conference in the Senate Chamber of the Louisiana House of Representatives late in May. It was then stated that the government's discontinuance of rations within the first week of June would produce misery and want among thousands. One of the representatives said it was his belief that many of the refugees would be in the most dire need until July 1 or even later. Even though the floods abate within a short time, it was the belief of many of the representatives that large sections of the country will produce no crops this year, so that even after the present temporary relief has been exhausted there will be thousands who must be provided with employment and whose families must be, in a measure, given aid for nearly a year. The local relief committees, it is believed, have almost reached the end of their resources, while yet the great task of returning farmer families to their homes and providing them with seed and implements with which to take up their work has hardly been entered upon.

One of the doctors who has been closely connected with the rescue and relief work in Louisiana, a few days ago described the conditions which will prevail throughout the flooded districts as the high water recedes. Most of the roads have been wiped out, he says, so that travel from the farms to the towns is very difficult. The carcasses of thousands of animals create grave danger of epidemics and the wells in the flooded region have almost all been contaminated.

From all the smaller towns come despatches of the continuation of active relief measures, and in many instances these are coupled with requests for further supplies for medical aid. From New Orleans, from Vicksburg and from Natchez active relief work is being carried on for the relief of the most pressing necessity. From Vicksburg steamers have continued to take out large quantities of rations as long as the government supplied them for distribution. At Natchez the relief committees are caring for a large number of white persons as well as hundreds of blacks.

Even although the people of Louisiana are animated by the most hopeful spirit, they are fully aware that without large outside contributions the situation will be desperate during the next few months. The need is not yet over, and cannot be—even the most pressing kind of need—for several weeks. The waters are abating very slowly, and of the 200,000 people who have been reduced to dependence upon outside aid, it is believed that at least one half will find it impossible to undertake their own full support for at least three months. This wonderfully prosperous section of America is reduced to such straits that the Red Cross workers feel that no American catastrophe except the San Francisco earthquake has presented such difficult problems.

All contributions for the relief of the flood sufferers should be addressed to The Flood Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

The following contributions have been received since the last acknowledgment:

Philip & Addie Dasch	$5.00
Miss Augusta J. Cooper	5.00
W. J. & Belle Buchanan	5.00
Reader, Salem, N. J.	1.00
A Sub'r., Franklin, Tenn	2.00
H. D. J., Claremont, N H	2.00
A Friend, Waunakee, Wis	1.00
A Reader, Fremont, Mich	2.00
Mrs. Margaret Bauman	2.00
K. A. M. & J. E. M., Leesburg, Ind.	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. C S Sherman	2.00
Mrs. Martha Van Houton	1.00
Mrs A W Parker	25.00
Miss M. A. Ailes	5.00
Mrs. A. Rankin	5.00
——, Findlay, O	10.00
Miss O. A. Ford	25.00
S. F. Hormold	5.00
L. Loucks	2.00
D. C. Shattuck	2.00
Mrs E Parmelee	1.00
Mrs O B Truax	1.00
E. J. Hoyt	1.00
J. P. Johnson	2.00
Mrs L B Elliott	2.00
Ph J C Weigand	1.00
Mrs Fred F Hill	1.00
G. F. Caldwell	1.00
Mary E. Childs	1.00
Mrs A S Hooper	2.00
Edwin Parker	5.00
Chas. H. Packer	1.00
A. L. Ingessen	2.00
Isaiah Roosa	1.00
Mrs J F D mild	1.00
Geo. Barrougiis	3.00
Mrs E W Jones	1.50
Juliet B. Shaw	2.00
Mrs M O Brand	2.00
Chess Setzer	1.00
John P Heaman	2.50
Mrs. S. Snetsen	1.00
L. H. Sapp	5.00
From one who loves Jesus, Marlboro, N. J.	2.00
Henry Schwetzer	1.00
Mrs. S. H. Goodloe and daughter	10.00
In memory of Mrs. F. L. Norris	1.00
A Friend, Greenwood, Wis	1.00
Miss A. J. Williamson	1.00
A Sympathizer, Harrisville, N. H.	3.00
Miss D. Claremont, N. H.	1.00
A. F. P., Ransons, Va.	1.00
Mrs. N. Worcester	5.00
Mrs. Mary O. Horton	2.00
Mrs. Edna R. Roberts	1.00
Alberta Roberts	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. C. H. Lind	5.00
Alcide Reichenboch	1.00
Mrs. Artie Kent	3.00
Mrs. J. G. Messerschmidt	5.00
Jonathan Sharp	1.00
"The Ryan Family," Ayton, Ont.	2.00
J. W. Zook	5.00
Mrs. R. Weekley	1.00
Mrs. C. L. Turner	1.50
E. P. Andrews	10.00
A Friend, Maxton, N. C.	5.00
Ed. Lawry	5.00
John Chesney	5.00
Mrs. C. Gardiner	15.00
H. A. McQuiston	5.00
Friends, Geneva, Ga.	5.00
John Farrington	11.00
Mrs. Kate Davis	5.00
Samuel Clelland & Wife	10.00
Mrs. Frank Lang	5.00
L. J. Hubble	5.00
Ann & Ida Hinsdale	25.00
H. W. Mixsell	5.00
A. H. Dawley	10.00
Sub'r., Stratham, N. H.	3.00
Mrs. Harriet Stevens	2.00
J. Flottmann	1.00
G. T. & R. L. Jenkins	4.00
Miss N. M. Gillespie	2.00
E. D., Granville, O.	1.00
E. Lamb	1.00
M. Lizzie Herr	3.00
Mrs. H. M. Lampman	1.00
Serena E. Lampman	1.00
E. S. Hadley	1.00
S. W. Wells	2.00
F. S. Butler	1.00
Marian M. Acker	2.00
Mrs. C. Hammel	1.00
Annie E. Thompson	1.00
J. W. Blume	1.00
——, Cumberland Center, Me.	1.00
P. C. Burgess	1.00
Emma Woodruff	2.00
A Reader, Williamsburg, Mass.	.50
John Bennett	2.00
Geo. H. Carlton	2.00
Wm. W. Bewick	10.00
J. Anderson	5.10
David Gladstone	5.00
J. A. Truby	5.00
I. F. Price	10.00
Margaret Little	2.00
Ransom Kellogg	1.50
V. M. Smith	5.00
J. N. Cadby	10.00
Mrs. J. Thacker	3.00
Mary L. Brokaw	10.00
M. A. Goodhart	1.00
J. F Miller, Sr.	2.00
——, Blair, Neb	1.50
Wm. Eckles	2.00
J. A. Gidding	5.00
H. H. Taylor	5.00
Mrs. H. Dove	1.00
F. H. Pasell	5.00
F. E. Nitzsche	10.00
Sarah Feather	2.00
A. Mustin	5.00
Mrs S A Sinnett	3.00
H. L. Lyon	3.00
G. W. Michael	1.00
Ethel Barber	1.00
Mrs. P. Chesby	2.00
M. E. Fobes	2.00
Mrs E W Sisson	3.00

A SAWMILL SETTLEMENT FLOODED OUT. FLOODED BUNGALOW NEAR BRIERS, MISS.

Heroic Service and Great Reward

A Flag Day Sermon

BY

Rev. John A. Chambliss, D.D.*

TEXT: "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word."—Rev. 3: 8

IS THERE any reason why we should not welcome Flag Day to a place in our ecclesiastical calendar? Could the strictest churchman find fault with such an observance? Is any spot too sacred for the display of that emblem of our national life, provided it be really intended as a declaration of dependence—our absolute dependence—as a nation upon the God whom we serve as Christians; a declaration of our faith that God planted this nation and has preserved it until this day, and of our hope that God will keep this nation and purify it and exalt it more and more for his own glory in the generations to come?

For my part, I should be glad to see that flag always floating over every church in the land, as it floats over every schoolhouse. I believe in the union of church and state—not in the political sense—not a union that gives the state power to rule the church, or the church power to rule the state, but a union, a wedlock, of mutual love and sympathy and helpfulness, where neither lords it over the other, neither usurps the place of the other, but both stand in God-given privileges and rights and obligations, side by side, close together, arms intertwined, with eyes uplifted to the same divine power and wisdom and love in which both do live and move and have their being.

The Beginnings of the Flag

The appropriateness of the text announced may not immediately appear, yet a little reflection may find in it suggestions which fitly enough connect themselves with this occasion. Recall the time—one hundred and thirty years ago—when the "stars and stripes" first waved as the flag of this people. Remember the weakness, the comparative insignificance, then of our political and national condition among the nations of the earth. Remember at the same time the simplicity and sincerity of the religious faith of our forefathers of those and still earlier days, how without much knowledge, or many books, or colleges and universities and great scholars; without experience of self-government in religion, without organization, and with precious little money—exhausted by Indian wars and by the great war for freedom—they nevertheless stood foursquare to all the winds of infidelity and false doctrine, "kept the word of the Lord, and did not deny his name." (Oh that as much might be said of the powerful state and the powerful church on this continent to-day!)

May we not then, without any violence, take these words of the Lord addressed first to a feeble little body of struggling Christians in Asia Minor, and conceive of them as spoken for the encouragement and comfort of all in like case to the end of the world—churches, or nations, or individuals—feeble, struggling, yet faithful to His Word and to His name? May we not believe that to the American people of the colonies and the first constituted States God said, out of his infinitely wise and loving fatherly heart, "I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name"?

The Open Door

What an open door it was that he set before this nation in the days when that flag was born! How wide open and to what a glorious future—who then either saw or dreamed?

The word to the little church was "No man can shut the door"—that is, no force from without, no human power, should prevail against the mission of that church, and its march with the whole church to the conquest of the world for Christ. But the Lord did not say that they themselves might not shut the door of opportunity and privilege and progress for themselves. If they ceased to be faithful—ceased to keep his word and confess his name—the door of all blessing for them would close forever.

And no man—no earthly power—has yet shut the "open door" for this nation, now grown so great. From generation to generation it has advanced—sometimes, indeed, receding for a space, in calamitous and evil days, but presently flowing onward and upward again to a still higher mark of prosperity and strength; finding the door ever wider open to all that makes for stability and happiness—for opportunity to serve mankind and to glorify God.

And yet, have we no fear that that door will ever be shut? Alas, if it should be by our own suicidal hands! By our becoming another than the happy people whose God is the Lord; a people whose God is pleasure, or gold, or glory; a people to whom the word of the Lord has ceased to be a precious thing, and the name of the Lord has become a thing to be denied and cast away from our faith and hope.

But another thought comes to us as we look at the flag and read our text: The flag reminds us—how can we think of the time it first floated to the breeze without fresh assurance of the truth—that weakness does not mean ineffectiveness and failure; that weakness may have in it the secret of immeasurable force, the certainty of victory and the promise of great reward. That is the voice of our nation's flag as it comes down to us from the beginning of our history. And that precisely is the voice of the Lord Jesus as we hear it in the words of the text: "Thou hast a little strength, and though it be so—though thou art so weak, hast so little to fight with and so little power to fight—nevertheless thou hast done this splendid thing: thou hast kept my word and hast not denied my name. Therefore, I have greatly honored thee by setting open before thee a door—of all blessing and all power to bless—which no man can shut."

What the Flag Stands For Little strength—heroic service—great reward! That is the lesson of the flag and of the text. I say heroic service, for the weak little army of the Revolution, the world knows, was heroic. And the weak little church whose letter from the Lord Jesus we borrow to-day—just doing its plain, humble, Christian duty day by day—was as truly a band of heroes as any army, great or small, that ever stood or fell on a field of battle. For the truest, highest, noblest heroism does not necessarily go with guns and flags. Even so far as it is connected with war, it does not belong only to him who goes to the front and without flinching stops a bullet of the enemy with nothing stouter than his naked breast. The men who are ordered to "lie down" at the foot of the hill while their comrades storm the heights; the men who languish in the army hospital and maybe die there; the men who are held back at home—waiting, wishing for the word to march—tugging at the leash; who have offered their lives, though the sacrifice was not accepted and consumed—all these have the same spirit of heroic devotion to their country. They may never hear the shouts of popular applause, and when they die their monuments may not ornament the parks nor their names be inscribed in the halls of fame, but these are not the best things nor the richest rewards.

Who is it that sings of one of those whom the world calls heroes because they die bravely:

> So he died for his faith. That is fine—
> More than most of us do.
> But say—can you add to that line,
> That he lived for it too?
>
> It is easy to die! Men have died
> For a wish or a whim—
> From bravado, or passion, or pride.
> Was it harder for him?
>
> But to live—every day—to live out
> All the truth that he dreamt,
> While his friends met his conduct with doubt,
> And the world with contempt—
>
> Was it thus that he plodded ahead,
> Never turning aside?
> Then we'll talk of the life that he led—
> Never mind how he died.

You remember that Isaiah tells us of those who first "shall mount up on wings as eagles," and then "shall run and not be weary," and then "shall walk and not faint." That seems like a coming down, an anticlimax—to go from flying to running, and from running to walking. And yet, rightly apprehended, it is not an anticlimax, but a climax of the sublimest sort. It is often a finer thing, a more heroic thing, to "walk and not faint" than it is to mount up as on eagles' wings. Plodding is harder than flying, and requires a higher sort of courage. This world is not to be taken by storm, but by patient, steady, strenuous work, and the men that do it—whether working for Christ or working for themselves—are the men who can endure to "walk and not faint."

Surely it is the voice of all sober experience that the longer one lives the smaller and poorer seem to be the prizes of ambition for which so many are struggling in this world—the splendors of wealth, the glory of war, the trumpet-blasts of fame in the political arena. How long do they last and how much do they bring of happiness and peace? Even in the short lifetime of our younger men and women, how the wheel of fortune has turned for many who once were at the top! How names once spoken with admiration have since been tossed about in ridicule and scorn and flung out to rot! It would be easy to mention scores of names of the social, the business, the political, and the military world, a little while ago splendidly shining—now in the dust and trampled under foot of men.

Real Heroism and Its Reward

No, no, it is not worth it—it is not worth the struggle to reach the heights of popular favor, to win the smiles and adulations of the multitude, to get your names and pictures in the papers with great admiring headlines, and even to ride under triumphal arches. The winds are too fickle. Do not be sorry if you missed the chance to win glory on some field of battle and return a hero from the war; if you missed the chance to be "some great one" in the political or the commercial or the social world; and do not be sorry if you never had and never shall have such a chance. Be heroes of the common life—in the home, in the school, in the workshop, in the undistinguished business or professional office; just patiently, strenuously going round and round:

> God's angels drop, like grains of gold,
> Our duties midst life's shining sands,
> And from them, one by one, we mold
> Our own bright crown with patient hands.
> From dust and dross we gather them:
> We toil and stoop, for love's sweet sake,
> To find each worthy act a gem
> In glory's kingly diadem,
> Which we may daily richer make.

Most of us, perhaps every one of us, will but die in the round of common duties—in the fulfilment of a very ordinary routine. Happy we, if that routine be accepted loyally, if those duties be cheerfully done. For if life be a battlefield, then, like other battlefields, it is won by the nameless multitudes, by the unrecorded hosts. The great leaders rise and fall, conscious that theirs shall be the glory of the victory. But, as the thin lines advance to battle amid the storm of shot and shell, each private in the ranks knows that where he falls the crocus and the violet may blossom over a nameless grave. And yet they advance unflinching, lines unwavering, to win the day or die—"those unnamed demigods," as Kossuth called them. They give their lives, and what can a king do more?

So we too, however commonplace, however lowly, however little our strength, can keep the ranks unbroken. We can be of the faithful who were not famous. We can make sure, by grace divine, that where we stand, in the great battle with evil, there shall be no swerving of the line.

It may cost, nay, it must cost suffering. There is no other entrance into glory, the glory of any victory—victory over the low, the false and the evil, over selfhood or satanhood—but the gateway of suffering. The history of our country, from Valley Forge and the Brandywine to Appomattox and the death-bed of a martyred President, proclaims the truth. The history of Christianity, from the death of holy Stephen under the murderous hail of stones to the life of the youngest faithful Christian here, proclaims the truth. Even that flag, which is loved and reverenced through all the world as the bringer of free communion between nation and nation, the bringer of order and equal justice and holy freedom

Continued on next page

* Late Pastor, First Baptist Church, Plainfield, N. J.

Poems Everyone Should Know

A Fancy from Fontenelle

THE Rose in the garden slipped her bud,
And she laughed in the pride of her youthful blood,
As she thought of the Gardener standing by—
"He is old—so old! And he soon must die!"

The full Rose waxed in the warm June air,
And she spread and spread till her heart lay bare;
And she laughed once more as she heard his tread—
"He is older now! He will soon be dead!"

But the breeze of the morning blew, and found
That the leaves of the blown Rose strewed the ground;
And he came at noon, that Gardener old,
And he raked them gently under the mold.

And I wove the thing to a random rhyme,
For the Rose is Beauty, the Gardener, Time.

AUSTIN DOBSON.

Austin Dobson is now in his seventy-second year. He was born at Plymouth, England, in the year 1840. Much of his verse is written in the old French forms of the rondel, triolet, ballade, etc. These artificial forms, however, have not hidden or injured his genuine poetic feeling and personal human touch. His verses are as a rule marked by a characteristic charm and sensibility; in fact, it is probable that the conventional structure of his verse will give his work a longer life than he might have secured by the use of more natural and commonplace meters.

Heroic Service, Great Reward

Continued from preceding page

and the divine majesty of law and the light of the blessed Gospel wherever it goes—is not that flag a beautiful and deep sign to us—almost an ordinance of God to us—that, whether for nations or for men, stripes are first—blood-red, perchance—and only afterward, and through them, stars of glory?

He who will not suffer for principle has no principle. He who will not suffer for love—love of man, love of country, love of God—does not know what love is. To sink self, to bury self—that is greatness, that is glory. And that may be the way and the portion, not of the mighty only, but of them that have "little strength." God helping us, we can be of those who, in great weakness, still have courage to keep the word of the Lord and not deny his name; and who, as the reward of his grace, shall find ever before them an open door which no man can shut—a door into peace and usefulness and eternal life.

Anvil Sparks

..A PUFFED-UP person is a poor sort of uplifter.

..A SHARP attention to duty keeps the eyes bright.

..WHEN one is not true to himself his whole life is a lie.

..IT IS the load of doubt which overweights the shoulders.

..A BODY worn out in service is the most easily supported in old age.

..A TRULY brave person never erects a shrine to his own heroism.

..A CHICK that dies in the shell is like the good purposes of some people.

..FILL the days with good works and you shorten them, but you lengthen life.

..A READY tongue should always be ready to stop when enough has been said.

..IF the burden is more than you can bear, it is not God-given, for he has promised to give no burdens of such a size.

The Man Who Stood Still

By Eugene Thwing

PROGRESS is the one vital, indispensable thing in all life. Progress is life itself. The moment progress stops death begins. Watch the rose in your garden unfold its beautiful petals. There is increasing life just as long as the growth and development of the flower goes on. When its growth is complete, when the rose, full blown, has opened its red heart to the sun, proud in its perfect loveliness, already death is beginning, and soon the petals fall.

No man can afford to stand still. No church, no business, no nation can stand still without suffering from the sure encroachment of decay and death. The world is going on. It calls to every live man to at least keep step with the procession if, perchance, he cannot lead. So strong is the impulse onward, that multitudes are surging forward even though they know not the road, and they call not alone for their brothers to keep step, but they call loudly for leaders.

. . .

BUT there are men who stand still in the midst of all this eager movement forward to better things. Poor Rip Van Winkle, lying down by his old gun and sleeping for twenty years, and then waking to find all the world changed, is but a prototype of the Rip Van Winkles to-day. The newspapers told, a few days ago, of the death of a quaint character in Illinois. W. D. Stockwell, of Aurora, was known as "The Man Who Stood Still."

As owner of one of the biggest stores in northern Illinois, outside of Chicago, during the Civil War, he prospered. After the war he failed to keep abreast of the times, and the same goods which he carried then still adorned the shelves and shopwindows of the store. Five years after the war he was still making a profit, but the profits were rapidly growing less. In ten years more the place was a curiosity shop, and continued so. The hoopskirt, barber striped hose, jet jewelry, and like antiquities continued a part of his stock. In later years he was the only one who entered the place except visitors to the city. He did no advertising. He had about $10,000 worth of goods, and settled down to wait for customers who never came. The business was dead, but he didn't know it. He was at business at 7 o'clock each morning, and remained until 6 o'clock in the evening. He was 77 years old.

One smiles, and then feels sad. Yet how many business concerns, large as well as small, are letting death creep into the factory, or the shop, or the office, simply because they are failing to push forward. Profits have been large in other years. Now is a time to rest, to save expense, to discontinue advertising, to trust to an established reputation, and an established demand for the well-known goods. Such a policy has been adopted definitely in the past by some of the largest producers in the country. Invariably it has been an invitation to death. Live concerns in the same business have pushed to the front and substituted their name, their reputation and their goods, by aggressive advertising and distribution methods, for the name, reputation and goods of the concern that stood still.

. . .

RIP VAN WINKLES are so plentiful in these days that it is necessary to make a great deal of noise and do a great deal of shaking to rouse them from their stupor. The borderland between sleeping and waking often is an uneasy one. It is said that dreams come most frequently just before waking. Those who have ever tried to rouse a heavy sleeper know how hard it is, and how the sleeper seems to resist again and again, as, with many a grunt and groan, he turns over stubbornly to sleep. Just then, we may be sure, he is dreaming terrible things of monsters attacking him and of his helplessness to ward them off. When at length he wakes to the light he will laugh at the horrid shapes of his dreams.

Some of the Rip Van Winkles of to-day are having fearsome nightmares as they turn and groan in their sleep, resisting all efforts to wake them, while the world moves on. But progress is natural and inevitable. Some day the sleepers will wake suddenly and try to find their places in a strange world, which by that time will have learned how to do without them.

. . .

THE rose is not a type of human life. For a little while it buds, and grows, and unfolds in ever increasing beauty, and then it must stop. Its growth is completed. It can go no farther. It must stand still and wait for death.

The glorious thing about a man's life is that it never reaches its completion. It need never stand still. The unfolding beauty, the increasing richness may go on forever. Old age is not a stopping place; it is a period when the richest life is possible, when the sweetest fragrance may be given out to the world. Old age is a time for the gathering up of the fulness of all the years that are past, and extracting from them the ripe blessings which youth can never give to mankind. Old age is not a time to stand still. It is the time when the eager soul hears more clearly the triumphant music of the glory march calling him on to the more abundant life beyond.

The saddest sight in the garden is a beautiful rosebud blighted and stopped in its unfolding. The pink petals have just begun to show through the green, and something has happened. The bud never can be a rose. In a cultured home in Massachusetts, so I have read, a baby plays on the nursery floor, like any other baby of eight or ten months old. She eats, drinks, cries, and laughs. She is taken up and cared for and put to bed, night after night, as any helpless baby. But no mother's heart beats with joy and hope as she kisses the little one good night and thinks what a splendid daughter she shall have to comfort her old age. This baby is a baby who stood still. She is seventeen years old, and does not grow in body or mind.

In some other homes are sons and daughters, full and strong of body, grown, it would seem, to young manhood and young womanhood, with minds of normal capacity to take in the marvelous things from printed books of learning and from the more wonderful book of life. Things that are real, and earnest, and worth while call to them. The world hurries on, taking with it every ambitious, purposeful man and woman, yet somehow these sons and daughters do not heed the call. They prefer to stand still and play with the little, meaningless things around them.

It is not yet too late. They can be roused. They can get the vision of their own city of destiny in the radiant distance. They can have their ears unstopped and hear the ringing call that comes to them as it came, of old, to the wanderers who were about to start out into a life of their own: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

THE LOST FACE

THE clouds roll by in the heavens
In masses of purple and gold;
And I look for a rift among them,
That will her face unfold.

I strain my eyes in darkness,
I blind them in the light
For a glimpse of that face so precious,
Most beautiful, most bright!

But not till earth and heaven
And all things pass away,
Shall I behold my darling's face
In the light of eternal day.

E. F. D.

Church Officials Meet

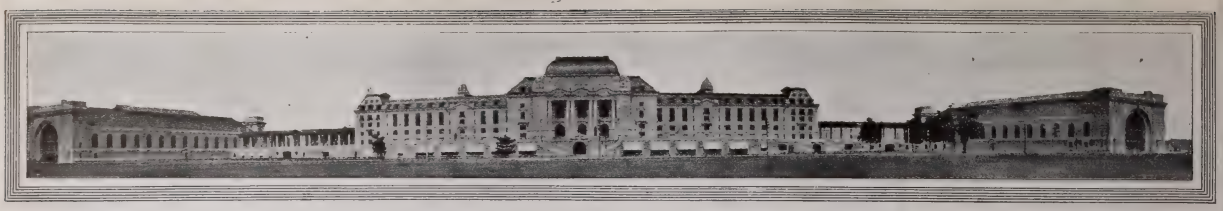
THE month of May was the season for the gathering of a number of most important church assemblies. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met at Louisville, Ky., and elected as moderator Dr. Mark Allison Matthews, pastor, at Seattle, Wash., of what is said to be the largest Presbyterian congregation in the world. The Boards of both Foreign and Home Missions reported the most prosperous year of their history. The Assembly approved a new intermediate catechism, subject to amendment and revision at the next Assembly. The Presbyterian Church was pledged by the General Assembly to a campaign of increased evangelistic effort throughout the coming year, and Charles L. Huston, of Coatesville, Pa., was re-elected head of the special committee on evangelistic work. An additional standing committee, that on Vacancy and Supply, designed to bring the pastors without charge in touch with the vacant pulpits, was organized. Two new synods, that of New England and that of Arizona, were created.

One of the most interesting acts of the Assembly was the recalling of Secretary Wilson as the appointed delegate to the Pan-Presbyterian Council to be held in Scotland next year, and the appointing in his place of John W. Foster, of Washington, formerly Secretary of State under President Harrison. This action was taken by the Assembly as a rebuke to Secretary Wilson for accepting the chairmanship of the recent convention of brewers. The friends of the advanced ideas for women were disappointed by the decision against the proposed admission of women to the pulpit.

The Northern Baptist Convention met at Des Moines in the latter part of May, the Southern Convention at Oklahoma earlier in the month. Mr. Henry B. Bond, a business man of Brattleboro, Vt., was elected president of the Northern Convention, and Dr. E. C. Dargan was unanimously re-elected president of the Southern Convention. The Northern Baptists favored a world conference, as suggested by the Protestant Episcopal Church, looking toward the unity of all Protestant churches. The Convention agreed upon a plan for religious work among students in State universities and colleges in connection with other denominations. A national secretary of the Church Board of Education will be employed by the Convention to supervise this important work. The Southern Baptists showed a splendid increase in contributions for Sunday school work. It took thirteen years, from 1891 to 1904, to bring these contributions up to $100,000; in five years more they were increased to $200,000; and during the last three years they have grown to more than $300,000.

The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church met at Bristol, Tenn.; the United Presbyterian Church at Spokane, Wash., the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Warrensburg, Mo. The Society of Friends held their yearly meeting in New York, beginning on May 26. The Methodist Protestant Church held its General Conference at Baltimore.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was in session during the entire month at Minneapolis. A brief report of its proceedings will appear in the next number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.



Panoramic View of the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Showing from Left to Right the Armory, Bancroft Hall and Gymnasium

CHRISTIANITY AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY

BY ELIHU S. RILEY

Philip Van Horn Weems

President of the Christian Association and All-round Athletic Winner

THE United States Government recognizes as a fundamental principle the fact that this "is a Christian nation," as judicially decided by the Supreme Court of the United States (U. S. Reports, 143, p. 457), by erecting in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, in Maryland, a splendid chapel, at the cost of nearly $500,000. The government has also regularly appointed and employed naval chaplains to minister in spiritual things to the officers and midshipmen at the institution. Officers and midshipmen attend the religious services. Christian guilds and bodies have been organized to further the work and to inspire individual religious sentiment among the men.

From the establishment of the Naval Academy in 1845, the government has regularly detailed a chaplain to the Academy. The first was the Rev. George W. Jones, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church. His work, a few years later, was supplemented by the organization of a Bible class amongst the midshipmen, which was taught by Captain Samuel Carter, then of the navy, but afterward of the army, and who, during the Civil War, rose to the rank of general. At present there is a Sunday school for the children of residents in the Naval Academy. This is necessarily small; but it includes all who have no affiliations with the Sunday schools of Annapolis. Many of the officers and their families are loyal participants in the chapel services, and are fairly regular in their attendance. The situation along this line is about like the average in civilian life.

Daily prayers are conducted by the chaplain, Chaplain Evan M. Scott, U.S.N., in the Mess Hall, immediately after breakfast daily, except on Sunday, when regular services in the chapel take their place. Services are held in the chapel twice a week during Lent. The chaplains of the several Protestant denominations, recognizing the number of Episcopalians in the navy, and the fact that the whole navy is familiar with the Episcopal service, which is in common use on shipboard, conform as far as they think suitable to the form of worship adopted in the Protestant Episcopal Church. They appear in the pulpit with the robes of the "doctor of divinity."

There are two organizations that assist the chaplain in his work—an efficient Auxiliary of the Navy Relief Society, which aids in raising funds for the national organization and which assists any needy persons who are connected with the navy. There is also a fine Young Men's Christian Association composed of the midshipmen, of whom there are about eight hundred. In addition to the moneys raised by the Relief Association, the chapel offerings are used to a limited extent in cases where the Navy Relief Society is not permitted to work.

Practically all midshipmen are sustaining members of the Christian Association, and thus contribute to the support of the reading room and the publication of Reef Points, a handbook filled with useful information for the midshipmen and issued at the beginning of each academic year. Active membership of the Association is limited to the customary requirement of membership in some evangelical church. Association meetings are held every Sunday evening, and are addressed by some prominent speaker from Baltimore or Washington, or by visiting clergymen. Occasionally an officer, and sometimes a midshipman, will be the speaker of the evening. These meetings this year have proved very helpful.

Another activity of the Christian Association is Bible study. This is done in groups of ten or more, with one of the upper classmen as leader. The leaders meet in a normal class conducted by the chaplain. The life of Christ has been studied this year, together with a short course in the Book of Proverbs.

The Christian Association exercises a good and restraining influence. During the superintendency of Captain Willard H. Brownson, U.S.N., (1902-1905), the Association began a new life. It was greatly strengthened by being permitted to hold its meetings on Sunday evenings, instead of in the afternoon. Study hours begin at the Academy at 7:30 P.M. By the new rule, midshipmen were free to attend the Association meetings.

An officer of high religious principles always commands respect in the Naval Academy, and has an influence for good—"more so," declared a former chaplain of the school, "I should say, than in most any other institution. At the Naval Academy goodness always goes for its face value." Statistics show that from seventy-five to eighty per cent. of American naval officers are members of Christian churches. The offerings at the chapel are liberal—from six to twelve hundred dollars are contributed there annually and used in charity.

The president of the Christian Association is Midshipman Philip Van Horn Weems, a native of Tennessee and a member of this year's graduating class. He states with emphasis that there is a moral and religious element in the Naval Academy. While, of course, there are those, as amongst all classes, who do not make a great deal of the religious life, yet, upon the whole, the tone of the corps is moral, and there are many religious men here who have the contingent support of other moral men who represent the very best type of true, clean, upright young manhood. The register of the Naval Academy shows 732 midshipmen. Of these, 335 are active members of the Christian Association, and all midshipmen are associate members, enjoying the privileges of the reading-rooms, attending the Association's entertainments and lectures, and receiving copies of its publications. The organization makes every effort to cultivate the spiritual side of the men in the Academy. It gives all the midshipmen not otherwise allied with Christian work a chance to show their colors. As soon as new midshipmen enter they are given the opportunity to become active members of the Association.

Evan M. Scott, U. S. N.

Chaplain at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis

On Sunday morning, public services are held in the Academy chapel. Every midshipman must attend or be accounted for. This "accounting" includes conscientious scruples for not participating, attendance on other churches, official duties and sick leave. The brigade of midshipmen marches up in a body in military order, the members take their places in the chapel, the officers and their families are seated in the rear of the corps, and civilians are allotted the places left in the auditorium and the galleries. Ushers in full dress uniforms escort the people to their seats. A midshipman choir leads the singing. When the strains of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," rise in the chapel, the very atmosphere is national and patriotic. Then the Apostles' Creed is recited in unison, and the stirring notes of "Onward, Christian Soldiers" follow with the sentiment:

We are not divided—
All one body we;
One in hope and doctrine—
One in charity.

The Midshipmen on Dress Parade at Annapolis

Thus is emphasized in a marked manner the fact that there is "the church universal." So broad and catholic is the worship in the chapel that sometimes Catholic midshipmen attend Protestant service there.

Among the Lowly (See Cover)

THE cover of this issue is a two color reproduction of one of those supremely lovely and satisfying pictures which seem to shed blessings on those who look upon them. The Master, kingly and humble, standing in the full light of the homely cottage doorway, blessing the meal around which the peasant family gathers, seems casually to have happened there, and is hauntingly actual. The warm light of his presence reflecting itself in faces lighted up with wonder and reverence is almost too impressive, too human. Yet how clearly one reads there the message of the picture—For though the Lord be high yet hath he respect unto the lowly.

The artist, Leon Augustin L'Hermitte, was born in 1844, and has won many prizes and medals in both the French and German academies. There are but two of his paintings in this country. The other one, "The Vintage," is also in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City.

On the Dock Awaiting Direction

Strangers in a Strange Land

Waiting for a Travelers' Aid Agent

IN A STRANGE LAND

A HEARTY young German, with plenty of spirit, but little money, and no familiarity with America, was jostled off the gangplank of an incoming steamer at Hoboken, and followed the crowd to the ferry. A courteous stranger offered to purchase his ticket to New York, for which, if one pays any cash at all, one pays ordinarily the comfortable sum of three cents. Commuters and other eastward travelers walk so unconsciously from train to boat that they seldom stop to think that the cost of ferriage is included in the price of their ticket. Some great transatlantic liners, however, disembark their passengers at Hoboken and expect them to produce independently the three cents necessary for transportation to New York.

The young German handed the kind stranger a five dollar bill. The kind stranger delivered the ferry ticket and returned five cents in change. While the new arrival was pondering how far New York might be from Hoboken the kind stranger was lost in the crowd.

At another time three travelers, a man and two of his cousins, were met at the dock by a pompous person who sternly asked if they had paid their landing fees.

"No. What are they?" inquired the man.

"If you don't pay your landing fees I'll have you deported," the pompous person threatened.

"How much?" asked the travelers meekly.

"Fifty dollars each."

The money was paid and the travelers were directed to go to the place where their baggage was being inspected and there get a receipt. Then the impostor escaped.

Eleven transatlantic steamship lines, about ninety coastwise and other lines, and sixteen great railroad systems discharge passengers at New York, day by day. And to prey upon the unfortunate and the ignorant among these multitudes scores of base men and women are at work at railway station and steamer wharf. Aside from the cruel wrongs which thieves and tricksters are constantly working among these defenseless travelers, there is steadily going forward the unspeakable traffic in young womanhood. Not long ago Gen. Theodore A. Bingham, formerly Police Commissioner of New York, made the staggering statement that fifty thousand young women and girls are lost in the United States every year. The Immigration League of Chicago reports that in 1911 one thousand two hundred and forty young women disappeared between New York and Chicago.

Figures are dry, cold things. It is hard to realize that every unit of these bewildering numbers means a human heart. Wistful, delicate, full of all the possibilities for purity and joy, with circles of tender friends—where are they to-day, one by one, these lost girls?

Lost! There is something dreadful and heartbreaking in the very word. Were you ever lost—even for five minutes? Have you ever feared that some one you loved was lost—even for five minutes? Discount the figures all you please, say that a large percentage were girls that would have done wrong ultimately in any event, and you still have left thousands upon thousands, year after year, of bright, fair young women, who were baby girls twenty years ago, who are lost, lost, lost. Mothers are waiting; the home-rooms are kept as they were when they went away; the old trees and the old loves are calling. But they are lost.

Yet among the wolves who are thus snaring the lambs there is an increasing band of brave and sympathetic men and women, who are threading their way to bring protection. The Travelers' Aid Society, with headquarters in New York, has agents on duty at the piers and at two of the largest railway stations, the Pennsylvania and the New York Central, who are on the lookout for people who are in trouble of any sort, or for young women who are unaccompanied. During 1911 as many as 12,281 persons were met and assisted by representatives of the society, 7,035 at piers and 4,984 at the railway stations. Altogether, since the work began in 1905, 37,399 people, representing sixty-four nationalities, have been officially helped. Many minor acts of counsel and helpfulness have been rendered, but only those are counted which are important enough to be formally reported. Those who have received aid include men and women, boys and girls, people coming here from Europe, or eastward from the interior.

A Roumanian Girl Arriving in New York

One of the most interesting and promising features of the work of the Travelers' Aid Society is its affiliation with other welfare organizations in such a way that a traveler who is being helped is passed on from one society to another, the representatives of the various organizations meeting and protecting him until he reaches his destination. Similar societies in various European countries are in active co-operation with the New York society.

Mr. Orin C. Baker, of New York, accepted last year the position of General Secretary of the Travelers' Aid Society and took charge of the work on October 1. He had been previously the assistant superintendent of the New York City Evangelistic Committee and had demonstrated in that capacity his gifts as an efficient organizer and manager of strenuous campaigns. He is throwing himself heartily into the splendid work to which he has been called, and the society is already feeling the results of his vigorous management. Some slight idea of the rapid growth of the work may be gained from the fact that whereas in the month of April, 1910, 711 persons were aided by the society, and in 1911, 868, in the same month for 1912 1,598 persons were cared for by the agents of the society.

Mr. Baker's office in the headquarters at 238 East Forty-eighth Street is a busy place. While he is talking with you he will be called up on the telephone by a woman agent at some pier, saying that her work there is done and asking for directions as to the next task. It may be that a ship reported and expected to dock that afternoon has been delayed; or a worker who has been detailed to meet a certain vessel has been detained in her work on some troublesome case and another agent will have to take her place at the later ship. So as a train despatcher moves his trains along from point to point, on main line and branches, Mr. Baker shifts his agents through the city day and night, planning that no important landing be made which does not find an accredited agent of his society on hand to speak in the comforting tones of the mother language to the newcomers from a distant land, and to save them from falling into the clutches of people who would do them harm. The headquarters of the society is also a home for the travelers who are in need of temporary hospitality. Many a tired and lonely wanderer, arriving in the bewildering city late at night, unable to speak to any one, or, through accident, or miscalculation, or robbery, without money, has been entertained there, and sent on his way, usually her way, rejoicing.

One of the most unique methods of getting a lonely traveler into the hands of her friends was that employed by an agent of the Society, who late in the evening found a young woman at one of the railway stations and accompanied her to an address in the Italian quarter of Brooklyn, where she was to join a relative. The relative could not be found, and finally the two women walked slowly along the street, shouting the name of the family who was wanted. The cries at last reached the proper ears and the wanderer was welcomed.

The society is supported entirely by voluntary contributions. One of its strongest appeals to the sorely beset traveler is that none of its representatives ask him for money, or will take it if it is offered. In the midst of all the wagging tongues and outstretched hands trying to get his money from him, with demands for fees from porters, guides and crooks, the patient agents of the society move, seeking to give aid and comfort, refusing money, and asking only that when the traveler has reached his friends and found a home a postal card be sent back to headquarters assuring the society that all is well.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Comfort of Christ's Sympathy

IN the beautiful story of our Lord's life upon earth we find many instances of his overflowing sympathy with his disciples in their moments of distress. Once, after days of giving himself without stint to eager crowds who were contented to go without food and dress if only they might be near him, the Master chose to remain alone on the land while his disciples started to cross the sea in their fishing-boat. It was an inland sea surrounded by mountains, and in the night there came suddenly a storm that tossed the boat, now on the crest of foaming waves, and again in the depths of darkening waters. The winds were contrary. Accustomed though they were to wild nights on the mountain lake, the hardy fishermen of Galilee were distressed as they toiled at the oars. From the shore the Master saw their plight and their peril. There was no boat to carry him across the wave and he waited for none. Fearlessly he stepped from the land to the sea, and with firm tread he walked across the billows until he reached his disciples. They saw him coming, but they did not recognize in the confident advancing figure the One with whom they walked and talked upon the land. They thought it must be a ghost, and their knees shook, and their hearts stood still. Jesus spoke to them, saying, "It is I, be not afraid." And when he became a passenger on the boat the winds were contrary no longer, and the tempest hushed itself into perfect peace.

For us who are living in this modern day there are crises in life when the winds are contrary and the storms break over our heads. We, too, toil in the rowing. We, too, know what it means to be encompassed by danger and to wonder whether we shall ever again make a safe harbor. Well for us if our faith be strong and our courage high, and if we can believe in childlike sincerity in the real Presence of the Master. An old monk of the Middle Ages used to practice the Presence of Christ in every detail of his homely days. Some of us are by way of limiting our Lord's tenderness and his encompassing love to the great affairs of experience while we shut him out of the common incidents of the common day. When we are worried over our dear ones, anxious because a letter is delayed, distressed by fear lest one for whom we care is making a mistake, is ill, or in peril, why should we not remember that our Lord shares our distress and that he is strong enough to relieve it? He can cross our tempest-tossed sea to-day as easily as once he crossed the Sea of Galilee. If we listen, we who are pilgrims of the night may hear his promise of the dawn, and our hearts leap with joy when he tells us, "It is I, be not afraid."

The "Titanic" Verdict

WITH commendable promptness the Senate Committee, which was appointed to investigate the Titanic disaster, has concluded its work and presented the result of its labors to Congress. Chairman William Alden Smith and his associates conducted their task in no spirit of vindictiveness, but with a desire to get at the actual facts and to fix the blame where it belongs. Their conclusions, while generally accepted on this side of the Atlantic as just and impartial, have aroused a storm of dissent in England. Summarized, they are these:

The captain's failure to heed the warnings of icebergs was the chief cause of the disaster.

The Titanic foundered because the so-called watertight compartments were not watertight.

There were lifeboats with a capacity of 1,176 persons, which carried to safety only 706 of the 2,223 on board.

The steamship Californian, through indifference or gross carelessness, failed to respond to the distress signals "in accordance with the dictates of humanity, international usage and the requirements of law," although near enough to have done so, and to have saved all on board.

No finding is made in the report concerning the withholding of news of the wreck, and the conduct of Bruce Ismay, one of the White Star Line directors, is not criticized. Various suggestions are made for new legislation for the safeguarding of ocean travel. Bills for legislation of this character have already been introduced. The Senate Committee suggests two searchlights for each ocean-going steamer, adequate lifesaving apparatus for all passengers, and sufficient lifeboats to allow ten cubic feet of space per passenger. Vessels hereafter constructed should have an inner watertight skin in addition to the outer plating over at least two-thirds of the length of the vessel; all bulkheads so spaced that any two adjacent compartments may be flooded without destroying stability; boat drills at least twice a month; uniform rules for the regulation of wireless telegraphy; direct communication between the wireless-room and the bridge; laws to prevent interference by amateurs with wireless messages and auxiliary power by battery or engine to permit the wireless to continue in operation until the room is submerged.

In his speech after the introduction of the report, Senator Smith unsparingly denounced Captain Lord of the Californian and praised the conduct of Captain Rostron of the Carpathia. He severely criticized Captain Smith for his failure to heed the repeated warnings and censured the British Board of Trade for its lax regulations and loose inspection methods, which were "largely responsible for the awful fatality." He said, in conclusion, "We leave to England the chastisement of the guilty." In some important particulars he went further in his condemnation than the committee did. The passengers were not advised of danger. The officers of the White Star Line "battled with the truth," and he vigorously condemned their silence. The lifeboats, he declared, were filled so recklessly "that five hundred people were needlessly sacrificed."

Under this scathing arraignment the British press writhes with indignation and is expending its temper in violent attacks on the Senate Committee and its chairman. It is the truth that hurts, and the Senate Committee's outspoken condemnation, while it may pain the sensibilities of the British press, will be accepted generally as just and sensible. The time has come for reform all around in the matter of ocean travel, and the sooner the situation is accepted by British shipping interests, the better it will be for the ocean commerce of that country in the future.

After the Coal Strike

ALTHOUGH the coal strike, which began more than a month ago, has been shortlived, a satisfactory agreement having been reached, the losses sustained during these weeks have been enormous. First, in men's wages, it is estimated that the operatives have lost $14,875,000; the companies lost $9,450,000 in trade profits; the sellers of supplies, $4,375,000; the railroads in freights, $16,625,000; trainmen in wages $430,000, and retail coal dealers $1,400,000—a total of $47,155,000. This is a small sum compared with the bill of losses for the coal strike of 1902, which reached a grand total of $100,900,000. One of the worst features of a strike is that, no matter which side finally wins, both are bound to be heavy losers and, as in the present instance, the loss of the workers—who are least able to bear it—is vastly more than that of the employers.

The public is intensely interested over the forthcoming Supreme Court decision in the suit against the "coal trust." In the face of the uncertainty of the final outcome of this suit the mine operators announced a rise of twenty-five cents per ton in the price of anthracite coal to the retail dealer. The Interstate Commerce Commission recently rendered a decision in the now famous "Meeker case" in which it shows that the freight rates charged are altogether unreasonable, crowding out the independent operator, raising the price of coal to dealer and consumer, and forming the chief item of the almost unbelievably rich earnings of the railroad companies.

Publicity in Religion

THAT the printing press is the appropriate and indispensable adjunct of the pulpit was lately recognized in a very striking manner by a proposition in the report of the Men and Religion Movement. That report strongly advocated the establishment of a central publicity bureau for the dissemination of religious news. We have not heard that this has been done, and the project may be one whose realization is to be looked for in the indefinite future.

Within a very recent period, however, as we are reliably informed, a religious publicity bureau has been established in another quarter. It is organized and controlled in the interest of the Roman Catholic Church, and it sends out regularly a service of considerable volume to a large number of publications, mainly secular newspapers. Its work is skilfully done so that it may not give offense to the general public, and that their suspicions may not be awakened to the real purpose. It is a well planned campaign for the education of the American people in the religion of Rome. This is a wholly new line of tactics in the great campaign which Rome is now conducting with the ultimate object of securing religious and political ascendancy in the United States. Protestantism has its struggling factions and its rival denominations, with their varying and ofttimes conflicting interests, while the Roman Church has the tremendous advantage of solidarity, the whole body working as a unit for a single purpose. Moreover, Rome plans its campaigns not to last for a week or a month, but to extend over a period of years. It is willing to plod patiently and persistently, knowing that in the end the constant attrition will smooth down opposition and bring about the desired result. First, it means to familiarize the millions of American non-Catholic readers with its version of contemporary history from the Roman point of view; next, to impress them with the power and dignity of the princes of the church, who, it has openly claimed, are entitled to outrank all save sovereigns. It presents in deferential yet positive phrases the ancient claim of Rome's priority and spiritual supremacy. It gets the average mind accustomed to reading the descriptions of gorgeous ceremonials, of impressive masses and of the pomp and splendor of the church in America, and thus it is steadily sowing in the minds of old and young the seed which is trusted to bring a harvest of popular toleration and appreciation. It hopes in time to bring our people to the point of accepting the idea of an American pontiff.

This is the continent-wide program of education that has been already begun. What have the Protestant churches of America done, or what can they do, to counteract this new agency which has taken possession of the field? We should like to ask how the Men and Religion Movement proposes to meet the emergency. If the vast wealth of the Catholic Church is being employed for such a purpose, it can only be effectively met by a like movement, on a larger and broader scale, by American Protestantism, which has at its disposal all that is needed. The time has gone by for sectarian quarrels and denominational divergences. American Protestantism must unite its forces and its denominations must stand shoulder to shoulder if it means to maintain its integrity and retain its hold upon the faith, the confidence and the support of the people.

Neither the creed of Rome nor the personality of its leaders is now in question. It is the Romanist campaign for political and religious supremacy in the nation that must be considered as a whole. That there are many Catholics who take little or no interest in such a plan, and who may even mildly disapprove, is not to the point. The plan exists; it is already working; and it will continue to work practically without opposition, until Protestantism is awakened to the seriousness of the situation.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, June 12, 1912

	PAGE
Among the Lowly	Cover
From a painting by Leon Augustin L'Hermitte
Cuba's Black Rebellion (Illustrated)	599, 600
The Great Louisiana Disaster (Illustrated)	601
Heroic Service and Great Reward. Sermon	602
By Rev. John A. Chambliss, D.D.
The Man Who Stood Still	603
By Eugene Thwing
Christianity at the Naval Academy (Illustrated)	604
By Elihu Riley
In a Strange Land (Illustrated)	605
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	606
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	607
Choosing a Partner for Life (Illustrated)	608
By Margaret E. Sangster
The Recall of the "Hesperus" (Illustrated)	609, 611
Story by A. Ross Mackay
Sunday School Lesson	612, 613
By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Sense and Nonsense (Portrait)	613
By Josiah Allen's Wife
Our Younger Readers (Illustrated)	614
The New Children's Bureau (Portrait)	615
What Others Say	616
Our Mail-Bag	617, 618
Northwestern Development	619

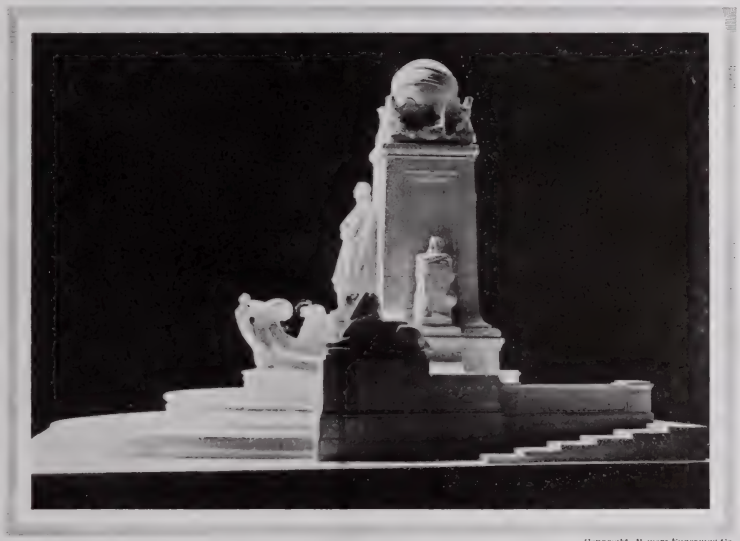
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

A National Monument to Columbus

ON JUNE 8, amidst singularly imposing ceremonies, with hundreds of thousands of participants from all parts of the country, the National monument to the memory of Christopher Columbus was unveiled in Washington, D. C. The memorial consists of a semi-circular fountain seventy feet wide and sixty-five feet deep, adorned with an heroic white marble statue of Columbus, which stands at the rear of the fountain against a stone shaft forty-five feet high. Just below the statue of Columbus and slightly overhanging the basin of the fountain is the figurehead of a ship, a female figure of great beauty, typifying the spirit of discovery. On either side of the shaft are massive figures. An American Indian reaching over his shoulder to take an arrow from his quiver represents the New World, and a patriarchal Caucasian of large proportions and thoughtful face typifies the Old World. At the top of the shaft is a globe representing the earth supported by four American eagles with wings partly extended. There is a medallion of Ferdinand and Isabella, and a huge lion at either side guarding the statue. There were processions, and bands, and crowds, and receptions, and exercises, the like of which, with the exception of the presidential inaugurations, has scarcely been seen in Washington. This is a worthy marking of one of the greatest events in the history of mankind. The Italian navigator, in his search for India by a new route, when he touched these shores never dreamed of the magnitude of the new world he had found, nor of the eternities of destiny that it contained. What a blunder and an ingratitude to have called the new hemisphere America instead of Columbia! The beautiful monument will voice the immortality of his earthly deed in these words:

He being dead yet speaketh. (Heb. 11: 4.)



The New Columbus Memorial at Washington, D. C.

Copyright, Powers Engraving Co.

Gift of Rare Birds

A FEW weeks ago, Mrs. Edwin Julius Witthaus, a wealthy widow of New York City, died, and among her bequests she left to the Central Park menagerie a collection of rare birds. She had a hobby for birds, and in world-wide travel during the last years of her life she collected the rare specimens she gave to the Central Park Zoological Gardens. In the collection were five weavers, bright red, from Madagascar; four black-headed nuns from East India; strawberry finches from India; dun-colored waxbill; orange-cheeked, white-throated zebra and cut-throat finches from South Africa and India; a white Java sparrow; Dominican cardinals from Santo Domingo; Japanese robins, and a parrot which speaks French. These beautiful creatures and their issue will delight the hearts and improve the minds of the multitudes of children and grown people who shall visit the park for nature study. There is the closest relation between birds and beauty, melody, and love as thus described:

The flowers appear on the earth; and the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land. (Sol. Song 2: 12.)

A Veteran Editor's Retirement

THE retirement of Dr. James Monroe Buckley from active service, after a long and notable career, leaves a distinct vacancy in religious journalism which will not be easy to fill. Dr. Buckley has long been the dean of the fraternity of religious editors, a strong, clear, logical writer, a power in debate, a thorough-paced parliamentarian and a terror to the slack and easy-going brethren of the cloth. As the editor of the leading weekly of his denomination, the Christian Advocate of New York, he has occupied a position and wielded an influence greater than those of any bishop. Both by voice and pen he has left a deep impression on the religious thought of the times in which he lived. Sound in view, wise in counsel, and courageous always, he has grappled with many questions which others hesitated to discuss. He has traveled far and studied human nature in many lands, and his scope and breadth of view are most unusual. For heterodoxy he has a wholesome dislike, yet few men can be more generous or tolerant on proper occasion. He is equally at home on the floor of a National Conference, ruling the storm of debate, or in the Children's Temple at beautiful Mont-Lawn, where we have seen hundreds of little tenement waifs listening with keen delight to the wise words and amusing anecdotes that fell from the great editor's lips.

A wise man is strong; yea, a man of knowledge increaseth might. (Prov. 24: 5.)

Located Garden of Eden

IN a lecture delivered at the Plymouth Congregational Church of Brooklyn recently Professor Robert W. Rogers claimed to have located the Garden of Eden. For centuries men have been trying to discover the spot where the author of Genesis located the Garden of Eden. Kiel and Baron Bunsen said it was in Armenia. Dillman and Schrader placed it in Utopia, beautiful realm of Nowhere. Haeckel and Gaspari located it in Lemuria, now a part of the Indian Ocean. Gerald Massey thought Paradise must be in Central Africa. David Livingstone, searching for the source of the Nile, expected to find there the Garden of Eden. Columbus thought the earthly paradise was in Venezuela. Dr. Warren, of Boston University, located it at the North Pole, which he claimed was once warm. Landon West thought he had found it in Adams County, Ohio. Professor Rogers says he located Eden by four rivers mentioned in Genesis. The Euphrates all scholars know, the Hiddekel is the Hebrew name of the river which is called Tigris in Greek, and this river empties into the Euphrates near its mouth. Professor Rogers said: "The other river is called Pison, and means an old river bed. Now, strangely enough, our caravan, in crossing from Damascus through to Nineveh and Nippur, found that in the rainy season there was a second great river representing the overflow of the Euphrates, branching off from the regular channel at the point where the River Tigris bends and all but touches the Euphrates. Now the writer says that this river Pison flows through the land where there is much fine gold, and there are the old gold mines, some of which are worked to this day. And he also says that it was the land of the shoham [translated "onyx" in the Authorized Version]. No one knows what the shoham was, but I believe it means the pearl, as the mouth of that river and the river bed hold the greatest pearl fisheries in the world. The fourth river is the Gihon, which is translated in the Septuagint as the Nile, and borders the land of Kush. Now there are two lands named Kush, that have a Nile. The one is in Africa, and that misled David Livingstone—while to-day when the head of our own expedition came to the banks of this very river east of the Euphrates, reined up his horse, and asked the guide what was the name of the river upon which they were looking down, he made answer that it was the 'Niles.' A circle, therefore, of a hundred miles would include all four of these rivers, and it would include the oldest palace, the oldest library, the earliest canals, and the oldest inscriptions known to the human race, and the Garden of Eden."

And a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads. (Gen. 2: 10.)

Queen of the May

A MAY party had been arranged for the last of the month at Pelham Bay Park, New York, and little Marion Covert, of New York City, had been chosen as queen. She was the prettiest and the brightest among her companions, fifty of whom gave their pennies for the expense, including the purchase of a beribboned May-pole. All the pride and radiant joy described by Tennyson in The May Queen bounded in little Marion's heart. But a few days before the party the news was spread that the queen was ill. No one could see her, but her chums tiptoed up the steps of her home to tell the mother how sorry they were and how they hoped their companion would get well soon. The mother came to the door one day and told the little girls that Marion would not be queen of the May. She had gone to heaven. And the mother and the girls had a good cry together. The girls decided they could not enjoy their May party now that their queen was dead. Instead they resolved to attend Marion's funeral in a body and to spend their fund, which was to buy flowers to crown her queen, for wreaths to put on her coffin. Marion was crowned queen of the May after all, in the fields of delight among the flowers of beauty and scenes of immortality.

Oh, not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The Reaper came that day;
'Twas an angel visited the earth
And took the flower away.

With the eye of faith we can see Marion the May queen in the King's palace and in the arms of the Saviour, for this was said of his love for children:

And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them. (Mark 10: 16.)

The Kaiser and Dueling

TWO officers, Lieutenant Sprengen and Staff Surgeon Bruening, both attached to the Thirtieth Field Artillery Regiment, fought a duel with pistols the other day at Rastatt in Baden, under the regulations of a military court of honor, and Lieutenant Sprengen was killed. This is the second officer that has thrown away his life in answer to a challenge in the last few weeks, the other one being Lieutenant von Hereingen, a nephew of the Prussian War Minister. The question of dueling is now before the Reichstag and there have been several heated debates upon the subject. The most astonishing thing is that the Kaiser should take the side of dueling and proclaim that an officer challenged should fight or resign, and that the Minister of War should echo the same sentiments in the Reichstag. It is to be hoped the Kaiser has been misunderstood on the subject, and that, being one of the most judicious men in the world, he will not lend the tremendous influence of his position to the justification of dueling, which contains in itself the double crime of suicide and murder. And yet how much better than dueling is the challenge of kings and armies, and the settlement of the question of "honor" on the bloody battlefield? The retail murder of the duel and the wholesale slaughter of the battlefield are relics of barbarism and diabolism, which must be relegated by a good conscience and just law to oblivion, in recognition of the truth that Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. (Rom. 12: 19.)

CHOOSING A PARTNER FOR LIFE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The Comradeship of Marriage

IN THIS beautiful season of the year talks on the veranda succeed naturally to chats around the hearth. We may fill the fireplace with great boughs of laurel in bloom and set roses on the center-table, forgetting for a while the glow and splendor of the blaze that delights us in the chill mornings and evenings of early spring and autumn. The more outdoor life that we can secure, the more we can inhale of fresh outdoor air, the happier and stronger we shall be.

Several weeks ago an interesting problem was presented to the readers of this page by one of our correspondents. The case was that of a young man who was attracted in almost equal measure by two young women. He was in doubt whether to offer his heart and hand to a blithe, mercurial girl of Spanish-American extraction, a girl with a quick temper and a turn for flashing repartee, a girl, in short, of changeful moods and tenses; or to her entire opposite, a sensible, tranquil and even-tempered girl who enjoyed athletic sports, understood housekeeping and was never known to be subject to sudden gusts of passion. The man himself was of mingled English, French and Italian ancestry.

. . .

THE editor of the page was convinced on her own part that he was not deeply in love with either of the fair ones, for had he been so he would not only have decided for himself, but would have disdained the friendly intervention of any outsider in making his choice. A number of letters have been received, mostly from women, commenting on the situation and offering advice. One or two have reached the page from interested masculine readers. A man's point of view is always worth looking at, and the first comment we publish this week comes to us from a man. He tells us tersely that the thing for the youth to consider is whether he shall most enjoy tranquillity or agitation. To quote him exactly read the next sentence: "An old boy who for forty years was wedded to one whom he used to call 'Mrs. Mercury' has a decided opinion as to which of the two he should choose. Not Miss Mercury for sure, for his ideal is peace and quietness; but each one must choose for himself according to his taste."

A wife contributes her opinion with emphasis. "One needs a quick temper to combat the stubborn will of an Englishman intensified by the French-Italian mixture. In order to future happiness a bride should from the first be able to hold her own, and neither be easily frightened nor subdued by the tyrannical disposition of her husband."

. . .

WE READ between the lines that the sentiments of these friends have been shaped and colored by their individual experiences. For ourselves we say, and wish that the saying might be in capital letters, "Love is enough." The man or woman about to start on the comradeship and close intimacy of married life needs an outfit of true love, unselfishness and common sense. Without the latter there will surely be no end of disagreements and disturbances.

Another phase of the question must not be overlooked. It is the woman's privilege to choose her future husband. She, rather than he, is the one on whom the burden of selection falls. He asks and she answers, and on her answer, affirmative or negative, the entire situation for after life will depend. Another contributor sends a poetic quotation:

> "A fretful temper will divide
> The choicest knot that can be tied,
> By ceaseless sharp corrosion.
> A temper passionate and fierce
> Will suddenly your joys disperse
> At one immense explosion.

"The young man should shun the influence of one whose affection would not lead to self-control."

Another letter written by a girl in her twenties comments on the readiness of a man to take for granted that either of the young women would accept him with thanks. She exclaims, "Why does a man imagine that we girls are simply waiting for somebody to come along and marry us? There are a great many girls in the world who prefer their maiden freedom to the chances of comfort and happiness in marriage."

This may be true. If it is true, more is the pity. Really, though, the average man is a wee bit prone to conceit, and it is this attitude of his that annoys a girl who thus far has solved her problem without assistance from the other sex.

. . .

ANOTHER theme for discussion was that of the woman whose life from childhood on had been a hard unshadowed affair with little sunshine and little play. One and all, with few exceptions THE CHRISTIAN HERALD friends expressed deep sympathy with this wearied and troubled soul. Some of them bid her remember that it's a long lane that has no turning, and suggest to her that though life's morning has been clouded, its afternoon may be bright. Others congratulate her on having had all along her difficult pathway the companionship of a loved husband, and on her motherhood, which must have been, from her own statement, a source of joy. Others again would have her trust in the goodness of God, and are greatly distressed at the temporary failure of her faith in his continual care.

. . .

NOT a great while ago the morning mail brought to the editor an unusual letter from a cheery, brave and merry-hearted woman who has passed the limit of three-score years and ten. For gaiety and hopefulness the letter might have been written by a girl of seventeen or a wife of twenty-seven instead of by a grandmother of seventy-one years. She said, "I have always had a lot of hard work. I have never had much money. I have always had plenty of fun. I think to-day that I am younger in spirit than my granddaughters who are at the parting of the ways. My hardest times lie behind me. My best times are before me, and the present is much easier than the past has been. My husband, older than I, sits beside his desk reading books he likes and writing long letters to his absent children. My boys are making money. We never did. One of my girls is happily married, and her cup runs over with bliss. The other is rising rapidly in a difficult profession, and, on the whole, though I have had little play in my life, as I look back I would not exchange places with my old schoolmates, married or single, or for that matter, with any of the crowned heads of Europe."

. . .

What Is Extravagance?

THE extravagant person is one who is wasteful of emotion, opportunity or income. Habitually to spend more than one earns and to mortgage the future for the pleasure of the present is to be extravagant. He or she who abridges health by making unwise drafts on physical capital is extravagant and will one day pay the price of folly in sleepless nights and ill-adjusted nerves. There may be extravagance in the line of its opposite. The miser who hoards as the crow does for the mere satisfaction of accumulating and hiding away his spoil is as extravagant in reality as the spendthrift who takes no thought for the morrow in the indulgence of to-day.

We are extravagant in speech when we pile one adjective on another and use italics in vehement assertions when we might much better restrain ourselves and not push language to the breaking point. The student who burns the midnight oil or uses his eyes to excess in the small hours of the morning is extravagant and may rue his folly in days of darkness.

We too often forget that extravagance simply means wandering from the safe road in any direction, and that, though the price be long delayed, Nature will be sure to exact the payment.

. . .

Summer Diet

FRESH fruit is one of the best desserts to be served in summer. A farmer's wife once said that for her part she thought only a lazy and indifferent housekeeper would offer berries and apples uncooked to her family and guests when she could just as well slip fruit into pastry and give them pies. A perfect pie with flaky crust and delicious flavor is not to be despised, but for children and older people who have not perfect digestion, fruit, ripe and sweet, is more wholesome than rich pastry.

During the hot season cold desserts are appreciated, and the prudent mother will do well to remember that vegetables, cereals, fish if it can be had perfectly fresh, and above all, fruit, form the staples of safe and wholesome diet in the summer.

Drawn by Louise B. Mansfield

THE END OF THE DAY

By Margaret E. Sangster

IT IS not sad at the end of the day
When we reach the golden age,
Where the sunlight falls from the jasper walls
On the beautiful final page.
Voices were sweet in the morning hour
When we walked in Lovers' Lane,
When our steps were light and our eyes were bright
And we recked nor loss nor gain.

We've had rough and smooth as we've trod the road,
And we've ever been comrades leal;
Honest and true the long day through,
We have shared our woe and weal.
There were little heads in our crowded home,
There were young folk blithe and gay;
They have gone apace on the selfsame race;
We have fared to the setting day.

We have shared the loaf, we have shared the cup,
We never have grown apart;
Old Time is a cheat, for our pulses beat
As in youth's exultant heart.
The children's children are ours to love,
They are helping to keep us young.
The songs we hear as the night grows near
From the heavenly flights are flung.

THE RECALL OF THE "HESPERUS"

BY A. ROSS MACKAY

AD'S ship had been home two or three days before he heard of the chase after the Hesperus. Mother told him all about it one evening, when we were sitting around fire after singing "For Those in Peril on the ," as we always do, whether Dad is home or . We had to help Mother with the story in ces, as she wasn't down by the beach when the sperus put to sea. Dad looked very grave when heard the whole story, and, putting his arm und Mother's shoulder, said: "Boys, we can't be sailors; at least, not at the same time. ther has to be looked after, you know, and when ive up the sea, you can have your turn."

A few days later, when we three—meaning Dad, ly and me—were out fishing in the Lobster, ich is the name Dad has given our boat, he sud- hly looked up from baiting his hooks to say, ou're a fine pair of little men, anyway." I bet was thinking of the Hesperus when he said that, d Billy and me felt better about it.

You see, it all started with Dad bringing home e hull of a fine nooner model with a pper bow. We saw n coming up from e harbor with it and essed it was heavy, d when we gave him hand, Dad said, it dn't weigh so much. e laid the hull on the or while Mother set nner, and talked of e best way to rig it. fter dinner Dad got t a big book filled ith pictures of all rts of ships, and we cked out the smart- t craft for our model. ad said she would ire carry some sail, it would be a flier.

For the next two or ree days we were isy at work on the gging. Dad brought me some strong sail- oth and cut the sails seven of them—while other did all the sew- g. The rigging took n awful time, as Dad ould have all the locks and gear just ke a regular sea-going hip. So you see, Billy nd me couldn't help uch.

When she was at last nished and had all her anvas spread she stood igher than Billy and eemed to take up most f the parlor. She had ittle houses on the deck, water barrel and ther fittings, just like real ship, and an anchor on each side of the bow. t her mastheads were what Dad called her "house" ag and another with her name, while a small star- pangled flag floated aft at the mainsail. Her name as painted with gold letters on the bow—the Hes- erus—after the one "that sailed the wintry sea" in he poem.

Two days after the Hesperus was finished Dad's hip put to sea. Mother always feels bad when Dad is at sea in the winter months, especially if the weather is heavy when he puts out. When Billy nd me forget the heavy weather and talk of the ime when we will be real sailors on a ship like Dad's—and sometimes we do talk that way when we are sitting with Mother at nights—she gently akes my head from her lap and steals out to the back of the house, where she can see far out beyond Dead Man's Rock and hear the booming of the breakers as they pile up around the lighthouse here. Then we know that she is crying a little on account of Dad being out on the Banks, and we go out beside her and lead her back to the fireside. When Billy almost always says that he will be a butcher, like fat old Heinz on the water front, and I am just as sure I'll be a tailor—maybe. I bet I won't get married when I am a sailor and have little boys left to look after their mother when the nights are dark and big seas are roaring in over the breakwater; nights when the house shakes as the wind screams in from the sea and the fishermen patter along the beach with lanterns and coils of lifeline.

For about a week after the sailing of Dad's ship the weather was bad. Down in the harbor the fishing-boats had sunk to the gunwales and were awash, and some smaller craft lay smashed on the beach, where they had been thrown when their moorings parted. All along the upper shore, well above high-water mark, the best of the boats were resting where they had been dragged for safety, and among them was the Lobster. She is not as pretty or big as the boats owned by the summer residents, and she leaks a little. She is all our own, though; Billy's and mine.

One morning, when Mother had gone to the town to do some marketing and the sea had gone down a little, we carted the Hesperus down to the inlet. The inlet is sheltered between two high rocky points and is the bathing-place of the summer visitors. Outside the inlet the long waves go rolling past and the sea looks black, but inside the water is clear and shows the sandy bottom right out to its mouth. Here we agreed to give the schooner her trial trip.

Drawn by Gordon Knapp Lunson

"We could see, too, that she hadn't struck her colors"

Down the jetty we navigated the cart, sliding the Hesperus into the water, where she bowed and reared as we ran her sails up and made everything snug for a sea trip. With all sails spread she strained at her moorings, as Dad would say, and it was all I could do to hold her while Billy ran around the head of the inlet to the rocks opposite. The rudder had been lashed amidships, so, when at Billy's signal I pushed her off, she headed straight for his headland, gliding swiftly through the water as he lay far over to leeward. She took about five minutes to cross the inlet and was grabbed by Billy just before she piled up on the weed-covered rocks. Then she was turned about for the home voyage and again pushed clear.

What followed will always be a mystery to Billy and me. I watched the Hesperus plunge forward from Billy's hands and sweep out clear of the rocks, laying over as her sails filled and heading directly for the jetty. Then suddenly she brought up with all sails flapping, lurched two or three times as heavy gusts of wind came in over the point, swung around toward the inlet mouth and started out to the open sea. As she cut her way to where the great waves were rolling past the inlet mouth, ducking and staggering under the heavy blasts of wind, we ran along the shores in the hope that she would again swing and head inland.

The shore is covered with boulders which are always wet from the flying spray, so we didn't travel as fast over the rocks and weeds as the Hesperus did through the water. When we at last stood on the points, wiping the salt spray from our eyes and shouting to one another, we could see the runaway heading out into the Atlantic. Then we started back for help, slipping and stumbling over the wet boulders as we ran.

I have already said that what fishing and pleasure boats were not lying high and dry on the beach were either floating full of water in the harbor or lying along the shore with their sides stove in. It was for the good boats Billy and me headed; to where Old Ben, an old-time fisherman, was browsing on a tackle locker. Old Ben knows us well and is always telling Dad that he will keep a good eye on us for his sake. He never even looked around when Billy, who was the faster on his feet, ran panting up. He just sat and nodded, muttering something about us "allers bein' up to some foolin' or 'nother."

"It's the Hesperus!" Billy shouted; "she's broken away and is heading out to sea!"

"Where would she head, Billy, my lad?" chuckled Old Ben. "Up th' town?"

"It's our boat—our schooner — the Hesperus!" sobbed Billy, grabbing the old sailor by the collar of his heavy pea-jacket so he could better get at one of his deaf old ears. "We were sailing her in the inlet, but she broke away from us."

"There she is!" I yelled in the other ear, pointing away out to where the Hesperus was rising over the crest of a big roller.

She looked awfully little and lonely.

Ben tried to peer at her from under his shaggy eyebrows, but we knew that he couldn't see far from shore. Then he shook his head sorrowfully, saying, "It's a great pity, boys; a great pity. She was a fine boat, a fine boat." That was all he said, then he turned his head so he couldn't see our distress, muttering that "nothin' smaller'n a lifeboat would be safe off shore."

But by this time Billy had started off along the shore, beckoning me to follow. We knew that Ben would only try to stop us if he knew what we were after, so we ran for the nearest boat. She was bigger than the Lobster—much bigger—but was the only one we had noticed with oars. Mother had the oars of the Lobster locked up at home, as she always has when it is bad weather along the coast.

When we reached the boat we found that she was bigger than we had reckoned, as we couldn't even move her when we started to drag her down to the water. All the other boats were about her size, except the Lobster, so to the Lobster we hurried, each dragging an oar over the shingly beach. If Ben hadn't been so deaf he might have heard the clatter and scrunch we made as we threw the oars into our boat and hauled her down to the surf.

We had a job getting her afloat, though. At the first attempt we waited until a breaker was running out, when we threw ourselves onto the gunwale and scrambled aboard. But we jumped again just before the Lobster was thrown bottom up on the beach. She had been caught and upended by an incoming wave. The water wasn't very cold, so we didn't mind as we stood and turned our boat right side up and prepared to again push off. The second time we had better luck, though twice we were carried back before we had the oars out and were sculling away for dear life!

My, but the waves were high! They weren't the long, rolling waves that had been coming in for the past week, either; but waves that broke at their tips and sent heavy clouds of spray onto our backs. We each had an oar and just kept pulling right ahead, following the course we guessed the Hesperus was on; she had been out of sight now

Continued on page 611

Contributions Received for China's Famine Relief Fund

John Miller 5.00
From Louise, Detroit, Mich. 50.00
Mrs. Mary E. Trippe .. 2.00
M. Ester Thomas 2.00
Tennessee 2.00
Nellie Johnson 1.00
A Friend, Del Norte, Colo 2.50
J. H. S., Lenoir, N. C... 1.00
Mrs. J. B. Randall .. 1.00
Rev. Robert Williams... 5.00
Mrs. J. M. May 4.75
J. D. Jones 5.00
Caroline M. Mottaz .. 5.00
A Sub'r., Billings, Mont. 5.00
Citizens of Carthage, Tex 15.25
Mrs. Mary E. Crosby... 2.00
H. B. Camden 1.00
——, Parkesburg, Pa. .. 1.00
Mrs. D. S. Godden 1.00
——, Ransons, Va. 1.00
Ellis C. Richardson 5.00
Mary Lees 5.00
Bible Class Warren Bapt. S. S., Warren, R. I... 2.00
From a friend, Lake Cicott, Ind. 1.00
A Friend 1.00
H. F. Newton 1.00
Grace & C. R. Newton.. 1.50
Mrs. L. E. Quirk 1.00
James Graham 1.00
Mrs. Lula Smith & W. A. Kerr 1.50
D. F. Marden & friend. 75.00
Mrs. A. H. Yuille 1.00
Mrs. D. F. Kein 2.50
E. A. Spaulding 10.00
A. N. Raney 5.00
Mrs. A. E. Eaton 9.00
Ladies' Aid Soc., Shawbridge, Can. 5.00
Laura Nurse 8.00
Mary E. M. Cannon ... 5.00
Mr. & Mrs. C. Phillips. 5.00
"The Sunon Family," Laotto, Ind. 5.00
C. B. Williams 7.00
Durant Family, Pasadena, Calif. 5.00
A. R. Surratt 1.00
Mrs. Wm. Duddles 1.00
Carrie S. Guffith 1.00
Mrs. W. I. Borland 1.00
Lee Wilson 1.00
——, Coram, N. Y. 1.00
Mrs. Alex. Brush 1.00
"In His Service," Scappoose, Ore. 1.00
Mrs. Bettie Leonard .. 2.00
Mrs. J. W. Harris 2.00
Joel Anderson 1.00
Beulah & Esther Bunten 2.50
Louise Lenon 2.00
Mrs. D. G. Anderson & Miss Lucy Lenton .. 1.50
Miss Anna Lenton 2.00
Charlotte E. Weis 3.00
H. I. A., Marlboro, Mass. 2.00
St. Paul's Ch., Terrell, Va. 2.22
An Old Sub'r., South Framinghaum, Mass. .. 5.00
M. H. Beltz 5.00
L. R. Vibbard & Family 5.00
Melvin Brown 5.00
Friend, Stonewall, Man. 30.00
Mrs. R. G. Mitchell..... 5.00
W. H. French 2.00
Beulah W. Sherman..... 1.00
Mary A. Anderson..... 1.00
Mrs. W. C. Sibhy 2.00
Mrs. Blanche Gentner... 1.00
Mary George 1.00
Mrs. J. A. Dunham..... 1.00
Mrs. Olivia Hesson..... 1.00
Mrs. E. C. Gay..... 1.50
In His Name, Dairyland, N. Y. 1.00
Della Andal 4.00
Mrs. Rebecca Oggisby... 5.00
Miss Frances C. Staples. 1.00
A. C. Cobb..... 25.00
Chinese Sunday School, Albany, N. Y. 25.00
George, Rochester, N. Y. 8.00
Sarah Marshall 15.00
Miss De Wacle 5.00
J. K. Judy..... 5.00
Mrs. H. D. Slocum..... 5.00
Mrs. C. M. C., Imperial, Calif. 1.00
Members of C. H. Family, Fredericksburg, Ia. 2.00
George Taylor 4.00
Carrie M. Ertel..... 4.00
A. A. H., Boston, Mass.. 1.00
C. D. Sheldon..... 1.00
A Friend, Wolcott, N. Y. 1.00
W. W. Bell 1.00
W. W. Williams..... 15.00
Wm. E. Atherton..... 5.00
W. S. Cleaver..... 5.00
Joseph S. Womeldorp & family 5.00
Mrs. F. K. and daughter 1.00
M. R. Kinney 5.00
A. J. N., Perry, N. Y... 1.00
Miss Paine 1.00
A. V. Z., Reading, Conn. 1.00
Mrs. Jenny S. McNair.. 1.00
——, Hawesville, Ky. .. 2.50
Mrs. F. R. Northcutt.... 2.00
Sunday School, Waldo, Fla. 2.07
The Ida Circle, Brooklyn, N. Y. 2.70
Mrs. M. A. Tear..... 1.50
J. N. Ogle..... 2.00
Presby. Ch. S. S., Chicago, Ill. 3.00
Eldred Friends, Eldred, N. Y. 2.50
Sarah Marshall 15.00
Mrs. & Miss Kennemuth. 5.00
T. T. T. 5.00
Rev. A. Hils and members of Ch. Wapakoneta, O. 21.85
G. & Elizabeth Letherer 2.00
George A. A. Senter..... 1.00
Mrs. Alice Devoun..... 1.00
A. F. Van Vorst..... 2.00
J. W. McClelland..... 5.00
F. H. Ferguson..... 10.00
D. Thorndike 1.00
W. J. D. Chandler..... 5.00
Chas. O. Cross..... 2.00
L. L. Seamans..... 3.00
Mrs. C. W. Norton..... 1.00
Mrs. Emeline Myers & Miss Edith Read..... 2.00
David Currie 5.00
Mrs. C. C. Thorne..... 5.00
Mrs. Clara A. Kemble.. 1.50
E. S. G., Lancaster, Pa. 2.00
J. E. Suiter..... 1.00
H. A. B., Newton, Mass. 10.00
A Reader of the C. H., Geneva, N. Y..... 1.00
Julia H. O'Neal..... 1.00
H. M. Young..... 1.00
W. H. Reed..... 5.00
T. A. Baker..... 1.00
——, Plainville, Conn... 2.00
Catharine Brown 1.00
D. B. Lehman..... 5.00
James Brandt..... 5.00
Mrs. H. G. Copley..... 1.00
Mrs. William Sliker.... 1.00
J. C. Crutcher..... 2.00
Miss Cuvelier 5.00
Mrs. E. H. Hurst..... 1.50
Louis W. Feund..... 3.00
Friend, Bloomington, Ill. 14.10
Read P. Black..... 10.00
A. E. Parr..... 5.00
Mr. M. Campbell..... 5.00
Mrs. W. T. & Mrs. R. M. Conner 2.00
M. A. Andrews..... 1.00
Martin Fee 3.00
W. I. H. Pitts..... 2.50
Mrs. E. C. Rossier..... 2.00
From a King's Daughter, Brooklyn, N. Y... 3.00
Mrs. Medley McConnell. 1.00
Mrs. Lucy P. Chapman. 2.00
In His Name, Livermore, Pa. 1.00
Katie Kimmel 1.00
C. Heates 1.00
Edwin Gardner..... 1.00
Mrs. H. J. Tuhb..... 2.00
T D H, Philadelphia, Pa. 5.00
Mrs. Bell McCormick... 1.00
From a Friend, New Bedford, Pa..... 5.00
Miss Nannie Sharp..... 1.00
L. M. & H. B. Lawson & H. E. W. Jones..... 2.00
Mrs. Frederick Hamien. 5.00
Mary Tylar 2.50
John Svenson 2.50
Miss Minnie Gabbour... 5.00
James M. Graham & daughters 6.00
Friends, East Lynn, Ill.. 5.00
J. E. K., Apopka, Fla... 5.00
Alfred Totel 5.00
Mary Totel 5.00
Theophilus Totel 5.00
Cash, Jordan, S. C..... 1.00
Simon Rorts 2.00
Marion Ponsford 1.00
Carl Pribblenon 2.00
Mrs. C. W. Witman..... 1.00
R. D. Gilbert..... 1.00
Mrs. Wm. McKnight..... 1.00
T. M. Perryman..... 1.00
In His Name, Manchester, Md. 1.00
A. L., ... 1.00
Mrs. E. G. W. Poultney, Vt. 1.00
——, Somerville, N. J.. 1.00
A Friend, Martinsburg, W. Va. 1.00
A Reader, Sparta, Mich. 1.00
Mrs. Wm. H. Dunwoody. 100.00
W. M. Langdon..... 8.50
Mrs. Alice Meaches..... 1.00
——, Eagleville, Mo.... 2.00
Mrs. C. D. Olds..... 1.00
E. Gould 3.00
A Chicagoan, Freeport, Pa. 1.00
Mrs. A. Tinkham..... 1.00
Mrs. G. W. Seiniger.... 1.00
E. C. Johnson..... 1.00
Dr. H. Benz..... 1.00
B. H., Lakemont, N. Y. 1.00
Mrs. Amelia Anderson & Miss H. M. Duncan.... 1.50
T. B. Ricketts..... 2.00
M. W. Gunn 5.00
S. B. Whiteford..... 5.00
J. B. Traywick..... 1.00
Caroline Traywick 1.00
Kate Traywick 1.00
Rev. & Mrs. G. Gary Lee 5.00
Francis Osborne 10.00
No Name, Broklyn, N Y 2.50
Clyde Salisbury 2.00
J. W. M., Mobile, Ala... 1.00
Mrs. Ida Dosher..... 2.00
Chas. Earnsby 1.00
Sub'r, St. Joseph, Mich. 1.00
W. H. Morris..... 1.00
J. G. Hughes..... 2.50
Greta Swayze..... 2.00
E. T. Morrison..... 2.50
Mrs. Helen Olney..... 1.00
Mrs. H. Slaymaker..... 2.00
Mrs. R. & S. J. Robinson. 2.50
M M A, Mt. Vernon, Ga. 1.00
Elmora Pletcher 1.00
A. Mottaz 10.00
Mrs. Chas. Dunpin 1.00
Mrs. A. D. Forbes..... 10.00
L. C. Hooper..... 100.00
——, Lancaster, Pa. ... 5.00
Mrs. Elizabeth Stebbens. 1.00
Horace Brainard 5.00
——, Beach Haven, Calif. 5.10
E. Waterloo Ladies' Aid Society, Waterloo, Ia.. 5.00
Mrs. A. W. Deck..... 5.00
Rev. J. A. Spencer..... 1.00
Mary C. Brown 2.00
Mrs. Sarah Dupin..... 2.00
Mrs. John Grant..... 2.00
A Friend, Montrose, N J 5.00
G. H. Weaver..... 5.00
I. L. W., Dingmans Ferry, Pa. 10.00
F. W. Hiddleson..... 5.00
From a Friend, Lancaster, Pa. 2.00
Mrs D M C, Alto, Mich. 1.00
F. A. Montgomery..... 1.00
Mrs. Mary J. Major.... 1.00
Louisa Seed 5.00
M. Wood 2.50
Miss J. A. Brown..... 2.00
Mr. & Mrs. Viggersen.. 5.00
——, Dayton Beach, Fla. 5.00
Mrs. John Beams, mother & children 10.00
A Friend, Marion, N. C. 5.00
John A. Parker, Est. ... 5.00
C. H. Lincoln 1.50
Mrs. M. E. Dodds..... 1.00
M. E. Gilchrist..... 1.00
S. Robitscher 1.00
W. E. Van Deventer.... 5.00
Pascogoula Bapt. S. S., Pascogoula, Miss. 3.00
James A. Hopinger..... 5.00
Mrs. M. S. Davison..... 2.00
Mary B. Olmsted 5.00
M. J. Booth..... 5.00
George Keeler 5.00
H. H. Davis..... 5.00
F. A. Salisbury..... 5.00
Mrs. D. H. Hall..... 5.00
Lorenzo Cook 5.00
Harriet E. Strong..... 15.00
Woman's Mis. Soc., Pres. Ch., Sinking Valley.. 10.00
Mrs. D. D. Smith..... 5.00
Woman's Home Mis. Soc., Smithfield, N. C..... 20.50
Albert Frary 5.00
Mr. J. J. Peoples..... 1.00
A Sub'r., Sabula, Ia.... 1.00
A Friend, Walkerton, Ind 10.00
S. E. Hearn..... 5.00
Monroe Conklin, Jr. 5.00
Mrs. R. W. Wylie..... 5.00
William Tasker 5.00
Miss Anna C. Tepper.. 10.00
Mrs. Margaret Gilchrist 10.00
James I. Gilchrist..... 10.00
Hezekiah B. Baily..... 5.00
Mrs. H. J. Esterbrook.. 5.00
Alfred Seiler 2.00
N. E. Mansfield, Kan.... 2.00
Samuel Gressly 5.00
James Burrows 1.00
Madison Circle of King's Daughters, Madison, Tenn. 10.00
Congregation of S. of 1st Reformed Church, Apollo, Pa. 28.00
Anna E. Kerr..... 5.00
Mrs. G. H. Davies..... 1.00
Ladies' Aid Society of Smyrna Prest. Church, Tenn. 7.50
S. P. I. S. S. Class, Pella, Ia. 1.25
P. T. W., Fullerton, Md. 2.00
Mary C. Bradley..... 1.50
In His Name, Albuquerque, N. M..... 1.00
W. W. Wilson..... 2.00
A Friend, Montrose, N J 5.00
G. H. Weaver..... 5.00
I. L. W., Dingmans Ferry, Pa. 10.00
F. W. Hiddleson..... 5.00
From a Friend, Lancaster, Pa. 2.00
Mrs D M C, Alto, Mich. 1.00
F. A. Montgomery..... 1.00
Mrs. Mary J. Major.... 1.00
Louisa Seed 5.00
M. Wood 2.50
Miss J. A. Brown..... 2.00
Mr. & Mrs. Viggersen.. 5.00
——, Dayton Beach, Fla. 5.00
Mrs. John Beams, mother & children 10.00
A Friend, Marion, N. C. 5.00
John A. Parker, Est. ... 5.00
C. H. Lincoln 1.50
Mrs. M. E. Dodds..... 1.00
M. E. Gilchrist..... 1.00
A. B. Connor..... 2.00
Mrs. D. Fraikin 2.00
Mrs. Geo. Golding..... 1.00
In His Name, Portland, Me. 1.00
Mrs. Edward Whitney... 1.00
Miss Margaret Meadows 1.00
A Friend, Glasford, Ill.. 1.00
G. S. Stanelif & family 2.00
Mrs. P. L. Ingalls..... 1.00
M. Murray 2.00
A. B. Bunten..... 2.00
Philip G. Auchampaugh 2.00
T. R. & F. A. Johnson.. 2.00
S A H, Tottenville, N Y 1.00
Mrs. M. F. Morris..... 2.00
J. A. Eklund..... 5.00
Rev. J. P. Erwin..... 1.00
Mrs. B. L. P. Portis.... 1.00
Miss E. A. Alden..... 5.00
S. O. G., Lincoln, Neb... 20.00
W. H. McQuiston & wife 5.00
W. A. Burgess..... 1.00
G. W. Baker..... 5.00
J. H. Roberts & wife... 2.00
Wm. Thiessen 1.00
Richard N. Thompson.. 5.00
Mr. & Mrs. F. E. Powell 10.00
Mrs. M. J. Dudley..... 5.00
L. C. Tobias..... 5.00
Samuel Jones 5.00
Mrs. Samuel Jones..... 5.00
Christian Ch., No. 10, of Potomac, Ill. 8.00
Mr. & Mrs. C. D. McAfee 5.00
Mrs. R. W. Lamb..... 5.00
Lake View S. S., Bellfourche, S. D..... 1.00
C. F. Cunningham..... 2.00
Mr. & Mrs. A. B. McAulay & J M Bingham 1.00
Mrs. Kate M. Sizer..... 1.00
Mrs. J. A. Weston..... 2.00
Mattie E. Bliss..... 2.00
Dr. Sara J. Duncan..... 1.00
C. W. & F. A., Albert City, Ia. 20.00
Theo. Drew 2.00
A E L, Philadelphia, Pa. 1.00
I. L. Dickerson..... 5.00
J. G. Nagle..... 5.00
Busy Bee Society Prest. Ch., Smyrna, Tenn... 8.00
E. T. Stevens..... 1.00
Thos. Packard 1.00
Mrs. Neva Woodbury... 1.00
Mrs. John Tripp 1.00
George Sikunk 5.00
M. M. C., Yonkers, N Y 10.00
Mrs. Ida L. Sharp..... 1.00
Union Mission, Herkimer N. Y. 1.00
Life Sub'r., Lenoir, N. C. 25.00
Franklin McCormack ... 5.00
C. H. Coe..... 1.00
Jacob Myers 4.00
——, Taunton, Mass. .. 1.00
M H C, San Diego, Calif. 5.00
Sarah A. Adams..... 10.00
W. A. Klindworth..... 3.00
J. C. Peterson..... 10.00
Mrs. T. S. Perry..... 1.00
Julia R. Tyler..... 5.00
John Ball 5.00
Friends, Highland Spgs.,

Contributions for China's Orphans Received Since Last Acknowledgment

Friends, Hidden Lawn, N. S. 4.00
M D K, River Park, Ind. 2.00
Brother & Sister, Bloomingdale, N. Y. 2.00
H. W. Lungren..... 2.00
Mrs. Maud Fisher..... 5.00
L. Breen 10.00
Friend, Milford, Conn... .81
Mrs. M. A. Hastings... 3.00
Rev. S. G. Hastings.... 2.00
Mrs. J. W. Baker..... 5.00
Thankful Ch. M. E. S. S., Oceanside, Calif. 10.00
Mrs. Henrietta Blume.. 1.00
Mrs. Ann Benjamin..... .50
Geo. Winright ..... .50
"Kings Daughter," Berlin, Md. 10.00
Geo. A. Howison..... 200.00
Friend, Springfield, O... 20.00
Mrs. L. A. Moscrop..... 5.00
Mr & Mrs M A Robbins 5.00
C. H. Hale..... 5.00
Mary A. Roberts..... 20.00
Eliza Beverly 10.00
J. F. C., Springfield, O.. 10.00
Mrs. E. M. Dudley..... 10.00
E. Pickard 5.00
Mrs. M. W. Turner..... 2.50
Miss Mary Turner..... 2.50
Mrs. E. M. Williams.... 1.00
Mrs. M. E. Vaughan.... 1.50
Mrs. J. K. Mann..... 5.00
Neighbor Bible Class Harmony M. E. Ch., Vancouver, Wash. ... 14.00
Waukena Union S. S., Ind. 5.00
M. E. Cowles 5.00
Sympathizer, Cincinnati, O. 5.00
Mrs. J. S. Hendricks... 5.00
M. E. Fitzpatrick..... 5.00
Alleten R. Cerow..... 5.00
John Miller 5.00
Mrs. A. B. Tigrett..... 2.00
Master Burton Shibley.. 1.00
A. B. Tigrett..... 2.00
Ed. Lawry 10.00
A friend, Williamstown, Mich. 10.00
J. R. Gossett..... 10.00
Mrs. Emma Duckless & Miss L. M. Lawson... 5.00
Sub'r., Kalamazoo, Mich. 10.00
Third Presby. Church, Los Angeles, Calif.... 32.00
Harry G. Rose 1.00
C. E. D. Litchfield, Conn. 2.00
Miss E. A. Risley..... 1.00
Mrs. C. M. Revell..... 1.00
F. M. Wilson..... 1.00
Mrs. Emily Thomas.... 1.00
Rev. I. L. Homer..... 1.00
Mrs. Geo. Kerr..... 1.00
M. N. L., Pittsburg, Pa. 2.00
In His Name, Indianapolis, Ind. 1.00
Jane A. Lowe..... 1.00
Oscar Lowe 1.00
Mr. & Mrs. Everson..... 1.00
Dr. Randolph 1.00
M. B. Milton..... 10.00
W. H. Slabaugh..... 10.00
Brandon U. S. S., Greenville, S. C. 12.50
M. G. Carry..... 5.00
Mrs. Mary Smith..... 2.00
Mrs. C. Johnson..... 1.00
——, Arlington, Mass... 5.00
J. W. Marshell..... 10.00
Mrs. Tweeddale 2.00
Mrs. B. W. Seaman & friends 1.75
A friend, Letcher, Calif. 1.00
E. M., N. Y. City, N. Y. 1.00
Ella & Anna Chilson.... 2.00
A. A. Crary..... 1.00
A friend, Newark, N. J. 1.00
Mrs. M. C. Barker..... 1.00
Miss L. Hull & friend.. 1.26
"In His Name," Kingston, Pa. 2.00
Mrs. W. F. Knapp..... 1.00
Mrs. H. Dunsmore..... 1.00
Miss J. Redman..... 2.00
J. Loucks 1.00
Mrs. Ettie Heston..... 1.00
Mrs. Jno. Laudenbah.... 2.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. R. Collins 2.00
D. J. Strain..... 1.00
N. R. Rutherford 2.00
L. H. Brown..... 1.00
Mrs. N. L. Baumgardner 1.00
J. M S, Jersey City, N. J. 1.00
Mrs. G. W. B., Millbrook, N. Y. 1.00
Jas. McBryde 1.00
Windsor, Va. 2.00
Mrs. J. C. Chunk 2.00
Alice Love 1.00
Reader, Georgetown, P. E. I. 5.00
E. & A. C. Tebbetts..... 5.00
E. D. Phillips 5.00
Mrs. Stephen Greene.... 25.00
Mr. & Mrs. F. L. Baker 5.00
C. E. Soc. Evan. Ch., Carey, O. 1.00
——, Myerstown, Pa. 2.00
I C E, Carrattsville, N Y 1.00
Lillie T. Smith..... 3.00
Willis Gregory 2.00
Lota Kelly 3.00
Mrs. R. S. Kirk..... 1.00
Mrs. J. M. Prank..... 2.00
Miss Helen Currey..... 2.00
Friends, Roanes, Va.... 3.00
J. E. Nevin 2.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. M. Carson 2.00
M. G. Everson..... 2.00
——, Mathews, Va. 2.00
Mrs. Rosa Suddoth..... 1.00
Mrs. Buck & Woodruff.. 3.00
Mrs. W. Brockelbank.... 1.00
Mrs. Fred Lott..... 1.00
John Charles 1.00
Rev. Anna A. Keen..... 1.00
Frances Besson 1.00
Mrs. Katharine Wirth.. 2.00
Mrs. C. K. Wimborough. 2.00
W. H. Craig..... 1.00
Mrs. C. M. Hawk..... 1.00
Annie L. Moore..... 1.00
Mrs. D. J. Easterling... 1.00
Mrs. J. L. Palmer..... 1.00
Mrs. W. H. Griffing..... 1.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. C. Stevenson 2.00
Mr. & Mrs. S. B. Smith 1.00
B. J. Thompson 1.00
Mrs. Clara Thompson... 1.00
Mrs. S. J. Harrington... 1.00
Mrs. J. H. Buckland.... 1.00
John Frick 1.00
W. H. Konkel..... 5.00
J. C. & Mrs. L. B. MacGreevey 1.00
Sarah Wescott 1.25
Jno. Trodeson 2.00
Mary A. Smith..... 2.00
Mrs. Webb 2.00
Clara Washburn 2.00
Mrs. E. Allen..... 1.00
Mrs. V. H. Babcock..... 1.50
Mrs. J. R. Holbrook.... 1.00
Casper Conger 1.00
Jennie Newby 1.00
Elizabeth Lake 1.00
Mrs. J. L. Chunk 2.00
Alice Love 1.00
Reader, Georgetown, P. E. I. 5.00
S. W. Potter..... 5.00
Thos. Ottesen 5.00
A. Willis 5.00
Richardson sisters..... 5.00
Mr. & Mrs. L. Sahlie.... 5.00
——, Chicago, Ill. 5.00
Alvey Yessler 10.00
Jun. League Evan. Ch. Carey, O. 2.00
W. M. S., Evan. Ch., Carey, O. 1.00
Cong. Collection, Evan. Ch., Carey, O. 20.40
A Friend, Ellington, Conn. 10.00
Col. by Arthur Groff.... 5.05
C. E. Soc. Presby. Ch., Philadelphia, Pa. 5.00
Hugh Dennis 2.00
S. R. Wood..... 5.00
Jas. H. Roderick..... 1.00
H. G. Schweitzer's S. S. Class 2.50
Mrs. T. R. Nelson..... 1.00
Mrs. M. C. Bustard..... 5.00
Mrs. Louisa Fisher..... 2.00
Emma Houston 1.00
Two sisters, N. Water Gap, Pa. 2.00
Mrs. S. A. Peck..... 1.00
Mrs. A. Pierce..... 2.00
Miss B. Blakingship & friends 1.50
Anna L. Waldo..... 1.00
Unknown, Sapulpa, Okla 1.00
A friend, Port Royal, Pa 2.00
Leslie, Richard, Virgil, Lucile, Grace Garner. 2.75
Mrs. Alice Beams..... 2.00
Frances P. Phinney.... 1.00
A friend, Moodus, Conn. 2.00
John Frick 1.00
Mrs. A. H. Wilson and daughter 2.00
J. H. Brown..... 1.00
E. Eimers, Sr..... 1.00
O. G. Beard..... 2.00
Mrs. F. C. Brown..... 1.00
Mary E. Davis..... 2.00
L. H. Flory..... 3.00
A friend, Phila., Pa.... 2.00
Mrs. J. H. Flavey..... 1.00
Mrs. A. R. Holbrook.... 1.00
Emily A. Eich..... 5.00
Mrs. Ida Malmberg..... 2.00
J. C. Button & sister... 2.00
D. T. Marden & friend.. 25.00
W. J. Mehaffey 15.00
Mrs. Jane E. Brown.... 5.00
Mrs. Bryan 5.00
S. W. Potter..... 5.00
Thos. Ottesen 5.00
A. Willis 5.00
Richardson sisters..... 5.00
Mr. & Mrs. L. Sahlie.... 5.00
——, Chicago, Ill. 5.00
W. Miss. Soc., Piney Flats, Tenn. 5.00
Mr. & Mrs. D. L. Hone. 5.00
Mary A. Castle..... 5.00
Col. C. E. Meeting, Eastport, N. Y..... 7.00
Mrs. C. W. Butler..... 10.00
E. M. Baldwin..... 10.00
F. Price 5.00
——, Redlands, Calif.... 5.00
Mrs. J. W. Carpenter... 10.00
V. M. Smith..... 10.00
A friend, Missouello, Ia. 10.00
Walter E. Hoyt..... 5.00
Mrs. Mary Finkelston... 5.00
Agnes Bergstrom 5.00
M. H. Mogk..... 3.00
J. Buerman 5.00
Mrs. M. C. Bustard..... 5.00
Mrs. F. R. Wright & Mrs. O. J. Willard.. 7.00
Mrs. Thos. Somerville... 5.00
A. F. Korf 5.00
Mrs. A. E. Baldwin..... 5.00
W. E. Baldwin..... 5.00
Col. by Mrs. J. J. Ball.. 5.00
Isaac M. Pollock..... 6.00
J. L. Gilkerson..... 20.00
Mrs. E. J. Hays..... 5.00
Mrs. G. W. Lewis..... 5.00
A. R. Davidson..... 10.00
Charlos Hgt's., Un. S. S., Mont. 10.00
Rev. G. E. Dewey..... 5.00
Mrs. D. T. Keim..... 2.50
Mrs. A. Beer..... 1.00
E. V. Hamlin..... 1.00
I. M. Keigwin..... 2.00
Friend, Beaumont, Calif. 3.00
Mrs. S. E. McCoy..... 2.00
——, Marion, O. 2.00
J. L. Morgan..... 2.00
Emily McMillan..... 2.00
J. C. Boot 1.00
Mrs. E. E. McKee..... 2.00
Dora Ricker 1.37
Reader, Ingersoll, Okla. 1.00
Carrie Peterson 1.00
O. M. Smith..... 1.00
Mr. & Mrs. S. B. Simons 2.00
Geo. W. Pilcher..... 1.00
Mrs. Nattie Hathurvey... 1.00
Mrs. Mary Long..... 2.00
Mrs. Jno. E. Evans..... 1.00
Catharine Bethel 2.50
Mary Steen 1.00
A. Peak 1.00
Mrs. O. F. Passorfield.. 2.50
Mrs. M. J. Scott..... 1.00
Jos. P. Oglesby..... 1.00
A friend, Bernardsville, N. J. 2.00
Jno. Brown 3.00
Mary B. Roesch 1.00
Elizabeth Williams..... 3.00
M. Anderson 1.00
Jno. Christensen..... 3.00
Mr. & Mrs. D. D. Raugh 2.50
David Dewor..... 2.00
E. P. W., Los Angeles, Calif. 1.00
P. E. Hoffman..... 2.50
R. H. Rosenberry..... 2.00
In His name, Beach City, Ohio 2.00
A widow, Camoneche, Ia. 1.00
Mrs. M. A. Cronow..... 2.00
Mrs. J. Robinson..... 1.00
Dr. P. L. Moon..... 1.00
Ethel Barber 1.00
Susan Jennings 1.00
E. Bown 1.00
C. J. Graves 1.00
Frank Webster..... 1.00
Miss. Ella Jones..... 2.00
Children's school, Charleston, W. a. 2.00
Mother and daughter, Xenia, O. 2.50
J. W. Harper..... 2.00
C. Ehrich 1.00
Carl Todd 1.00
A widow, Yazoo City, Miss. 1.00
Mrs. G. H. C., Champaign, Ill. 2.00
J. Y. Robbins..... 1.00
A friend, N. Y. City.... 1.00
A friend, Parsons, Kan. 2.00
Esther Bartow 1.00
W. Farner 3.00
Otto Leyrer 1.00
J. H. Davies 1.00
J. C. Deuser, Jr. 1.00
Miss E. Jennings..... 3.00
——, Edna, Kan..... 2.00
Mrs. Jno. A. Falls..... 1.00
Mrs. Wm. D. Gay..... 2.00
C. L. Harris..... 1.00
Marietta Trowbridge .. 1.00
Andrew Harris 3.00
A. W. Brown..... 2.00
D. C. Burritt..... 3.00
John Chambers 1.00
Miss S. B. Hobart..... 3.00
Mary Adelia 1.00
Norah & Carroll Mavis. 1.00
Mrs. J. Bramfield..... .50
Mrs. M. Walker..... .50
Edgar McGee 5.00

The Recall of the "Hesperus"

Continued from page 609

some little time. Looking to the re we noticed that Ben had left his t on the locker and was hurrying fast as his old legs would carry him the direction of the fishermen's anty.

After a little while we found the ter was washing up around our t and slopping back and forth ng the bottom of the Lobster as pitched and wallowed, so Billy d me to take the bail can from the ker and start in bailing the loose ter overboard while he handled both rs. It was pretty risky shifting seats, t one of us just had to get busy prevent swamping. With Billy rowg by himself we didn't make much adway; but, as I just then sighted e runaway, we guessed that she sn't breaking any records, either. When most of the water was about iled out—by which time Billy was akening—I got back on the wet at and took an oar. We could now e the schooner quite plainly, and uld also see the waves breaking er Dead Man's Rock, right in her ack. Twice I had to stop rowing to ke the bailing can again, and sometimes it was all Billy could do to keep e boat headed up into the waves. e had got used to seeing the waves ounting high over our heads by this me, and, except when they broke avily on our backs, we didn't much ind.

Gradually we closed in with the esperus, close enough to see her rigng clearly when she would rise on e summit of a wave. She was a ght, too. Her lifeboat, deck houses nd water barrel had gone by the oard, and nothing was left of her anhors but two short pieces of chain angling from her bows. She still ad all her sails, and when the sea ould break over her would be comletely hidden as she lay on her beam nds. But she would straighten up gain, while the water spouted from er scuppers, her sails filling. We ould see, too, that she hadn't struck er colors.

When we at last crept alongside we ould hear the roar of the breakers round the lighthouse on top of Dead lan's Rock, and see the clouds of pray leaping higher than the lantern. Looking back, we could see othing of the beach or houses along he water-front, only the belfry of the hurch and other high buildings. We lidn't have much time to think of nything but the Hesperus and the best way of getting her back to the own. As we hugged her close both oats would rise together until we were away up on the crest of a wave, hen we would go down and down until there was nothing but walls of water all around us.

Suddenly we heard the bellow of a steamer's horn, and looking through between the sails of the schooner saw hat we were right in the track of an incoming mail steamer; at least, she seemed to have swung around and was hove to, head on in our direction. Her decks were crowded with passengers, and a big man in uniform, high up on her bridge, was watching us through a pair of glasses. Another officer, who was getting a boat ready to swing out, roared at us through a speaking trumpet, telling us to cut away the sails of the schooner. We didn't think, though, that we could let the sails go that Mother had worked so hard to make; so, while Billy steadied the Lobster as best he could, I began tearing away the sails from the rigging and stowing them under the seats of the boat.

The passengers on the steamer were now all shouting together and cheering and pointing to the shore. When we looked that way we got real scared, for the lifeboat had been launched and was coming crashing through the heavy seas to where we were wrestling with the Hesperus. We couldn't hear what any one was yelling by this time, as the roaring from Dead Man's Rock was like big guns going off. The lifeboat swung up alongside and we saw that she didn't have her regular crew, just a crew picked up along the harbor wall. Old Ben, too, was there.

The coxswain, Jim Larkins, yelled out to us to let the schooner go if we didn't want to go on the Rock, but we knew that we were safe for a little longer and held on to the stripped schooner. Then they gently crowded into us just as Billy tied the schooner fast to the stern of the Lobster, some of them scolding and others lying on their oars, laughing fit to kill. I threw them the free end of a line and asked them to make fast for towing us in, while Billy took my place with the bailing can. We were still leaking badly.

Suddenly I felt myself grabbed by the collar of my wet shirt and dragged over the gunwale of the Lobster up onto that of the lifeboat, Billy following in the same way. Then after some playful cuffs and handling we were rolled down among the feet of the men at the oars while the steamer blew its horn three times and the passengers cheered again. Then we started off on the homeward trip.

Every now and then Billy would raise his head over the gunwale of the lifeboat to see if the other boats were safe, as we were kind of scared of the Lobster and the men spoke of cutting her adrift. Those of the crew that didn't have oilskins were drenched to the skin, but they just kept on rowing as if they didn't care and talking to one another about the licking we had coming to us when we landed.

They cut the Lobster adrift at last, but I guess they knew that she and the schooner were close enough inshore to be washed up. There were a lot of people on the beach as the lifeboat grounded, but Mother wasn't among them. I guessed nobody had told her what was happening off shore.

When we at last got started for home we had to walk on either side of Ben, who was leading us by our collars, every now and then bumping our heads together to make the crowd laugh. The noise must have brought Mother out to the gate, and you bet she stared when she saw the procession with us at the head and a fisherman carrying the wrecked schooner. When the crowd saw her they cheered again and swept right through the gate, as many as could even squeezing into our little kitchen, where they stood around grinning in their dripping clothes while Ben told Mother just what had happened.

"Thank God! Oh, thank God!" whispered Mother, as Ben got through. Then she let her arms fall from our shoulders and slipped to the floor in a dead faint.

Now, if she fainted when she knew we were safe home, what would she have done if she could have seen us when we were stripping the Hesperus in the heavy seaway with the roar of Dead Man's Rock in our ears and the spray from its breakers passing over us in clouds?

THE SOUL'S WINGS

WHAT though this life for us so incomplete
Upon this lowly shoal,
Should, reed-like, yield and break beneath thy feet,
Hast thou not still thy soul?

Thy soul that soon, perchance, shall wing its way
Far to the peaceful skies,
And, haply, bear thee far beyond the sway
Of mortal tears and sighs.

Be like the bird that on some vine too frail
Serenely sits and sings:
For though he feels the branch beneath him fail,
He knows that he hath wings.

—British Weekly.

"My Baby"

Bless the little treasure. She'll be a young lady before we know it.—Mother must keep young, must be both parent and chum. Baby's dainty cheeks will be carefully guarded—Mother's girlish complexion retained by the use of Palmolive.

How Palm and Olive Oils Have Made PALMOLIVE Unlike Any Other Soap

Palmolive Cream

A pure white cream, manufactured in our own laboratories after an original formula.

Penetrates and softens the skin, cleansing the deepest pores. Leaves the skin in the pink of condition.

Send the band from a cake of Palmolive Soap and we will send you a generous facsimile jar of Palmolive Cream, postpaid.

Price 50c

The ancient Orientals have taught a mighty lesson on the care of the skin. For ages past the famous beauties of the Orient have possessed marvelous complexions, as a result of using Palm and Olive Oils. PALMOLIVE Soap owes its splendid cleansing and beautifying properties to this secret of the Orient. Palmolive is, therefore, quite different from all others. It is more than a mere soap.

Palmolive Does More Than These Oils Alone Can Do

Now, after 36 years of study, of determining what heretofore has been utterly lacking in soap, we have blended these two beautifying oils in a soap of the utmost quality.

Fresh, Green Hue From Olive Oil

Palmolive is perfectly pure. Contains no free alkali. No artificial color is used. The olive oil gives this soap its delicate green. This is why Palmolive is used by so many mothers for bathing Baby.

Pure, Oriental Fragrance

Palmolive's delicate odor is faintly, yet delightfully fragrant. The dainty odor is one of sweetness and purity.

Palmolive Conquers Hard Water

Palmolive lathers freely in hard water as well as soft. This feature alone makes it doubly valuable where soft water is not plentiful.

Palmolive Lasts Longer

When you try Palmolive you will be delighted that it lasts so long. It remains firm even when worn to wafer thinness.

Palmolive's surprisingly low cost compared with its high quality, its wide variety of uses, its wonder-working effect upon all complexions, its long lasting ability makes it extremely economical.

Send two 2-cent stamps for sample and free booklet "The Easy Way to Beauty"—NOW!

B. J. JOHNSON SOAP COMPANY
530 Fowler Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Price 15c

Washday Now a Holiday

Throw away your washboard. No more weary hours over the tub, rubbing the life out of self and clothes. Get a

Perfection Vacuum Clothes Washer

the scientific, household, labor-saving device; does your washing in 20 minutes—while you read or sleep—and better than you can do it by hand.

A boon to every woman; no manual work; relieves hardship and drudgery. Simple; made of pure polished zinc in one standard size; fits all wash boilers; will last a lifetime. Sent by prepaid express for $3.00, with an absolute money-back guarantee.

Order today or write for club plan, explaining how you can secure one FREE

BIGELOW COMPANY, - - Attica, N. Y.

Save ⅓ to ½ on Fuel Bills

Our Payment Plan Makes it Easy for You to Purchase a

JAHANT DOWN DRAFT FURNACE

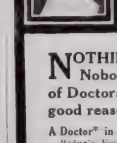
Have plenty of heat wherever it is needed. We issue a 360 day Guaranty Bond that guarantees satisfaction. We sell direct paying freight and saving you dealer's profits. Install the Jahant yourself. We send complete outfit—furnace, pipes, registers, etc., with special plans, detailed instructions and necessary tools.

Send for free furnace book.
THE JAHANT HEATING CO.
35 Mill Street Akron, Ohio

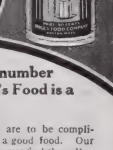
BUY YOUR FURNACE $10 DOWN $10 A MONTH

DEVELOPING—PRINTING—ENLARGING

Best Work, Quick Delivery, Low Prices. Developing 10 cents per roll. Prints 3 cents up. Send 2 negatives for Free prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.



The Doctor's Baby



NOTHING else is so important to Baby as the right diet. Nobody knows this subject so well as the Doctor. The great number of Doctors who tell us that they raised their own babies on Ridge's Food is a good reason why you should use it. Read:—

A Doctor* in Denver writes:—"I have been giving Ridge's Food to my six months' old baby and it is the first food since she was born that seems to agree with her."

A Philadelphia Doctor* says:—"Twenty-eight years ago my own son was in a most delicate condition and not expected to survive an infant of two or three weeks old. His mother fed him with a medicine dropper with Ridge's Food until he could take from a bottle. He now is a robust fellow. For infants, it is the food par excellence."

A Utah Physician* writes:—"You are to be complimented on the production of such a good food. Our baby is as perfectly healthy as you ever find them."

A Bloomington, Ill., Doctor* writes:—"Eighteen years ago our youngest son suffered from a six months' attack of Malnutrition. I have never seen a case equal to it. We tried every food and every modification until we found Ridge's Food, which, in a few weeks, transformed him into a healthy child."

(Names given on request. Not printed here because we have no right to burden our friends with unsolicited correspondence.*)

If you sought for a life time you could not find more convincing evidence as to what food you should give your baby. The Doctor knows that it agrees from the first feeding, that it nourishes every part of the body, that it reduces teething troubles, that it is the correct milk modifier, that it makes babies grow. You should give Ridge's Food to yours. Your druggist has it. Send coupon for a large, free trial package.

RIDGE'S FOOD CO., 242-258 Dover St., Boston, Mass.

(C. H.) RIDGE'S FOOD CO., Boston

Mrs .....

Address .....

.....

Druggist .....

AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION
TRAVELERS' CHEQUES

Uncle Sam Accepts "A. B. A." Cheques

"A.B.A." Cheques are the only Travelers' Cheques that can be accepted under the law by the U. S. Collector of Customs.

"A.B.A." Cheques identify you wherever you go. Hotel people are glad to cash them for guests. They are accepted as willingly as gold by railways, steamship lines and shops generally in all civilized countries.

The fixed value of each Cheque in foreign money is plainly stated. You know just how many pounds, guilders, marks or lire each $10, $20, $50 or $100 Cheque is worth.

It is never necessary to carry large sums of money, if you have a wallet of "A.B.A." Cheques. Just tear out a Cheque, sign it, and pay your bill.

Write to Bankers Trust Company, Wall St., New York, for information as to where the Cheques may be obtained in your vicinity, and explanatory booklet, "The Safest Cheque."

BUY THEM FROM YOUR OWN BANKER OR IF HE CANNOT SUPPLY THEM APPLY TO BANKERS TRUST COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

OWNERS

We solicit the investment accounts of the real owners of our great corporations—the ODD LOT stockholders.

Send for Circular U—"Odd Lots."

John Muir & Co.
SPECIALISTS IN
Odd Lots
Members New York Stock Exchange
71 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

CHALLENGE Brand WATERPROOF
COLLARS & CUFFS
LINEN STYLE AND FIT without its bother and expense: they keep spotless and stay fit longer than linen. Moderate. Collars 25c. Cuffs 50c. Shirt Bosoms $1.
The Arlington Company Established 1848 725 Broadway, N.Y.

Genuine All Hand Woven Unblocked PANAMA
From Weaver to Wearer
Can be worn in that condition by Men, Women and Children. Easily blocked in any shape or style. Just as serviceable as the $10 kind.
All head sizes Brims from 3 to 7 inches. Light-weight. Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00 Money refunded if not satisfactory.
PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, NEW YORK CITY

MARVEL SOLDER
INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS
In all kinds of household utensils—enamelled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Soldering Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Use by motorists.
Send 10c for trial tube.
MARVEL SOLDER CO. 1937 Broadway Dept. 8. New York
AGENTS WANTED QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

The Conquest of Evil Habits*

Quarterly Temperance Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE very heart of this lesson is Eph. 5: 18, "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit"; which means that the true stimulant, to answer man's craving for "more life," is not "spirits" but Spirit, not spirituous but spiritual, not intoxication but inspiration, not dissipation, but re-creation; not something that comes to jaded nature through the mouth, but through the mind.

'Tis life of which our souls are scant,
More life and nobler that we want.

And this added life must come from the Source of life.

Spirit with Spirit can meet:
Closer is He than breathing,
And nearer than hands and feet.

Even a great human soul may be a true stimulant as he touches us by spoken or written word or by noble deed or by his silent character. But only the touch of God can fill a weary soul with life and light.

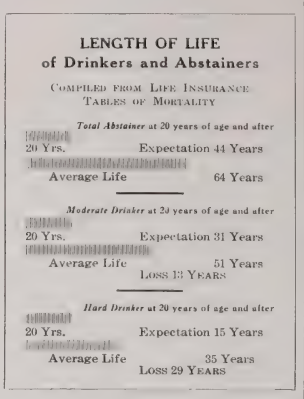
Alcohol is not a stimulant at all, as all up-to-date people know, but a depressant in its ultimate effect—an irritant at first to every foolish and evil propensity, from gossip to lust. Of all confidence games played on men, none equal those of alcohol, which had made thousands believe the same drink could serve as a "nightcap" at evening and an "eye-opener" in the morning; a cooler in summer and a warmer in winter. "Wine is a mocker," indeed.

A bright youth may discover, if we do not frankly tell him, that this particular lesson does not teach total abstinence, but is only a warning against drunkenness: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess." But an alert youth will also be able to see that the only way to insure that one shall not be drunk is not to drink, since every one who has become a drunkard, many of them great men, started out to be only a moderate drinker.

Gladstone's Verdict

"Abstain from every form of evil" (I. Thes. 5: 22). This commandment of the New Testament, no less binding than the Decalogue, requires that our attitude toward every evil shall be one of abstinence. We are to be moderate and temperate in things good, abstinent of things evil. And surely there is no need of proof that the drink habit is an evil. Gladstone, like the foreman of a jury, gave the world's verdict when he said it had wrought more harm than "war, pestilence and famine." If a thing of which that can be said is not an evil, there are no evils, and if it is an evil, we are divinely commanded to abstain from all participation in it. In the words of Neal Dow, from whose steel links of logic there is no escape, "No man has a moral right to do that which if all the world should follow his example—as some are sure to do—would produce more harm than good."

This is Paul's great argument that we should abstain for the sake of others, put in modern phrase. Paul was ahead of his times in advocating total abstinence for that and other reasons; Rom. 13: 8-14; 14: 12-23; I. Cor. 10: 23-33; Gal. 5: 15-26; 6: 7-8; Eph. 5: 11-18; I. Thes. 5: 14-25. But we shall be nineteen centuries behind the times if we do not add the new reasons for abstinence that God has since revealed, largely from the oldest testament of natural law, as interpreted by the prophets of modern science. This is but a new translation into temperance terms of the great commandments of Moses and Christ, that we should love God, and our neighbor as ourselves.



This chart, based on British mutual insurance tables of fifty years, gives the strongest known argument for total abstinence on the grounds of an intelligent self-love. It proves that alcohol is slow poison. Whenever alcohol is spoken of as "a poison," it should be designated as "a slow poison." No doubt many a boy has concluded it is not a real poison because it does not make the beer drinker or the whisky drinker fall right down and die. But it kills "by inches." It takes thirty-one years for moderate drinking to kill a stout young man of twenty years, who is strong enough to pass an insurance examination. It has by that time killed thirteen years out of his life. He had no business to die till he was sixty-four. British mutual companies that classify abstainers and moderate drinkers separately and rebate to each whatever they fall short of the expected mortality, have for half a century given more than 26 per cent. higher rebates to abstainers than to moderates. There is no escape from the scientific fact that moderate drinking is slow suicide.

Alcohol's Effect on Tissues

Alcohol also chloroforms quickly and dries up slowly the latest and best evolutionary blossoms of the brain, those cells that have been added since our ancestors were white savages in the forests of Europe; cells through which God gives us reason and conscience and refinement and altrusim. It is as if some deadly fluid poured into a tree rushed at once through trunk and branches to the very top to devour the brightest blossoms that would have produced the most luscious fruit. It may help the children to understand if we say that all plants, animals and human beings are made up of cells of living protoplasm, as a honeycomb is made up of much larger cells filled with honey. Alcohol poisons this protoplasm in plants, animals and men. Plant two sprigs of geranium in two pots and give one water daily, and the other water with one per cent. of alcohol, and in six weeks the moderate drinker will be fainter in color, shorter in growth and will show faded leaves. This is the way many great doctors of many lands at the Twelfth International Congress against Alcohol described, technically, the suicidal work of alcohol in the human body: "Exact laboratory, clinical and pathological research have demonstrated that alcohol is a dehydrating protoplasmic poison, and hence its use as a beverage is destructive and degenerating to the human organism. Its effects on the cells of the body are depressive, narcotic and anesthetic. Hence therapeutically it should be used with the

Continued on next page

* International Sunday School Lesson for June 23, 1912. Eph. 5: 11-21. Golden Text: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging." Prov. 20: 1. The Lesson Committee have submitted as an alternate to this quarterly temperance lesson, a lesson on purity. "The Penitent Woman," Luke 7: 36-50. In some classes both subjects can be treated broadly (not verse by verse) under the general subject above, with Eph. 5: 18 as Golden Text: "Be filled with the Spirit," suggesting as the secret of victory "the displacing power of a new affection."

Write for This Book

144 Pages—Beautifully Illustrated

So great is the difference between mattresses, and so important a bearing has on comfort, health and economy, that we are distributing, FREE to all, an expensive book on how to know a mattress. Get it—and especially read about the famous

OSTERMOOR MATTRESS $15
"Built—Not Stuffed"

After five to fifty years' constant use, there are thousands of Ostermoors as comfortable today as when new. None other can offer this proof because none other is made by the Ostermoor process. Get the book without fail; don't buy until you know the Ostermoor.

Avoid "just-as-good" imitations. The trade mark Ostermoor is your guarantee. If desired, we will ship mattress, 6 ft. 3 in. long by 4 ft. 6 in. wide, 45 lbs., express prepaid, same day we receive your order. Shipped so that it reaches you in perfect condition. Money back if you want it after 30 nights' trial.

OSTERMOOR & CO.
115 Elizabeth St.
New York
Canada: Alaska Feather & Down Co., Ltd., Montreal

MENNEN'S
Borated Talcum
FOR MINE

For Prickly Heat and Sunburn
Relieves all Skin Irritations
Sample Box for 4c stamp

GERHARD MENNEN CO.
Newark, N. J.
Trade-Mark

BECOME A NURSE

THIS school prepared these three women in their own home, to become successful nurses. One writes, "I have more work offered than I can accept." Another, "I have worked for eight different physicians." The third, "I received $20 to $30 a week."

Our method of training has made it possible for thousands of women, with and without previous experience, to earn $10 to $25 a week as professional nurses.

Send for a copy of "How I Became a Nurse" and our Year Book explaining method; 248 pages with portraits of successful graduates. Eleventh Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Jamestown, N. Y.

LADIES MAKE MONEY BEADS

EVERY lady will buy a ROSE NECKLACE, paying 25c. to 75c. each, as fast as you can make them up! Easy to make. One Beautiful Illustrated Catalogue of Beads, 1,000 BEADS, enough to make one Forget-Me-Not and one Rose Necklace, and directions for making them, two gold-filled clasps all for only 10c, post-paid. Full satisfaction or money back. Address
UNITED BEADWORK CO., 17 West 45th St.
New York City.

Wanted Pupils for Training School giving two years' course in general nursing. Overlook Hospital, Summit, N. J.

Sense and Nonsense

Conducted by JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

A Valu'ble Receet

Marietta Holley
Author of Samantha at Coney Island

SAMANTHA says wimmen whose pardners are wont to git in a temper and act, when they come in to dinner and find it not ready or hardly commenced, let 'em not bandy words or argy with their impatient pardners, but jest before the good man enters draw out the table and throw the tablecloth on it. As the hungry tempersome man glances at that snowy cloth he thinks dinner is almost ready, and his hard linement softens and he demeans himself like a lamb.

I learnt this truly invaluable receet by painful experience. And any little crumbs of wisdom I have plucked out of the fire of domestic tribulation I am willin' to share without money or price with my sect, I think so much on 'em. Why, jest this one receet would have been worth ontold wealth to me had I known it when I first become a pardner. But I never discovered it till I'd been married over twelve years, and had suffered accordin' when dinner wuz belated. Weary housewives have no idee of its value till they have tried it. Husbands are likely and valuable, and are truly a woman's richest boon if she only knows how to git along with 'em and git 'em headed right.

I have tried lots of experiments durin' my wedded career, some worked well and some didn't. And I had noble receets for pardner-makin' handed down from Mother Smith and Mother Allen. But no matter how many worthy perscriptions for makin' good pardners you start out in married life with, you've got to keep on usin' science and philosophy and above all common sense, tryin' experiments with 'em, jest as you do with a new kind of flour. Some kinds of flour has to be molded harder, some needs a little sugar, some has to have more shortenin' and a hotter fire. But it is richly worth all the time and trouble you can take with 'em if you make good pardners and good bread.

P. S.—N. B.—Josiah wants me to add that his sect needs jest as many receets for makin' good and obedient pardners, and has to try jest as many experiments as the more opposite one.

And he sez he has tried every one of Father Allen's receets, and some Deacon Gowdey and Solomon Sypher gin him, and has branched out and made up noble ones out of his own head, laid awake nights to plan 'em, and sez he got discouraged long ago and don't believe it can be done. He don't believe wimmen can be learnt to obey and look up to their pardners as they ort to. And a man may jest as well give up first as last, and lay his own nose on the domestic grinstun, and let wimmen have their own way.

I don't see what ails Josiah to talk so. He hain't been well for some time. I gress it is his liver.

* * *

GOD'S SUMMER

IT IS not the lark's clear tone
Cleaving the morning air with a soaring cry,
Nor the nightingale's dulcet melody all the balmy night;
Not these alone make the sweet sounds of summer.
But the drone of beetle and bee, the murmurous hum of the fly,
And the chirp of the cricket hidden out of sight;
These help to make the summer.

Not roses redly blown,
Nor golden lilies lighting the dusky meads,
Nor proud imperial pansies, nor queencups quaint and rare;
Not these alone
Make the sweet sights of summer.
But the countless forest leaves, the myriad wayside weeds,
And slender grasses springing up everywhere;
These help to make the summer.

One heaven bends above;
The lowliest head ofttimes has sweetest rest;
O'er song-bird in the pine and bee in the ivy low
Is the same love; it is all God's summer.
Well pleased is He if we patiently do our best.
So hum, little bee, and low green grasses, grow;
You help to make the summer.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

same care and restriction as other poisonous drugs." (World Book of Temperance, p. 285.)

Emperor William and President Eliot have become advocates of total abstinence through the proof afforded by recent experiments that all alcoholic drinks, even beer and wine, used moderately at home, seriously reduce the efficiency, not alone of the hand but especially of the brain. Dr. Aschaffenberg made sixteen experiments on four beer-drinking type-setters, who were tested two days each with no alcoholic drink, and two days each with one ounce of alcohol. That is not moderate drinking but microscopic drinking. No one who drinks at all takes so little—as much as is contained in two glasses of beer or a fraction of a bottle of mild Greek wine. But even so little reduced their efficiency and their wages, as compared with the abstinent days, an average of 9 per cent. President Eliot of Harvard University was converted to advocacy of abstinence at seventy years of age by such experiments as the following, which he cites as showing the effect of alcohol on mental processes. "The subject would place each hand on a telegraph key, at right and left. The signals would then be varied, it being understood that one key or the other would be pressed promptly according as a red or a white light appeared. It became necessary, therefore, to recognize the color of the light, and to recall which hand was to be removed at that particular signal; in other words, to make a choice not unlike that which a locomotive engineer is required to make when he encounters an unexpected signal light. The tests showed that after the ingestion of a small quantity of alcohol—say a glass of beer—there was a marked disturbance of the mental processes involved in this reaction. On the average the keys were released much more rapidly than before the alcohol was taken, but the wrong key was much more frequently released than under normal circumstances. Thus, as Dr. Stier remarks, the experiment shows the elements of two of the most significant and persistent effects of alcohol, namely the vitiating of mental processes and the increased tendency to hasty or incoordinate movements."

At a time when "efficiency" is the great word in business, when the young man who seeks a good job must be "fit," no less than if entering an athletic contest, the abstinence that has been required of athletes from the days of the Greek games of two thousand years ago is essential to highest success in the race of life. The man who can do only nine-tenths of his job and that clumsily is the man who will hunt longest for a permanent job, and will be the first to lose it when there is a reduction. The earthly hell of unemployment should be deterrent enough to keep any aspiring boy from the "bar" to success.

A New Pattern
OLD COLONY
Our beautiful new pattern, Old Colony, illustrated here, is suggestive of simplicity, grace and quality. Note the pierced handle and the handsome decorative work. Like all 1847 ROGERS BROS.
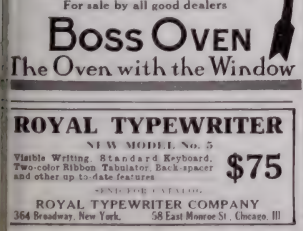
"Silver Plate that Wears"
it is made in the heaviest grade of silver plate, and is backed by the largest makers, with an unqualified guarantee made possible by the actual test of 65 years. Sold by all leading dealers.
Send for illustrated catalogue "T-57."
INTERNATIONAL SILVER CO.
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN CONN.
NEW YORK CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO HAMILTON, CANADA

Watch it bake!
The Boss Oven is made in three sizes and fits on top of any oil, gasoline or gas stove. You can watch your baking through the glass. You can see it at any time, without chilling or jarring the baking by opening the door; and you never have to stoop.
The Boss Oven heats in two minutes. It keeps a uniform heat, saves fuel, saves worry. The glass is guaranteed not to break from heat or to steam up. Be sure you see the name "Boss" on the front. 260,000 now in use.
Write today for the free illustrated Boss Recipe Book, which shows all the new oven styles and gives 16 pages of new recipes with 6 pages of cooking and serving helps. Address The Hunefeld Co., 2400 Straight St., Cincinnati, O.
For sale by all good dealers
Boss Oven
The Oven with the Window



ROYAL TYPEWRITER
NEW MODEL No. 5
Visible Writing. Standard Keyboard. Two-color Ribbon Tabulator. Back-spacer and other up-to-date features $75
SEND FOR CATALOG
ROYAL TYPEWRITER COMPANY
364 Broadway, New York. 58 East Monroe St., Chicago, Ill

On Baking Day
Utensils Quickly Cleaned and Cleared Away with Old Dutch Cleanser
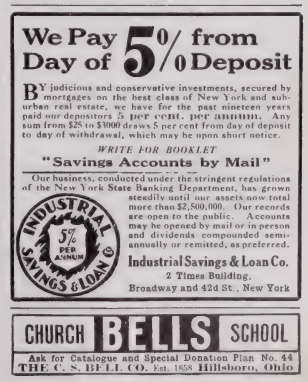
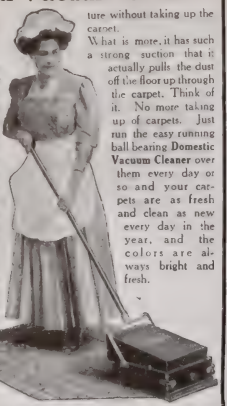
MANY OTHER USES AND FULL DIRECTIONS ON LARGE SIFTER-CAN 10¢
Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases Dirt



We Pay 5% from Day of Deposit
BY judicious and conservative investments, secured by mortgages on the best class of New York and suburban real estate, we have for the past nineteen years paid our depositors 5 per cent. per annum. Any sum from $25 to $3000 draws 5 per cent from day of deposit to day of withdrawal, which may be upon short notice.
WRITE FOR BOOKLET
"Savings Accounts by Mail"
Our business, conducted under the stringent regulations of the New York State Banking Department, has grown steadily until our assets now total more than $2,500,000. Our records are open to the public. Accounts may be opened by mail or in person and dividends compounded semi-annually or remitted, as preferred.
INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. 5% PER ANNUM
Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Building,
Broadway and 42d St., New York

A Real Vacuum Cleaner

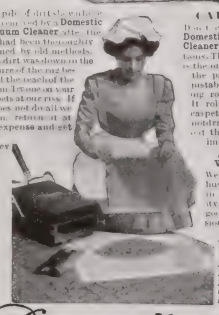
Booklet FREE



Here is a Vacuum Cleaner that looks like a carpet sweeper and runs like a carpet sweeper, yet is a powerful vacuum cleaner. As it rolls across the room it sucks up a strong blast of air through the carpet, bringing every particle of dust out of the texture without taking up the carpet.

What is more, it has such a strong suction that it actually pulls the dust off the floor up through the carpet. Think of it. No more taking up of carpets. Just run the easy running ball bearing Domestic Vacuum Cleaner over them every day or so and your carpets are as fresh and clean as new every day in the year, and the colors are always bright and fresh.

The pile of dirt shown was run out by a Domestic Vacuum Cleaner after the rag had been thoroughly cleaned by old methods. This dirt was down in the texture of the rag beyond the reach of the broom because as our carpets at our rear. If it does not do all we claim, return it at our expense and get your money back



CAUTION

Don't confuse the Domestic Vacuum Cleaner with imitations. The Domestic is the only one with the patented adjustable ball bearing roller nozzle. It rolls over the carpet and does not drag and wear out the carpet as imitations do.

AGENTS WANTED

We want one hustling agent in each locality. We pay good commissions and these machines sell at sight.

Write today for full information, free illustrated booklets, etc.

Domestic

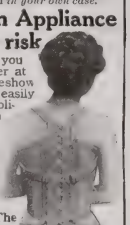
DOMESTIC VACUUM SWEEPER CO. PEORIA, ILL.

228 Masonic Temple, PEORIA, ILL.

17,000 Spinal Sufferers Helped

In our experience of more than eleven years we have successfully relieved over 17,000 cases of spinal deformity and weakness. Sufferers in all parts of the world, some probably right near your home, have been greatly benefited or wholly cured by the Sheldon Method. It is this success in so many thousands of cases that warrants us in offering to prove the value of our method in your own case.

Use the Sheldon Appliance 30 Days at our risk



There is no reason why you should not accept our offer at once. The photographs here show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Sheldon Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.

To all sufferers with weakened or deformed spines it promises almost immediate relief even in the most serious cases.

You owe it to yourself to investigate it thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for our Free Book today and describe your trouble as fully as possible so we can give you definite information.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
207-18th Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

Low Factory Price On Empire Fence

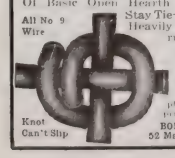
Sold direct to you. The fence that has stood the hardest test of service on some of the biggest farms in the country.

The Empire is made of

ALL BIG WIRES

Of Basic Open Hearth Steel with special Stay Tie—the strongest made. Heavily galvanized against rust.

All No 9 Wire



Knot Can't Slip

Write for Free Book

just off postal mentioning farm fence you need. A postal brings our free complete and direct from factory price. Write

BOND STEEL POST CO
52 Maumee St., Adrian, Mich.

Our Younger Readers

SIXTY LITTLE HEROES ON THE "TITANIC"

Sixty little bellboys,
Stanch and brave and true,
Never once the question,
"What were they to do?"

Sitting on the benches,
Not at all dismayed,
Forgotten by the steward,
Whose word they obeyed.

Twelve to fourteen summers
All the years they knew,
As many mother's darlings
In that little crew.

When the great ship foundered,
Mute they sank below,
Every one a hero,
That we surely know.

E. M. PELLETREAU.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Said the Dwarf: 'You see, it was my brothers and I who found Snow-White'"

Baseball

CHRISTY MATHEWSON, foremost of ball-players, has written a baseball story book called Pitching in a Pinch. The advice he offers to boys who would be successful players is so thoroughly first-class that life lessons right out of the big national game can be got from it: "Some pitchers will put all they have on every ball. That is foolish for two reasons," says Mathewson. "In the first place it exhausts the man physically, and when the pinch comes he hasn't strength to last it out. . . . A man should always hold something in reserve, a surprise to spring when things get tight. If a pitcher has displayed his whole assortment to the batters in the early part of the game, and has used all his speed and his fastest breaking curve, when the crisis comes he has nothing to fall back on. Like all youngsters," continues Mr. Mathewson, "I was eager to make a record during my first year in the big league, and in one of the first games I pitched I made the mistake of putting all that I had on every ball.

"The Giants had their opponents beaten 2 to 0, going into the last inning. I had been burning them over, trying to strike out every batter, and hadn't held anything in reserve. The first man to the bat in the ninth got a single, the next a two-bagger, and by the time they had stopped hitting me we had lost the game, 4 to 2. I was very much down in the mouth over the defeat after I had the game practically won. The manager of the Giants noticed me. 'Never mind, Matty,' he said, 'it is worth it. The defeat ought to teach you not to pitch your head off when you don't need to.' It did," says Mr. Mathewson bravely; "I have never forgotten that lesson."

Two Clever Ideas

MERRY-GO-ROUNDS is the name of a club of which Miss Helen Taft, as a little girl, was an enthusiastic member. These girls, about twenty-five in number, were always carrying out most delightful and original ideas in the most charming ways. One summer they prepared a Doll's Bazaar, which in the Christmas holidays "frolicked off" with great success. Four hundred and sixty dolls, ranging in price from ten cents to five dollars, were sold from tables where everything belonging to dolls could be bought.

The most popular feature of the fair was a dwarf reported to have come from the Hartz Mountains to tell stories to children. A little room was curtained off for the dwarf's house. "Come, Girls and Boys" was written in large smilax letters across the entrance, where a pretty club member sold brightly colored paper-backed copies of the favorite fairy tale. The tiny room was hung with red curtains and softly shaded lights. Plenty of hassocks for the children to sit upon covered the floor. On a table heaped with sugar kisses and pop-corn stood the dwarf, and with odd gestures accompanying a squeaky voice he told over and over again to roomfuls of delighted boys and girls the thrilling story of Snow-White and the Seven Dwarfs.

The children never guessed, though they were afterwards told, that the dwarf was really two of the Merry-Go-Rounds. Curtains back of the table hid them from view except the head and shoulders of one girl and her hands, upon which she wore stockings and slippers. An old red waistcoat stuffed and worn backwards made the dwarf's body look just right; a tall cap and a false beard carried out the delusion perfectly. The dwarf's arms with which he gesticulated most impressively were the arms of the second girl, whose head and body were concealed by the curtain pinned closely together behind the dwarf's head. If you are thinking of giving a children's party or of getting up a fair, be sure to invite a dwarf to entertain the young folk. You will understand, then, how charming the effect is. When the story finishes and breathlessly the children crowd forward to shake hands with the odd little man, he quickly flings bonbons out among them, and while they scramble to pick them up he mysteriously vanishes.

Our Little People

The Funniest Party

BETTY WIGGLESWORTH celebrated her fifth birthday coming down with aggravated mumps. For three days she was patient, took medicines and kept under the bedclothes up to her chin. But after that, little girl fretfulness asserted itself, and no one of all the big household could make her happy, so she just cried and cried.

"See here, dearie," said Minetta, lifting a pile of handkerchiefs from the hamper full of freshly ironed clothes and stepping into Betty's darkened room, "let us give a party, right on the quilt." Almost before you could finish saying "Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers," every handkerchief, big, middlesized and little, was tied up into a doll or a rabbit hopping about on the bed. Betty forgot all of her troubles until she fell asleep at last. Then every one declared next day that Betty's counterpane party was a dream, but Minetta in the laundry ironing the tumbled kerchiefs over again knew better.

It was such a happy idea that I am telling other girls and boys and mammas about it in case you should happen to know of any one coming down with aggravated mumps.

I WISH

A birdie from the South has flown
With twigs to build his nest:
I wish I were a tiny bird,
But God knows best.

Little flowers come through the ground,
In brilliant colors dressed;
Oh! I would like to be a flower.
Does God know best?

The fleecy clouds play merrily,
On which the fairies rest;
I know I'd love to be a sprite,
But—God knows best.

MARGRETTA MANNING, aged 10.

Good-Morning Verse

He covereth himself with light as with a garment. The Lord reigneth.
O sing unto the Lord a new song.

Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

MONUMENTAL

ENDURING AS THE PYRAMIDS

We have sold over $190,000 worth of White Bronze Memorials through CHRISTIAN HERALD advertising.

Our thousands of customers will testify to our "Square Deal" and will recommend White Bronze from their own experience, because of its Durability, Artistic Beauty, Moderate Cost.

Designs, prices and full information FREE to any interested. State about what expense you anticipate and we will send a special selection. No obligation to buy. Distance no obstacle: we deliver everywhere. Write now.

GOOD AGENTS WANTED. LIBERAL PAY.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
355-F Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

LADIES EASE YOUR FEET

A customer writes, "You could not have fitted me better. For the first time in years my feet are comfortable. The soft glove-like feel of

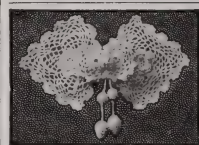
PILLOW SHOES

is simply charming."

$3.00 Postpaid in U. S. A.

Soft, easy, durable, neat, stylish; genuine hand-turned shoes of Vici kid. No lining to wrinkle and chafe; no breaking in necessary. Absolute comfort and fit guaranteed or money refunded. Price includes O'SULLIVAN RUBBER HEELS, the shock absorbers of new live rubber. Write for free catalog and self-measure blank. All styles. Customers everywhere.

PILLOW SHOE COMPANY
184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.



HAND MADE Crochet Bow

34c in a box

We carry different styles of Bows and Jabots each variety Hand Made. High Class Hand Made goods sold at machine goods price.

Write for Catalog

Dept. 3
YAMA CO.
104 Fifth Ave. N. Y.

A College Education

can be easily secured by the aid of The Christian Herald Educational Fund, the benefits of which are open to all Christian Students in High Schools and Colleges.

The Christian Herald plan offers an ideal method by which from $250 to $500 a year may be earned by any bright, ambitious student.

Five Hundred Students in Yale are working their way through that college. You can do what thousands of others have done

Write to-day for particulars.

The Christian Herald
95 Bible House, New York

The New Children's Bureau

HAT for which many of the people of the land interested in the welfare of the children have long been working has at ome to pass, and we are to have a rnment Children's Bureau with a an as its chief. This is the first in the his- of our coun- hat a woman been ap- ted to the po- n of chief of deral bureau. e who know about the of Miss Julia Lathrop feel that a wise e was made n she was ap- ted chief of new Chil- 's Bureau. has for a good y years been ciated with s Jane Ad- s in her great manitarian k and she has he same time a member of Illinois State rd of Chari- She could well have had er training the work to which she has been ed.

Miss Julia C. Lathrop

he creating of the Children's Bu- marks a long step forward in the k being done for the betterment of the conditions of childhood in our ntry. There will be many to agree n the statement made by the Com- tee on Labor in reporting favor- on the bill creating the Children's eau:

It seems to us no more inconsistent with the principles of this government that we should be able to send out bulletins concerning the problems of childhood than that we should send out such bulletins concerning the care of fish or of hogs or of cattle; concerning the preservation of fruit trees or the treatment of the soil."

It seems at last to have been borne in upon those who have long opposed the bill that we owe as much to our children as we owe to sheep and cattle and hogs or to the tree and plant world in the interests of which our government has been expending between three and four millions per year. Mrs. Florence Kelly and Miss Lillian D. Ward have long been trying to have the Children's Bureau created because they have felt that it could be made to be of incalculable value. The bureau is a part of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the scope of its work will be as broad in its particular field as that of the various divisions of the Department of Agriculture in theirs. It will be a conserver of childhood, to which it would be difficult to discover any reasonable objection.

Among the Workers

EVANGELIST A. J. FIFE, of Denver, Colo., just closed an eight months' campaign in Central States. He held very successful ings in Kansas at Brookville, Willis, Ross-, Gypsum and Agra, in Nebraska at Ne- ka and in Iowa at Wiota and Highland. y have accepted Christ and joined the dif- nt churches. The work has been thorough.

AN EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN, led by Hart Magann, was recently brought to a close t. Joseph, Mo. One of the interesting fea- s was a street parade through the business ion of the city. Large delegations from ories, shops, schools, fraternities and rch organizations, attended the various tings.

MRS. M. N. VAN COTT, the aged evangelist, tes from Catskill, N. Y., that she received siderably over one hundred letters and cards greeting as the result of a notice published THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on her recent birth- . She adds, "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in- ifying in goodness and I pray it may grow htily. It was never so fine as now and it always been good."

THE NATIONAL GOOD CITIZENSHIP Movement s organized at a conference held in the Old st M. E. church building, Chicago, April 27. Twenty-nine organizations were repre- ted, their combined membership numbering e than five million. The policy of the vement is to organize the "Young Peoples ieties of the Churches, Church Brotherhoods, eon bands, and other Christian reform so- ies in an active campaign in behalf of civic ghteousness, . . . and a national movement inst the traffic in alcoholic liquors." The vement has the hearty support and co-opera- n of well-known Christian leaders.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES BUNCE, of Center- t, L. I., aged seventy-five and seventy years pectively, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary their wedding recently. The entire family s present, consisting of six children and fif- n grandchildren. Numerous relatives of the d couple came from different parts of the ntry. A brother and sister from Michigan re among those who attended the function. and Mrs. Bunce received many gifts, among m being a gift of $100 in gold from the ldren and grandchildren. They have been mbers of the Methodist Episcopal Church of nterport for fifty years, and on Sunday, May the minister preached a sermon in their nor. Mrs. Bunce has been an enthusiastic der of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the past hteen years.

YOUR BOY'S HAPPINESS

is one of your first considerations. Have you ever thought of the tremendous importance and influence of his reading matter? There is nothing in this world that will do a boy more harm than cheap, trashy literature.

Get THE BOYS' MAGAZINE for Him! In no other way could you give him more solid pleasure, entertainment and instruction. This splendid magazine is chock full of just the kind of reading you want your boy to have. Clean, inspiring stories written by such noted boys' authors as Hugh Pendexter, Everett T. Tomlinson, William Heyliger, etc., etc. Practical and instructive departments devoted to Electricity, Mechanics, Photography, Carpentry, etc.

WALTER CAMP writes the editorials for The Boys' Magazine and also conducts the Athletic department. Mr. Camp is known everywhere as America's highest authority on athletics—every boy should read his ideas of clean, manly sportsmanship.

THE BOYS' MAGAZINE is beautifully illustrated throughout—each issue has a new handsome cover in colors.

SPECIAL OFFER! In order to introduce The Boys' Magazine to thousands of new readers we will offer to send the magazine for a whole year, together with a copy of our book, "Fifty Ways For Boys To Earn Money" and also this splendid base ball glove all for only $1.00. This glove that we give away with a yearly subscription is a high class one and one that your boy will be proud to own. It is made of finest tan leather, felt padded leather lined, web thumb and deep pocket. We prepay all transportation charges.

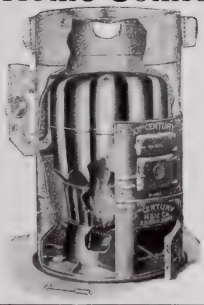
Order to-day. We will refund your money promptly if you are not more than pleased with your investment.

(This offer is open to new subscribers only.)

THE SCOTT F. REDFIELD CO., 1055 Main St., Smethport, Pa.

THE BOYS' MAGAZINE at all newsstands, 10c a copy.

Home Comforts and Home Delights



do not come from wealth or large income. They come from having the home evenly, cleanly and economically heated. The proper kind of a furnace costs less than stoves or grates.

XXth Century Furnaces

are used and praised universally by many thousand home owners everywhere—in every climate. They are made right, and have the only sensible and Economic Fire Pot ever made. They burn all kinds of fuel—even cheap grades of soft coal, slack, etc., with perfect combustion and yield one-third more heat at one-third less cost than any other Furnace made.

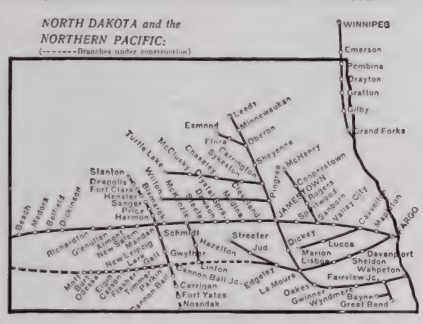
The Cheapest Heat for Any Home—Country or City

and yet clean, healthful. No work, no repairs; sanitary, ideal. Write us, giving a sketch or plan of your house, indicating the number of rooms to be heated, and let us tell you how you can get a XXth Century Furnace, and try it on our Common-Sense Guarantee Plan. Ask for our little booklet on the Homes, No. 30.

The XXth Century Heating & Ventilating Co.
AKRON, OHIO

North Dakota

"No land on the American continent excels that in certain sections of North Dakota."



¶The Northern Pacific Railway has 1,300 miles of main and branch lines in North Dakota, which radiate practically to all parts of the state.

¶OPPORTUNITIES are open on every hand in North Dakota—not only to acquire valuable and productive farming lands, but also in the many growing cities and towns along the Northern Pacific Railway.

¶Ask for our "Opportunities" book which lists North Dakota points along the Northern Pacific where openings exist, particularly in newly opened territory.

¶The Northern Pacific Railway Company has lands for sale in the various states along its lines. Printed price lists and descriptions will be furnished on application to Thomas Cooper, Land Commissioner, Northern Pacific Railway, St. Paul, Minnesota.

So says Professor Thomas Shaw, agricultural and land expert—recognized authority on subjects having to do with farming.

¶"No land excels it in richness of elements of plant food"—he said in speaking of the great Red River Valley. Lands can be had here for $25 to $40 an acre. In the Missouri Valley also, he affirms an exceeding richness. Of the sections being opened up by new branch lines of the Northern Pacific, as indicated on the map, he said: "What pleased me most about this country was the character of the soil—it would be hard to find a better." And yet this land can be bought today for from $10 to $25 an acre.

¶North Dakota's population increased almost 81% in the last census decade—yet there is plenty of room for more. Write today for literature and particulars of low round-trip Homeseekers' Fares in effect on 1st and 3rd Tuesdays of each month. Address

L. J. BRICKER, Gen'l Immigration Agent or A. M. CLELAND, Gen'l Pass'r Agent Northern Pacific Ry., ST. PAUL, MINN.

NORTHERN PACIFIC
YELLOWSTONE PARK LINE

Northern Pacific Railway

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

Extraordinary Series of Discoveries

THE twelve years ending with the discovery of the South Pole are as full of dramatic achievement as the days of Drake and Raleigh, for not even in those times was there a more extraordinary series of discoveries and conquests.

In 1900 only one man had been the length of Africa by land, and the Cape to Cairo Railroad was but a dream. There was not a railroad across South America. A great part of Siberia was without rail or road except the old caravan trails. China was practically without railroads. Lhassa was unknown, forbidden to the white man. During a century and a half men had tried to reach the South Pole and failed, and the North Pole had baffled the efforts of 400 years.

Within a dozen years white men have traveled over the great desert, visited Lake Chad, made a protectorate over Timbuctoo. The days of the Mahdi at Khartoum are ended and any tourist may travel there comfortably by rail. The Cape to Cairo Railroad is an assured fact. The heart of Africa is now no more remote from the popular imagination than Oklahoma City was in 1900.

In South America the Trans-Andean Railroad is in full operation across the continent, as the Trans-Siberian is across Asia. Even China has her railroads. Lhassa has been visited by a British army and both poles are the common property of every fireside that boasts of books, magazines, or newspapers.

Such a record may justify a feeling of pride that the spirit of conquest and adventure is as alive as ever and accompanied with all the courage and hardihood that blessed any earlier generation.—World's Work.

. . .

Our Native Birds

THE United States Division of Ornithology has proved, in figures that do not lie, that the ravages of insects are costing the farmers and fruit growers of this country some $200,000,000 every year. The diet of our native birds, it has been shown, is made up—to the extent of 75 or even 90 per cent.—of these destructive insects. On the other hand, that "rat of the air," the English sparrow, in his menu is only three per cent. insectivorous, and even in this small proportion many of the bugs he eats are of the beneficent kind. It is not more English sparrows that are wanted—for they disrupt the homes of useful birds—but our own native-born feathered citizens. The protection of these birds is an issue closely connected with the preservation of the trees. In the cities particularly, in an enlightened system of park superintendence and scientific forestry, there will be constant cooperative effort to save the native birds and the trees at once, and to eliminate that pestiferous intruder, the English sparrow, to the end that we may rejoice both in the foliage and in its feathered protectors, and not have cause to mourn the fact that there are "bare ruined choirs where late the sweet birds sang."—New York Press.

. . .

Seven Wonders of the Modern World

A SCIENTIFIC magazine made a request to the Physical Department at Cornell to name seven wonders of the modern world selected from a list of fifty-seven outstanding inventions and structures submitted.

The faculty, graduates, and seniors in the physics seminary balloted, the award of the voting going to wireless telegraphy, synthetic chemistry, radium, antitoxins, aviation, the Panama Canal, and the telephone.—New York Times.

. . .

San Francisco to New York in Three Days and a Half

THE acceleration of transcontinental railway travel during the past two years has been made so quietly that not many people are aware that the time from ocean to ocean has been reduced to less than three and a half days. The fact was recently brought into prominence by daily press notices of a trip made by an Australian passenger who left San Francisco at 10.40 P.M., March 2, and reached New York March 6 in time to catch the steamship sailing at noon the same day for Europe, the total time from San Francisco to New York being three days and eleven hours.—Scientific American.

. . .

The United States the Richest Nation

A FRENCH writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes, trying to figure out how much various nations are "worth," estimates the "fortune" of France at $48,000,000,000, that of England at $58,400,000,000, Germany $89,000,000,000 and the United States $111,200,000,000. He concludes that, generally speaking, "agriculture remains the foundation of national prosperity."—San Francisco Chronicle.

IRON WITHOUT A FIRE

New, easy, pleasant way. Mrs. Larkins, Mich. writes, "Have ironed 6 years with perfect satisfaction." Mrs. Timm, O. says, "Couldn't think of ironing without it."

Improved Monitor Sad Iron
Self-Heating. Not Sold in Stores.

Strong, light, handsome--durable. Easy to operate: heat regulated instantly; no dirt—no odor.

WANTED--AGENTS, SALESMEN, MANAGERS. Big Profits. No experience required. Sells almost on sight. Send for big colored circular, full size and interior view of iron. Exclusive selling rights—no charge for territory.

Monitor Sad Iron Co.
69 Wayne St., Big Prairie, O.

A BAD BREATH

is one of the most terrible afflictions to a sensitive person. It can be quickly sweetened by Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), which stop fermentation and the production of gas in the stomach and so purify the exhalations. They have a remarkable effect also in clearing the complexion. A full size, 25 cent box will be sent, once only, for 10 cent in stamps. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

Old Pants or "Nu-Pantz"

Crease your trousers perfectly in five minutes with the "Nu-Pantz" Creaser. Also presses ties, creases coat sleeves, removes wrinkles, etc. Aluminum self-heating outfit complete—weighs but 2 lbs. Save $10.00 to $50.00 per year and add hundreds of dollars to your personal appearance. Sent prepaid for $3.50, on money-back trial. Write to-day for folder and approval offer.

RACINE CREASER CO.
18th Street Racine, Wis.

Ball-cup Nipple FREE

We want every mother of a nursing babe to try the only ball-cup nipple. Send us your address on a postcard, with druggist's name, and we will mail you one. Fits any small neck bottle. Only nipple with open food-cup and protected orifice at bottom—will not collapse, feeds regularly.

State baby's age, kind and quantity of food. Half Section

Hygeia Nursing Bottle Co., 1341 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED WAYS OF MAKING PIN MONEY are explained in detail from actual experience in the new book by Lilian W. Babcock

PIN-MONEY SUGGESTIONS

282 large pages, bound in cloth, $1.00 net. Sent postpaid for $1.10 by the publishers.

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY, 34 Beacon St., Boston

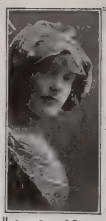
SEND SAMPLE OF HAIR

and I will send on approval a 25 inch guaranteed natural wavy switch.—Price $3

If satisfactory, send money order.

MME. FRIED, 25 West 34th Street, New York

Send for illustrated catalogue D



Reduce or Increase Your Weight—Improv Your Health—Perfect Your Figure

Become my pupil and I will make you my friend. Devote fifte minutes daily to my system and you can weigh what Nature intende You can reduce any part of your figure burdened with superfluous flesh or build up any part that is undeveloped. The effect of my system can be concentrated on your hips, waist, limbs, or any other portions of your body.

My system tends to make a figure perfectly proportioned throughout—a full, rounded neck; shapely shoulders, arms and legs; a fine, fresh complexion; good carriage with erect poise and grace of movement.

You Can Improve Your Health

My system stimulates, reorganizes and regenerates your entire body. It helps you to transform your food into good, rich blood. It strengthens your heart, lungs and other organs, conquering all weaknesses and disorders, and generating vital force.

My latest book, "The Body Beautiful," should be read by every woman and I will send it to you free. It explodes the fallacy that lack of beauty or health cannot be avoided. In it I explain how every woman can be vigorous, healthy and attractive.

I ha practic what teach. childhood was puny ar deformed, have overcon all weakness by my own n tural, drugle methods. Millio of people have see in me a living demo stration of my uniq system of health-cultu and body-building. If y are weak, nervous, fat, thi unshapely, tired, lacking vitalit or in any other respect not at yo very best, I can surely be of service to yo

MY GUARANTEE

With my free book, "The Body Beautiful," which fully illustrated with photographs of myself explainin my system, I give full particulars of my Guarantee Trial Plan, wher by you can test the value of my instruction without risking a single penny.

Write for "The Body Beautiful" and Trial Plan to-day

ANNETTE KELLERMANN, Room 806 W 12 West 31st St., New Yor

Shoo-Fly THE ANIMALS FRIEND

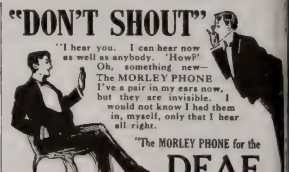
Keeps flies and other insect pests off of animals—in barn or pasture—longer than any Imitation. Used and endorsed since 1885 by leading dairymen and farmers.

$1 worth saves $20.00 in milk and flesh on each cow in a single season. Heals sores, stops itching and prevents infection. Nothing better for galls. Kills lice and mites in poultry houses.

SEND $1, enough Shoo-Fly to protect 200 cows, and our 3-tube gravity sprayer without extra charge. Money back if not satisfactory. Write for booklet, FREE. Special terms to agents.

Shoo-Fly Mfg. Co., Dept. 34, 1310 N. 10th St., Phila.

"DON'T SHOUT"



"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

made low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimon

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadel

HAVE YOU READ

"MOTHER"

By Kathleen Norris

This remarkable novel, although already published in book form, has been considered of sufficient importance to be reprinted as a four-part serial in the leading ladies' magazine of America.

The editors of The Ladies' Home Journal in a foreword say:

> For the first time in its history The Ladies' Home Journal presents a story that has already been published as a book by The Macmillan Company. This procedure is unusual, so likewise is the story. The Editors regard this novelette by Mrs. Norris as being one of the strongest stories of its kind that has been written of late years, and as such they are anxious that it should be read and enjoyed by thousands of readers of this magazine in whose hands the book, of which this presentation is an abridged form, may never fall.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT said: "I wish it [Mother] could be used as a tract throughout the country."

Kathleen Norris

Now in Its Tenth Edition

HOW TO SECURE A COMPLETE COPY OF THIS LITERARY GEM

OUR SPECIAL OFFER*—We will send the book, Mother, postpaid, as a reward to any subscriber who will induce a friend or neighbor, not now on our list, to subscribe for The Christian Herald for One Year, at $1.50.

OR*—We will send the book, Mother, postpaid, to any subscriber with renewal of subscription for One Year for $2.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, - - New York City

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

Carnesville, Ga. A certain editor in this State declares that the twenty-first chapter of John's Gospel is a forgery. What is your opinion?

e know that it has been asserted by some es that this chapter must have been added another hand, because the evangelist con- ded his work in the previous chapter. This, ever, is not accepted by sound scholarship, the reason that it is not unusual in the Testament writings and in other good s, for authors to insert supplementary er, to which class the chapter in question ly belongs. There is no evidence that 's Gospel was ever known in the early ch without this chapter. John, it is true, rs to himself in the third person; but he lso also in chapter 19: 35 in practically the e terms as in 21: 24. The best commenta- agree as to the genuineness on prima facie ence.

A. W., Reardan, Wash. How much area was covered by Herod's temple and its courts?

square of 600 feet, according to Josephus.

M., Dayton, O. How many people in all were on the Titanic? Give the number of men and women in each class and the number of these saved.

ounting passengers and crew, there were 6 souls in all, of whom 703, or nearly 32 cent., were saved. The following table s the list:

st class	173 men	.....	58 saved
d class	160 men	.....	13 saved
d class	454 men	.....	55 saved
w	875 men	.....	189 saved
st class	144 women	.....	139 saved
d class	93 women	.....	78 saved
d class	179 women	.....	98 saved
w	23 women	.....	21 saved
st class	5 children	.....	5 saved
d class	24 children	.....	24 saved
d class	76 children	.....	23 saved

3., Midland, Mich. 1. Define "Titanic." 2. Was the Titanic the largest ship as yet built? Give size. 3. Give size of Great Eastern. 4. Give size of Mauretania.

"Titanic" means of vast size; from the ns, sons and daughters of Uranos and Gæa, ed in Greek mythology as very large, of t strength and given to violence. 2. No. new liner Imperator of the North German d Steamship Company is the largest vessel nt. 3. The Great Eastern was 679½ feet , 82 feet 8 inches broad and 18,915 tonnage. The Mauretania is 790 feet long, 88 feet ad and 32,000 tonnage.

s M. M., Athens, Pa. Will you kindly sug- gest a few names suitable for a Sunday school class?

n selecting a class name we would suggest t you take that of some missionary who is l known to the children. Have them read and study his (or her) life and set him up n example. For instance, "The Livingstone le Class," after David Livingstone. Names h as "Willing Workers" and "Busy Bees" e been used so much that they have become notonous. To keep up a live interest in the ses it would be well to have some variety in s names. Not only can missionaries be en, but people who were personally ac- inted with the children and whose beautiful istian lives are inspirations to those they behind. This would create a deep spiritual erest in the class and would rouse them to more efficient work.

L. S., Winnipeg. In excavations near Babylon, Nineveh, and other places in Asia Minor have any bones been found among the tablets, pottery and other arti- cles unearthed?

No. In certain soils, bones disintegrate rap- ; in others, such as calcareous or peaty ls, they endure and may be intact after the se of centuries. The soil of Asia Minor is her sandy or loamy and not conducive to servation. Bones have been found in tombs, none of established antiquity elsewhere.

bscriber, Reading, Pa. We who in the past have contributed willingly to the various calls for help for China and for other pur- poses, would doubtless feel more inclined to continue doing so if you would publish an accounting as to where all the money goes, to whom and by whom, and how it is dis- tributed and what Chinese Fund balance still remains. This would indeed be inter- esting and is due to us who have already contributed.

The suggestion is an eminently proper, one d we take pleasure in giving the information tired. All funds contributed for the China mine last year were forwarded by THE CHRIS- AN HERALD through our State Department in ashington to the United States Consul at anghai to be by him turned over to the civic mmittee in that city and the missionary com- ttee in Chinkiang. These two committees, ich had charge of the apportionment or dis- bution of relief funds, made a full and satis- story accounting of the same, showing that

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contributions amounted to $121,100, of which $76,500 were sent to Chinkiang and $23,500 to Shanghai, while $21,100 were represented in the Buford cargo. A balance sheet showing these facts appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of August 30, 1911. All famine fund contributions received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this year are turned over to Mr. Schiff's Red Cross Committee in New York, which is working in conjunction with the National Red Cross in Washington, all cable remittances being made by the latter organization to China direct. When the work is completed, a statement of the fund and its disposition will be issued.

B. I., New Salem, Ind. 1. How old was Jesus when Simeon took him in his arms in the temple? 2. Where was Jesus circumcised? 3. What is the population of New York and what percentage are Christians?

1. Three days. 2. In the temple. 3. 4,983,385; about 20 per cent., estimated, but probably larger.

J. S., Sligo, La. What was the position and office of an elder, according to Scripture?

According to the accepted definition, "the office of elder was the only permanent and essential office of the church," under both the old and new dispensations. The elders of the New Testament church were pastors (Eph. 4: 11), bishops or overseers (Acts 20: 28), leaders and rulers (Heb. 13: 7; I. Thess. 5: 12) of the flock. They were also the teachers of the congregation, expounding and preaching and also administering the sacraments. Doubtless many were elders who did not leave their temporal occupations. In the modern church their duties are somewhat modified, although the same general characteristics remain.

C. E. K., Schenectady, N. Y. Please harmonize Matt. 27: 3-10 and Acts 1: 18, 19, referring to the suicide of Judas and the disposition of the thirty pieces of silver.

Several explanations of this apparent discrepancy have been offered. The first, with relation to the death of Judas, is that the word translated as "hanged" in Matt. 27: 5 is capable of a different interpretation, i. e., death by a sudden spasm of suffocation, which might have been accompanied by a fall before the spasm spent itself. Another suggestion, which has been made by some eminent scholars, is that the work of suicide was but half accomplished when, the halter parting, Judas fell with the result stated in Acts 1: 18. The second question, as to the disposition of the money, is more easily explained. The verb "purchased" used here, in the opinion of Kuhner, Donaldson and other authorities, should be rendered in the causative form, so as to read: "This man was the occasion of purchasing a field," which is probably the real meaning of the passage in Acts 1: 18.

J. A. T., Willmar, Minn. At a meeting of Sunday school teachers recently, we came into a discussion about the time of the world's creation. Can you tell me the exact time of the creation of Adam? They insisted it was 4,000 years B.C., but I did not think so.

The chronology which you find in the marginal columns of many of the older Bibles, notably in the Authorized Version of King James, is not a part of the Bible itself by any means. It is the work of Archbishop Ussher, an illustrious prelate of the Irish Church, who lived 1580-1656. His chronological labors were directed towards affording an idea of the time that elapsed between certain events in recorded history. For this purpose he took the year 1 A.D.—the beginning of the Christian era—as his starting point and reckoned backwards as far as reliable recorded history afforded good working ground. He reckoned as far back as 4,000 years before Christ, and then finding no more available material in the form of history, either written or inscribed, he had necessarily to stop. He did not by any means imply, however, nor are his figures interpreted by Biblical scholars to mean, that he had reached the point of creation. On the contrary, he had simply gone as far as recorded history enabled him to go. The Mosaic books in the Old Testament did not claim, in any sense, that the world was created in 4000 B.C. The first line, first verse, and first chapter of Genesis distinctly tells us that "in the beginning" God created the heaven and the earth. Moses was educated at the court of Egypt and imbibed all that was worth learning of the Egyptian civilization, which was old even at that date. But before Egypt there had been still older kingdoms and civilizations. We would ask you to look up the history in any good encyclopedia of Babylonia, Phœnicia, Chaldea and other ancient nations, and you will form some idea of the great antiquity of that portion of the world's history which has not yet been definitely written. In the last century the world has yielded up many of its secrets to excavators, and consecrated scholarship has made unquestioned discoveries, which are accepted by all the churches, showing that recorded time must now be pushed back to a period at least 2,000 years earlier than Ussher's computation. How far beyond this we must travel to get at the date of creation is as much

Continued on next page

It is both Food and Drink

WELCH'S is not a manufactured drink—it contains nothing but the properties supplied by nature. It is fruit nutrition in fluid form. It is good for and relished by well people, invalids and children.

Welch's
The National Drink
Grape Juice

WELCH'S is used in the making of sherbets, punches and many other dainty desserts as well as in delicious drinks for all occasions. Write now for our free booklet of recipes.

Do more than ask for Grape Juice—ask for Welch's—and get it.

If unable to get Welch's of your dealer we will send a trial dozen bottles for $3, express prepaid east of Omaha. Four-ounce bottle by mail, ten cents.

The Welch Grape Juice Company, Westfield, N.Y.

Cheap as Wood.

We manufacture Lawn and Farm Fence, Sell direct shipping to users only, at manufacturers' prices. No agents. Our catalog is Free. Write for it today. UP-TO-DATE MFG. CO, 966 10th St., Terre Haute, Ind.

WELL POSTED

A California Doctor With 40 Years Experience.

"In my 40 years' experience as a teacher and practitioner along hygienic lines," says a Los Angeles physician, "I have never found a food to compare with Grape-Nuts for the benefit of the general health of all classes of people.

"I have recommended Grape-Nuts for a number of years to patients with the greatest success and every year's experience makes me more enthusiastic regarding its use.

"I make it a rule to always recommend Grape-Nuts, and Postum in place of coffee, when giving my patients instructions as to diet for I know both Grape-Nuts and Postum can be digested by anyone.

"As for myself, when engaged in much mental work my diet twice a day consists of Grape-Nuts and rich cream. I find it just the thing to build up gray matter and keep the brain in good working order.

"In addition to its wonderful effects as a brain and nerve food Grape-Nuts always keeps the digestive organs in perfect, healthy tone. I carry it with me when I travel, otherwise I am almost certain to have trouble with my stomach." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Strong endorsements like the above from physicians all over the country have stamped Grape-Nuts the most scientific food in the world. "There's a reason."

Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

We ship on approval without a cent deposit, freight prepaid. DON'T PAY A CENT if you are not satisfied after using the bicycle 10 days.

DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our latest art catalogs illustrating every kind of bicycle, and have learned our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers.

ONE CENT is all it will cost you to write a postal and everything will be sent you free postpaid by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do not wait, write is now

TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries at half usual prices.

Mead Cycle Co. Dept. F71 Chicago

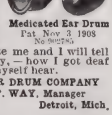
I Was Deaf 25 Years

I CAN NOW HEAR

with these soft, pliable, artificial ear drums, I wear them in my ears night and day. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them in my ears. Write me and I will tell you the true story,—how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.



Medicated Ear Drum Pat. Nov. 3, 1908 No. 905,780

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
G. P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

SAVE MONEY ON FENCE

Put up a fence that will last a lifetime. One that combines beauty with strength. One that is guaranteed to please you—a

Ward Fence

Over 100 patterns from which to select. For cemeteries, churches, parks, etc. Our 1912 catalog shows many beautiful designs. Get it to-day.

WARD FENCE CO., Box Q, Decatur, Ind.

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on manufacturers' prices. Buy our Factory Rebuilt Typewriters. Nearer-to-new on the market. Have trademark and guarantee like new machines. Are thoroughly rebuilt, highly polished, and perfect in appearance. Satisfaction guaranteed. We are the largest rebuilt typewriter concern in the world. Branch stores in leading cities. Write for catalog of standard makes.

American Writing Machine Co., Inc., 345 Broadway, N.Y.

Bees on the Farm "Gleanings in Bee Culture" will help you get more pleasure and more profit from Bee keeping. 6 months trial subscription 25c. Book on Bees and Catalog of Supplies sent free. THE A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Box 284, Medina Ohio a matter of conjecture as when Genesis was written. Science tells us that countless ages may have passed in the early stages of the world's geological development; and even before man appeared on the scene. It is true that scientists differ in this as they do in many other things, but the essential fact remains that the world is far older by many thousands of years than our forefathers supposed. We have better light on the subject than they had, and yet in no vital sense does that light conflict with the words of Scripture "in the beginning." In the New Testament also the same identical language is used at the opening of John's Gospel, chapter 1, verse 1, "In the beginning was the Word." Thus we see in both dispensations, the old and the new, a recognition of the fact that the date of the world's creation is far beyond man's computation.

Continued from preceding page

J. W. T., Scuyog, Ont. 1. What is meant by the statement in some almanacs of the sun being at times fast and at others slow? 2. How are we to determine the exact moment of sunset? 3. Why is it that the word "sledge" means two different things, a heavy hammer and a snow vehicle, in each case spelt and pronounced alike?

1 and 2. The sun never varies; all stars and suns and planets of the universe perform their revolutions with unerring precision. But the way we measure time by the sun varies, hence the expression regarding the sun being fast or slow. What is known as true solar time is measured by the motion of the sun, the length of the day being the interval between two successive passages of the sun over the same meridian and the time of day being always the hour angle of the sun from the meridian. This is the natural measure of time, but owing to the obliquity of the earth's orbit, the intervals between successive returns of the sun to the same meridian are not exactly equal, consequently clocks are not regulated in accordance with this measure, but are made to conform to a solar day the length of which is equal to the average of all the true solar days in a year. The exact time of sunset is that in which he reaches on the western horizon the same meridian over which he appeared in the morning. 3. This is one of the anomalies of the English language, which make it so puzzling to foreigners. Many of our Anglo-Saxon words have been made to do multiple service.

Reader. Why should such a terrible event as the Titanic disaster happen? What good could it possibly do to cause suffering for the relatives and friends?

While some may regard it as a "visitation of God," it does not present that aspect when looked at more closely. Here was a new untried vessel, sent to sea incomplete, with half her complement of lifeboats, with half a hundred shipwrights and mechanics still at work, finishing some very important parts of her interior. She was driven at full speed in the face of terrible dangers, of which her captain had been warned; but he disregarded all warnings and declined to take even simple precautions for the safety of her passengers. Surely we should hesitate to set down what followed as "an act of God." It was the inevitable outcome of man's sinful and criminal neglect.

Mrs. G. G., Klemme, Ia. What is meant by the expression in Ex. 7: 3, "I will harden Pharaoh's heart"?

This expression has been a stumbling block to many. There is a point reached by those who have long persisted in wicked courses which is known as judicial blindness—a point at which—God's restraining spirit being withdrawn—they become unable to distinguish right from wrong or good from evil. They grow hardened and morally incorrigible. (See Mark 3: 5; Rom. 11: 25; II. Cor. 3: 14; Eph. 4: 18.) Under such circumstances, the offender turns even blessings into sin by abusing them, and unless overtaken by some great adversity, continues in his course, blind to consequences. This was doubtless the case with Pharaoh. Egypt had sinned deeply, and so long as its rulers were unchecked by some stronger power, they would continue to sin. Pharaoh, long accustomed to the abuse of power, steeled himself against all sense of justice and mercy, and this the "permissive act of providence" allowed, in order that the culminating punishment should be the more severe. In other words, Pharaoh was permitted to go on in his sin in order that his fate might be made an awful example to the whole world.

J. D. G., Gardiner, Me. Is there anything in the teachings of Christ as to our going to heaven immediately after death?

Christ stated clearly to the dying thief (Luke 23: 43) that after death his soul would be with him in paradise. The parable of the rich man and Lazarus implies clearly that at death the souls of the saved go immediately to heaven (Luke 16: 23). In Phil. 1: 23 Paul expresses his conviction that death would take him immediately into the presence of Christ. In Matt. 22: 31-32, Mark 12: 26, and Luke 20: 37, 38, Christ insists that the righteous who are called dead are still alive. The appearance of Moses and Elijah with Christ at the transfiguration was an actual demonstration of this fact. Even at the very beginning of the Bible, (Gen. 5: 24) there is the implication that Enoch continued in another life the walk with God which he had begun in this. And Heb. 12: 1, including all the faith heroes mentioned in the eleventh chapter, states that they are alive and conscious now, witnessing the conflicts of the saints still on earth.

T. H. Q., Bridgeport, Conn. A few Sundays ago, a minister here told us that he did not believe that Jesus was of divine birth, but that he had a natural father, and to back up his own belief, he said the Gospels of Matthew and Luke were not reliable. I felt like Mary at the tomb when she said, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they laid him."

That Jesus was the Son of God, divinely born, according to prophecy, as set forth in the Scriptures, is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian Church. Any preacher professing to teach Christianity and taking the view you mention, should proclaim his ideas in a church and on a platform of his own, since he cannot consistently do so in any orthodox Christian church. It is possible, however, that you may have misunderstood his language, and it would be well to be quite clear on this point. The denial of the divine birth is an old and familiar one among skepties and unbelievers. Unitarians hold that Jesus was simply a great teacher, but not divine. There is no denomination in any Protestant church, nor for that matter in any other Christian church, Greek or Roman, where such teaching would be accepted. There are certain denominations which have been extremely latitudinarian in allowing freedom of expression and what is termed liberality of view in the pulpit; but the denial of Jesus' divinity transcends all other efforts in this direction and is unthinkable in a professedly Christian pastor. For the accepted view of the incarnation read Matt. 1: 18-25, Luke 1: 26-38, John 1: 14.

Miscellaneous

Subscriber, Vancouver, B. C. Send full name and address for answer by mail.

C. McC., Yorktown, Sask., Can. and Miss A. M. D. Sappow, Japan. See answer to M. L. B. B. in MAIL-BAG of June 5.

Salem. 1. The unpardonable sin is believed to have been attributing the works of the Holy Spirit, and the miracles of Jesus, to Satanic agency. 2. The lady in question is married.

E. W. G., Richfield, Pa.; G. E. K., Big Spring, Md., and W. R., Salem, Ore. The same questions have been dealt with recently in THE MAIL-BAG of May 1, 1912.

C. H. S., Topeka, Kan. Your conclusion is a reasonable one, in view of the fact that according to the Jewish custom a son-in-law took the place of a son, where there was no true lineal descendant.

Reader, Consuelo, La. The name of Paul's parents are not given in the Scriptures. The only mention of his blood relations is in Acts 23: 16 and Rom. 16: 7, 11, but whether Andronicus, Junia and Herodion were really relatives or simply friends is an open question.

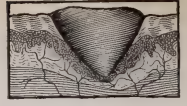
M. L. B. B., Greensburg, Pa. No gift ever came from the hand of God to man that was not perfect, or that was calculated to injure him in spirit, mind or body. You may find some fanatical people who would dogmatize on the incident you mention and would even doubt the divine wisdom. They deserve no attention.

L. S. B., Renfrew, Ont. The soul is an incorporeal, indestructible entity, the spiritual nature of man as incarnate, while the spirit is that rational principle of man which gives consciousness to action. Both lack all the properties distinctly characteristic of matter. A distinction is made by Paul, who calls soul psyche as distinguished from pneuma, spirit.

Reader, Hackensack, N. J. The attitude of a professing Christian should be consistent at all times. Inflexible rigidity may, however, be out of place under certain circumstances, but not where it involves the sacrifice of an essential principle, such as truth, honesty, etc. With regard to Sunday travel, it is well to avoid it when possible, or where it is not imperative. These are matters concerning which the individual conscience should indicate whether we are doing right or wrong.

Storehouse of Knowledge

Please accept my sincere thanks for The Christian Herald Almanac. It is not only a premium, but a storehouse of useful knowledge. I have much to say for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as a family paper. There is none better that comes into the home, and it is very highly appreciated by all. I place it in the missions about the city after reading it myself. My prayer is that it may be the means of leading many souls to a higher life. F. W. ISRAEL.
Worcester, Mass.



Be Sensible With That Corn

Don't pare it. That merely removes the top layers.

And that form of home surgery is dangerous. A slip of the blade means infection. And that means blood poison, sometimes.

A chemist has discovered a way to end corns. This discovery is embodied in our B & B wax—the heart of a Blue-jay plaster.

Apply this little plaster and the pain ends at once. Then this B & B wax gently loosens the corn. In two days the whole corn, root and all, comes out.

No pain, no soreness. You completely forget the corn.

There is no other way to do this. That is why Blue-jay is the only treatment used by folks who know.

It has removed already fifty million corns. Let it deal with yours.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

Blue-jay Corn Plasters

Sold by Druggists—15c and 25c per package

Sample Mailed Free. Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York, Makers of B & B Handy Package Absorbent Cotton, etc.
(153)

Make These At Home With

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

FABRIKOID LEATHER

HANDSOME, inexpensive, serviceable shopping or theatre bags, to match your gown as decreed by fashion, can be made of Fabrikoid by any woman.

This durable and pliant material may be cut, sewn by hand or machine, hemmed or embroidered as neatly and easily as cloth.

The beautiful blues, greens, reds, browns, yellows, etc., match prevailing styles. Fabrikoid does not fade or harden like leather. Stains or dust easily washed off without harm to color or texture.

Send for FREE Sample

Stating intended use. Let us tell you how you can use Fabrikoid in the home. Mail a postal TODAY.

FABRIKOID, Dept. 372 - - Du Pont Powder Co., Wilmington, Del.

Boys Who Have Won

Under this heading we shall print from week to week the photographs and records of some of our CHRISTIAN HERALD boys.

It is an honor to be a CHRISTIAN HERALD boy.

H. Devere Taggard, who lives in the State of Ohio, thinks so. Here is his photo.

Devere says in one of his letters, after receiving various prizes (Devere has sold hundreds of copies):

"You have been good to me. I surely appreciate what you have done. I find I can sell copies easily. Of course, I'm trying for a pony."

Of course, he is trying for a pony!

From week to week we are adding the best CHRISTIAN HERALD boys to our staff. Any boy who would like to try should fill out this coupon and mail it:

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

Northwestern Development

SOME time ago the statement was made that while thousands of farmers had been induced to emigrate over the northwestern border of the United States into Canada, many of them finding conditions in the new country so different were coming back to their native States. It is interesting now to note that a determined effort is being made to call attention to the attractiveness of the millions of acres of cheap land in Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon.

The railroads are making determined efforts to colonize the sections along their routes. This cannot but accrue to their benefit in the increased amount of haulage, and while their interest in the matter may seem to be more or less selfish, yet it must be admitted that the continued development of the unsettled parts of the country are all to the betterment of the country at large, but especially to those settlers who are taking advantage of the low rates which are being offered the pioneer.

Famine Relief Work in China

THE Central China Famine Relief Committee in Shanghai writes as follows to the Relief Committee in New York: "We are very grateful for what the New York Committee has been able to do. We have received from all sources about $70,000. The need is increasingly great and will continue so through the month of May. Practically the only reliance is our Committee, for outside help has been insignificant, and our Committee has thus far been able to relieve about 10 to 15 per cent. of the total distress.

"About sixty missionaries are engaged in famine relief work. Two men are assigned to every center where relief is being distributed. Those receiving help are all required to do work, and only one member of a family is generally allowed to work, or at least the amount that each family can earn in a day is limited. We go on a basis of forty cash (approximately two cents a day gold) per month. If a man has four members to his family he receives eight cents, if only three he receives six cents for the same amount of work. If there are five in a family, wherever possible two are required to work. The people respond willingly, even to these starvation wages, and the gentry themselves insist on keeping rates down, so as to relieve as many as possible. The country in which we are working has much of it been looted several times, until it is in a condition of absolute destitution. Those that have some bean cake deem themselves extremely fortunate, and can not get on our lists, for relief is given only to those who are in absolute destitution."

Answered Prayers

E. F. G., Montreal, Can. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer."

M. L., Liberal, Kan. "God answered my prayer in restoring a dear one to health."

F. C. P., Gloversville, N. Y. "I praise God that he heard and answered my prayers."

A. M. R., Glasford, Ill. "I wish to thank God for answering many praycrs for me."

Mrs. M. E. H., Greensboro, Vt. "I wish to acknowledge that God answered my prayer."

B. H., Kokomo, Ind. "When recently in deep trouble, God heard and answered my prayer."

A. C. H. "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayers when in trouble."

W. D., California, Pa. "After everything else failed, I appealed to God, and he helped me."

A Subscriber, Somerset, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge God's great goodness in answering prayer."

Mrs. E. E. D., Athens, Ga. "I would like to add my acknowledgment of God's answer to prayers."

N. J. McC., Chico, Calif. "Recently in answer to prayer I was delivered from very great trouble."

Mrs. K. H. M., Butler, Pa. "God heard and answered my prayer, and helped me in time of trouble."

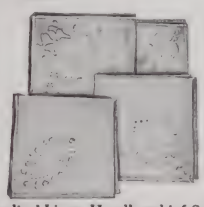
New Fancy Work and Embroideries

FOR CHRISTIAN HERALD SUBSCRIBERS

WE offer here, for the first time, some examples of the new Punch Work, which is rapidly becoming the most popular of all forms of embroidery. We have searched for the finest examples and most unique designs in this and the more standard classes of embroidery work, and we offer here Big Value for a very little effort on your part to secure new subscriptions, or for very little extra money in addition to the regular subscription price of your own Christian Herald renewal.

Up-to-Date Receiving Aprons. No. 165

This offer consists of 3 different apron designs, one of which is illustrated above, stamped on fine quality cross bar lawn. We also include with the three aprons 10 skeins of D. M. C. cotton.

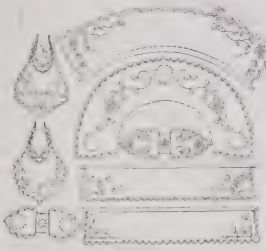


Ladies' Linen Handkerchief Set No. 11340

This beautiful set consists of 4 hemstitched pure linen handkerchiefs each stamped with a different design. We also include 3 skeins of D. M. C. cotton for working.

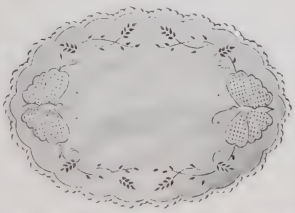
Fancy Work Combination Outfit. No. 32 Splendid Big Value Offer

This beautiful combination outfit contains many handsome designs for spring and summer wear, both for children and ladies, besides centerpieces, etc. The designs in this outfit are full size, and include the following: 1 corset cover stamped on fine nainsook; 1 centerpiece design stamped on 18x18 inches pure ecru linen; 2 eight-inch doilies stamped on pure linen; 1 baby cap; 1 pincushion; 1 bib; 1 jabot; 1 tie; 1 ladies' straight collar, all stamped on linen; 1 stiletto for punching eyelet work; 1 large sheet of perforated patterns on bond paper containing the following designs: 1 lingerie hat; 1 shirtwaist; 1 skirt panel to match; 1 pair baby shoes; 1 complete alphabet ¾ inch high; a number of sprays and many other useful designs. This outfit also includes a cake of "Ideal" stamping preparation, distributor and full directions for stamping.



Ladies' Neckwear Set. No. 121

This up-to-date set consists of the following designs, all stamped on fine quality pure imported linen: 2 different Dutch collar designs; 2 straight collar designs; 2 jabots; 2 different tie designs. We also include with this offer 15 skeins of D. M. C. cotton to make the different designs.

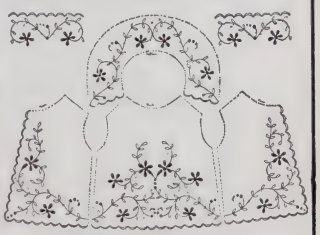


Tray Design in Punch-Work and Eyelet Embroidery. No. 164

This beautiful tray design, to be worked in the popular punch-work embroidery, is stamped on 18x24 inches pure imported linen, including 20 skeins of D. M. C. cotton; 1 skein of linen thread; 1 special large punch-work needle and special instructions for punch-work embroidery.

Centerpiece Design in Punch-Work Embroidery. No. 22002

This up-to-date centerpiece design stamped on 22x22 inches pure imported linen, including 1 skein of linen thread, 10 skeins of D. M. C. cotton, 1 special punch-work needle and full instructions in punch-work embroidery and sufficient lace for the entire centerpiece.



Baby Coat Design in Eyelet Embroidery. No. 539

The above baby coat design stamped on very good quality French pique.

Outfit No. 32. All the Above Given for One New Subscription

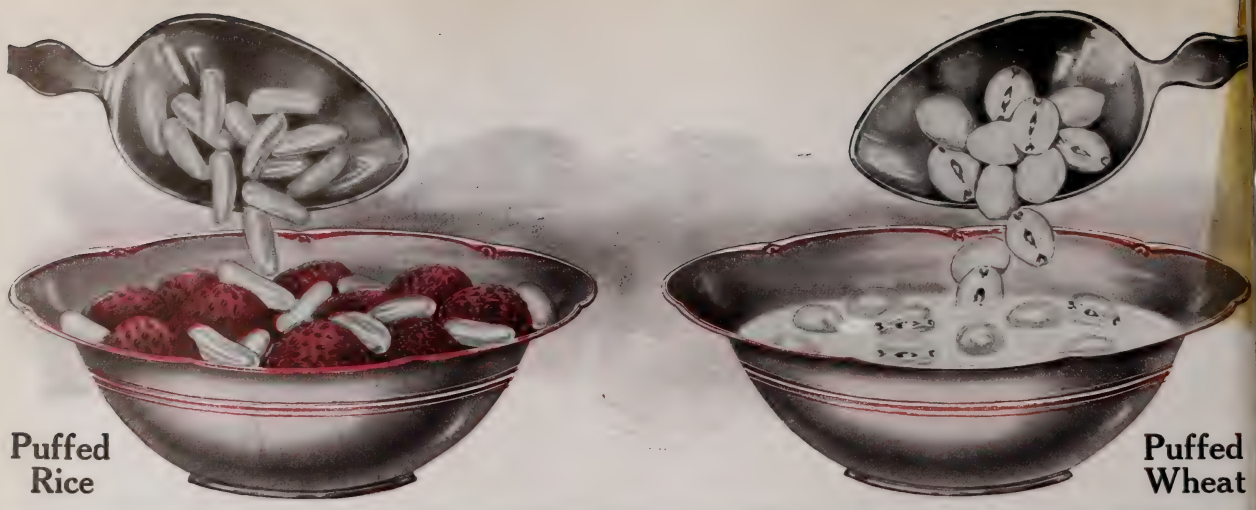
OUR OFFERS:

WE WILL SEND ENTIRELY FREE to any of our old subscribers the choice of any one of the offers numbered on this page, postpaid, as a premium for securing one new subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year at $1.50.

A new subscription is one where the paper is to go into a household where it has not been regularly received within the last year. Change of name to a different member of the same household cannot be counted as a new subscription.

OR—We will send any one of the offers numbered on this page, postpaid, to any subscriber now on our list who will send in his or her renewal at once for one year's subscription with remittance of $2. Subscriptions may be renewed in advance.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York City



Puffed Rice

Puffed Wheat

Mornings

Serve With Berries

In June—the strawberry month—try mixing these Puffed Grains with berries.

These honeycombed grains taste like toasted nuts, and form a delightful blend.

Don't serve them merely with sugar and cream, as you do the year around.

Other Summer Uses

In the finest restaurants Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are used to garnish ice cream.

They are used like nut meats in frosting cake.

They are ideal crisps for serving in soup.

Girls use them in candy making. Boys eat them like peanuts when at play.

From morning till midnight—in a dozen ways—users find uses for Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

Shot From Guns

Blasted by Steam Explosion

These curious foods are due to a curious process.

We select perfect grains, then seal them up in mammoth bronze-steel guns.

The guns are revolved for sixty minutes in a heat of 550 degrees. That's where the grains get the nut-like taste.

The moisture in the grain turns to steam in that heat, and creates a tremendous pressure.

Then the guns are unsealed and the steam explodes. The millions of granules are literally blasted to pieces.

The grains are puffed to eight times normal size. Yet the coats are unbroken. The kernels are shaped as they grew.

Evenings

Serve With Milk

These grains are crisper than crackers—four times as porous as bread.

Each grain consists of a myriad cells, each bounded by thin, toasted walls.

Airy, flaky, whole-grain wafers—wonderful morsels to serve in milk.

Prof. Anderson's

Delightful, Scientific Foods

One mustn't forget that Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are not mere cereal dainties.

They have another advantage over all other cereals. They are fully twice as digestible as wheat or rice ever was made before.

The granules are blasted to pieces, so digestion can instantly act. It begins before the grains reach the stomach.

That is why these foods are prescribed by physicians when the stomach can't stand a tax.

That's why one may eat them at any hour—between meals or at bedtime—without ill result.

That is why brain workers eat them for luncheons.

Prof. Anderson invented this process to make whole grains wholly digestible, as never was done before. Their deliciousness was merely an accident.

1,000,000 Dishes Daily

Among all the cereal foods ever invented nothing compares with Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

Never were cereals so nut-like—never so melting, so flaky, yet crisp.

Countless users know this. And they consume a million dishes daily.

We invite you to join them—now on the verge of summer. For this is the acme of hot weather food.

Morning, noon and night—between meals and bedtime—the folks in your home will want Puffed Wheat and Rice.

Tell your grocer to get some now

Puffed Rice . . 15c Except in Extreme West

Puffed Wheat . 10c Except in Extreme West

The Quaker Oats Company

Sole Makers—Chicago

(271)

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 19, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 25. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

A POPPY FIELD
From the Painting by M. K. Izmagri

Reproduced by Curtis-Dahl Art Co.

Dickens Anniversary Sale!

To Christian Herald readers who mail coupon below at once we will send this handsome 15-volume "Library Edition" of Dickens' Complete Works, for seven days' free examination, without one cent in advance—but must be quick.

THE year 1912 being the 100th Anniversary of the birth of Charles Dickens, the magazines and newspapers have printed many interesting articles on the life and works of this most charming writer. As a result, hundreds of our customers have written to inquire if we could furnish Dickens' Complete Works in a Popular Edition less expensive than our regular $45 "Library Edition." We had no other edition to offer, but as a special courtesy to our customers, and in order to add more names to our mailing list of book-buyers, we have decided to sell a limited number of sets of our standard "Library Edition," on easy terms, at only $20.50, which is just about the cost of manufacture. This offer is now open to you, but in order to take advantage of this low price, coupon must be mailed at once.

Dickens' Complete Works

Charles Dickens is the greatest master of story-telling the world ever knew. His keen humor, his command of pathos and perception of character, coupled with his originality of thought and expression, lend a fascinating interest to all his writings that appeals irresistibly to both old and young. We breathlessly follow the fortunes of David Copperfield, laugh at the adventures of Mr. Pickwick and shed a tear over Little Nell. Dickens' characters are famous the world over. They are quoted in literature, used constantly in conversation and referred to and made use of in a thousand ways. Unfortunate indeed is he who is unacquainted with Sam Weller, the Cheeryble Brothers, Mr. Turveydrop, Captain Cuttle, Sairy Gamp and Tom Pinch. Dickens' Christmas Stories are acknowledged by all, the finest and best ever written. No other writer in the history of literature ever exerted such a powerful influence for the betterment of the social conditions of his day as did Charles Dickens.

When you read his wonderful books the hours are charmed away, and you read on and on from page to page and from chapter to chapter unmindful of time and surroundings. Charles Dickens has earned a place in every heart, and his complete works should be in every Christian home. Now is your opportunity to have Dickens' Complete Works at

A Great Bargain and On Very Easy Terms

This handsome "Library Edition" consists of 15 beautiful volumes containing over 12,000 pages, and embracing everything that Dickens ever wrote. There are photogravure frontispieces and reproductions of famous sketches by Cruikshank, Phiz, Seymour, Cattermole, Maclise and Greene. The regular price of this complete edition is $45.00—now offered you for $20.50, payable at the rate of only $1.50 a month and shipped without one cent in advance, subject to your approval, with transportation charges paid. This is a rare opportunity—one that you must not miss.

FOLD HERE, TEAR OFF, SIGN AND MAIL TO-DAY

FREE COUPON

The Thompson Publishing Co.
1127-29 Pine Street
St. Louis, Mo.

Please send me for examination one set of Dickens' Complete Works, "Library Edition," in fifteen volumes, with transportation charges prepaid. This does not obligate me in any way whatever, except to handle the books with ordinary care. If I do not decide to keep the books in accordance with your "Special Anniversary Sale," I will return them to you at your expense.

Name .....

Address .....

C H 8-19

Shipped Absolutely Free on Our New Plan

It is impossible to prepare any booklet that will give a really complete representation of this splendid set of books, even though no expense or labor is spared in its preparation. Our plan is to do away with "booklets" altogether and instead send the Complete Works on approval, so that the books may speak for themselves. In this way you have an opportunity to examine the complete set before making any payment or obligating yourself in any way. Just tear off and mail coupon and we will ship you the books to look over, with transportation charges paid by us. You can then look them over carefully, and if you want to keep them, send us $1.00, the first payment, and $1.50 a month for thirteen months. But, if for any reason whatever you do not wish to keep the books, you may return them to us at our expense. Do not hesitate to ask us to send you the books to look over. We are continually shipping books all over the country in this way, and you incur no obligations whatever, except to handle the books with ordinary care and to return them to us (at our expense) if you do not wish to keep them. We do not ask for any deposit, any guarantee, nor even any C. O. D. payment. This is our plan of sale, and we shall be glad to have you examine the books. Remember this "Special Sale" is good for a short time only, so do not lay this announcement aside without removing the coupon at the left. This is a wonderful opportunity. Mail coupon to-day.

THE THOMPSON PUBLISHING COMPANY

N. D. Thompson, Jr., Secretary

ST. LOUIS

NEW YORK, JUNE 19, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

El Misti, from Harvard Observatory

Resting at the Summit of El Misti

The View of the Crater from the Summit

VISITS TO FAMOUS VOLCANOES

BY ANNIE S. PECK, A.M., THE WORLD'S MOST FAMOUS WOMAN MOUNTAIN CLIMBER

AN ACTIVE volcano is an awe-inspiring object. One may feel inclined to call it an awesome creature, for with groanings and belchings it often seems very much alive. At times panic, terror and sound discretion impel all to y from impending doom. Again the creature sleeps, and dventurous souls draw near, the majority halting at his foot; thers of bolder spirit ascending to gaze into that yawning outh whence has issued fire and ashes. Recently a few have ared still farther. On the 17th of May last, Professor Mallada, f the Royal Observatory situated on a lower eminence of the nountain, made with an assistant a descent into the slightly moking crater of Vesuvius; an important scientific achieve- nent; a natural sequence to which, in these days when the vorld is ransacked for the entertainment of the multitude, was he following of his footsteps by a moving picture man.

Of the many volcanoes, great and small, scattered over the arth's surface, the majority have been ascended and studied. Although but a pigmy among giants, Vesuvius is no doubt the est known, partly from its historical association with the Plinys and the destruction, 79 A.D., of Herculaneum and Pompeii, and partly from being in a section of the globe greatly frequented by tourists. From its modest height, about 4,000 feet, and its convenient location, it has also been the most care- fully investigated.

Since the great eruption of 1906, when Cook's Railway was partially destroyed, the crater has been larger than before, nearly a quarter of a mile in diameter and a thousand feet deep. As the volcano has now been fairly quiet for several years and as due notice of an approaching eruption is always given, the descent into the crater, made with due precautions, was not too dangerous; the chief peril was of being overcome by sulphur fumes or other gases. There was also danger from falling stones. Professor Mallada and his associates were lowered, by their assistants on the brink, to a depth of 380 feet. Here they landed and could wander on huge crags of lava, and here they fastened a second rope, by which they were enabled to climb down to a great fissure and through this to the floor of the crater. After two hours and a half of labor, during which in a very high tempera- ture they took photographs of various parts of the crater, of avalanches and showers of red- hot ashes, collected samples of minerals and ash, took level- ings on the floor and planted there a red flag, they returned in triumph to the top of the crater.

It happens that Vesuvius was my first volcano, almost my first mountain. Then, as an ordinary globe-trotter, I did the regulation things, going by carriage and the Cook Railway as far as I was able. At that time the crater was smoking vigorously and from the mountainside issued a small stream of molten lava. Engaging a guide to take me to the summit, a few hundred feet higher, we proceeded only a short distance when we were enveloped in smoke; the guide declared that stones were falling and in spite of exhortation refused to pro- ceed. Six weeks later on a second journey from Rome to Naples, made chiefly to do two things in which I had been pre- viously balked—enter the Blue Grotto, and look down the crater of Vesuvius—I went up again. Though the crater was still smoking I was able this time to approach the edge on the lee side near enough to see part way down the opposite walls, in spite of the smoke pouring up and over in that direction. A descent then would have been deliberate suicide.

Annie S. Peck

Still more recently than the excursion of Professor Mallada, American scientists under the auspices of the Carnegie Insti- tution have visited the crater of another volcano by the side of which Vesuvius is a mere babe, Mount Kilauea, in the Sandwich Islands. This, the largest active volcano in the world, has a crater nine miles in circumference, in the bed of which is a permanent lake of boiling lava. Above this, suspended by ropes, Professors Day and Shepard spent several hours pumping gases and taking specimens of the liquid fire for analysis.

In 1897 I climbed two volcanoes in Mexico, Popocatepetl, about 17,800 feet, and Orizaba; the former the more famous because within view from Mexico City and thus a source of especial pride and admiration to the inhabitants, who have been loath to believe that any other of their mountains could be higher. Popo has a really splendid crater, about half a mile across and 1,000 feet deep. The walls are generally vertical, but in one or two places it is possible to descend. When work- ers are engaged in collecting sulphur, machinery is used to hoist them up and down. From Popo's summit there is a glori- ous prospect, not alone of the immense crater, but of the beautiful "White Lady," Ix- taccihuatl, reclining a thou- sand feet below; of Orizaba on the far horizon, and of the charming valley of Mexico.

On my first expedition to South America in 1903 I as- cended one more volcano, El Misti, situated in Southern Peru. Arequipa, the second city in Peru, with a charming location on the lower slope of the mountain, is at an altitude of 7,500 feet. Five hundred feet higher is the Harvard Ob- servatory. From there I set out about eight A.M. with one of the gentlemen as compan- ion, and Francisco, who had been up a hundred times in this capacity, as guide. From this point the summit of El Misti, 19,200 feet above the

Continued on page 631

The Crater of Vesuvius, at a Time when No Man Dare Enter

THE GREATNESS OF SMALL THINGS

A SERMON

BY

Rev. Richard Braunstein*

TEXT: "But what are they among so many?" John 6: 9

THE spirit of contempt with which men are always so apt to regard things that God honors is very strikingly manifested in these words of Andrew. Five small barley loaves and two little fishes are, to the disciples' minds, a nucleus far too mean and insignificant for the feeding of a vast multitude of famished souls, and as nothing short of that very feast is contemplated by the Master, they turn to him, and with the finger of scorn pointed at the little stores of food they have in hand, they exclaim, "But what are they among so many?"

Notice that their disparagement was not over Christ's ability to work a miracle, or feed the hungry throng; this they did not doubt, but actually believed, perhaps that from the stones that lay about he was able to raise up bread for all to eat, and from the flinty rocks could bring forth streams to give them drink. Their despair lay in the supposed impossibility of their little stock of bread and fish becoming the basis of a sumptuous meal for thousands. Their contempt was directed, not against the possibility of Christ's power, but against the probability of their possessions, and their amazement was not so much over his feeding the hungry hosts as over his feeding them with their own provisions. And so it is always. In expression of their contempt for their paltry sum of loaves, they simply yielded to what seems to be an almost universal tendency of the human heart, namely, to despair of small things because of their very smallness, to judge by human appearance rather than by the divine idea of multiplied usefulness, by size rather than by significance. We delight to hear that God is going to perform a great work in our midst, but despair when we learn that he will perform it with our miserable means; we glory when we are told that the world will be fed by Christ, but groan when we find he will feed it from the little stock we now possess. And it is about just such thoughts as these that I wish to speak, calling your attention to a few of the most evident lessons taught by our Saviour when he fed the multitudes. And primarily there is the simplest lesson of all, which is, at the same time, one of the profoundest laws of the kingdom of God, namely, that in his kingdom it is impossible that something should come from nothing.

Little Beginnings

As some one has suggested, we have all doubtless wondered and asked ourselves the question, would this not have been a decidedly greater and more impressive miracle had Jesus, with one sweep of his omnipotent hand, brushed aside those miserable fragments, those five loaves and two small fishes, and bid the heavens rain down food and the sands spring forth into streams? He could have done it all, and would it not have been more wonderful, much more of a miracle? Little do we understand the Master if we so judge. This is much the greater miracle, this using the disciples' scant supply, because it reveals the greater wisdom of Christ. It teaches us that in the kingdom of God, as in every other realm and department of life, nothing can come from nothing. It is the lesson of the fields, which seem to say to the farmer, "You may fertilize us, and till us, and cultivate us for ever so many years, but we will yield you nothing until you give us something. Give us just a few handfuls of last year's grain, just a little seed, even though it does seem so small to you, and we will amaze you with the multiplicity of our returns." It is the lessons that the principles of trade seem ever to be teaching the business man, saying in effect, "Give us something to begin with, yield us your talents, give us your capital, and even though it be ridiculously small, we will gratify you with unfolding wealth." And to the student, too, the college halls and classrooms seem to say, "Lend us your mind, loan us your little beginnings of knowledge, and we will shortly return them all back to you, increased and beautified a hundredfold, but for nothing we can give you nothing."

So does the Master teach us, as he taught the disciples, that in his kingdom there is no such thing as spontaneous generation, but that always, and everywhere, what is to be must come from what already is. As summer unfolds from winter, harvest from seedtime, youth from childhood, and age from youth, so must new truth evolve from what has gone before, new experience from that which is old. One reason why Christianity should call forth our keenest admiration is because of the fact that it represents the only religion of the world that has one unbroken continuity and unfolding glory, from the very beginning of time. It has suffered no innovation nor secessions. Christ is but a completion, an unfolding of all the prophets and patriarchs who went before, and we are the multiplied powers of Christ. The motley multitude of isms which have sprung up in recent days cannot be true, as they have no adequate foundation, no continuity; there may be a grain of Christian truth hidden away amidst their folds and traditional dust heaps, which, if brought to Christ, could be so multiplied and developed as to be of use, but in themselves they can never feed a multitude any more than could the scanty supply of old, nor can they satisfy the hunger of a single soul.

Small Things Multiplied

So it must ever be in our Christian lives. We cannot dig up treasures where we have buried nothing, for gold is earned, not found, and we must dig and delve in order to reach it. We cannot reap where we do not sow, nor receive where we have given nothing. How can we expect to become strong Christians if we do not exercise our strong gifts? How can we ever hope to have the multitudes of our soul's demands fed if we will not yield to the demands of Christ our little all? From nothing you will receive absolutely nothing, and this introduces a second and another marvelous law of the kingdom of God.

Very much may come from a very little. The teaching of this very truth seems to me to be one of the Saviour's missions to us. He opened up to us the gospel of the greatness of small things, and taught us that a little Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid by a penniless mother in the manger of a cattle stall is a worthy object for wise men as well as shepherds to worship, for kings and princes, the poor and lowly, and potentates of earth, yes, a worthy object for angels and archangels of highest heaven to adore with songs of purest praise. He taught us that a widow's mite when multiplied by the spirit of self-sacrificing devotion may become a greater gift in the Lord's treasury than all the gifts of the rich. He taught us that the greatest in the kingdom of God is he who, most like the little child whom Jesus suffered and bade come unto him, was filled with modesty, innocence and purity. And when in briefest terms he desired a parable to illustrate the amazing possibility of his Gospel, he said, "The kingdom of God is like unto a grain of mustard seed."

Christ and the Hungry Soul

The Gospel that he taught was that of possible greatness of small things, and such was the truth he revealed in the miracle of the loaves and fishes. Nothing from nothing, but bewildering, satisfying abundance from something, even though that something be ridiculously small in our sight. When the disciples asked, "But what are they among so many?" Jesus said in effect, "They are not much, they are certainly poor, insufficient in themselves to supply this great demand, but they are the best, yes, they are all you have and that is all I ask; give me simply what you have," and when they sadly handed him the little of which they were ashamed, he honored it, and blessed it, and broke it, and g it back to them, and they to the hosts, and much, very much remained over, untouched that night.

In the same manner Jesus comes to us to-day, s sees the hunger of our souls calling for food; sees the famished multitudes of our city and t land of ours who do not express their sensations hunger and need any more than did the throngs old, but they are hungry and they are fainting, a we say, "Master, give us and them to eat, for c souls are hungry," and he replies, "Give ye them eat." He would have fed them long ago if only had done our part, which is to bring our best, ho ever mean, our all, however small, and say, "He Lord, we give it all to thee." Of course we ha not much, and yet no life is so benighted, no hea so poor but that it has precisely what God can u what God will bless. The little you possess powerless in your hands, but all-powerful in his.

Power Seen Only in Service

So, then, let us search our souls and see what can find, and when we learn how small it is, let not condemn it and say, "What is this among many?" but bring it to Christ and he will use Have you ever thought how much wiser it wou have been of the disciples if they had said, "Th little stock of food is small, but it is of the san nature as that which would satisfy the multitudes there was only enough of it?" So we ought not despair of the little experience or paltry truth v have, for, however small, they are of the same qua ity as are the highest and best. Our truth is th same as God's truth, only there is much less of i therefore we should treasure it because it is th same, and pray that God may bless and multiply i Side by side with the revelation of the possib greatness of small things lies the fact that th small things must be used to produce their amazin results. The loaves and fishes were not multiplie while in disuse, but they increased with amazin rapidity while being broken and distributed by th disciples. Grain multiplies, not in the granary, bu in the field; capital increases, not in the hand bu in its investment; and so talent can expand an become all powerful only in its use and exercis And by the exercising of the Christian graces, th doing of the little but noble deeds, shall we grow i grace and become more like him who commanded u to take up our crosses—little daily crosses—an follow him to victory and the attainment of th soul's desire, eternal life.

Miles of Smiles

CHARLES L. BOYER, of Harrisburg, Pa., for merly of London, England, is devoting his lif to making people smile—not people who are healthy happy, or well-to-do, but poor people, invalids, chil dren, and overworked mothers. Although busy al day, he gives the greatest amount of pleasure wit his automobile, which was presented by the peopl of Harrisburg, and built expressly for the purpos of giving free rides to those who are less fortunate It accommodates a dozen adults or twenty children It has wide, comfortable seats, footstools for th children, folding steps at the rear so that the chil dren cannot hang on at the risk of life and limb, a big wind-shield, and soft backs for the sick. I started its career as a "joy-giver" a year ago, an has covered hundreds of miles about the city, leav ing behind it "miles of smiles," as Mr. Boyer him self likes to say. The automobile is only one of th many ways which he has of bringing joy and hop to those who have fared ill in life's journey. An other unique means of promoting happiness is th Home Invalids' Union, which he organized abou seven years ago and planned for invalids and shut ins, who live in homes where they have little to giv them pleasure or cheer.

Harrisburg, his native city, is not the only plac that has enjoyed Mr. Boyer's generosity. The slums of London looked upon him as a fairy god father during the years of his unselfish labor there

* Pastor, M. E. Church, Ashland, N. Y.

LOVE'S OFFERING

There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?—John 6: 9.

MY GOD, I bring to thee
My humble offering free—
Fishes and loaves;
Take Thou and break and bless,
The while I sad confess
Its scantiness.

I have no heaps of gold,
Or rarest treasures old,
To offer thee.
Only this bread and meat
I lay before thy feet.
May many eat!

O God, I pray they be Acceptable to thee—
These humble gifts:
Change thou at one swift touch
The little into much,
Thy power is such!

Feed thou the fainting throng,
That they again be strong
For life's great toil.
O bless and multiply
My poor and scant supply
To satisfy.

—ALICE FERRIN HENSEY.

The One Who Has Failed

IT HURT, didn't it? Was it your fault? Before this you had rather looked with contempt on other men who had failed. You had a sneaking suspicion that their brains or their endeavors were not equal to yours. Now you have a suspicion that you were mistaken, and so you come to the first lesson of failure. Your sympathies are broadened.

When you first found yourself after your failure, you almost wondered if you were alive, but you find yourself very much alive. One door is shut, but you live in a house with a hundred doors. Dante's inscription is in only one place, "All hope abandon ye who enter here." Honor, wisdom and riches are in all the rest. Open another door. Think of some of the world's greatest failures and what they did. Columbus made himself a nuisance and finally failed, but then he plucked up new courage and went on to discover his world. Galileo could not convince the bigoted prejudices of his time, but to-day the world believes in his principles.

With reverence we come into the presence of the greatest figure of all history. Jesus Christ was put to death by his enemies and his disciples were scattered. He did not greatly impress his own generation, and it seemed as if his cause were lost, but Jesus Christ is the miracle of history. Every defeat he had proved to be the germ of a great victory. The same is true of his religion. Men arise who say that Christianity is dying out, and God Almighty sends his spirit abroad in the earth and the church revives and is stronger than ever. So it will ever be.

With a knowledge of this great power in the Christ, do you not see how you will finally prevail? It will be through the might of the divine power imparting to your life a new impulse. Then trust God and try again and succeed.

SAMUEL GARDINER AYRES.

Anvil Sparks

..HIGH ideals are often lived out in lowly places.

..THE tree which blooms all the time bears no fruit.

..THE house of contentment is not known by the turrets.

..YOU cannot retrace crooked steps; the path of reform is straight.

..PROGRESS is never blessed with the aid of the downward current.

..TO BE wise is to know the foolishness of much of your own wisdom.

..THE sun always makes rainbows through the cloud of grief if we look toward it.

..THE trouble is that good people are prone to work for God only as inclination moves them, while the forces of evil are active night and day.

He Hath Done What He Couldn't

By Eugene Thwing

HONORABLE and worthy of high praise is the woman who "hath done what she could." Let not a whit be abated from the credit which belongs to any man or woman who does faithfully the things within their ability and within the daily round of duty. Much is left undone which might be done so easily if every one of us would only do the obvious "next thing" ready at our hand; if we would perform all the tasks for which we are well equipped; if we would render the service which could be given so helpfully and without straining of time or strength.

Imagine the change that would take place in social conditions if every person who is able to do something to ameliorate distress in any degree were to do at once all he could to make life cleaner, brighter, more natural, more in keeping with the requirements of civilization and Christianity. Imagine the progress that would be made at once in the overthrow of the saloon if every citizen would do what he could to bring about such a result.

Of course, the doing of plain duty, the performing of necessary tasks well within our ability, the rendering of service which requires no sacrifice nor special effort—these things are no more than we ought to do, and they entitle us not so much to praise for the doing as to blame for leaving them undone. Yet in these days when so much of plain duty is neglected, when so many obvious tasks are slighted, when opportunities for bestowing blessing are so often passed by indifferently, faithfulness is acclaimed as a positive virtue, if not indeed a glory.

. . .

MORE is demanded of man to-day than the easy performance of the things within his power. The life now and the life to come challenge him to reach out beyond the realm of things now possible to him and achieve the impossible. No man has gained greatness, no man has touched real power, no man has earned the fulness of glory until he has broken down the barriers which have confined him, has cut away the cords which held him in leash, has conquered the restrictions of circumstances and of his own nature, has defied the sign-posts which have told him "thus far canst thou go, but no farther," and having triumphed over every hindrance, every limitation, every littleness or evil of self, he has done the thing the world knew he could not do, or which the tempter in his own soul insisted was impossible.

Many a man has mistaken the challenge. Many a man has failed in his effort. Many a man has attempted the wrong thing. It is not always right to essay "the impossible." But a far larger number have been frightened by the difficulties, or by the warnings and the scoffings of the world, and have not fought the fight that would have had victory at the end for the valiant warrior. Clearness of vision and a soul-gripping conviction of a right cause are necessary at the beginning and all through the fight. The apostle James, giving the quality of faith, expresses just the spirit needed, also, in such a fight to win a victory. Man must fight on in faith, "nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think he shall receive anything," or that he shall prevail against his obstacles.

. . .

STRUGGLE against limitations is the necessary process of growth and the accumulation of strength. The man who does only what he can do without strenuous effort remains small of stature. His world is small; his horizon is narrow and shuts him in. When he catches a vision, when he reaches out for greater things, when he grapples with a task that is bigger than his present strength, and by grim, resolute fight masters it, then he grows greater, he gains new strength, he broadens his life and gains a farther view. It is good to be faithful to the daily tasks within the measure of present ability. It is better to be faithful to the vision which God has flung across the sky of the soul, and to press onward to the mark for the prize of our high calling.

I heard a story of a hickory tree which tried to grow up through the small hole in the center of a great millstone. The little green sapling shot up straight and thrifty in its tiny field. Men saw it and smiled. At length the stem filled the hole in the millstone, and some said the life of the little tree was ended; the heavy millstone would strangle it, and it would wither and die. Others waited and watched, day by day, as the small struggling hickory fought for its larger life. It was such a little green thing and the millstone was so massive, so hard, so unyielding. One morning the passers by looked, and the little tree nodded and smiled in the sunlight, and the great millstone lay cracked and split asunder by the growing strength of the little tree.

"Ah, but," you say, "that was a hickory. The oak and the hickory are symbols of strength. There are men and women in the world whose strength of purpose and character are like the oak and the hickory. Let them fight and conquer. I am neither an oak nor a hickory. I am handicapped with natural weakness. The fight is too hard for me."

. . .

I READ another incident and saw a photograph proving its genuineness. A small bulb lay bedded in gravel beneath a tar-concrete base that had become solid after remaining in place for two years. The concrete was an inch thick by measure, and very hard and tough. One night the small bulb awoke in its gravel prison and pushed against the hard walls. The next day the concrete was found burst and torn open as though by an explosion. One piece was broken away entirely and lay over on its back, while fractures in the concrete ran back for eight inches from the ragged opening. There in the center, unscratched by its prison-breaking struggle, was a puffy, white plant which had grown from the bulb.

No life is so weak nor so handicapped that it cannot break through its prison walls and reach out for larger experiences and greater usefulness. No life is condemned to narrowness. The soul knows no barriers. Even though it must make its headquarters in a weak or crippled body for a time, it can find means to roam afar on its busy errands of life. When a great soul and a strong body are combined, who shall say where the possible ends and the impossible begins?

HIS PROMISE

"CERTAINLY I will be with thee."
Child of my love, why fear?
Whate'er the path before thee,
I am forever near.

"Certainly I will be with thee."
Rest thou, be undismayed,
Though all the hosts of darkness
Before thee are arrayed.

"Certainly I will be with thee."
Calm thou thy soul, be still;
My love enfolds, surrounds thee,
And none may pass my will.

"Certainly I will be with thee,"
When comes thy evil day.
My truth thy shield and buckler,
My arm thy strength and stay.

"Certainly I will be with thee,"
When life is fair and bright,
When joy and love surround thee,
And all thy way is light.

"Certainly I will be with thee."
Child of my love, why fear?
In life, in death, in eternity,
I am forever near.

Plainfield, N. J. ERENE E. ANGLEMAN.

What About Union Churches?

THE harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." That is my answer to the question as to the advisability of union churches. We need more of them, in the right place and of sufficient strength, because they are profitable to the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

One of the happiest days of my life as a preacher was when I preached in the Union Church of Proctor, Vt., and was able to say that that church had done more toward developing the spirit and practice of unity and co-operation among the churches in the Green Mountain State than anything else. That church stands as a continuous sermon, preaching the Gospel that it is the business of the church to adapt itself to and to serve community needs.

The pastorate of such a church gives the best possible opportunity of living the get-together Gospel of Christ's prayer for unity among all churches and Christians. Though the same gospel of unity is being preached by the Church Federation Movement, which is now rapidly gaining ground, I believe it is true that this latter movement owes much to the Union Church Movement, and that there is yet much which an increased number of strong union churches may do to promote true church and Christian unity.

Union churches may have many difficulties. Every missionary movement has its difficulties. The hardness of the battle which the union church has to wage cannot be measured by the high death-rate of union churches. Lambs are very often swallowed by mountain lions and bears. Whenever a denominational lion has made a delicious and kingly banquet of a defenseless union church lamb, it is entirely possible that the lamb serves not only as food but as medicine. It is hard to conceive that a lion could be quite as lion-hearted after a feast of a meek and innocent lamb.

Only strong union churches are worth while. The plenteous harvest of the unity movement springs from the union church idea only when union churches are strong and abiding. A union church should never be organized as the product or the by-product of a church quarrel. Such a church would usually stand for disunion, rather than for the spirit of community service by the church.

My second suggestion is that union churches, as far as possible, should get acquainted with each other. Fellowship in every helpful service is a true means of grace and of growth.

Last of all, let there be fellowship between the union churches and the local and State federations. There certainly should be love and co-operation between parents and their children. One of the greatest needs is a proper Christian relation between churches of different names, and as long as this need exists, the true union church is a messenger of peace and power.

REV. G. FREDERICK WELLS.

RELIEVING LOUISIANA'S NEED

A FLOODED FARMSTEAD

FERRIDAY, LA., FLOODED FROM FOUR TO SIX FEET DEEP

A PLANTER'S DESERTED HOME

A FLOODED STREET AT VIDALIA, LA.

LANDING REFUGEES FROM THE VICINITY OF JENA, LA.

WATERS RECEDING AT VIDALIA, LA.

HIS EXCELLENCY LUTHER E. HALL
Governor of Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La.:

Draw on us at sight for $2,000, additional contributions from Christian Herald readers for relief work among flood sufferers. We deeply sympathize with widespread suffering in your State and trust substantial aid may soon come.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York.

IT WAS with a great deal of pleasure that the management of this journal was able to send the above telegram to Louisiana's new governor a short time ago, as a substantial indication of the sympathy of our readers for their fellow citizens who are undergoing such great privations and suffering in that State.

This is the second remittance that we have been enabled to make to aid in the work of providing medical aid and otherwise assisting the refugees of the flood. The expenditure of the relief funds has called forth admiration throughout the entire country. The workers who have been on the ground report that the administration of the funds entrusted to the local committees has been everywhere worthy of the highest praise. These organizations have worked in conjunction with the army officers who were placed in charge of the general relief work of the government and they in their turn are enthusiastic in their commendation of the efficiency and sincerity with which the officers discharged their duties. The keenest regret that has entered into the administration side of the relief work is that the response to the appeals of various newspapers and relief committees has been much smaller than was anticipated. One of the Red Cross officials who has been working in conjunction with the local committees and the military officers said a few days ago, "Lacking the elements of surprise, sudden horror or tragic death, the greatest and most destructive flood which has ever occurred in the Mississippi Valley is commanding little attention from press or public. . . . Public interest subsided while the waters were yet rising. This small response is in some measure due to the fact that the public knew that the army was expending a large amount of money in relief. . . . The disaster has been progressive and cumulative. . . . Before the flood victims have time to produce any kind of a crop there will come an interval which all are anticipating with dread. In that interval, the substantial planter with good credit will go in debt for food for his family, his labor, and his animals, but what will the small farmer do whose assets are so reduced by his flood losses that his credit is gone?"

The serious problem which is outlined in the last sentences of this statement is the one which now faces the relief workers. The government has withdrawn its relief forces and the local committees have handed over their work to a central body which was appointed by Governor Hall. The refugee camps have now almost all passed out of existence, for with the exception of the most deeply flooded districts most of the lands which were under water have taken back their inhabitants, who now face the problems of getting back from the highlands what farm animals they may be able to identify. Even those sections to which the people have already returned bear out the prophecies which were made before the waters commenced to abate. The lowlands are in many instances great seas of mud; the stored-up supplies of grain and hay are now but useless débris, and farm implements which were left in good condition are massed with rust and practically valueless.

The farmers and planters of all this district are face to face with a great problem. With the spirit that animates a large part of the South they feel that they are responsible for the "hands," as they term the negroes who are regularly employed upon their lands, yet they have no work at which to set these dependents. It is not among the negroes entirely that the greatest suffering and hardship has taken place, and will take place as the waters continue to abate and leave the land once more ready for cultivation. Only a few days ago white families who had been able to see themselves through the worst part of the flood found it necessary to apply to the relief committees for aid.

Wherever it is possible, the flood victims are being returned home, and in connection with this work the problem of sanitation and the treatment of the sick are occupying the attention of the relief committees. In many instances large numbers have preferred to brave the critical conditions surrounding their own homes rather than remain in the crowded concentration camps. From those districts where the waters have gone down more rapidly relief measures are taking the form of attempts to find employment for the refugees. The type of relief work in these sections is gradually changing, so that now such requests as that from the district of Eunice are the most frequent. The request from that district to the relief headquarters was for cooking utensils, blankets, and bedding, to take the place of those which had been deserted in the rush from home before the advancing flood.

The relief committee of Plaucheville recently sent an appeal to New Orleans for aid for about 650 families in that section who were in immediate need of provisions and also of seed for some quickly maturing field and garden crops which would provide food for themselves and the rescued live stock. That the need of careful watch of conditions is not yet over has been proved by the continued and unexpected rising of the backwaters from the crevasses in some of the more distant sections of the State. From Jena there came not long since the report that 1,400 people were clamoring for food and were to a large extent shelterless. The president of the Louisiana State Board of Health immediately went to the district and returned the report that not only was food urgently needed, as there was not so much as a sack of meal in the district, but, as the sanitary conditions of the camps were very bad and epidemics likely to develop at any moment, medical officers with medicines should be sent in immediately. About 125 tents were furnished these people, but the majority of them were living in rude wooden huts, which they had constructed from such driftwood and other chance materials as came to hand. When the attention of the relief committees was called to the conditions about Jena it was found that the District Attorney, Thomas W. Perrin, had been tireless in his efforts to avert suffering among the refugees. The visiting medical officer commended his work in glowing terms and returned to New Orleans with the report that as no funds had been allotted for the work in that district, Mr. Perrin had been going down into his own pocket for the wherewithal to foot all the heavy bills, and, as he said himself, "trusting to the Lord to get it back."

A correspondent of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Baton Rouge states in a recently received letter, "The sufferings of the people now are considerable,

Continued on next page

QUELLING CUBA'S NEGRO REVOLT

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

American Marines Marching to Protect Threatened Property

General Monteagudo
Commander-in-Chief of Cuba's Army

Types of the Rebels Who Are Disturbing Cuba

THE stamping out of the revolt among the negroes of Oriente Province, Cuba, has not proved the easy task that President Gomez had anticipated. On June 6 he announced that, because of his certainty that if the uprising were not controlled within a short time American intervention would take place and a long occupation of the island by American troops would be the result, he would himself take the field at the head of the nation's army and call upon the country to support him in wiping out the rebellion.

The last days of May were filled with apprehension on the part of Cubans lest American troops should be landed. On the 30th, an American sugar plantation and a steel mill in the vicinity of Daiquiri were burned by the insurgents. The gunboat Paducah immediately steamed for the scene of the trouble, which is about fifteen miles southeast of Santiago City. The following day interest in Havana centered around the question of whether the United States marines would be landed for the protection of property or not. This overshadowed all the reported occurrences from the theater of hostilities. Later despatches showed that at 10.30 that morning the marines were landed in accordance with permission which was granted by President Gomez.

It was understood by both Cubans and Americans that these troops were solely for the protection of property and it was largely due to the need for all of its forces in the field that the Cuban Government was finally forced to accept the assistance of the marines as guards for foreign property. The government is constantly strengthening its forces, and many offers to raise volunteer corps have been received. The greatest difficulty in this connection has been the securing of arms. Ten thousand rifles have been rushed from the United States to make up the deficiency.

There is now no doubt that the war is one of races, black against white. The lines of division have been more closely drawn in Havana than ever before and the enmity is being daily increased by the perpetration by the negroes in outlying districts of such atrocities as lead to lynchings and other exhibitions of mob law in this country. Encounters between the regulars and the rebels are reported to have taken place near Daiquiri and at other places in Santiago and Oriente Province, but without decisive results. The rebels continue to burn and destroy property and to exact contributions of arms, stores and money from the plantation owners. The officers of the United States marine batallion have been in conference with the representatives of foreign companies and firms whose properties are located near Guantanamo. The rebels have been daring in their depredations in this district, even making attempts to destroy the lighting plant and terrorize the inhabitants by attacks upon the outlying sections.

At the request of President Gomez, the Cuban Congress has passed a law empowering him to suspend the constitutional guarantees in the disturbed province of Oriente. The president had asked that the suspension of guarantees throughout the island be left in his power, but it was the opinion of the Congress that on account of the approaching elections such action was both inadvisable and unnecessary in the other provinces.

On June 4 the city of Santiago, about which the rebel movement was reported to be gaining in strength, gave permission for its citizens to arm themselves. Volunteers guarding the electric light plant of the city exchanged fire with a party of rebels who made an attempt to destroy the plant. The government forces engaged the rebels near Blanquisal, wounding several and capturing horses, arms and ammunition. The town of Jarahuica, near Guantanamo, was captured by the rebels, who sacked and burned it as they had only two days before destroyed the village of La Maya.

The following day plans for protecting large American and foreign interests from marauding insurrectos brought about the hurried landing of nearly 600 marines at Caimanero, whence they proceeded by train to Guantanamo City. The State Department at Washington has been disquieted by general despatches on the Cuban situation and immediately upon learning of the landing of these extra marines had orders issued by the Navy Department to Admiral Ousterhaus at Key West to send the fourth division of the Atlantic fleet to Cuban waters. This squadron, consisting of the battleships Ohio, Missouri, Minnesota and Mississippi, immediately steamed from Key West for the southern coast of Cuba.

President Gomez is stated to be at his wits' end to make the small army of the Cuban republic meet the demands made upon it. Not only must it search out and put down the rebels where they are congregated in large bodies, but at the same time furnish guards for the foreign property in the island. President Taft still hopes to avoid intervention and afford the Cuban Government every possible opportunity to preserve order and put down the rebellion. In spite of this, however, the indications are growing stronger daily that the sending of American forces to the island will become a necessity.

RELIEVING LOUISIANA'S NEED

but the sufferings when they get back on their farms and plantations again will be still greater in most cases. Those who have been and are still marooned in the brakes and forests are suffering beyond the power of tongue or pen to describe."

From these statements it is not difficult to realize that the need among the dependents and families of the farmers is still very pressing. The entire fund which has so far been subscribed for the relief of practically 100,000 people who are either temporarily handicapped by their losses or are reduced to absolute destitution is only about one-fifth of the amount which was raised within ten days to aid the survivors and members of the bereaved families of the Titanic disaster. Surely the United States of America will not lay itself open to the accusation that it responds not to the true need of suffering humanity, but to the thrill which attaches itself to spectacular and suddenly tragic disasters. Surely there is no need to picture the return of the refugee families to the homes from which they fled, leaving most of their belongings behind. The interior of these homes, as the waters go down, leaving them filled with mud, ruined with the water, their furnishings all spoiled, present a picture which few of us need to have brought before our eyes in all its harrowing details to realize that with nothing for a fresh start the situation may well appal even the bravest hearts.

Continued from preceding page

All contributions for the aid of the victims of the great Louisiana disaster should be addressed to the Flood Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

The following contributions have been received since the last acknowledgment:

Pauline Bolliger	1.00	O. D. Pruett	.50	H. J. Tubb	10.00
P. J. Wadel	2.00	H. L. Crook	.50	Fred Hoover	2.00
Miss Cynthia J. Graves	1.00	T. J. Pruett	.50	——, Jacksonville, Ill.	1.00
Miss Luella Chandler	1.00	Ruie Cravens	5.00	A. J. B.	2.00
Mrs. M. A. Motycka	1.00	Geo. T. Goodwin	10.00	J. C. Hase	1.00
Mrs. M. E. Rutherford	5.00	Mr. &Mrs. A. M. Waterbury	5.00	Mrs. Oliver West	1.00
Elmer & May, Cambridge, port, Mass.	1.00	Thomas E. Young	5.00	Juanita Hawbaugh	1.00
Mrs. C. A. Upham	5.00	P. J. Stevens	5.00	Mrs. Abbie Keating	1.00
John W. Stewart	5.00	In His Name, Jackson, Minn.	5.00	Mrs. S. B. Webster	2.00
John Burgoyne & wife	5.00			James E. Anderson	1.00
R. E. Thornton	20.00	R. W. Noble	5.00	Elizabeth Ellis	2.00
N. M. Mooney	5.00	Mrs. R. Sims	10.00	Mrs. J. G. Winters	1.00
Mrs. Ludwig Havemann	5.00	J. D. Perkins	5.00	Mrs. J. O. Durant	1.00
Mrs. Harriet S. Wood	20.00	M. D. Ulmer	10.00	Mrs. J. W. Winters	1.00
Mary A. Moore	3.00	Mrs. Ida Kron	10.00	Chas. J. Hall	1.00
Martha J. Moore	2.00	Chas. G. Strang	10.00	Chris. Peterson	1.00
Mary E. Simmons	5.00	Martin Hoover	10.00	G. L. Cook	2.00
A. H. Ramsey	5.00	W. L. Crockett	10.00	Elizabeth A. Lake	1.00
John H. Barr	5.00	N. C. Pitcher	3.00	J. A. Heston	1.00
N. W. Robertson	1.00	Mrs. F. M. Andrews	2.00	S. N. D. & C. L. D.	1.00
J. C. Saunders	.50	A Friend, Lancaster,		A Friend, Colfax, Ia.	1.00
Dr. Doyle Fund	2.50	W. S. Lowry	2.00	Mrs. K. M. Hardy	1.00
M. E. Hamer	2.00	Mrs. H. J. Tubb	2.00	Clara C. Dushane	2.00
Wash.	10.00	J. A. Turner	1.00	M. D. P.	2.00
R. Winter, Sr.	10.00	Mrs. Lucy F. Hill	1.00	Susan A. Hill	2.00
E. T.	1.00	Andrew Anderson	1.00	Mrs. A. L. Rhodes	1.00
Miss Lina B. Lunt	3.00	Claude Spicer	1.00	Mrs. Jennie A. Hughes	1.00
Jerrie Reynolds	1.00	Sympathizer, Denison, Ia	1.00	N. R. Rutherford	1.00
Mrs. Sadie McIntyre	.50	A Sympathizer	2.00	M. D. M.	1.00
A Friend	5.00	Mrs. S. R. Weston	2.00	Mrs. H. B. Hatch	1.00
David Smith	20.00	I. R F. Cleveland, W Va	1.00	Mrs. A. H. Brown	1.00
Foreign Missionary Soc., Oak Grove, Mich.	5.00	Mrs. Nettie Tucker	1.00	A. B. Norrell	1.00
		A Reader, Braddock, Pa.	1.00	J. T. G.	1.00
E. L. Bryan & Mrs. Bryan	5.00	——, Amarillo, Tex.	1.00	Emily, Winnebago, Minn.	1.00
G. B. Crawford	5.00	Mrs. T. M. Belsher	1.00	Mrs. W. S. Taylor	.50
W. C. Meadows	3.00	Mrs. J. W. Kochsmeier	2.00	Mrs. Nettie Ingerson	1.00
O. F. Murphy	1.00	Mrs. G. W. Rowland	1.00	A Reader, Suffield, Conn.	2.00
Mrs. Ella Snyder	1.00	A Friend, Kammerer, Pa	2.00	J. E. Holland	1.00
Mrs. S. E. Ashmore	1.00	Ann Green	2.00	Dr. J. G. Marler	2.00
C. H. Reader	1.00	Fanny Shuster	2.00	L. Clemann	1.00
A Sympathizer, Marion, O	2.00	Mrs. L. M. Brown	1.00	Judith Baskerville	1.00
Mrs. O. H. Elliott	3.50	Mrs. Julia Rayof	1.00	Hettie Hunsicker	1.00
Mary E. Althouse	1.00	A Sub'r., Saranac, Mich.	.25	Sarah Buchholz	1.00
Mrs. J. H. Bliss	1.00	Miss Hattie Harris	2.00	——, Crowell, Tex.	5.00
		Mrs. Merilla N. Shaler	2.00	F. & C. W. Stengel	1.50

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Passing of a Gentle Soul

RIPE to the harvest, at the close of a long life largely consecrated to the service of humanity, Margaret Sangster has passed to her reward. For nearly twenty years she was a valued contributor to the pages of this journal. In a sense, she was much more; for to a large proportion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family she was a counselor and intimate friend. Probably no writer of her time enjoyed a warmer welcome in American homes. She possessed in unusual measure the gift of a matured understanding in all that relates to the main problems of woman's life, and a rare sympathy that never failed to convey some message of love and helpfulness to others. Despite advancing years, with their silvering touch, she still kept young. Her heart was the heart of a girl, and by constantly mingling with the thoughts and interests of youth, she kept it so. Even after seventy, she could still sing:

> The children's children are ours to love,
> They are helping to keep us young;
> The songs we hear, as night grows near,
> From the heavenly flights are flung.

This was the brave measure to which she kept step even after the night of partial darkness had set in some years ago. But approaching blindness could not daunt that courageous soul, and she kept on singing and marching in spirit, though the darkness grew and she did her literary work, as blind Milton did, through a secretary. She had long since ceased to live for herself. Her waking hours were spent in taking thought for those whom she had never seen and might never hope to see. She helped the widow to bear her burden, the erring to find the way back to hope and light, the sick to look for joy even in small mercies, the well-to-do to be generous stewards of God's blessings. Doubting souls, lost in the maze of perplexity and unbelief, could find no safer human adviser and guide, for she herself knew and walked in the Way of the Master and she led many aright who otherwise might have missed it. Her life was a splendid illustration of Christian service of the practical sort. Sweet, gentle, refined, unassuming, with a strong heart and brain endowed with the power and blessing of comfort and help—such was Margaret Sangster, consoler, burden-bearer and winner of souls, a noble and gifted woman who put her great talent to the highest of uses.

The vacant chair in the editorial circle of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be a reminder to us of the gentle comrade who has passed beyond. Her weekly talks with the Family Circle, her kindly ministrations in the "Comfort Corner," her poems, which have so often graced these pages, her enthusiastic co-operation in many humane and helpful enterprises—all will be missed. But the memory of Margaret Sangster and the influence of her beautiful and uplifting life work will long be cherished by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family, in whose behalf we lay upon her grave a wreath of affectionate remembrance.

General Miles and the Catholics

THE new patriotic organization, The Guardians of Liberty, which was lately established for the purpose of protecting the nation from the machinations of ecclesiastical invasion, has been placed in the limelight by an attack from the new Roman Catholic publicity organization. President E. J. Cooney wrote to General Miles, impugning the good faith of the Guardians of Liberty as an organization and virtually accusing it of resuscitating Know-Nothingism. General Miles's reply, which we publish on another page of this issue, is a complete refutation of the charge, and a masterly presentation of the patriotic principles of the organization. As the general explains, its purpose is "to promote the fundamental ideas of the founders of this republic." At its head are men whose names are honored in the nation and whose exalted position and splendid record place them wholly beyond the reach of any suspicion of self-seeking. Its membership rolls carry the names of generals and admirals, of hundreds of ministers of all denominations, of business men of national reputation, of leading legislators and of hundreds of thousands of loyal American private citizens in every walk of life. It holds that the true citizen should believe in the complete separation of church and state and should resist, with all the influence at his command, any attempt by the Catholic Church or any other church "to manipulate or control the sovereign citizenship of our people or to dispose of their civil rights and privileges for political office or power." This is a platform to which every good American who loves his country and who believes in protecting its free institutions against the management of ecclesiasticism will give hearty assent.

Remember the Flood Sufferers

NEWS from the flooded districts of the Mississippi is not encouraging. There are over 150,000 refugees to be cared for, and the means at disposal, even including all that has been done by the army, and also the contributions from various sources, are wholly inadequate for such a contingency. This week THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has telegraphed an additional remittance of $2,000 to the Governor of Louisiana at Baton Rouge, making $3,000 sent thus far. We sincerely hope that our readers will be prompt and generous in their contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Flood Fund, in order that lives may be saved and suffering averted. That noble generosity which has done so much for the sufferers in China and other lands should not hesitate when the urgent call comes from our own brothers and sisters in sore need. Let your gift be prompt, and make it as large as possible, and the Father above will surely add his blessing. Every dollar will go undiminished to the Governor's Relief Committee at Baton Rouge, which is operating in the very center of the destitution, and which may soon have to fight epidemic as well as hunger, in behalf of the needy thousands.

What Can I Do for You?

AMONG the many words of cheery salutation, which are heard constantly as people meet, is the homely phrase: "What can I do for you?" Often the query is made without careful thought or deep feeling, but when one stops to study the words themselves it is found that they make a very fitting watchword for daily life.

It is not irreverent to suggest that the words, if they are spoken most thoughtfully and worshipfully, may even become a sort of prayer. The Salvation Army workers and other earnest and spontaneous toilers in the Lord's work have made our ears somewhat accustomed to the change from the formal old English "thou" and "thee" to the modern "you" in prayer and testimony. In fact, one of the most beautiful and soul-searching of the hymns of recent years contains throughout this form of address. We know that the Saviour's friends and disciples of old talked with him in the homely speech of the household, of the street, and of the fishing-boat. Just so he wants to be our comfortable, confidential friend to-day. And he would be glad to hear us saying to him often, through the day that might be otherwise too hurried, or too self-centered, or too tangled, "Lord, what can I do for You?"

It is easy for us to view life and its details from quite the wrong perspective. Even after we have been saved and have learned the great New Testament lesson of spiritual "liberty" it is easy for us to live with this half unconscious and altogether unuttered question in our hearts: "How far may I gratify myself without condemnation?" or not quite so boldly, "How far may I go without really displeasing Christ?" But that is far from the ideal attitude of heart. This other saying, like that with which we greet our everyday friends, is far better: "Lord, what can I do for You?"

We like to think how much we should have done for him if we had been among those who knew him in the flesh. We should have been glad to bring him water when he was thirsty, to have remained near him when others went away, to have kept awake when others whom he had asked to watch with him had fallen asleep. Most of all, we should have liked to try to cheer and rest him when he was tired in the evening time and sad because during the hard day he had been so misunderstood and so distrusted and disliked.

All these opportunities are for us now as they would have been for us then. He has said very distinctly that everything we do for others now in his name is done to him. That means that what we do for the sake of others comforts and cheers and gladdens him now as the same service would have gladdened and cheered and comforted him then.

"What can I do for you?" May that be forever the attitude of our reverent and happy hearts. We shall find that it may be applied to every big and little detail of daily living. Nevermore "What can I do for myself?" but always "What can I do for Christ? How much and how perfectly can I please him to-day? What can I do for others that will make him glad?"

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, June 19, 1912

	PAGE
A Poppy Field — From a painting by M. R. Izingri	Cover
Visits to Famous Volcanoes (Illustrated) — By Annie S. Peck, A.M.	623, 631
The Greatness of Small Things. Sermon — By Rev. Richard Braunstein	624
He Hath Done What He Couldn't — By Eugene Thwing	625
Relieving Louisiana's Need (Illustrated)	626
Quelling Cuba's Negro Revolt	627
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	628
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	629
"A Voice That Is Still" — (Portrait of Margaret E. Sangster)	630
The Career of Wilbur Wright (Illustrated)	631
Our Mail-Bag	632
German Battleship Visiting New York (Illustrated)	632
Red Dandy and MacTavish (Illustrated) — Story by Charles G. D. Roberts	633
Sunday School Lesson — By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	636, 637
Happy Cozy Corner Days (Illustrated)	638
In the Spirit of the Founders	639
Real Estate Investments	640
The Magic of Missions — By Clayton Sedgwick Cooper	641
What Others Say	643

How We Grow

ANY one who glances over the figures of the new census, part of which has just been issued, will be satisfied that we have not stopped growing as a nation. While the complete statistics of the enumeration of 1910 have not yet been given to the country, the Bureau has furnished a report dealing with the population of 229 cities, each of which exceeds 25,000. All on the list show a substantial increase. Some of the most notable are given below:

	Census of 1900	Census of 1910
Birmingham, Ala.	38,415	132,685
Los Angeles, Calif.	102,479	319,198
Oakland, Calif.	66,960	150,174
San Francisco, Calif.	342,782	416,912
Denver, Colo.	133,859	213,381
Bridgeport, Conn.	70,996	102,064
New Haven, Conn.	108,027	133,605
Washington, D. C.	278,718	331,069
Jacksonville, Fla.	28,429	57,699
Atlanta, Ga.	89,872	154,839
Chicago, Ill.	1,698,575	2,185,283
Indianapolis, Ind.	169,164	233,650
Kansas City, Kan.	51,418	82,331
New Orleans, La.	287,104	339,075
Baltimore, Md.	508,957	558,485
Boston, Mass.	560,892	670,585
Detroit, Mich.	285,704	465,766
Minneapolis, Minn.	202,718	301,408
Kansas City, Mo.	163,752	248,381
St. Louis, Mo.	575,238	687,029
Newark, N. J.	246,070	347,469
New York (metropolitan dist.)	4,607,804	6,474,668
Cleveland, O.	381,768	560,663
Portland, Ore.	90,426	207,214
Philadelphia, Pa.	1,293,607	1,549,008
Pittsburg, Pa.	451,512	533,905
Providence, R. I.	175,597	224,326
Richmond, Va.	85,050	127,628
Seattle, Wash.	80,671	237,194
Milwaukee, Wis.	285,315	373,857

While these leading examples show remarkable growth, there are many others on the list that have added upwards of 40 per cent. during the decade. The population of New York City proper is 4,766,883 as against 3,437,202 ten years ago; but the entire metropolitan district gives the big city a population of nearly six and a half millions, a gain of 40.5 per cent. in ten years.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

New York Waiters Strike

THE waiters at the Hotel Belmont in New York became offended at the treatment of them by the head waiter, protested, and made demands that were refused and then struck. The Waiters' Union took up the question and ordered one strike after another, and it is estimated that there were from three thousand to five thousand who have thrown down the apron and order blank, and left their places of employment. Thus far everything has been conducted in the most orderly way. In the dining rooms of the most palatial hotels and restaurants, at the sound of a whistle the waiters stopped suddenly and walked out of the room in a body, sometimes tens and twenties of them, and sometimes hundreds answering the demand of the walking delegate. In some of the places strike-breakers who had been secreted in the house were hurried to take the vacant places, and the meal went on. In many instances the guests were dismissed and the rooms closed. The waiters in large groups marched from one hotel to another and amid shouts received into their ranks the new recruits of strikers. Cooks and others related to their department also joined in sympathy. It is stated by the hotel men that several thousand colored waiters have been brought from the winter resorts of the South, and that with them and others secured they have been able to break the strike. It is thought that the waiters have not much laid away for a rainy day, and that their families are likely to suffer if the difficulty should last long. And it is certain that the hotel and restaurant service of New York City is seriously crippled, and that thousands of dollars have been lost in the trouble by the restaurant proprietors. For a time each side seemed to be stolid and hopeful of the victory, but dissensions in the ranks of the Union presage poorly for its success. It is to be hoped that there may be an agreement mutually beneficial and honorable. With feelings that there has been unjust treatment on both sides it is hard to take the tender, forgiving course, and yet in the long run it would be as good policy as beautiful principle to regard this suggestion of the apostle:

Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. (Col. 3: 13.)

A Group of the Leaders of the Discontented Waiters from New York's Big Hotels

A Woman's Heroism

ROSE PITONOF, a seventeen-year-old Boston girl, broke the world's record for women swimming recently by making a mile in the Detroit River in 23 minutes and 45 seconds. Charles Woodward of Detroit undertook to be her pacemaker, and just before the finish he was seized with a cramp. He sank and coming to the surface he called for help. The girl hastened to him, and at the risk of her own life held him up till the patrol boat that followed them took them aboard. Miss Pitonof says she will undertake to swim across the English Channel this summer. The skill, endurance, courage in the cold water, and breaking of the world record for women were to her credit, but the greatest and most beautiful thing she did was to save the drowning man even at the risk of her own life. To win in contests, to gratify laudable ambitions is proper, but to serve others, to succor them in trouble and save them in peril, is more noble. When sinking in the waters of temptation and sin there is One able and willing to save, the one Peter addressed when he said:

Lord, save me. (Matt. 14: 30.)

Killed Lions with Dogs

MAN-EATING lions became so numerous in a certain district of East Africa that the British Government engaged the celebrated hunter Paul Rainey to destroy them. On his return from the trip Rainey said: "I've killed seventy-four lions in eleven months, sixteen in one day. I have found that the only way to get lions is with dogs. The government sent me to kill some lions which they had unsuccessfully tried to poison in an ostrich farm reserve. My dogs enabled me to kill them all. My dogs are American bear hounds bred in Mississippi. There's a good deal of the bloodhound in them. They are of a breed which the old planters had before the Civil War. Often mine have got a leopard down and killed it. I have two packs of fifteen each for tracking and fighting. My method has been to take the dogs out in wet weather and strike and follow the trail with the tracking pack. When the lion was found my boys turned the fighting pack loose." To kill game simply for the love of it is barbarous and wicked. To kill animals dangerous to human life or as food for its support is man's privilege and duty. Early in history men gave themselves to the hunter's life.

And Esau was a cunning hunter. (Gen. 25: 27.)

Card Game Decides Marriage

A SIGNIFICANT game of cards is reported from Chicago. Four young women played a game of cards with four bachelors with the understanding that if the women won they were to select each one a bachelor as her husband as the prize. After the final cards had been played each of the four men said he was well pleased with his lot and would carry out the arrangement. If this story be true it is likely the four couples had the affection for their respective mates that made a marriage proposal proper. Otherwise it was the most shocking piece of mockery imaginable. In these times of rush and glare and show, many enter into a marriage contract with as little wisdom or affection as those that might draw their mates for life out of a lottery, or as the result of a game of cards. Christ announced love as the basis of true marriage.

For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh. (Matt. 19: 5.)

Seven Thousand Song-Birds

THE freighter Etonia, from Antwerp, brought to New York the other day among other things a number of animals for the American market, including eighty-eight Bombay monkeys and eight white peacocks. There were also on board seven thousand song-birds. Melody and not discord is the law of nature, joy and not pain. The birds sing because their hearts are full of joy. They are happier in the woods and fields where they belong, but their overflowing hearts sing for joy even in the cages, and cheer comes to the children and to older people in the home on account of them. The music of the birds is the echo of Absolute Melody. Man's heart, freed from sin, and grateful for the consciousness of Infinite Love, wells up into music and song in the language of the Psalmist:

Sing aloud unto God our strength. (Ps. 81: 1.)

Christianity and Chinese Republic

ONE of the most remarkable scenes ever witnessed in an ecclesiastical gathering was that in the late Methodist General Conference over the resolution presented by the Chinese delegates asking the conference to petition the United States to recognize the Republic of China. The resolutions began with this statement: "A century's preaching of a pure Gospel, with its allied forms of missionary work, has undermined idolatry and superstition, transformed the lives of hundreds of thousands of Chinese, and helped prepare the way for the Chinese Republic." In support of the resolution, Di Gi Uong, through an interpreter, said: "We of China are heartily thankful at this time to God for bestowing his blessing upon the labors of the missionaries whom this church has sent to China. And we wish to express our thanks this morning, and to give expression in the most emphatic way to the feeling of our hearts, feelings of gratitude for what God has wrought in China. A monarchy that stood five thousand years has been overthrown and a republic established almost without the shedding of blood. We cast about and determined which country in the world, which nation, should be our pattern and model in establishing a new form of government in China. You all know without my telling you that our preferences have for many years been for America." The speaker had not finished, but the conference could not stand the strain of enthusiasm any longer, and arose as one man and burst into singing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and the speaker continued with increasing eloquence. He was followed by Diong Sui Li, another delegate, who through an interpreter said: "You have all heard what our Brother Uong has said in regard to the old, old absolute monarchy of China, which has now given place—this oldest, oldest monarchy in the world—to the newest republic; and we want to say to you that the reason of this is because of the work of the missionaries in China. They have taken the New Testament, which has been the leaven put in the great mass and among the great people of China and it has worked out and it has risen, and the result of it is this great republican movement. American history has shown the people of China how to make this vision a reality, and how to work it out in the human destiny of this great race. This has taken us, the oldest people, and has worked out into our lives and in our hearts. We have taken as the pattern for our new flag something on the lines of your great flag. We believe that you in America will love us in the new republic of China, as older brothers love their little brothers. We believe that you in this great country will love us even as a mother republic loves its smallest infant republic. It seems to us that you will join in our petition to this great country to recognize our new republic." Again the conference arose and sang "The Star-spangled Banner," and after a speech by Bishop Stuntz the eight hundred delegates and visitors with indescribable enthusiasm sang,

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord, Glory, glory, hallelujah, our God is marching on.

A thousand years of history have been made in the modern missionary movement that has resulted in the creation of the Chinese Republic. These Chinese delegates had the wisdom and courage to attribute the liberty in China and the world to Christ, and to his missionaries of the cross. Of the nation as of the individual it can be said:

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. (John 8: 36.)

"A VOICE THAT IS STILL"

IT WOULD be hard to name an American woman of recent years more widely known and more greatly loved than Margaret E. Sangster. When the news of her death stole over the wires and appeared in the public press countless homes throughout this and other countries felt that they had lost a confidante and friend.

In the offices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the shock of the news was particularly severe, because no intimation had been received that the illness from which she had been suffering was alarming. Upon this page, from which she has so often spoken words of counsel and cheer to our readers, her articles for this week's issue were already in type, but they are held for another time, while in their place must go out the sad announcement of her death, linked with a few words of reminiscence and of appreciation of her singularly beautiful life.

Mrs. Sangster had been a staff contributor to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for nearly twenty years. No one of the paper's efforts for relief of the suffering and the uplift, enlightenment and inspiration of the people failed to receive her ardent and sympathetic co-operation. She was intensely interested in all the things which are tending to make people happier and purer and to make this world more like heaven. Mrs. Sangster was ill for only a week prior to her death. She had recently moved from Glen Ridge, N. J., which had long been her home, to Maplewood, N. J. After appearing to grow somewhat better from the indisposition which had overtaken her, she suffered a slight paralytic stroke on the morning of June 4 and at 11 o'clock of the same evening took the brief and beautiful journey for which her whole life had been a happy preparation.

Margaret Elizabeth Munson was born at New Rochelle, N. Y., on February 22, 1838. Her early days of study in private schools in and about New York are delightfully described in her autobiography, From My Youth Up. The pages of this book breathe the delightful atmosphere of a happy, cultured and pious home in the good old days when people took time to live gently. Her literary work was begun almost in childhood. Her first published work was the life story of a little girl who had been a frequent visitor to the young writer's home, and whose early death had deeply impressed her.

Six or eight months after the manuscript had been submitted to the Presbyterian Board of Publication in Philadelphia, the expressman brought a parcel for the delighted young authoress, containing twelve copies of the book bound, entitled Little Janey, and on the same day the postman brought a letter enclosing the first payment in the shape of a check for $40. One of her earliest productions was a little volume of French verses and essays which she had translated into English and printed for circulation as holiday gifts among her friends.

In 1858 Miss Munson was married to Mr. George Sangster. The marriage was in all respects a happy one. Mrs. Sangster relates in her book the impression this earnest man had made upon her by an address which he delivered to a congregation of tired delegates at the late close of a Sunday school convention. Her husband became an officer in the Federal Army during the Civil War. During the progress of the war Mrs. Sangster spent much of her time in the South, where she was active in works of comfort and relief for the soldiers. At the close of the war she and her husband settled at Norfolk, Va., where they resided until Mr. Sangster's death in 1868. Soon after this, in 1871, she entered upon her long career as an editor. Her first connection was with Hearth and Home, of which she was associate editor from 1871 to 1873; from 1873 to 1879 she was associate editor of the Christian at Work; in 1879 she became associate editor of the Christian Intelligencer; from 1882 to 1889 she conducted a correspondence department for Harper's Young People, of which she was called the "postmistress." She became the editor of Harper's Bazar in 1889 and conducted that magazine until 1899. She became a staff contributor to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in 1894 and wrote also in an editorial capacity for the Ladies' Home Journal and the Woman's Home Companion. Among her books are Poems of the Household, On the Road Home, Easter Bells, Winsome Womanhood, Little Knights and Ladies, Janet Ward, Eleanor Lee, Lyrics of Love, When Angels Come to Men, Little Kingdom of Home, The Story Bible, Fairest Girlhood, The Queenly Mother, Women of the Bible, The Joyful Life, From My Youth Up.

Mrs. Sangster's style was above all graceful. Her work was like herself, exquisite. Among the many poems from her pen which have delighted young and old, probably none is more loved than the beautiful and compelling lines which she entitled

OUR OWN

If I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day
The words unkind would trouble my mind
I said, when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain;
But we vex our own with look and tone
We might never take back again.

THE LATE MARGARET E. SANGSTER

For though in the quiet evening
You should give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it well might be that never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth at morning
Who never come home at night!
And hearts have broken for harsh words spoken
That sorrow can ne'er set right.

We have careful thought for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But oft for our own the bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.
Ah, lip with the curve impatient!
Ah, brow with the look of scorn!
'Twere a cruel fate were the night too late
To undo the work of morn.

A suggestive paragraph from her autobiography reveals the rare fashion in which she combined practicality with the highest idealism.

"It amuses some of my younger kinsfolk to hear that I was at one time noted much more for the feathery lightness of my omelets and the golden brown of my breakfast muffins than for bits of advice in the shape of letters or bits of song in the shape of poems. Little did it daunt me if things went wrong in the kitchen or the markets failed to send what I wanted for the evening company. I was a resourceful housekeeper, able to turn my hand at will to any task."

It may relieve some troubled young souls to know that the foregoing statement is followed by the confession that even this model housekeeper "did not like sewing."

Nowhere were her amazing versatility and adaptability shown more strikingly than in the spirit in which she kept pace with all that was best in modern life and modern ideals while clinging sweetly to the charm and to the truths of an earlier day. Young women of the present generation wrote to her by the thousands and found her words of counsel as practical and cheering as the girls of thirty years ago. While her whole life had been queenly there was something almost more than regal in her last years. Her eyesight became so seriously affected that she could not see to read or write, and had to be guided about. But there was no diminution of her work, no failing of her cheer. Her secretaries read to her and wrote at her dictation, and she went among her friends as before, many casual acquaintances not knowing at all that the sweet, bright eyes into which they looked could see them only as shadows.

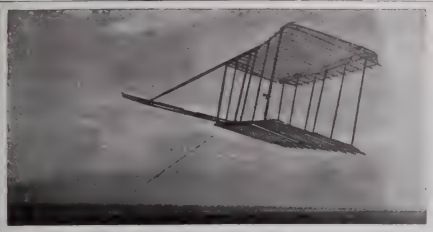
There has occurred again the startling incident of a writer penning words which seem to have been prophetic. Among the articles which were to have appeared on this page of hers this week is the little reassurance for travelers who have been frightened by the late sea horror. The words of gentle courage come to us now like a voice from the other world. The voice that so many knew and loved is stilled; but from the safe and happy harbor she speaks to our souls. It was thus that she took her journey home: "The point is that we ought not to be thrown from our poise when on a journey. The timid passenger by train and the nervous voyager by sea equally lose delight and refreshment that belong to change of scene. When we travel we should commit ourselves with confidence to the guardians of the road. . . . Above and beyond this we must remember to our comfort that there is One whose love for us surpasses that of the dearest friend, One whose vigilance is unsleeping and whose resources are inexhaustible. Shall we not trust our Heavenly Father whether we go abroad or stay at home?"

. . .

Vacation Journeyings

THE recent terrible tragedy at sea has induced a great many persons to modify their plans for summer travel. There are some among our readers who had anticipated a voyage across the ocean during the present summer, and have decided that they will stay at home rather than incur the peril that besets those who commit themselves to an Atlantic liner. Accidents and casualties may at any time occur to those who take the morning train or step on board the evening ferryboat. Our city thoroughfares are safe at many points only when a policeman, armed with authority, keeps back the surging tide of motor-cars and other conveyances. To close the home door and step into the street may be to encounter an unsuspected danger, and one is not invariably immune from peril in one's own house. Ceilings have been known suddenly to fall, and a misstep may mean loss of life or the breaking of a limb. The point is that we ought not to be thrown from our poise when on a journey. The timid passenger by train and the nervous voyager by sea equally lose delight and refreshment that belong to change of scene. When we travel we should commit ourselves with confidence to the guardians of the road. Each in his place is supposed to be trustworthy. Above and beyond this we must remember to our comfort that there is One whose love for us surpasses that of the dearest earthly friend, One whose vigilance is unsleeping and whose resources are inexhaustible. Shall we not trust our Heavenly Father whether we go abroad or stay at home?

THE CAREER OF WILBUR WRIGHT



Wilbur Wright's First Glider

The Late Wilbur Wright

The Final Triumph; the Perfected Aeroplane

THE perfect air-craft is probably much farther in the future than it would have been if Wilbur Wright had not been cut off twenty-five years before he had reached the alotted three score years and ten. Whether any other man will ever discover what he would have discovered had he lived is a riddle deeper than the very riddle on which he was at work when death stole him away.

The estimate has been frequently made since his death that he was "the father of aviation." But his own work and that of his brother have been so inseparable, and the work has been done so silently and modestly, that it is impossible at present to give credit to one more than another. Their two brains and four hands worked together at the alluring task of making, then of perfecting, a machine in which men might fly.

Wilbur Wright was born at Millville, Ind., in 1867. His father was the Rev. Milton Wright, later bishop of the United Brethren. His brother Orville was born in 1871, at Dayton, Ohio, which later became the permanent home of the family, the scene of the early efforts and discouragements of the now famous brothers, and finally the proud witness of the honors which were heaped upon them. The first business venture of the boys was in a newspaper enterprise at Richmond, Ind., where they published the West Side News. Then they went into the bicycle business, first as repair work, then as manufacturers of their own machines.

In boyhood their father had given them a toy helicopter, or flying top, which awakened their interest, as it did that of other inventive minds, in the problem of flight by machinery. At length, with the money made in their bicycle business, they began to make experiments.

Referring to the Wright brothers' debt to those who had worked before them at the problems of flight, Mr. Pliny W. Williamson, a director of the Wright Company, who was selected by his colleagues to represent them at the funeral of the dead aviator at Dayton, said, as he was leaving New York:

> It is easy to overestimate the work of those who preceded the Wrights. They labored, yes, but no machine ever contrived before the Wrights contrived theirs would fly if every Wright invention were added to it as a basic structure. The chief efforts had been spent in working out a table of air pressures on surfaces at various angles. All the Wrights learned from their predecessors as to this was that their predecessors were hopelessly wrong. They started in from the ground up and worked out their own mathematical tables. Chanute, whose tables they started with, has made this very clear.

The youthful kite-fliers came in for a good deal of derision in their home town, and were also hampered by the shifting winds of the locality. Consulting the weather bureau at Washington, they selected the sand hills near Kitty Hawk, N. C., as the scene of their operations. From this time on they refused absolutely to talk about their work. They labored in the face of doubt and derision; but they kept their heads and their patience. Their first flying machine was built in 1902. On December 17, 1903, they had a machine ready for business. Their first flights were merely "jumps." The starts were made by a weight dropped by a contrivance something like a catapult. Orville made the first ascent. Wilbur made the second and remained in the air for twelve seconds. On the fourth trial he stayed up fifty-nine seconds and covered a distance of eight hundred and sixty-two feet. The brothers returned to Dayton to make some improvements in their machine. From August to December they made one hundred and five flights, the best record being five minutes in the air. On September 26, 1905, Wilbur remained aloft for thirty-eight minutes and three seconds, flying a little more than eleven miles.

During 1906 and 1907 no flights were made. The brothers were giving their attention to seeking financial backing and to building new machines for demonstration purposes. On May 11, 1908, at Kitty Hawk, the first flight to be observed and reported by newspaper men was made. On this day Wilbur flew nearly two miles (1.855 miles) in two minutes and twenty-eight seconds. In August he made a number of flights in France. On September 21, starting from Le Mans, he covered forty-one miles in one hour, thirty-one minutes, twenty-one and four-fifths seconds. It was on September 17 that Orville Wright met with the accident near Washington which cost the life of Lieutenant Selfridge. Wilbur, learning that Orville would recover from the injuries he received on that occasion, remained in France, and on the last day of the year won the Michelin cup offered for the farthest long-distance flight of 1908. His record that day was 127 kilometers (about 77 miles) in two hours and twenty-eight minutes.

Wealth and honors came thick and fast during the last years. But the man who had dared violent death times without number died finally from disease upon his bed. And his unfinished work is left to his brother and the other laborers in the new world of the air.

Members of the Aero Club Waiting to Act as Pall-bearers

VISITS TO FAMOUS VOLCANOES

Continued from page 623

sea, eleven miles distant in a straight line, is thirty-nine miles by road, as a complete circuit of the great cone is necessary. First descending, we crossed the city, then circled to the right, slowly climbing until about five, at an altitude of 13,000 feet, we came to a tambo or inn on the Plateau of the Bones, across which, between El Misti and Pichu-Pichu, runs the old Inca road to Cuzco. Now we turned directly towards the mountain, riding on through the gathering gloom and almost total darkness till we came two hours later to the M. B. hut, so-called because its altitude, about 15,700 feet, is approximately that of the summit of Mont Blanc. It was pretty cold in the hut, but for this we were prepared with sleeping-bags, which were spread upon the floor.

The first hour in the fading starlight and the dawning of the following morning far above the rest of the world on this dark mountain slope was a delight. Animals are as much affected by the altitude as human beings, and progress was slow. With frequent halts for the panting mules, it required four hours to reach the summit, where a vast prospect of very unusual character lay before us. In all directions lay a desert, for the coast of Peru is a practically rainless country, where, except in the irrigated valleys, there is hardly a vestige of green. On the one hand stood snow-covered Chachani, a trifle higher; on the other bare-faced Pichu-Pichu, a trifle lower, both imposing neighbors. Most interesting of all is the spectacle at our feet—the crater, half a mile in diameter, with walls perpendicular at the top, below sloping to the crater floor eight hundred feet beneath. A cross wall somewhat lower than the irregular sides divided the gulf into two parts, an old and a new crater.

Along the narrow rim we walked warily, guarding against the precipice on our left and the steep slope of hard snow on our right. At a spot where it seemed feasible, with one or two jumps we climbed down to a snow incline where we still proceeded with care, for should we slide, and rapidly, we might bring up too suddenly at the bottom. Beyond on a gravelly slope we ventured to sit down and slide. The slide was fun, a term hardly applicable to most of the journey. Somewhat breathless after our exciting and strenuous descent, a halt prepared us for our slow upward climb. Inside and out the surface was the same, black gravel or ashes, wearisome to ascend at any altitude, triply so near 19,000 feet. It was slow work, plodding up the slope at each step, slipping halfway back, but it was worth while. From the top of the cross wall the entire enclosure with the two craters made a fine picture.

Following the cross wall to the side of the crater, staff in hand, we went rapidly down, with steps often ten or twelve feet long, the ashes thus sliding beneath one's feet. It was a merry and swift descent of less than an hour to the hut, in spite of a few halts for breath, but the ride back to the observatory seemed to be never-ending.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

G. W., Columbia City, Ind. Throughout the Bible, the idea is conveyed that the heart is the seat or source of love. Is this used figuratively, or is the psychologist wrong when he calls love, with all other emotions, a mental faculty and as such having its seat or source in the brain?

The heart being the center of the life system, from the earliest times it has been customary to refer to it as the seat of the emotions and desires, and in a great measure it is; for it is through the agency of the heart that the functions of life are carried on which give rise to all the feelings. But it is in the brain, which of course is dependent on the heart, that thoughts are conceived which result in emotion and in turn give birth to action; hence, psychologically speaking, the brain is the source from which spring the feelings or emotions, though figuratively the heart is regarded as the cause which calls them forth.

Mrs. C. C., Cynthiana, Ky. They are two different persons. Elijah, or Elias, was a Gileadite and, according to Jewish tradition, was the son of Eleazar, a priest. He was one of the three who appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration. There were many Jews who believed John the Baptist to be Elijah, and even Jesus declared that Elijah had come in spirit in the person of John. The Baptist, too, was of the priestly race by both parents, and in force of character and fearlessness in rebuking sin, he was another Elijah. From all that we know, however, we find no warrant for going beyond the very clear statement of John himself. (See John 1: 21, in which he emphatically denied that he was Elijah returned to earth.)

R. D. G., Shelby, Ky. How many non-church-members are there in the United States?

It is claimed that over 57,000,000 persons are non-church-members.

Mrs. V. T., Waverly, Ill. Why is it that the Catholics have been allowed to abolish Bible reading in the public schools?

You have asked a question that is being asked by many at the present time. Bible reading in the schools of Illinois was decided by a majority of the Supreme Court of the State to be an infringement of constitutional right in the sense that non-Christian children were compelled to participate in sectarian religious exercises. There was a minority report which set forth the other view of the question.

C. R. B., Blue Mounds, Wis. Can I become a preacher with only a graded high school education and with no money or any one to help me?

Your ambition to become a preacher is praiseworthy, especially under the conditions you state. If you are indeed called to the ministry a way will open for you. One can serve God in the lowliest position as acceptably as in the highest. Write to the Moody Institute, Chicago, for helpful advice suited to your case.

Constant Reader, Ottawa, Kan. Please explain Matt. 15: 22 and Luke 8: 2. What were the evil spirits? Are people possessed with such to-day?

Although many rationalistic teachers have held that the Biblical cases of demon-possession were nothing more than forms of epilepsy, lunacy and other kinds of permanent or temporary mental derangement known at the present day, nothing has been actually proven which discredits the Scripture accounts and statements. The whole realm of mental disorder is baffling to the scientist. The Bible recognizes a form of lunacy different from demon-possession. See Matt. 4: 24. There is nothing unreasonable or unscientific in a belief in devils. We know that evil persons while alive in the flesh do harm to others; we cannot be sure that when they leave the body the power to work harm is taken away. Just so it is perfectly reasonable to accept the Scripture teaching of the existence of another order of personalities, called devils, under the leadership of an arch-fiend. Many facts of present, personal experience would also tend to support this view; human beings often have the definite experience of feeling themselves urged to do wrong by an influence outside their own minds or bodies. And it is not unreasonable to believe that some present-day cases of insanity are really cases in which a demon has been allowed by the patient's will to influence him more and more until he has taken complete possession. It is just as rational to believe in devils as to believe in angels. Angels are a race of personal holy beings; demons a race of personal vicious beings, both existing in a form other than human and corporeal. While the works of S. D. Gordon must be read with discrimination because they include some theories and advices which seem incorrect, or at least not yet established, his books, Quiet Talks on Prayer and Quiet Talks About the Tempter, contain valuable and suggestive material about the work of demons and the Christian method of thwarting them.

I. H. E., Elizabethtown, Pa. What countries, besides the United States, allow of swearing by affirmation instead of the Bible oath?

In all civilized countries a person is allowed to affirm according to his religious belief. The general form is to upraise the right hand, but any other form can be used that will suffice to convey the conviction that the witness is telling the truth. Under the early English law unbelievers could not be witnesses, as an oath was not considered binding upon their consciences, but now they are allowed to testify in the manner prescribed by their convictions.

Julia S. White, librarian of the Guilford College, N. C., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pointing out the fact that Dolly Madison, whose 140th anniversary was celebrated recently in Washington, was born not in Virginia, but in North Carolina. Miss White says: "In our Quaker Record book for this section (near Greensboro), known as New Garden Monthly Meeting, is this entry: After giving that of John and Mary Payn, their sons Walter (1762) and William (1766), follows: 'Dolly, their daughter, was born ye 20 of ye 5 mo. 1768.' The minutes of the same meeting for 1765, 11 mo. state: 'John Payn produced a certificate for himself and wife from the Monthly Meeting of Cedar Creek in Virginia, dated 10 mo. 12, 1765, which was read and accepted.' Again in 1769 we find that the family moved back to Virginia—but the family was living in North Carolina at the time of Dolly's birth and she was a 'birthright' member of the Friends—in North Carolina." We are glad for the information of our readers to set the correct facts before them.

W. M. C., Wilmington, N. C. (and others). There were three walls about Jerusalem. The first was built by David and Solomon; the second, enclosing one of the northern sections of the city, was built by Uzziah, Jotham and Manasseh, and restored by Nehemiah; the third was built by Herod Agrippa, and was intended to enclose the hitherto unprotected suburbs which had grown out from the northern part of the city. According to Josephus, who is not always thoroughly reliable, the circumference of the city, evidently including all the sections enclosed by the three walls he describes, was thirty-three stadia, a little less than four English miles.

C. B. C., Waupaca, Wis. Please explain Matt. 25: 46.

In the latter part of this chapter, Jesus was describing the Last Judgment. There is nothing in the language used which can justify any other interpretation than that the condition imposed by the sentence of the sinner will be forever fixed. Many attempts have been made to show that "everlasting" meant "age-lasting," or for a long and indefinite period, as we speak of the "everlasting hills"; but no such interpretation can apply here. The decisions of the Judgment Day will be final, irreversible, unending. This is the light which Scripture throws upon the subject and which the Son of God himself has clearly emphasized.

E. E. V. N., and others, Vermont. Please give your opinion of Mark 10: 2-12. Do you think it is ever right for a divorced person to marry again? Suppose the husband should be converted after he had obtained a divorce; if he lived a Christian life would it be wrong for a Christian woman to marry him?

The passage in Mark should be read in connection with the corresponding verses in Matthew, i. e., Matt. 5: 31, 32 and 19: 3-9. In both the passages in Matthew the Master makes an exception to the rule against divorce. This has been held by the Protestant churches to mean that the innocent party to a divorce brought on account of the cause referred to by the Saviour is at liberty to marry again.

Subscriber, Granville, Fla. There are many good and proper things for the doing of which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find Scriptural warrant. As the world advances, God sheds light on his Gospel message, and gives to inquiring souls a fuller and clearer vision of their duty. A very large part of the world no longer believes in war; yet the ancient Psalmist prayed to God as to a mighty man of battle, who "teaches my hands to war and my fingers to fight." In punishments for statutory crimes, society no longer regards the offender as one merely to be punished, but as a being to be reformed, if possible. The sternness of the death penalty has been greatly relaxed and there are States and nations which have abolished it, believing that the State does wrong to take away a life which it cannot restore, and to send a soul into eternity all unprepared and unforgiven. In some future time, society everywhere may come to recognize the principle that capital punishment is an ineffective means of disposing of criminals.

R. M., Manomet, Mass. If A has obtained money from B by borrowing or through falsehood and fraud (with no intention of paying back), and later A meets with a change of heart, and restitution is possible, is it required of A to make it right with B before he can be forgiven of his sins and be right with God?

It is very clearly set forth in the Scripture that restitution should follow repentance. The change of heart may come before or after the act of restitution takes place, but in either event the convert will feel bound to make restitution at the earliest possible moment and in the fullest manner. It is expected of us that we shall make it right with our brother and we have no right to ask God to bestow on us the fulness of his gracious pardon until we do this. See Neh. 5: 10, 11; Luke 19: 8; Rom. 13: 8. In his Gospel work Evangelist Moody emphasized restitution wherever practicable as a necessary adjunct to complete salvation.

Miscellaneous

J. E., Ownesdale, Pa. Nowhere in the Bible are we told the name of Jesse's wife, the mother of David.

Subscriber, Vancouver, B. C. If you will send us your name and address, we will reply to your question.

Mrs. W. L. R., Fineswood, Va. We do not think that many pastors favor the dance, or would care to give it the sanction of their attendance.

W. A. R., Rochford, S. D. Under the present conditions of society and from the moral point of view, the innocent party has the right to marry again.

B. F. L., Eufaula, Wash. The human mind cannot grasp eternity nor infinity. The questions you ask are insoluble, as far as human explanation is concerned.

Mrs. A. W. P., Gloversville, N. Y. We have heard of such schools as you mention. Write to the editor, British Weekly, London, England, for information concerning them.

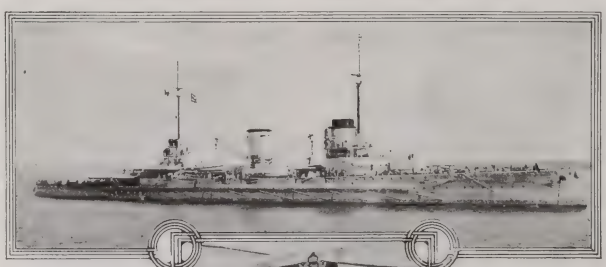
H. K. R., Brooklyn, N. Y. Cooper's tales have always been accorded a high place in American literature. We do not believe that your friend's view is shared by many.

M. A. S., Louisville, Ill. Modern sanitary science tells us that it is better to have individual drinking cups. A common drinking cup is a source of danger through infection. The conditions you describe in your town would be pronounced highly unsanitary.

T. G. E., Perth, Kan. There is not the slightest truth in the last part of the rumor you mention, and no reason for believing that there is any foundation for the first part. Wesley believed in, taught, and administered the rite of infant baptism, in conformity with the doctrines and usage of the Church of England, of which he remained a fully accredited clergyman until his death.

Mrs. N. H. B., Orangeburg, S. C. The passage to which you refer is Eccles. 11: 1. There is no reason for believing that the words had been used before they were written in this book. The exhortation is to do kind things even when there is no more likelihood of the kindness being returned than there is that wafers of food thrown on the surface of a stream should turn about and float upstream again. The bread, of course, never will return; but the kind deeds will be rewarded, often in totally unexpected and sometimes in apparently impossible ways.

The German Battle-Cruiser "Moltke" Visiting New York



Photos Copyrighted by International News Co.

Admiral Von Rebeur-Paschwitz

THE American battleship squadron of the Atlantic, consisting of seven of our most powerful dreadnoughts, assembled in Hampton Roads the other day to give a cordial welcome to a division of the German fleet which is paying this country a long-promised visit. President Taft came from Washington on the government yacht Mayflower to greet the Kaiser's ships in the name of the nation and offer them the hospitality of the country.

It was a gay and memorable occasion. As the President came on the deck of the Moltke, the flagship of the German admiral, Von Rebeur-Paschwitz, and the largest battle-cruiser in the world, he was greeted by over a thousand brawny sailor lads of the Fatherland in a way which left no doubt of the genuineness of their tribute to the United States. The President was escorted over the big vessel, the crew saluting at every turn. As he was leaving the German band struck up the "Star-Spangled Banner," after which a big six-pounder on the deck barked out the presidential salute of twenty-one guns. Admiral Von Rebeur-Paschwitz dined with the President on the Mayflower, and the other admirals, German and American, paid one another friendly visits.

A few days later the German flagship visited New York Harbor, and was enthusiastically received by the people of the city. A committee of New York's best-known citizens greeted the officers of the ship, and entertainments, dinners, and fetes were carried out in their honor.

RED DANDY AND MACTAVISH

BY CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS

Author of "The Forge in the Forest"; "Kindred of the Wild"; "Barbara Ladd"; "A Sister to Evangeline," etc.

THE first of the dawn lay pink and dewy chill along the naked tilted crest of the Ridge. Slowly it crept down the scarred rocks, washed softly over the tangled thickets, and last shot its thin, aerial rays of light and color wn the glades and under the branches of the ash, estnut and maples, just filming with their earliest ring green.

Into a deep little hollow last it came—a hollow rpeted with dry twigs, half choked with vine and amble, and overhung by the branches of two ormous chestnuts. It was so secret a hollow that e long, pink fingers of light felt their way in with ficulty, and seemed to grope for a while before ding anything to reveal. At last, however, they d find something. And immediately, as if pleased the discovery, they lit up the hollow with a sudden sh of pale rose-amber.

hat the delicate light vealed was a young wn, whose immense, ild, liquid eyes met it onderingly. Curled up nder a bush, his red-wny coat, mottled ith cream-yellow, ade him as a rule most indistinguish-ble from his bed of ottled brown leaves. ut that peculiar, crys-lline yet tinted light earliest dawn made m suddenly conspicu-us. After a moment two of wonder he emed to become aware at he was no longer visible. He dropped is baby head between is hoofs, and ap-eared to shrink into a uarded immobility. It as almost as if by neer unconscious voli-on his colors became ss bright, and he be-an to fade, through ere stillness, back into is surroundings.

But that instant's notion, the lowering of is head, had been nough to make trouble. t had caught the at-ention of a pair of igilant and cruel eyes t the upper edge of the ollow. A prowling, hadowy-gray shape, as oiseless as the motion f the dawn itself, rouched suddenly flat earth and glared down with terrible intentness t the ruddy, mottled little form beneath the bush. second shadowy shape, with the like pale, pierc-ng, moonlike eyes, stole up and crouched beside the rst.

They were sinister-looking beasts, the two lynxes, ach nearly forty pounds in weight, with immense, anther-like paws, and muscles like steel, moving wiftly under their loose, long fur. Their hind-uarters were of exaggerated size and power, as ompared with the fore-quarters, and their hind egs were gathered under them, ready for an instant pring, in such a fashion as to suggest some mon-trous and predatory hare. Their tails were mere hick stubs, apparently quite futile as far as con-erned all customary uses of a tail. Their round, nalign faces were fiercely whiskered, surrounded y a sort of ruff of long fur curling forward from eneath the jaws; and their ears were tipped with ong, stiff tufts. In color they were of a light gray, owdered vaguely with a pale yellow-brown—a oloring which made them all but invisible in the hadowed woods, except for the startling brilliancy f their wide, pale eyes.

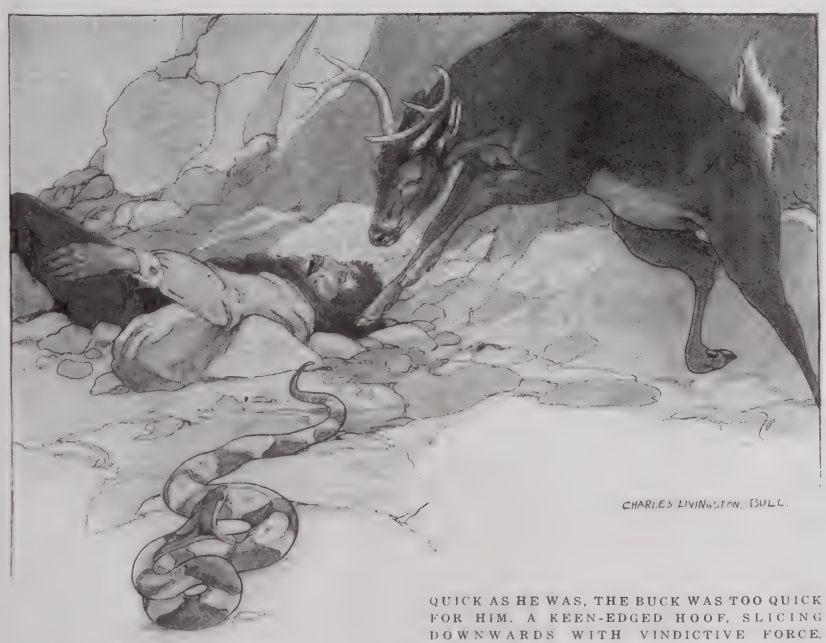
Both lynxes stared unwinkingly, for a few long econds, at the unconscious fawn, whose mild eyes ere turned in another direction, watching anx-ously for his mother's return. All at once, though ot a sound, a whisper, had come to his ears, some ubtle warning thrilled his baby nerves, and he urned his head to glance behind him.

The fawn was but a few hours old. He had so ar learned nothing, either of lynxes or of death. But he needed no learning to know that those two dim shapes meant doom. Opening wide his narrow muzzle he cried out for his mother—a strange, strident cry, half bleat, half yelp, but quite unmistakable in its terror and its appeal.

The cry was answered instantly by a clear bellowing from close at hand; and almost in the next second the mother doe arrived, coming in one tremendous leap clean over the nearest bushes. It was not by any means her customary way of coming home. On other occasions she would drift in silently, not so much as snapping a twig. But when danger threatened her little one she threw prudence to the breezes and came by the shortest road.

With a soft little murmur of reassurance the red mother nosed her fawn, sniffing it all over as if to ask what ailed it. It was shivering; and after a few moments she looked up, glancing about to see what had so frightened it. At the sudden, vehement appearance of the doe both lynxes had stopped abruptly, crouching in readiness for whatever might take place. When they saw the mother's head bent low, and all her attention absorbed in the little one, they again stole forward. But now they separated, one creeping to the right, the other to the left. They knew that a mother deer, in the protection of her young, was an antagonist too formidable for one lynx alone to engage. But by attacking her on both flanks at once they trusted to confuse her, and so avoid the lightning strokes of her dangerous, knife-edged hoofs.

When the doe lifted her head to look around, she saw the implacable eyes of the male lynx, not fifteen feet away, just gathering himself for the spring.



QUICK AS HE WAS, THE BUCK WAS TOO QUICK FOR HIM. A KEEN-EDGED HOOF, SLICING DOWNWARDS WITH VINDICTIVE FORCE, STRUCK HIM ON THE BACK OF THE NECK

CHAPTER II

MACTAVISH sat on the very peak of the Ridge, and stared with calm eyes into the spreading miracle of the dawn. In the crook of his left arm rested his handy .303, its blued barrel gleaming in the clean, thin radiance. His big right hand fingered his red beard complacently. That sunrise seemed to him just as it should be. The faint rose tints, the amber, the gold, of a transparency altogether inexplicable and almost unbelievable, played along his rugged but fine-strung nerves like the long, slow notes of a fiddle beside a still water under a midsummer moon.

Scotch, Welsh and English in his veins, MacTavish was a mixture more or less enigmatic even to himself. He shrank from hurting anything, yet he was a keen hunter, and he loved a good fight. On his way from his cabin in to the Settlement, twenty miles away across the valley, he had started up the western slope a half-hour earlier than was necessary—quite in the dark, in fact—just in order to see the first of the sunrise from the crest of the Ridge, its celestial flood breaking over the wide valley below him. But he would not acknowledge to himself that this was his reason for coming up so early! He had several other reasons ready—but he knew in his heart that they had no weight at all. They only served to veil to himself this guilty passion of his for sunrises, and sunsets, and other beautiful but practically useless affairs.

Never, thought MacTavish, tugging at his red beard with slow intensity of enjoyment, had he seen that great view from the Ridge more entrancing, never a sunrise that was more perfect in its sorcery. He hardly dared to breathe lest it should change in a flash to some other and less lovely combination of tones. The stillness was almost terrible in its perfection—as it were of an infinite bubble blown to its utmost limit and coloring by a miracle.

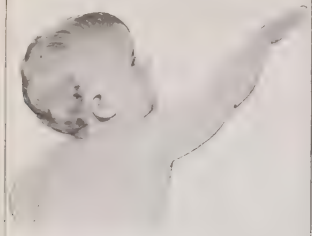
And then it broke. From the hollow below came a medley of furious sounds — snarls, cries, strugglings, the unmistakable utterance of a life-and-death encounter. The mystic light upon the rocks, the thickets, the greening trees, suddenly changed, became more familiar, more ordinary, something almost in the line of the day's routine return. MacTavish drew a long breath, as of one released from a strong spell. He snatched up his rifle, and darted swiftly but quietly down the slope to the bushy hollow where the sounds seemed to come from.

The faithful mother had ceased struggling, and the lynxes, not yet quite assured of their victory, were both tearing ferociously at her throat when MacTavish appeared. With harsh snarls, enraged beyond all discretion at this interference in the hour of victory, they turned and confronted him, as if almost minded to try conclusions with him. Up went MacTavish's handy gun—and the male lynx sprang straight into the air, with all four legs stretched rigid, to fall back, relaxed and sprawling, across the neck of his victim. Before he was fairly down the female was gone—simply vanishing, as if the report of the rifle had blown her away. MacTavish saw no more of her than an instant's drift of gray between one thicket and another.

MacTavish picked up his trophy, appraised it with skilled eye as a good pelt, then flung it down carelessly, a little chagrined at not having been quick enough to secure both the gray marauders. He examined the doe to make sure she was quite dead, produced a few yards of stout cord from his capacious pocket, and strung the body up by the hind legs to a branch overhead, out of the way of the foxes. Then he turned to the fawn.

The little animal had been watching, from its place, with immense, blank eyes of stupefaction. So many sudden horrors had left it numb in its utter incomprehension. When MacTavish gently went up to it, holding out his hand, it hardly even shrank away. But when he indiscreetly laid his hand upon its muzzle, the dreaded man-smell shocked it, and it struggled to its feet, repeating that strident and piteous cry of appeal to the mother who was now so deaf to it. Feebly it strove to get away. But MacTavish had it fast. He held it firmly, but he stroked it gently, rubbing its back

Continued on next page



Babies and Children do not suffer from Heat in the Tropics

Neither are they subject to many of the digestive ailments prevalent among ours.

Nature has provided these climes with juicy fruits. Their wonderful beneficial powers are especially well developed in the cooling, refreshing juice of the pineapple.

Its clearing and digestive powers are so pronounced its health and energy producing qualities of such marked benefits to children and convalescents, that physicians and nurses readily give it preference over ordinary beverages.

It is easily borne by delicate digestive organs.

Dole's Hawaiian Pineapple Juice

is simply the pure juice of golden-ripe pineapples, carefully bottled and sterilized at Honolulu.

The Real Health Drink

Sold by your druggist, grocer or fountain.

"Cooling Drinks and Desserts" telling all about it, and how to make many delectable dainties. Mailed free on request.

Hawaiian Pineapple Products Co., Ltd.
112 MARKET ST.
San Francisco, California

Red Dandy and MacTavish

Continued from preceding page

and its neck. And presently, puzzled but in part reassured by the smell of its mother which blended so curiously with the man-smell on MacTavish's clothes, it stopped its strange cries and lay still in the hunter's arms, looking at him with eyes of anxious inquiry.

"Poor wee beastie!" murmured MacTavish, holding it as tenderly as if it had been a human baby. And then, remembering his beloved Burns—

"Wee, sleekit, quiverin', timorous beastie!"

For a few moments he stood hesitating. He had set out to pay a visit to the Settlement, and he was not one to lightly change his plans. But the needs of the little animal were a peremptory demand on his understanding heart. Another day would do for the trip to the Settlement. He slung the dead lynx over his shoulder, settled the fawn more or less comfortably in his left arm, and started back for his cabin on the other side of the Ridge.

CHAPTER III

IN MACTAVISH'S snug cabin, tended and petted, the fawn speedily forgot the horrors which had surrounded its first appearance on the stage of life. It learned at once to drink warm cow's milk, and a little later to browse, not only on the grass of MacTavish's pasture-clearing, but also on the choicest vegetable products of his little garden. MacTavish spoiled it shockingly; but it rewarded him with a dog-like devotion that might almost at times have seemed a nuisance. It was forever at his heels, and as it seemed constitutionally incapable of learning obedience, whenever he did not wish to be followed he had to shut it up securely in the barn and turn a deaf ear to its terrible, penetrating appeals.

In course of months the little one's coat lost its creamy spots and became all a rich, tawny red, shading to pale buff on the under parts; and he grew up into a particularly handsome and high-stepping young buck. It was then that his name was changed from "Beastie" to "Red Dandy." Gradually, now, he got to be on fair terms—not friendly, but condescendingly tolerant terms—with the black-and-white cow, the yearling calf, and the two big, sleepy, carrot-colored oxen who did MacTavish's plowing and trailing. When his first horns began to sprout, he gradually established an uncontested supremacy over all these easy-going folk of the farm-yard. In spite of his slimness and his small stature, he had them at a complete disadvantage, for he could always prod them where he liked, or buffet them cruelly with his fore-hoofs, and then evade their resentment with scornful ease. So, to save themselves trouble, they gave way to his tyranny until it became a habit with them. This domination, no doubt, was rendered easier for him to secure by reason of the terms of favor on which he lived with MacTavish. Spending half his time in the cabin, trotting at MacTavish's heels, or at his side with MacTavish's arm over his back, the other animals easily came to regard him as sharing some small measure of MacTavish's authority. It was perhaps a fortunate thing for all concerned that there was no dog or cat about the place to divide MacTavish's affections—for Red Dandy was as jealous as a Spanish gipsy.

Red Dandy, as he developed into a full-sized, high-antlered buck, developed also two antipathies—towards the pig, and towards all snakes. For the first there was no apparent reason, and whenever he was caught manifesting it he got a sharp horse-whipping from MacTavish, which would send him off snorting to sulk for perhaps ten minutes behind the barn. He used to stand beside the pen and thrust at the unoffending grunter through the cracks. To avoid accidents, MacTavish ran the walls of the sty to a discouraging height, and nailed up the cracks between the boards.

When this was done, Red Dandy appeared to forget the existence of pigs. But for snakes he was always hunting, stealing up to sunny hillocks in the effort to surprise them basking, or beating the coverts of "snake-brake" with his antlers to frighten them forth into the open, where he might trample them with his sharp and nimble hoofs. In this antipathy he had his master's heartfelt co-operation. For to MacTavish's somewhat childlike eyes all snakes—the bright, harmless little gartersnakes no less than the deadly moccasin or copperhead—were children of the devil. This seemed to be exactly the point of view of Red Dandy as well. He would pursue a tiny, innocent, pale-green grass-snake, eight or ten inches long, with the same gay, dancing fury that he devoted to the destruction of a six-foot blacksnake or blue racer. But when it came to either an adder or a copperhead, then he was as cool and wary as a trained fencer. He knew—who shall say how, since MacTavish never taught him?—very well between the snakes whose bite meant death and those which bore no poison-fangs in their jaws.

It happened that the southward slopes of the Ridge, being sheltered from all the harsher winds and full of sun-steeped ledges, were a favorite haunt of the copperhead, which nowhere else managed to maintain itself so far north. From time to time, when some one got bitten, there would be a move among the scattered settlers in both valleys toward a concerted campaign for the extermination of the virulent pests. But for the most part the copperheads kept to the out-of-the-way ledges and inaccessible ravines, and so avoided making themselves conspicuous. They did not court notoriety, and therefore they were apt to be forgotten.

MacTavish, as a rule, never thought of them. But he thought of them abruptly on the morning when the rocky lip, where he was standing to drink in the view, suddenly scaled off beneath his weight and he felt himself falling down the bare, terrific incline. The incline was almost perpendicular, and he fell swiftly, amid a whirl of dusty stones and a bright, hot glow, as it were into the very face of the landscape. He scraped over a narrow ledge, clutched wildly at a bush which grew upon it—and was greeted with a savage hiss which seemed to him just in his ear. His hair rose, and he let go of the bush, and felt for the moment an actual relief in the fact that he kept right on falling. Then his head struck a projecting root, he bounced from a second ledge, lost consciousness, fell more expeditiously, and rolled to the bottom with a broken leg and a pattering company of stones of assorted sizes.

He knew nothing about it, of course, but those almost too attentive stones were his bodyguard, and for the moment an effective one. Hissing and striking indignantly, a basking family of copperheads scattered and scurried away, routed by the shower of stony missiles. In a few seconds the dust settled, and the last of the stones lay still. And so did MacTavish; for he had been well battered in that unceremonious descent, and the knock on his skull had been a shrewd one.

At the time of MacTavish's fall Red Dandy had been close behind, nosing with fine velvet muzzle at his master's pocket to see if it held anything for him. He jumped back with a snort at MacTavish's amazing disappearance, and drew off resentfully. He was not accustomed to seeing his master behave with such abruptness, or go away without giving him time to follow. For several minutes he stalked back and forth, with head held very high and a puzzled look in his eyes. Then, beginning to get lonely, he went to the brink of the steep and cautiously peered over. His feet displaced some

Continued on next page

Over 99% of Buster Brown's "DARNLESS" Hosiery Outlives its guarantee

Dollar Box of 4 Pairs Guaranteed 4 Months

Buster's "DARNLESS" Hosiery is peculiarly constructed to embody perfect fit as well as extreme durability. Made of smooth, sheer silk lisle, durably reinforced by 2-, 3- and 4-ply toughlinen thread at heel, toe, knee, sole and toe. Each wearing part woven into the thin lisle body and each pair inspected and carefully-matched in daylight mill. The only guaranteed 25c silk lisle hosiery made and costs 25% more to manufacture than any other 25c guaranteed brand.

Sanitary, Fast-Dyed Colors For Men, Women, and Children

It will pay you to look up your local Buster Brown dealer. If you can't find him, write direct, enclosing $1, mentioning style, size and color. We will see that you are supplied promptly.

BUSTER BROWN'S NEW BOOK

Thirty-six pages illustrated in colors, picturing and describing Buster's escapades—amusing and interesting—appreciated by children. Send 4c to cover mailing.

Buster Brown's Hosiery Mill,
836 Sherman Ave., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Trade Mark Registered

STOP

pumping—save your strength and health by oiling your sewing machine with "3 in One." It lubricates and cleans out all action points and bearings. Makes old machines run like new and new ones like greased lightning. Reduces treadle labor by half. Why use gummy, greasy sewing machine oil longer, when "3 in One" is better and cheaper? Doesn't gum or soil hands or fabrics. Generous sample sent free of cost, by 3 IN 1 OIL COMPANY, 42 GS Broadway, New York City, on receipt of the name of your dealer who doesn't handle "3 in One."

Let Your Idle Money
Small or Large Sums
Earn 5% for You

While your money lies idle awaiting investment, it can earn you 5% with safety. Our patrons are protected by assets of over $2,000,000. For the past 19 years we have paid our depositors 5 per cent.—their money being safeguarded as our business is conducted under the supervision of the New York State Banking Department.

Dividends compounded semi-annually or remitted by mail. Deposits—any sum from $25 to $3,000—received in person or by mail. Our certificate system of deposit prevents the possibility of loss of bankbook. Dividends paid from day of deposit to day of withdrawal, which may be upon short notice.

Write for our booklet and we will refer you to someone in your vicinity; we have patrons in all parts of the world

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

FREE SAMPLE VAN'S NORUB MEANS NO RUBBING WHY DO YOU RUB? VAN'S NORUB CLEANS WITHOUT RUBBING

Write at once for Large Trial Package of this wonderful Cleanser FREE. Makes your clothes clean and white without rubbing. Absolutely pure and harmless. At grocers, 5c. 10c package.

If you've never used "Van's Norub," try it—NOW. Be sure to give Dealer's name and address when writing for Free Package.

Van Zile Co., 806 Walnut Street, West Hoboken, N. J.

DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over, will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent prepaid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Red Dandy and MacTavish

Continued from preceding page

gall stones, which went rattling wn and struck MacTavish smartly. e buck expected to see him jump d get angry at this; but instead of at he lay perfectly still.

Red Dandy grew troubled. He went se to the edge, pushing a few more nes down upon MacTavish. No ubt he would have succeeded in slidg down, but an instinctive doubt as how he would arrive gave him use. He snorted uneasily, drew ck from the brink, stood fretting for moment or two, and then started ng the crest of the ridge in search an easier way down.

When all had been quiet for some me at the foot of the steep, several the copperheads, shining with a dull ow in the sun, came gliding warily ck towards their basking-place. he patriarch of the tribe, a thickdied, beautifully-patterned fellow arly six feet long, led the way. He me to within a few feet of the unnscious MacTavish, gave a warning gnal and coiled himself to strike. is followers withdrew with petulant ssings, cheerfully leaving all the ory to him.

As MacTavish did not move, the ake did not strike. He waited, the cture of readiness, his flat, opaque es fixed on the mysterious object hich had arrived so mysteriously mong them. He waited for possibly n minutes. Then, satisfied that the bject was not alive, and not dangerus, he uncoiled and started to wriggle way.

At this moment MacTavish came to, artially. He moved an arm. He ied to move his right leg. A groan me from his throat. The great snake ecoiled himself in a flash, and poised is shining metallic head and hissed is loud sibilant warning.

At that ominous sound MacTavish me to completely, with all his wits bout him. He did not move a muscle xcept to open his eyes slowly and eer about him. He did not have to eer about much, for there was the reat copperhead straight in front of is face, with head gently swaying, ithin range and ready to strike.

MacTavish thought hard. He knew hat his enemy would not strike so ong as he kept perfectly still. But he new also that the snake now knew e was alive, and therefore might wait ather indefinitely. How long would e be able to keep still? His broken eg was beginning to torture him savgely. Other snakes would presently ome out of their hidings. How would e ever be able to drag himself away vithout bringing them upon him? The old sweat jumped out all over his ody. Then he felt his head swim again, and his wits again beginning to slip away. In an icy terror he clutched them back to their duty, horrified lest he should move in his unconsciousness. Weak as he was he began to contemplate futile schemes, such as clutching up a handful of stones and pelting the enemy away, though he knew very well that the enemy could strike at least three or four times as fast as he could move his arm.

The agony and suspense and confusion in his head were beginning to overcome him once more, when he caught a sound of light hoofs behind him. He dared not turn his head to look; but he felt who it was, and his brain cleared again. He saw the coiled snake shift his head so as to give another focus to the curve of its swing.

A moment more and Red Dandy came mincing into view, dancing that delicate war-dance with which he was wont to challenge the unresponsive pig. He swerved off to ne side, drawing the copperhead's attention away from MacTavish. Then he warily presented the tips of his antlers, just within reach. The snake struck like lightning, twice, spilling his venom harmlessly over the impenetrable horn. Teased by that exasperating antler, he struck again and again, till at last not a drop more venom came. Then, realizing suddenly that his fighting powers were gone till he could secure time to recuperate, he swiftly uncoiled and darted for shelter.

But quick as he was, the buck was too quick for him. A keen-edged hoof, slicing downwards with vindictive force, struck him on the back of the neck just where it ran into the skull. That stroke severed the tough scales and shore the vertebral column clean through.

The deadly head dropped forward, utterly powerless. But the body, packed with vitality and force, writhed itself up in hideous, lashing coils. With one more stroke Red Dandy smashed the impotent head. Then he stamped and trampled down the writhing coils, till they were chopped into bits and his trim fetlocks streamed with blood. Not while there was anything left to writhe would he give up his performance or accept his victory as complete.

MacTavish, feeling quite safe now as far as snakes were concerned, let himself go for a little. When he came to again he felt better; and Red Dandy was standing beside him, sniffing at his face. He fondled the narrow, soft muzzle for a minute or two, expressing his unqualified admiration for his rescuer's courage and craft; and then, setting his teeth grimly, he started on the slow and agonizing crawl to the nearest farmstead.

Answered Prayers

E. J. W., Johnston, R. I. "Through prayer he life of our dear son has been spared."

O. E. S., Dayton, Ia. "I am very grateful to God for hearing and answering my prayer."

E. M., Colorado Springs, Colo. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering my prayer."

Mrs. R. S. McN., Mahomet, Ill. "I believe that God hears and answers prayer, if we ask in faith, believing."

"A Texan." "I know from actual experience that God answers prayers when we ask him from the heart."

Mrs. E. N., Royersford, Pa. "My husband was sick, but thank God for answered prayer, he is getting better."

A. B. G., Kansas City, Mo. "I wish to acknowledge that God has answered my prayers in a time of great trouble."

P. M. W., Lebanon, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge that God answered a special prayer better than I could have desired."

M. B. D., Florence, Colo. "I wish to add my testimony that God has answered many prayers for me, and one especially for which I am most thankful."

M. V. C. "I want to acknowledge to the world God's goodness in answering a special prayer of mine. I have proved him to answer prayer many times."

M. W. F., Florence, Mass. "A very great danger threatened us, and in great distress I prayed that this might be averted. My prayer was answered, which I thankfully acknowledge."

Called Higher

Z. Pees (86), of Richmond, O., died October 5, 1911.

Mrs. Mary J. Carr Lyon (81), of Essex, N. Y., died August 30, 1911.

Mrs. Marie Carlson, of Newbery, Mich., passed away November 5, 1911. She was for many years a constant reader of this magazine.

Mrs. R. V. Davison (71), of Sunville, Pa., was called to her heavenly home on December 9, 1911. She was for many years a subscriber to this paper.

Miss N. E. Sears, of Kingston Springs, Tenn., passed away January 7, 1912. She was a devout Christian and for years a subscriber to this paper.

Mrs. Mary Eldridge (78) passed away at her home in Bridgehampton, Long Island, N. Y., December 31, 1911. She was a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

J. B. Turner (73), of Mapleton, Me., was recently called to the higher life. He was a faithful Christian throughout his life, beloved by all who knew him.

Mr. R. W. Crone (74), of Des Moines, Ia., was called away from this life very suddenly November 28, 1911. For over thirty years he had been a subscriber to this publication.

Noah Surface (80), of Florence, Ky., was called higher July 3, 1911. He was a constant reader of this paper, and ever ready to assist those in distress or need.

Mrs. H. F. Marsh (75), of Antigo, Wis., passed away to her heavenly home, after a long life devoted to Christian work. She was for many years an interested reader of this paper.

HELPFUL HINTS

PRACTICAL KNOWLEDGE OF FOOD VALUES
ITS APPLICATION IN DAINTY DISHES

ONE of the interesting results of the general discussion of food values is the wide-spread revival and popularity of that old friend of our grandmother's day—Kingsford's Corn Starch.

While it is probable that Corn Starch is known to some extent in every home the average housewife has little idea of the great variety of its many uses and the delicious desserts so easily made with it. Try these recipes, being sure to cook the custard thoroughly as instructed.

Blanc Mange. Six level tablespoons Kingsford's Corn Starch, one-quarter cup cold milk, one-quarter cup sugar, pinch salt, two and one-quarter cups scalded milk, one teaspoonful vanilla. Stir corn starch and cold milk together adding sugar and salt. Pour the scalded milk slowly on the first mixture and stir till thickened. Cook in double boiler twelve minutes. Add vanilla, stir well and turn into wet mould to set.

For Chocolate Blanc Mange melt one square of bitter chocolate over hot water and make smooth with hot milk and add to the rest of the corn starch and milk. Sweeten to taste.

Loaf or Layer Cake. One-half cup butter, one cup sugar, two eggs, one-half cup milk, one teaspoon vanilla, one and one-fourth cups flour, one-fourth cup Kingsford's Corn Starch, one and one-half level teaspoon baking powder. Cream the butter, adding the sugar gradually till all is well creamed together. Add the beaten eggs and vanilla. Sift flour, corn-starch and baking powder together three times and add alternately with the milk. Beat well and bake in moderately hot oven.

There is scarcely an item in the family grocer's list that is at once so nutritious and economical as corn starch—but for the best results it will be well to see that Kingsford's Corn Starch is supplied and not an inferior substitute.

Other interesting recipes will appear later in this column or you can address Kingsford's, New York City, for a complete cook book of dainty desserts which will be sent free.

THE EXPERIENCED LAUNDRESS GIVES ADVICE TO THOSE WITH LAUNDRY TROUBLES

WASHING and ironing should not be anything like the task that they are made in many households. In fact, intelligently done there is little worry and the results are a delight to the housewife.

A great deal depends on the selection of the right materials. Starch for instance has everything to do with your success. Good starch will actually improve the appearance of bad washing and poor starch will do much to ruin the appearance of the most thoroughly washed fabric.

Take the dainty whiteness and lightness in lingerie waists and fine underwear—it is really as much a result of good starching as perfect washing. All starch will stiffen fabrics, cheap starches stain because the minerals have not been removed and they leave tell-tale spots on the clothes.

The sure way is to insist on Kingsford's Silver Gloss Starch. This starch is always pure, clean and uniform. You can depend on it absolutely. Kingsford's has been used by good laundresses for three generations as the reliable starch for hot or cold starching and for all kinds of work coarse or fine.

For boiled starch mix Kingsford's Silver Gloss Starch in cold water till the starch is thoroughly dissolved and perfectly smooth. Then add the boiling water until it is of correct consistency and becomes clear. Add a little blue—taking care to mix it thoroughly and carefully. Rub the starch into the fabric very thoroughly for one of the secrets of good starching is getting the starch into the goods. After the starch is cooked thin it down with cold water for fine lingerie. Dry the clothes in open air, sprinkle carefully and iron with clean irons.

CANNING OF FRUIT
JELLY MAKING
JAMS AND PRESERVES

Send for free booklet of directions and recipes

CORN PRODUCTS REFINING CO.
Dept. O, Box 161, New York

KINGSFORD'S
CORN STARCH
Standard since 1848

Dainty desserts are easy to make with Kingsford's Corn Starch—delicious Custards, Charlottes, Blanc Mange, and Puddings. You need the extreme purity and delicacy of Kingsford's for these desserts. Ordinary corn starch won't do. Kingford's costs no more. Why take risk with substitutes?

Send your name on post card for Cook Book O free—168 best recipes.

T. KINGSFORD & SON
National Starch Co., Suc'rs Oswego, N. Y.

KINGSFORD'S OSWEGO
SILVER GLOSS STARCH

To have the clothes iron up white and crisp use this pure natural lump starch. It may cost a little more in the box but measure the amount used and the results obtained as against other starches and you save by using it.

Kingsford's Oswego Silver Gloss—known to fine Laundresses everywhere—and to three generations of American housekeepers as the ever reliable starch for hot or cold starching and for all kinds of work, coarse or fine.

Insist on Kingsford's Oswego Silver Gloss Starch. See that your grocer delivers it—see that your laundress uses it.

Sold in 1 lb., 3 lb. and 6 lb. boxes.

T. Kingsford & Son
National Starch Co. Suc'rs
Oswego, N.Y.

A Great-Truths Review*

Quarterly Review Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

The Use of the Sabbath

THAT was a very plain Sunday dinner which the apostles of Jesus had—uncooked wheat, with their hands for plates, partaken of out in the open—no table, no seats—yet the Pharisees found fault with them because they judged they had broken the law of the Sabbath in gathering the grain. Jesus defended them on the ground of necessity: they had not labored in the field that they might lay by in store, but only that they might satisfy present hunger. Jesus spoke as the Lord of the Sabbath, and taught that it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath day. Several of Jesus' miracles of healing were done on the Sabbath. Between works of mercy or necessity and activity for pure amusement there is a vast difference. Sunday sport is a dagger that is piercing the heart of our nation. An officer who had no care for religion said: "I am glad I can stop the Sunday theatres and picture shows, for I have seen our youth so wild after them they are going to the bad." Bishop Whitaker, of the Episcopal Church, has said: "Certain things are manifestly inconsistent with a proper observance of the Sabbath, as playing cards, giving card parties, taking part as spectators or performers in any theatrical entertainment, ball game, or exhibition attracting spectators." Thirty-four denominations of churches in a Federal Council agreed that "new and stronger emphasis should be given in the pulpit, home and Sabbath school to the observance of the first day of the week as the sacred day, home day, and rest day for every man, woman and child."

Appointment of the Twelve Apostles

Their names were Simon Peter and Andrew (brothers), James and John (brothers), Philip, Bartholomew (sometimes called Nathanael), Thomas (Didymus), Matthew, James the Less and Jude (brothers, and probably cousins of Jesus. Jude was also called Lebbeus and Thaddeus), Simon (Simon Zelotes, the zealot), Judas Iscariot. They did not receive their appointment until the second year of the ministry of Jesus, but two of them, Andrew and John, began following Jesus almost immediately after his baptism. The next two followers of Jesus were the brothers of Andrew and John, Peter and James. Those four men were frequently with Jesus, but they did not at first leave their business of fishing. There were probably other fishermen who followed Jesus, for seven of the apostles went fishing together once (see John 21: 1-12). Matthew was the only tax-gatherer in the company of Jesus' followers. Judas must have had some genius for money getting, or he would not have been given charge of the bag (purse). It was not until about the middle of the second year of Christ's ministry, at the time he preached the Sermon on the Mount, that the twelve followers received their ordination as the twelve apostles, and after that they were with Jesus, even when he sent them out two by two to do work of teaching and healing.

The Beatitudes

The Beatitudes have been called "The Gospel of Blessedness," and the mountain where it was preached by the Lord Jesus Christ is to this day called the "Mount of Blessing." It is quite accessible to the traveler, and nearly all visitors to the Holy Land ascend it. Only the favored few to whom travel is possible can hope to stand upon it. Better far is the Mount of Blessedness which all can have in their own land, in their own homes, in their own hearts. This was indeed the mount of which Christ spoke. He had little or nothing to say about blessing people as he sat upon the heights of Kurun Hattin, but much to say about the blessedness of right thoughts and good deeds. He did not say, "You will be blest if you do these things," but "you will be blessed." To be blest is a condition that may last for a brief time only, but to be blessed is a state that may last as long as one lives, and beyond, into eternity. In a recent German paper, Christliche Welt, the Beatitudes as spoken by Christ were put into the phraseology of to-day:

Blessed are they who have great longing in their hearts, for God rules in their souls.

Blessed are they who have endured sufferings, for they shall gain peace in their hearts.

Blessed are they who help the needy, for everybody will gladly help them.

Blessed are they whose purpose is pure, for they can see God in the world.

Blessed are they who maintain peace, for they shall be called the friends of God.

Blessed are they who are hated and upbraided by men for my sake.

Poverty and Riches

A contrast: Lazarus sitting outside of the rich man's gate, hungry, sick, unhelped; and the rich man sitting at his table surrounded by luxuries. He has not an unsatisfied want. Another contrast: Lazarus has passed to his heavenly home. He has now no want unsatisfied. The arms of love encircle him. The former rich man is poor, poorer even than Lazarus was when he sat at his gate, for he did have dogs for friends. There are no dogs where the rich man now is. He begs that Lazarus may be permitted to help him. But his request is not granted. Lazarus and Dives, the once rich man, are as apart as heaven and hell.

On the summit of the Rocky Mountains, ten thousand feet above the sea, are two fountains, so near that it would have been easy to divert either streamlet to the other. Follow the course of one of these infant rivers, and you reach the Gulf of Mexico, for it has become the mighty Mississippi. Retrace your steps to the source of the other stream, follow its course, and you are led to the mouth of the Columbia and the great Pacific Ocean. To go from the terminus of one stream to that of the other you have to scale mountains ten thousand feet high, and to travel no less than five thousand miles. So we go back to the childhood of Dives and Lazarus, and they were side by side in innocence and possibilities, but one turned toward God and the other away from him, and thus the eternity-oceans into which their lives passed at death were utterly different: boundless bliss to the one, unending woe to the other.

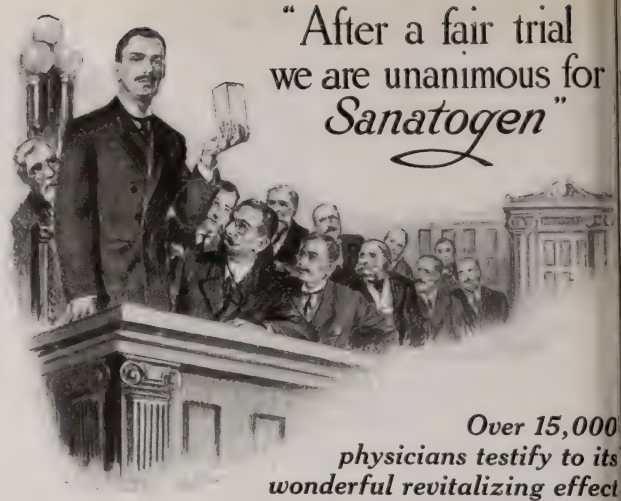
The Law of Love

The law of love as taught by Jesus Christ contained these maxims: "Love your enemies. Do good to them that hate you. Pray for them that despitefully use you. As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. Owe no man anything save to love one another." Read the story of the good Samaritan (Luke 10: 30-37) and note how those sayings of Christ were made doings in the life of one man.

A prisoner stood before Governor Stewart, asking him for a pardon. "If I sign this you will commit some other crime and be back in the prison, I fear," replied the governor. "You'll go back on the river and be a mate

Continued on next page

* INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JUNE 30, 1912. QUARTERLY REVIEW. GOLDEN TEXT: "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." Matt. 5: 17.



"After a fair trial we are unanimous for Sanatogen"

Over 15,000 physicians testify to its wonderful revitalizing effect

Prof. Thomas B. Stillman, M.S., Ph.D.,
The well-known research chemist of Stevens Institute, writes:
"The chemical union of the constituents of Sanatogen is a true one, representative of the highest skill in the formation of a product containing phosphorus in the organic phosphate condition, and so combined that digestion and assimilation of Sanatogen are rendered complete with the greatest ease.

Late King Edward's Physician
Dr. Ernest Ott, Marienbad, writes:
"I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practise with excellent results. These results have been notably good in the case of elderly people when it was desirable to build up the strength, to stimulate the bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

"After a fair trial"—that is the basis of the unexampled verdict in favor of Sanatogen, the food tonic.

A fair trial by 15,000 practicing physicians who, over their own signature, commend and specifically comment on the powers of this remarkable food tonic—as revealed in their practice and in their own individual experience.

This remarkable endorsement is thus the best possible evidence of what Sanatogen has actually accomplished in rescuing nerves that have been wasted by illness, anxieties or the strain of an active life.

Nerves respond to the help of Sanatogen because the scientifically combined elements of this splendid food tonic supply to the nerves the very nourishment their exhaustion demands. Sanatogen is a true food—the true food—for hungry, exhausted nerves.

Do not the needs of your nerves find a reassuring answer in the verdict of the great group that has honored Sanatogen? Does it not suggest that YOU should give it a "fair trial" in the interest of that highest blessing—perfect health?

Write for a Free Copy of "Our Nerves of Tomorrow"
The work of a physician-author, beautifully illustrated, which tells you some really interesting things about your nervous system, facts which vitally effect your well-being and which therefore you ought to know. This book also tells the story of Sanatogen convincingly from the point of view of a physician, but so that any layman can understand it.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes, $1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Get Sanatogen from your druggist—if not obtainable from him, sent upon receipt of price by

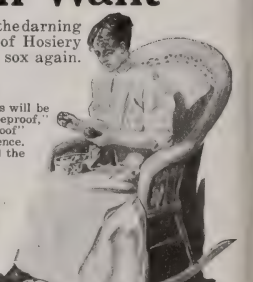
THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO., 26-F Irving Place, New York

What Women Want

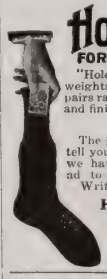
Among other things you women want to banish the darning basket. If you and your folks will wear Holeproof Hosiery you will never have the tiresome job of darning sox again.

Guaranteed Six Months

Six pairs are guaranteed six months—183 days. New pairs will be given for any that wear out within that time. Don't judge "Holeproof," the original, by common guaranteed brands, made since "Holeproof" became such a success. "Holeproof" are the softest sox in existence. They are not heavy, stiff and uncomfortable, yet they save all the darning you must now do.



FAMOUS
Holeproof Hosiery
FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN



"Holeproof" are sold in 12 colors, 5 grades and 10 weights—a sock to suit everyone. Prices for six pairs range from $1.50 to $3.00, according to weight and finish.

Sold in Your Town

The genuine "Holeproof" are sold in your town. We'll tell you the dealers' names on request or we'll ship direct where we have no dealer, charges prepaid on receipt of remittance. Show this ad to the men in your family and ask them to try Holeproof Hose. Write for free book, "How to Make Your Feet Happy."

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY CO., Milwaukee, Wis.
Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Ltd., London, Can., Distributors for Canada

Are Your Hose Insured?

Reg. U. S. Pat. Office, 1906

(314)

YOU CAN AFFORD a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person; "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," Round or Shape Notes, for $3 for 100. Words and music, 93 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. HACKETT, 128 North Wayne Street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

ain, I suppose." "Yes," the man lied. "Well, I want you to promise one thing. I want you to pledge r word that when you are a mate in you will never take a billet of od in your hand and drive a sick out of a bunk to help you load a t on a stormy night. You did this e that I know of, for I was that boy.
ver again be guilty of such brutal-
. Here is your pardon." The man k it and went out without saying a rd. What a noble revenge the govor had!

The Old Law and the New Life

When Jesus Christ the Lord of iven and earth came into this world, might have said, "It is not for me obey the law. I am superior to law."
t Jesus did not say this, for he ful-ed the law. In his Sermon on the ount, he said that there should be no ange in the law for his coming. He terated this as he stood in the syna-gues and read to the people from law.

Law is a part of God, and he wrote laws in the hearts of people long fore he wrote them on the tables of ne. The great missionary David ingstone said that he "had found rudest tribes of Africa, on whose mmerian darkness no straggling ray revealed truth had ever fallen, ady to admit that they were sinners,
d that they held almost everything be sin which as such is forbidden in word of God." Let us then cease look upon law as arbitrary, as mething outside of us that must be eyed; rather let us think of it as mething the good God has put in us, ich we trample upon when we do
ong. Let us learn from the exam-of Christ "to fulfil all righteous-ss."

Truthfulness

Jesus, in his Sermon on the Mount, l not pass by the sins of the tongue.
prone were the people before him lying that it was quite their custom base their statements on some kind an oath before they could expect to believed, and so Jesus said to them, wear not at all"—that is, let truth ly be upon your lips, so that you ll have no need of affirmation. We ad in James 3: 8: "The tongue can man tame." It is impossible for an to tame so small a thing as the ngue even though he has tamed rce lions and other wild beasts, but th Christ all things are possible, en the taming of a tongue. There not a sin of the tongue, untruthfulss, swearing, slander, boasting, but sus can and will help us to cure, if e only pray to him for his help.

Hypocrisy and Sincerity

When Jesus was in this world he ten prayed to his Heavenly Father.
metimes he prayed on the mountain-p alone; sometimes he prayed when rrounded by a great throng of peo-e, as when he broke the bread to ed the multitude of five thousand.
e prayed in the garden when his iends were sleeping. He not only rayed himself, but he thought that ll who were his friends and follows should pray, so he taught them the rayer which begins, "Our Father ho art in heaven." We call it the ord's Prayer, because he said: "Afr this manner, therefore, pray ye."
ut Jesus would not have us offer only is prayer, for he said: "All things hatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, e shall receive" (Matt. 20: 21).
rom this we learn that we are to ake our own prayers. When Jesus as in this world he gave a warning gainst a wrong way to pray, as the harisee who loved to pray that he ight be seen of men, and be said to e very holy. For the same reason he Pharisee gave gifts of money to he poor when all could see him. We should read what Jesus once told about two men who went up to the temple to pray (Luke 18: 10-14).

Hearing and Doing

One day Jesus said to his friends and followers, "Why call ye me Lord, and do not the things which I say?" There are some people who read God's words in the Bible, and never do the things they teach. Sabbath after Sabbath we take our places in the church and in the Sunday school, and what we hear there we ought to do; but we are careless and forgetful. If we listen we shall hear Jesus saying to us, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do nothing?" When we do not fill our days with loving service in his name, we shall become unkindly critical of others. Our characters will shrink into narrowness and trifling.

Christ's Witness to the Baptist

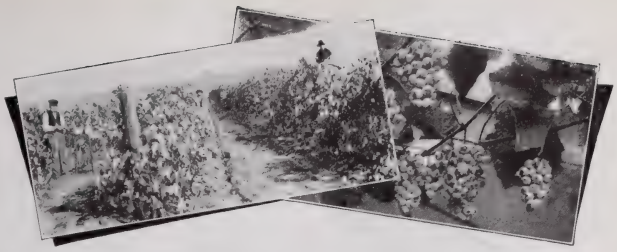
The brave herald of Jesus, John the Baptist, who for nearly two years had been preparing the people to hear the Gospel message of Jesus, was at last silenced by being imprisoned at the command of King Herod. The prison was in the rocky hills not far from the Dead Sea. Herod was angry with John because he had dared to rebuke him for his immoral life. From the prison John sent a message to Jesus, "Art thou he that cometh (the Messiah), or look we for another?" There was a sad note of distrust in it, and the heart of Jesus might have been wounded, but he was too great, too good for that, and Jesus realized that John himself was too true to have a lasting doubt in his mind, so he did many wonderful works of healing that the messengers themselves might believe in him and tell John about what they had seen. Also, Jesus sent a loving message of assurance to John. And after the messengers had gone, Jesus gave strong testimony to the people as to the noble and steadfast character of John.

The Penitent Woman

We recall the incident of Jesus being at a feast in the Pharisee's home. The invited guests, all Pharisees, had an excellent opinion of themselves, doubtless much exaggerated. The master of the feast probably thought he was conferring a great honor upon Jesus to invite him there. Simon certainly had not treated his distinguished guest well, for he had omitted providing the water for washing his feet, and had not given him the customary kiss of salutation, nor the oil of anointing. Simon had really treated Jesus with gross discourtesy; but one came into the room who made amends for all. She was not an invited guest, call her an interloper if you will, but she came because Jesus was there, and because she had a debt to pay. It was a debt of love for many sins forgiven. She showed that love by anointing the feet of Jesus with very costly perfume and by wiping them with her hair; and the kisses which Simon should have given Jesus upon the cheeks, she bestowed upon his feet. When she had finished, she went out, and words of condemnation were freely spoken by the Pharisees, but Jesus himself spoke words of commendation for the woman and condemnation for her critics.

For India's Orphans

A READER of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has sent us a check for $28, representing a contribution of $8 from the Children's Missionary Society Orphan House, Charleston, S. C., and $20 from "A Friend of Missions" in Charleston, the whole amount to be applied to the India Orphan Fund. In behalf of the orphans we take pleasure in acknowledging the generous gift.



The Tonic Fruit

THERE are wonderful health qualities stored away in the refreshing juice and luscious pulp of the big purple Concord Grape.

They are tonic and blood builders—energy and vitality yielders—enemies of indigestion and dyspepsia——Which, proved long ago, at the famous foreign grape "cures," sends thousands of health seekers flocking to them yearly.

But the pleasantest, quickest and simplest way to enjoy a daily, all the year round grape cure, is to drink, with meals and between meals, rich, pure grape juice—

Armour's Grape Juice

The Family Drink

Bottled Where the Best Grapes Grow

Only the finest Concord Grapes, grown in the famous vineyards of New York and Michigan, are used for Armour's Grape Juice.

They go to the press the day they are gathered. None are held over to spoil or wither.

No sweetening or diluting of any sort. ARMOUR'S GRAPE JUICE is just the pure, rich naturally sweet juice of the finest quality grapes, preserved from fermentation by sterilization and air-tight bottling.

As a hot weather drink, Armour's Grape Juice is not only delightfully refreshing; it is an aid in resisting the debilitating effect of hot weather.

For sale at most grocery and drug stores, fountains, buffets and clubs.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will send you a trial dozen pints for $3, express prepaid.

Address Armour & Co., Dept. 151, Chicago.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Utility Wall Board is a tough-fibre board put together with two insulations of natural waterproof asphalt rolled under tremendous pressure into one solid compact sheet and surfaced on both sides with special moisture proofing.

It is the only Wall Board made under this scientific moisture-proof process takes the place of both lath and plaster. It is very tough and durable—it is easily cut with an ordinary saw and is nailed direct to the studding.

Utility Wall Board

It will not warp or crack or shrink, and may be decorated in any style desired.

Anyone who can use a hammer and saw can put it on, and there is none of the muss and dirt of plastering—you don't even have to wait for it to dry.

It is used in building the new house and in making over the old. Put it on right over old and cracked plaster, if you wish.

The cost is less than lath and plaster.

Write for a Sample and the Illustrated Book

THE HEPPES CO., 4511 Fillmore Street, Chicago, Ill.

6% BONDS

The Investing of July Funds

As the time approaches for the reinvestment of July funds, the study of securities becomes of interest. The value of an investment offering depends on three things: security, yield and convertibility.

How many Bonds or Stocks within your knowledge meet ALL THREE REQUIREMENTS? Many provide security; some combine safety with convertibility; others a satisfactory return with adequate security, but the desirable adjustment of these three factors eliminates a large number from consideration.

The 6% Bonds of the American Real Estate Company provide this ideal combination.

They are the direct contract obligations of the American Real Estate Company, and based on its holdings of high-grade New York realty; they pay 6% interest; they permit conversion into cash before maturity. They have paid 6% for over 24 years, and have returned to investors nearly $9,000,000 in principal and interest, without loss or delay.

A-R-E 6% Bonds are issued in two convenient forms: for the direct investment of funds in hand, or for the systematic investment of current surplus.

6% Coupon Bonds
For those who wish to invest $100 or more.

6% Accumulative Bonds
For those who wish to save $25 or more a year

Booklets, describing either or both of these Bonds, map of New York City showing the location of properties, etc., sent free on request.

American Real Estate Company
Founded 1888 Assets, $24,134,240 39
Capital and Surplus, $2,076,587 35
527 Fifth Ave, Room 534 New York

Modest Investors
need special service. They need our odd lot facilities and they need our Partial Payment Plan.

Send for Circular 21—"Odd Lot Investment."

John Muir & Co.
SPECIALISTS IN Odd Lots
Members New York Stock Exchange
71 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES
For Large and Small Investors

Don't think, because your capital is small, that it can earn only 3½ per cent. or 4 per cent. It used to be so—the small investor for hundreds of years had no chance beside the capitalist. Our

First Mortgage Trust Bonds
On New York and Suburban Real Estate

put you exactly on a par with the wealthiest investor. You have the same security and the same certain returns—5 per cent. or 5½ per cent. You have the same opportunity to withdraw your capital if you should need it.

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department
Write for our Booklet

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

Typewriters Slightly used machines $10.00 up. Ten Days' FREE TRIAL. Express prepaid. Price List Free.
FRANK C PAYNE CO., Rosedale Station, Kansas City, Kan.

Real Estate Investments

THE acquisition of a portion of the earth's surface has, from the beginnings of history, had a peculiar charm for mankind. The human race desire to be landowners, and such citizens as own real estate, even in a very limited way, are regarded as substantial by their fellows. Not many years ago the right to vote was limited to "freeholders" or landowners, and many other privileges were held by them as against the landless man. "To own one's own home" is an expression often heard as being a condition to be desired. Real estate promoters and developers make use of this phrase as a main stock-in-trade. From a purely financial point of view what are the advantages of real estate investments?

The Advantage of Security

First, as to the actual owning of realty. There can be no doubt that the owner of land has invested in the most secure of all forms of property. Commercial enterprises may fail. Mines may cease to produce. Railroads may go into bankruptcy, but the land always remains, and its owner's dominion, so far as it does not interfere with his neighbor's rights, is absolute and extends from the sky to the center of the earth, so that no tunnel, no matter how deep, can be driven through it, and no wires can be strung above it, no matter how high, without first obtaining the right from the owner. In cases of public necessity the State may, by "condemnation proceedings," have the land valued and take it for a railroad or street, but only on payment of the value, and generally many times the value, of the land. Not only is the investment in land secure, taking it always for granted that the land is so situated that it can be made productive of either crops or rents, but the value always tends to increase. This cannot help but be the case in both city and country. The population of the earth grows larger year by year and the available land per capita decreases. Consequently, in the cities the demand for dwellings ever increases; and as to farm and grazing lands, the increasing demands for food always augment their value. During the late 80's and early 90's in certain sections of this country this rule seemed to be reversed. Farms in the East, particularly in the New England States, were being abandoned and their owners going West, but this was not by any means a permanent step backward in values. During that period the government was throwing open great tracts in the West for settlement; agriculture on a scientific basis had not become general in the country, and lured away by tales of rich acres to be had for almost nothing in the West, many farmers gave up their land and started towards the setting sun. But to-day those New England farms are being made productive and are many times more valuable than ever before. It is safe to say, therefore, that, no matter in what part of the country the land is situated, eventually its value must increase. "Value," however, must not be confused with "price paid." In many of the mushroom developments in the West, called boom towns, land was sold at enormously inflated prices and the value of the land will not reach these prices for many years. But if the landowner has shown moderate foresight in selecting his land, has paid a reasonable price, and has obtained land in either city or country that produces a net revenue, he can rest assured that his land will grow in value, perhaps slowly but none the less surely.

A Striking Example

Of course, the most striking instance of the steady increase in land values is the city of New York. The recent death of Colonel John Jacob Astor in the Titanic disaster, and the succession of his young son, Vincent Astor, to an estate in lands in Manhattan valued roughly at half a billion dollars, has called this remarkable growth in fortune to the public attention. Early in the nineteenth century the foundation to this colossal wealth was laid by the first John Jacob Astor, the fur-trader, who invested $1,000,000 in unoccupied Manhattan lands. These lands are now in the center of the city, and have been handed down from father to son ever since. Although the laws have provided against one man creating perpetuities in land by will or deed and have generally prohibited any restraints on the selling of land for any period longer than two lives in being at the time of the death of the present owner, yet the great landowners of New York, such as the Astors, Goelets, Rhinelanders, Stuyvesants and many others, have with keen insight into the future kept their estates intact for decades and centuries. They have employed the best legal talent to tie up their lands to the very extreme limits of time allowed by the laws and their successors have continued this policy. No less remarkable, on a smaller scale, has been the increase in value of Western farms. Lands that twenty years ago could be freely purchased for a dollar an acre are worth now a hundred dollars an acre and sometimes more. Land throughout the East too has gone higher in values, though more gradually. Rentals have generally increased, so that the income from rented real estate has gone hand in hand with greater values.

Land Mortgages

As the value of land to the owner increases, so does the security of mortgage investments given on that land increase. A mortgage may be considered as a deed of the land which revests the title in the original owner or his successor on the paying off of the mortgage or the bond or note which the mortgage secures. Mortgages are recorded in public offices called registers', recorders', or county clerks' offices in much the same way that deeds are, so that any one buying the land is bound to take notice of them and the land is bound by them, no matter to whom the land is conveyed, and no one has a right to say that he bought the land not knowing that a mortgage was on it, for he is presumed by law to know such facts as a search of the title in these public offices would reveal. If, however, the holder of the mortgage does not cause the mortgage to be recorded, then any innocent purchaser of the land can take it clear of the lien of the mortgage.

In no particulars has the law of this country gone farther than in the effort to secure the title of the landowner and the security of the mortgageholder, and no investments are more highly regarded by the conservative business man than those founded on the imperishable surface of the earth.

Destroy the Flies

IF EXISTING laws were enforced, all our large cities would be as free from flies in summer as they are in winter. If the farmer—who is often the keeper of a summer boarding house—were to take half the precaution with his manure-heaps that he does to secure boarders from the city, his veranda, his table and his living rooms would not be infested with a perpetual fly plague. Lime, properly distributed and frequently applied to a stable pile, will not only destroy fly larvæ, but it will add to the value of the compost as a fertilizer. If the people who manage stables in the cities and farmers who save stable fertilizer were to take proper precautions — precautions requiring but little expenditure of time or money—the fly plague would soon disappear, and many of the diseases which afflict humanity, particularly typhoid fever, would lessen, if indeed they did not vanish. Now is the time to prepare for a long, persistent, and, it is to be hoped, a successful campaign for the extermination of the disgusting disease-carrying fly.

The Safe Investment of Your Money

In considering the investment of your money the very first requirement is the security of the principal. There are other features, of course, but fundamental security is foremost. The proper selection of an investment bond which has this primary qualification requires technical knowledge Naturally and necessarily the experienced banker, whose constant business it is to investigate securities of all kinds, is possessed of this technical knowledge.

If you are considering the investment of funds, and will state your requirements in the way of interest return, maturity, and amount, we will be pleased to send you our latest circular containing a list of well secured bonds.

Ask for our Circular AA-142

Guaranty Trust Company of New York
28 Nassau Street

Capital and Surplus, - $ 23,000,000
Deposits, - - - 178,000,000

5%

Write to-day for the Calvert Book—it is a book that everyone who is saving money or has money to invest ought to have.

It is full of interesting information for investors, and tells in detail of this Company and its 17 years of successful experience.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Company pays 5 Per Cent interest on all money entrusted to its care.

Money begins to draw interest the day it is received, and it may be withdrawn at any time without notice.

In the entire history of the Company there has never been a day's delay in the mailing of interest checks or in the repayment of principal when demanded.

It is an ideal savings or investment plan. Don't fail to write for the book.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

CHALLENGE
Brand WATERPROOF
COLLARS & CUFFS
YOU CAN'T TELL THEM FROM LINEN
SAME DULL FINISH SAME PERFECT FIT
SAME CORRECT STYLE SAME LINEN TEXTURE
All dealers. Collars, 25c; Cuffs, 50c. Style Book Free.
The Arlington Company
Established 1883 725 Broadway, N.Y.

The Magic of Missions

BY CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

C. S. Cooper

OUTSIDE of the little Kabyle village of Mekla in the Atlas Mountains of North Algeria, there is an attractive missionary compound composed of three trim buildings wearing an English look and contrasting strongly with the scores of mud and straw huts that nestle about them on the mountainside.

This little patch of civilization was especially welcome to us on the twenty-third day of February after we had tramped for twenty miles beneath the hot North African sun down the steep donkey paths and through the picturesque gorges that make the home of one-half million of perhaps the most fascinating and little known people in the world to-day. For days we had been living amongst this mountain people, studying the life and religion of races which, though now subject to French colonization, bear marks of a civilization as old as Rome and ancient Carthage. We had climbed the mountains with dignified Kabyles clad in the long white burnous and Mohammedan fez; we had visited the unspeakable habitations, where several families at times lived on mud floors along with donkeys and sheep and goats. We had seen little girl wives of nine and ten years of age who had been purchased for fifty francs by their Kabyle husbands. We had sat upon the wonderful mountain ridges three thousand feet above the Mediterranean, and watched these Kabyle farmers plowing the hillside with crooked wooden sticks drawn by oxen, as their ancestors had done ten centuries before them.

We had chatted familiarly in the patois of French and sign language with the picturesque women at the wells, who carried water jars on their heads as naturally and gracefully as their ancestors in the time of Abraham. In realizing these unchanging conditions we were not so much surprised to be told by a man who for thirty years had been working among these people, that conversions to the Christian faith from Mohammedanism were most rare events in this part of the world.

It was with no small surprise and pleasure, therefore, that we were ushered into this compound of the mission where for twenty-five years two English women had lived and worked, going out across these mountains to this wild and degraded people, carrying the story of love which has always attracted and lifted humanity. As we entered the gateway a strong, fine-looking Kabyle, clad in snowwhite robes, pointed us to the entrance of the central building. Children's voices attracted us as we passed and we looked through an open door to see a dozen or more bright young girls wearing picturesque red and black headdresses sitting about a teacher and repeating their lessons in French. We proceeded, and noticed in a well-kept garden several sturdy Kabyle men working among rows of artichokes, beans, potatoes and lemon trees, while in the distance from still another building came voices of women and children singing to the tune of "Home, Sweet Home" a Christian hymn in French, entitled "Bon courage, Chrétien!"

Even before a French mademoiselle appeared at the door to welcome us and to usher us into a cozy dining-room, we felt the magic of this bright world in the midst of some of the darkest scenes we have ever witnessed. When Miss Smith and Miss Cox, the heads of this mission, who for a quarter of a century had been practically the sole foreigners among these mountain people, came out to greet us, we were not part prepared for their description by a well-nigh magical story. They told us how they had come out here from England to found a mission for the Kabyle women of North Africa. Their story was like a romance, often bordering upon tragedy. They journeyed from village to village, at times in great peril, with but a single guide for protection. They told us of nights in which they were obliged to travel nearly the whole night through in darkness and in constant danger as village after village refused them entrance and lodging.

There were times during these eventful years when the English government notified them that they were unable to protect them in this isolated and perilous region. They were branded as spies and accused of all kinds of unseemly plots against the people and the French Government.

Islam is probably nowhere more fanatical, intolerant, and bigoted than in this part of the world. There are many indications of promise and progress toward more widespread enlightenment among the people. The work of missions has been largely strengthened and systematized by the coming to this field of American missions, notably under the leadership of the Methodist Church. Much of the work of the former North African Missionary Society, which was non-sectarian, has been taken over by the American Mission. I found the missions of North Africa engaged in reaching no less than thirteen different nationalities. The means used were translations and distribution of Bibles into a dozen or more dialects, sold for very much less than cost; educational and Bible classes both for adults and children, maintained regularly both in stations located in cities and in the Arab and Berber villages; Gospel meetings at which lantern slides were used with considerable success; itinerating preaching tours and long journeys of colporteurs into the desert (two colporteurs returning from a two months' journey into the desert recently, reported the selling of two thousand Testaments, two thousand copies of the Gospel of John, many of which were taken by Bedouin tribes hundreds of miles farther south than the colporteurs had gone, even into the very heart of the Sahara); the free distribution of medicines and care of the sick; a training school for preachers (native) which has recently been started with much promise in Algeria (five young men, converts from Mohammedanism are now members of this school); and the use of free discussion and argumentation on the part of special missionaries and workers who have given a large part of their life to the study of the Koran and Talmud, acquiring peculiar ability thereby to answer the questions which are hurled at Christians from all sides.

Indeed, the man who does not know his Bible, the Koran and the Talmud stands little chance of even receiving a respectful hearing among this population. It is a land of argument and controversy. One will find here mighty and wordy battles over Melchizedec, and Ishmael, from whom the Mohammedans claim to have descended. The idlest and most absurd questions must be dealt with in patience and seriousness. One of the missionaries told me of a heated argument held with a Mohammedan who claimed that Adam had a second wife because his first wife did not prove satisfactory. This he proved from Gen. 2: 23, "This one, this time born of my bones," etc.

In Tunis, I was told of an incident happening in a synagogue when the rabbi was giving his interpretation of the 1,335th day. During the moments previous to the arrival of the rabbi, the congregation, according to custom, chanted with tremendous voice a part of the Book of Psalms. It would perhaps be better to say that they yelled them. A friend of mine whispered to a neighbor to find out the reason for this ostentatious display of vocal power, when he replied with astonishment, "Do you not remember that it is commanded in one of the Psalms 'to make a loud noise and rejoice and sing praise'?"

One needs only a brief sojourn among these people to appreciate how necessarily slow is the progress of evangelization. No impetuosity can storm successfully the citadel of Mohammedanism. It stands defiant and silent as the Sphinx. Through centuries it has remained majestic, indifferent and unperturbed by outside influences, as the caravans are oblivious of the sandstorms that rage around them in the desert. The main decrees of this religion are summed up in an absolutely autocratic, unapproachable God; the impossibility of an incarnation of the divine; absolute fatalism; a religion of outward form and ceremony with no place for a divine atonement for sin. The Koran tells its adherents, "Ye are the best nation that hath been raised up unto mankind." The consciousness of this priority over other nations explains something of the inordinate self-esteem and the sense of religious superiority which forms one of the chief barriers to the entrance of a personal religion like Christianity, which demands lowliness of heart and service to one's fellow men as the chief sign of discipleship. Mohammedanism, indeed, is the most aggressive non-Christian religion in the world to-day. It dreams and it works with definiteness toward the end of becoming a world religion.

The quarter of a century of devoted work on the part of missionaries and Christian adherents in this part of the Moslem world is nevertheless beginning to show fruitage. The Bible is holding its own and advancing with considerable rapidity, while the work we have described at Mekla is being duplicated in other sections of this country, teaching the people not only the spiritual beauties of our religion, but also the physical advantages of a faith that lifts them from the degradation of their surroundings. This is the Magic of Missions.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" COLLARS CUFFS AND BOSOMS

TRADE MARK

Try a Linene Collar

That's the only way to prove our statement that you can get more comfort and convenience for the money in a Linene collar than in any other.

Price at the stores, 25c per box of 10, or by mail 30c in U.S. stamps. Sample by mail for 6c. State size and style. Beautiful Catalogue Free.

Reversible Collar Co.
Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

VAN DYCK Sizes 12 to 18 Inches Front 1¾ Inches-Back 1¾ Inches

ANGELO Sizes 12 to 20 Inches Front 2¼ Inches Back 1 Inch

RAPHAEL Sizes 12 to 20 Inches Front 2¼ Inches Back 1 Inch

RUBENS Sizes 12 to 20 Inches Front 2¾ Inches-Back 1 Inch

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL without a cent deposit, prepay the freight and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL.
IT ONLY COSTS one cent to learn our unheard of prices and marvelous offers on highest grade 1912 model bicycles.
FACTORY PRICES Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you write for our large Art Catalog and learn our wonderful proposition on first sample bicycle going to your town.
RIDER AGENTS everywhere are making big money exhibiting and selling our bicycles.
We Sell cheaper than any other factory.
TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, repairs and all sundries at half usual prices.
Do Not Wait; write today for our special offer.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. P-71 CHICAGO

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid.
DR. LYONS Box C 2201 Locust St. St. Louis, Mo.

Boys Who Have Won

Under this heading we shall print from week to week the photographs and records of some of our CHRISTIAN HERALD boys. It is an honor to be a CHRISTIAN HERALD boy.

Adelmer R. Bryon
Our Connecticut Hustler

Adelmer writes:

"I received my Knife and think it is a Dandy."

He is also the proud winner of a Christian Herald Crest Pin, a Coin Purse, a Name Stamp, a splendid pair of Roller Skates, and is up among the leaders in the Shetland Pony Contest.

From week to week we are adding the best CHRISTIAN HERALD boys to our staff. Any boy who would like to try should fill out this coupon and mail it.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

An American Flag Free

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS of Free People Enjoy Liberty Under the Folds of Our Flag

Never in all history has so great a number of people secured the blessings of a free government as now enjoy it under our flag. Though many forces of evil endeavor to rob us of our birthright of freedom, yet right will prevail and love of country with its chief emblem, the flag, is the bulwark of safety, behind which we may defend ourselves against all foes both within and without.

The Fourth of July

What is the Fourth without a flag? Or any other of the great holidays without a flag? Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day — five big days, with others thrown in. You can get a big flag free; two sizes—4x6 feet or 5x8 feet. Choose one. Measure five by eight feet out on the floor and see what a big flag that size makes. A four-by-six is a big flag. It would take twenty-four copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD spread out on its surface to cover it up. A flag of their own will help to keep boys and girls from wanting fire-crackers and other finger-wrecking explosives. Don't forget this in planning a safe and sane Fourth.

It is the business of every American home to raise patriots, and for the raising of the best kind of patriots it is necessary to have a flag — a big flag that belongs to the home. You know how it puts a new sort of thrill into the thrilling patriotic holidays when a flag is flying from the up-stairs window or from a staff in the yard. It changes everything. The whole household is conscious of it; the passerby gets a touch of patriotic fire; it spreads the feeling of glad loyalty out over the community. America is facing some big problems. There will be need of intensest patriotism. You can help by flying your own flag from your own home on the Nation's great days.

300,000 Flags

Nearly 30,000 CHRISTIAN HERALD homes have secured their flags from us—we want 300,000 CHRISTIAN HERALD homes to have the American flag, and we have arranged to supply an unlimited demand, so that no one need be disappointed.

Fly Your Own Flag on the Fourth

A Microscopic Reproduction of the DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE
Full facsimile size 26 x 31 inches

IN CONGRESS, JULY 4, 1776.

The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America.

A Flag FREE to You

Get one of your friends to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for eight months; send us only One Dollar for this subscription, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be mailed to any address in the United States furnished by you. In return for your trouble we will send you, absolutely without cost, a beautiful American Flag, 4x6 feet in size. Perhaps you would prefer to have a larger Flag—5x8 feet in size. To secure this Flag, send us TWO eight months' subscriptions accompanied by Two Dollars, and we will send you this extra size "Old Glory."

A FLAG WITH YOUR RENEWAL—If you want a Flag with your own CHRISTIAN HERALD renewal you may have the large 5x8 Flag and one year's subscription for $2.40. Or, you may have the 4x6 Flag and one year's CHRISTIAN HERALD subscription for only $2.00.

Extra FREE Premium Declaration of Independence

Full-size facsimile, 26 x 31 inches

This exact duplicate of that priceless document which hangs framed on the walls of the old State House in Philadelphia will be sent free with every flag furnished by us. See the signatures of those pioneers of liberty who dared much with great faith in the future.

The Christian Herald
Bible House, : : : New York City

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

An Electrical Fourth

THE proposed substitution of electrical illuminations on the Fourth of July in place of the old fashion of fireworks is an excellent one. It will be not only saner and safer but more largely enjoyable by the greater part of the population. Moreover, it has wonderful possibilities. Even in the distorted freaks of electrical designs used in advertising we can perceive the chances of developing a really new art out of the light that electricity has put at our disposal.

There is no limit to the variety of colors, shades and tints that can be produced. Consequently if skill and taste and a fairly liberal allowance of money be at the command of the committee having charge of the celebration it would be quite practicable to produce in different parts of the city a series of illuminations that would be something more than a mere novelty. Moreover, a scheme of this kind once well begun will advance and improve with the years.—New York World.

. . .

The Four Races of Man

JOHN JASPER, the famous negro preacher of Richmond, whose "Sun-do-Move" sermon attracted international attention, had ideas concerning ethnology as well as astronomy. He is credited with the assertion that "there are only four great races on the globe—The Hittites, the Jebusites, the Abyssinians, and the Virginians!"—Baptist Banner.

. . .

Teaching the World to Fly

THE aeroplane is already worthy to be numbered among the most magnificent of human achievements—among the achievements that were nothing less than the accomplishment of the admittedly impossible. But its magnificence as an achievement is surpassed by its magnificence as a promise, and it was in the keeping of this promise that so much was confidently expected from Wilbur Wright. While he was alive, national jealousies and conflicting interests caused ungracious questionings of his priority and his superiority in the field of aviation. That has all ceased now, and France, Germany, Italy, and England unite with America in proclaiming that he taught the world that men could fly. There is every indication that the consequences of this lesson will be of an importance comparable with the number of centuries that passed before the teacher came.—New York Times.

. . .

Thinking Our Way Through the Air

IT IS known that, before he died, Wilbur Wright had been working on the problem of air flight without a motor. It does not follow that he dreamed that all men are to be turned into birds, and fly whithersoever they will, without gasoline, and with no expense save the first cost of their wings. But it did mean that the father of modern aviation perceived that the master principle of air flight has not yet been found out, and that the man aloft must know a means of depending more upon himself in the air, and less upon a motor which may break down, or cease to function, before he can be safe. The man and his planes must be more completely one than they are now. The flier must be able, through knowledge and experience, to put himself where the bird is that "feels the branch tremble, but sings just the same, knowing that he has wings."

Wright had been a man of fundamental principles from the start. It was not a part of his plan to cut curlycues and loop loops in the air. He was concerned with essentials, and he left exhibition flying to others. He flew more with his brain than he did with his motor. His investigations and researches will live on, and future aviation will be the safer for what he thought.—New York Evening Mail.

. . .

The Three-Cent Piece

THE Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint having reported favorably on Congressman Bulkley's bill to provide for the coinage of a three-cent piece and a half-cent, there seems to be an excellent chance for the enactment of the measure at the present session. The House Committee on Coinage has given its unanimous approval and the Rules Committee has promised to bring the bill before the House without delay. There is no disagreement that the issuing of more small coins would have some effect in lessening the cost of living. The prices now expressed either in "nickels" or in cents would be shaved down more closely to the limit of just profit. The three-cent piece would accustom purchasers of inexpensive articles to think otherwise than in the decimal system, while the half-cent would make the American "shilling" an actuality, would offer a smaller and wiser basis for the reckoning of integral costs, and allow better bargaining in the purchase of the necessities of life.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

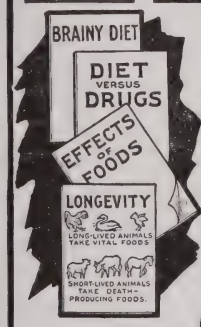
This nation has had much experience in the past with coins of the token value of three cents. Whether made of silver or of nickel they were alike unmitigated nuisances. They disappeared from the coinage not only because there was no need for them, but because they were a sort of pest. The attempt of the national House of Representatives to bring back the three-cent piece is simply foolish. That body has passed a bill not only creating a coin of the value mentioned, but also creating a one-half-cent coin. There is absolutely no popular demand for either. It is well recognized by the intelligent public that an unnecessary kind of coin is merely an unending source of annoyance and error and consequent loss. The country's simple and sensible coinage of the present time answers every need. It is a good deal worse than useless to put into circulation new kinds of coins that nobody wants.—Chicago News.

. . .

Protecting the Flag

RECENT acts of degradation committed against the American flag in half a dozen cities of the country have aroused indignant protests from law-abiding citizens everywhere. During the May Day demonstration at Seattle the Socialists tore down the flag and trampled it in the dust. In New York the Industrial Workers of the World did the same thing, until a woman Socialist took the torn emblem of liberty and saved it from further humiliation, to her everlasting credit. So frequently have these disgraceful scenes been enacted upon the streets of American cities that a movement now is on foot to demand of Congress a drastic law for the protection of the national flag. This is the only civilized country on the globe that does not protect its flag from open insult. Anybody can take the American flag and drag it in the street, tear it to pieces, or burn it publicly. No wonder the blood of old soldiers boils at such atrocities. The U. S. Grant Post of Omaha has passed a resolution calling upon Congress to enact a law ruling that such indignity to the flag is an act of lese majesty against the visible sovereign authority of the United States—an "act of treason." Never was there a worthier cause than this and never was there a sterner duty to be performed by patriotic American people. As long as the United States endures, that flag is a sacred symbol of the sovereign power resting in the people. No vandal hand should be laid upon it at home or abroad.—Kansas City Journal.

Popular Educational Food Campaign



FREE: Four Booklets Which Have Taught Many People to Cure Themselves

One clever young university student writes from Lincoln, Nebr.:

"I have confidence in this system. It has relieved an unsightly skin and mental inertia through the culpable sugar-bases and limits on your four booklets. There is a mine of practical hints in them, enough to convince a skeptic, were he to stick to the rules faithfully and give it a trial.

"I have already gained more brain and nerve force—more efficiency without enforced exercise.

"Your little books eliminated chronic catarrh from my system in about three weeks. To put it weakly, I was astonished. I know now that butter, eggs and rich cream caused the trouble. I thank you for your knowledge, and hope to learn more of your system in the future."

Different Classes of Foods Cause Different Diseases

I have produced in myself at will from time to time such complaints as rheumatism, catarrh, fevers, kidney trouble, blackheads, sores, dandruff, etc., by eating different classes of foods to excess, proving that the waste from each class of foods produces an entirely different disease. For instance, eggs, cream, butter, cheese, milk and salt are mucus-making foods which produce catarrh. Starch and eggs (paste-making foods) in wrong combinations congest and produce headache, dullness, brain fag, etc., while lean meats, green vegetables and fresh, juicy fruits do not.

G. H. BRINKLER, FOOD EXPERT

—no foods sold
—no fasting
—no exercises

A thin man, after being out of work nearly a year through weakness, was restored in three weeks to hard work as a carpenter at full pay. In such cases the change from a clogging, death-producing diet to energizing foods caused a literal transformation.

Another patient, deaf in the right ear, owing to a discharge caused by an excess of mucus-making foods (cream, butter, cheese, etc.), was completely cured of deafness and catarrh by taking correct combinations of suitable foods.

A case of kidney and bladder trouble of ten years' standing was saved from a surgical operation, and the offensive discharge cured within ten days, because the loss of control was due entirely to the constant irritation from certain irritating foods and drinks

Correct Combinations of Foods Cure Diseases

I have always cured the above-named symptoms in a few days or weeks by returning to a correctly combined diet. The experiments have been fascinating, and the results underlie success in life.

People Write:

"My brain power and general efficiency have been about doubled this year by selecting brainy foods. I have made a fortune in real estate, and the credit is honestly yours."

"The government she ld investigate and teach the Brainy Diet System for the good of the nation."

"The hints in Booklet No. III. on foods for curing congested liver, nourishing the brain, etc., are worth untold dollars, although the books are free."

(1) TEST OF BRAINY DIET (2) DIET vs. DRUGS (3) EFFECTS OF FOODS (4) KEY TO LONGEVITY

Send 10 cents for mailing. Send addresses of your sick friends

Brainy Diet

A chronic sufferer, weighing 415 pounds, unable to exercise, took correct combinations of ordinary daily foods and reduced over 150 pounds (in public life, under many witnesses) gained strength with firmer flesh, and lost rheumatism.

G. H. BRINKLER
Food Expert, Dept. 3 F, Washington, D.C.

Genuine All Hand Woven Unblocked PANAMA
From Weaver to Wearer
Can be worn in that condition by Men, Women and Children. Easily blocked in any shape or style. Just as sent enables as the $10 kind.
All head sizes. Brims from 3 to 7 inches. Light weight. Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. Money refunded if not satisfactory.
PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, NEW YORK CITY

AGENTS A BIG SELLER

SCREEN DOOR CHECK
Demonstrate and sale is made. Stops the bang and saves the door. Dozen can be carried in pocket.
BIG DEMAND
EASY SALES. BIG PROFITS
Demonstrating sample free to workers. Write at once.
THOMAS MFG. CO., 9524 Barny St., Dayton, O.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise

L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
½ to ⅓ MF'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

WHEEL CHAIRS

A wheel Chair is often an invalid's greatest comfort. We offer over 75 styles of these easy, self-propelling and Invalids' Rolling Chairs, with latest improvements. Ship direct from factory to you, freight prepaid, and sell on
THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL
Liberal Discounts to all sending for free Catalogue NOW.
GORDON MFG. CO.
384 Madison Ave., TOLEDO, O.

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair
Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short, close fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 5c postage.
Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A618 22 Quincy St., Chicago

GET YOUR SHARE
Large profits—easiest—fastest—biggest seller on the market today. National Self-Heating Gasoline Iron sells everywhere—town or country. Join our force of enthusiastic agents now. No time to lose. Complete demonstrating outfit $4.50. Write for the facts.
National Stamping & Electric Works
405 S. Clinton Street, Chicago, Illinois

THE FAMILY SHOE STRETCHER
The greatest device of the age for the feet. Prevents corns, bunions, tender spots, without medicines or messy applications. Makes your shoes fit perfectly. Produces absolute ease and comfort. Lasts forever. Endorsed by Physicians. Agents coining money selling them. Send today for full particulars with 68 page booklet on corns and cure of all foot ailments. Free.
THE PEDICURE CO., Dept. V, Buffalo, N. Y.

AGENTS SHARE OUR PROFITS
Become Partners in Our Business Through Our Profit-Sharing Plan.
Selling the Brandt Automatic Stropper and Cutlery Specialties, you make a splendid income. In addition to the above, we give you a share of the profits of our business. This is the newest and most liberal business offer ever made to agents. We want one man in every county. Write quick for terms and for our profit-sharing plan.
C. Brandt Stropper Co., 42 Hudson St., New York City

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Bees on the Farm "Gleanings in Bee Culture" will help you get more pleasure and more profit from Bee keeping. 6 months trial subscription 25c. Book on Bees and Catalog of Supplies sent free.
THE A. I. ROOT COMPANY, Box 284, Medina Ohio

PROVIDE HEALTHY AMUSEMENT for Your Children at Home

The Health Merry-go-Round promotes the health, strength and happiness of your children. Sure to do them good mentally, morally and physically. This machine is built to last, of seasoned hardwood, iron and steel. A safe, permanent plaything; operated by the child en with their hands and feet. Makes them breath deep of fresh air and grow strong. Keeps them at home and in good spirits. A strong-toned organ which plays any tune adds greatly to their pleasure. Price is reasonable. Every machine is guaranteed and sent on free trial. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Write today for circular. HEALTH MERRY-GO-ROUND CO., Dept. 205, Quincy, Ill., U. S. A.

Rexall

"93" HAIR TONIC

Two Sizes, 50c. and $1.00

Keeps scalp and hair clean - promotes hair health

Your Money Back if it Doesn't

Sold and guaranteed by only one Druggist in a place. Look for The Rexall Stores

They are the Druggists in over 5000 towns and cities in the United States and Canada

UNITED DRUG CO. BOSTON, MASS.

Branches: Chicago, St. Louis, Atlanta, San Francisco, Toronto, London and Paris

COPYRIGHT 1913, UNITED DRUG COMPANY

Christian Herald

..50 A YEAR — 5c. A COPY
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

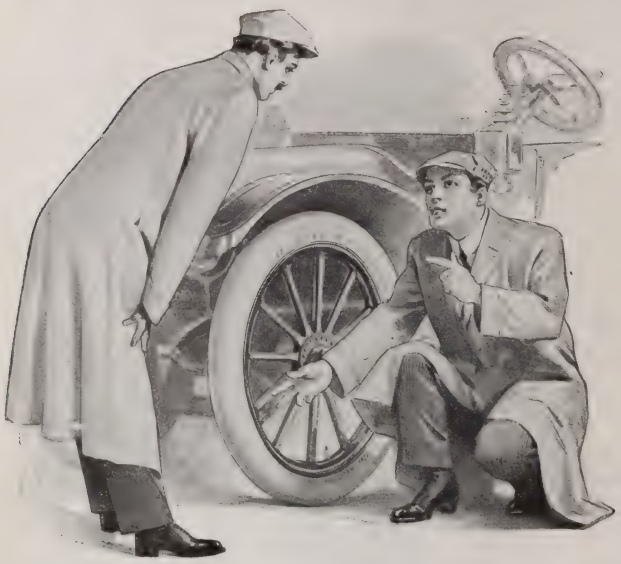
COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JUNE 26, 1912

VOLUME 35 — NUMBER 26
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

SUMMERTIME

From the painting by Hugo Ducnaut



How 200,000 Motor Car Owners

Have Created an Avalanche of Trade for

No-Rim-Cut Tires 10% Oversize

Users told others—and the others told others—tha these patented tires cut their tire bills in tw That is the only reason why these tires jumped t

The Topmost Place in Tiredom

It Took 10 Years to Perfect It

Here is a tire which remained for ten years in obscurity, while our experts worked to perfect it.

Then users found it out, and the demand for this tire suddenly changed from a rivulet to a flood.

Last year we sold more Goodyear tires than in the previous 12 years put together.

Over 1,100,000 have now been used, and the present demand is immensely larger than any other tire ever knew.

With our mammoth capacity—with our factories running 24 hours per day—we are four weeks behind on our orders.

Don't Deceive Yourself

That is the situation now—in the 13th year of the Goodyear tire.

That is the verdict, after 200,000 motor car owners have actually tried these tires.

Don't say this demand is a passing sensation, due to good salesmanship. Don't deceive yourself by assuming that other tires offer an equal advantage.

Such an army of users—200,000 strong—can't be fooled on tires. Our success is due solely to what they are telling other men about them.

Finality in Tires

Goodyear tires, in their construction, represent finality in tires.

We say this after 13 years. During that time we have compared some 200 fabrics—some 40 formulas for treads. We have compared every material, every method and process which experts have ever devised.

We have done this on testing machines in our factory—where four tires at a time are constantly worn out under all sorts of road conditions, while meters record the mileage.

After all these tests—after 13 years—we know that these tires come as close to perfection as men can ever hope to get.

Saving 48 Per Cent

These perfected tires, by a patented process, are made so that rim-cutting is ended forever. This type is called the Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tire.

Statistics show that 23 per cent of ruined old-type tires are rim-cut. No-Rim-Cut tires save that 23 per cent.

Then these patent tires—No-Rim-Cut tires—are made 10 per cent over the rated size.

That means 10 per cent more air 10 per cent added carrying capacit And that, under average condition adds 25 per cent to the tire mileage.

So No-Rim-Cut tires save that 2 plus that 25 per cent. Tens of tho sands of motorists have proved this.

8½ Per Cent Profit

Yet No-Rim-Cut tires cost practi ally the same as other standard tire They used to cost one-fifth extra.

Our multiplied output has cut th cost of production, and we have c our profits. Last year our profit o No-Rim-Cut tires was only 8½ p cent.

Those are the reasons why No-Rim Cut tires outsell all other tires. Wh 200,000 men have already adopte them. Why 127 motor car make have this year contracted for Goo year tires. And why more than on third of all Show cars this year we equipped with these premier tires.

You are bound to come to them, b while you are waiting your tire upkee is doubled. Ask any man who know

Our 1912 Tire Book—based on 1 years of tire making—is filled with fac you should know. Ask us to mail it to yo

GOODYEAR
AKRON, OHIO

No-Rim-Cut Tires
With or Without Non-Skid Treads

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, Akron, Ohio

Branches and Agencies in 103 Principal Cities
More Service Stations Than Any Other Tire

We Make All Kinds of Rubber Tires, Tire Accessories and Repair Outfit
Main Canadian Office, Toronto, Ont.—Canadian Factory, Bowmanville, Ont.

(64

NEW YORK, JUNE 26, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Rev. Augustus E. Barnett, D.D.
Chief Recorder

Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles
Chief Attorney

Hon. Charles D. Haines
Chief Guardian

Rear Admiral G. W. Baird, U.S.N.
Chief Vigilant

Maj. Gen. D. E. Sickles, U.S.A. (Rtd.)
Chief Custodian

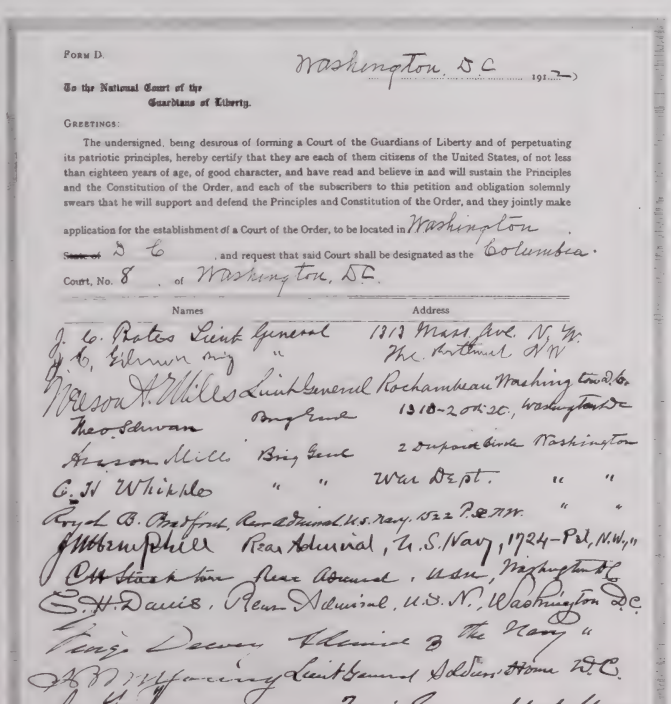
THE GUARDIANS OF LIBERTY

Facts About the New Organization, Its Personnel, Principles and Amazing Growth

ON the ninth day of June, 1911, Washington witnessed an event which was hardly second in importance to anything that has taken place in the memory of the present generation. It was the organization of the Guardians of Liberty. Men of the highest prominence in the affairs of the nation, who from their exalted position were enabled to note the signs of the times that boded danger to the Republic, came together in consultation. The time was ripe for arousing the people to the duty of preserving their glorious inheritance of freedom no less from the danger of unscrupulous political methods than from the plotting of foreign ecclesiasticism to subvert the very foundations of human liberty and to make the church co-ordinate with the state.

At that conference, as though in response to a national necessity, the Guardians of Liberty came into being as an organization. Its rise since then has been phenomenal. It has received the prompt endorsement of the American people, by whose sovereign will it now exists. Its mission is to enlighten the nation on questions that are vital to the continued existence of the republic and to the maintenance of the great principles laid down by its founders.

As Minerva is said to have sprung full-panoplied from the brain of Jove, so the Guardians of Liberty came into existence spontaneously and with the necessary equipment for a great national exigency. In the highest sense, therefore, it is the creation of the nation itself. It is not a political body, nor is it a secret society, as some of its critics have asserted. Its purpose is clearly set forth in its declaration of principles which we publish in this issue. Among its leaders are many famous Americans whose names and records are known in every household. Its rank and file, already numbering hundreds of thousands, include men of all shades of politics and every religious denomination. The sole qualification for membership is love of country and a conscientious determination to preserve its institutions, to protect the rights and privileges of American citizenship, and to defend them against attack.



FORM D.

Washington, D.C. 191[illegible]

To the National Court of the Guardians of Liberty.

GREETINGS:

The undersigned, being desirous of forming a Court of the Guardians of Liberty and of perpetuating its patriotic principles, hereby certify that they are each of them citizens of the United States, of not less than eighteen years of age, of good character, and have read and believe in and will sustain the Principles and the Constitution of the Order, and each of the subscribers to this petition and obligation solemnly swears that he will support and defend the Principles and Constitution of the Order, and they jointly make application for the establishment of a Court of the Order, to be located in Washington, ~~Suburb of~~ D.C., and request that said Court shall be designated as the Columbia Court, No. 8, of Washington, D.C.

Names	Address
J. C. Bates Lieut General	1313 Mass Ave. N.W.
J. C. Edwards "	The Arlington N.W.
Nelson A. Miles Lieut General	Rockhambeau Washington D.C.
Theo. Schwan Brig Gen	1318-20th St. Washington D.C.
Grayson Mills Brig Gen	2 Dupont Circle Washington
C. H. Whipple " "	War Dept. " "
Roy L. B. Bradford Rear Admiral U.S. Navy	1522 P St. NW " "
J. H. Brumphill Rear Admiral, U.S. Navy	1724-Pel. N.W. "
C. H. Stockton Rear Admiral, USN	Washington D.C.
E. H. Davis, Rear Admiral, U.S.N.	Washington D.C.
Geo. Dewey Admiral of the Navy	"
H. H. Wyeth Lieut Colonel Soldiers Home	D.C.
C. F. Humphreys Major Gen. U.S. Army

The Washington Court, No. 8, of the Guardians of Liberty
The Signatures of the Distinguished Members are Reproduced Photographically from the Original Document

The plan of organization of the Guardians of Liberty is as follows: The National Court consists of an executive committee of five members: Hon. Charles D. Haines, chief guardian, head of the court; Lieutenant General Nelson A. Miles, chief attorney; Major General D. E. Sickles, chief custodian; Rear Admiral G. W. Baird, chief vigilant, and Rev. A. E. Barnett, D.D., chief recorder. The national headquarters are at 50 West Twenty-fourth Street, New York City. On the list of national counselors are: General Horatio C. King, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dr. J. D. Buck, of Cincinnati, O.; Rev. Charles L. Goodell, D.D., New York; Isaac S. Hurst, Los Angeles, Calif.; Rabbi Joseph Silverman, D.D., New York; David B. G. Rose, of Louisville, Ky.; Major Edwin A. Sherman, of Oakland, Calif.; Rear Admiral Trevor W. Leutze; F. A. Pope, national president Patriotic Order Sons of America; LaForest J. Paige, secretary Vermont Consistory, Thirty-second Degree; Robert E. French, grand custodian, Grand Lodge, F. & A. M., Nebraska; John Franklin Crowell, president American Civic Alliance; Colonel Ralph E. Prime, president American Flag Association; Colonel Henry H. Andrew, president American Peace and Arbitration League; Louis Annin Ames, president Empire State Society Sons of the Revolution; Colonel Henry H. Andrew, president general Union Society of the Civil War; James B. Gourlay, N. Y. State councilor, Junior Order U. A. M.; Rev. L. L. Hand, State councilor Junior Order U. A. M. of N. J.; Major E. T. Paull, "American Continentals," Washington, D. C. Local courts are created on application to the National Court, the form of application being shown in the photographic facsimile of a Local Court of the District of Columbia (which appears on page 647), accompanied by the signatures of its charter members. The signers of the Washington Court include

Continued on next page

THE GUARDIANS OF LIBERTY

Lieutenant General J. C. BATES, U. S. A.
Brigadier General J. C. GILMORE, U. S. A.
Lieutenant General NELSON A. MILES, U. S. A.
Brigadier General THEODORE SCHWAN, U. S. A.
Brigadier General ANSON MILLS, U. S. A.
Brigadier General C. H. WHIPPLE, U. S. A.
Rear Admiral ROYAL B. BRADFORD, U. S. N.
Rear Admiral J. N. HEMPHILL, U. S. N.
Rear Admiral C. H. STOCKTON, U. S. N.
Rear Admiral C. H. DAVIS, U. S. N.
Admiral GEORGE DEWEY, U. S. N.
Lieutenant General S. B. M. YOUNG, U. S. A.
Major General C. F. HUMPHREY, U. S. A.

Hundreds of clergymen of various denominations in different States are on the rolls, and tens of thousands of workingmen representing practically every trade. All are on equal ground within its ranks. All pay a nominal membership fee of $1. At its gatherings men of wealth and influence, pastors, professional men, merchants, tradesmen and the humblest laborer meet on the common ground of love of country. They are knit together by the one desire to serve the nation's best interests, and to prevent the laying of unholy hands upon its institutions. They stand for higher statesmanship, purer legislation, cleaner politics, national, State, and civic righteousness, the complete separation of church and state, and equal privileges for all.

The Constitution is as follows:

We, members of the order of the Guardians of Liberty, in national convention assembled, impelled by the conviction that the greatest treasure possessed by the citizens of these United States is that of civil and religious liberty, and with an earnest intent to encourage and promote a deeper, stronger and more active loyalty to the fundamental ideas of the founders of this Republic, do declare the following to be our

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES

First—We unite as a non-religious, non-partisan, non-racial moral force to promote pure patriotism and a sacred regard for the welfare of our country. It is our belief that every citizen should hold sacred his civil duties and responsibilities, and it is our desire and purpose that every office of the nation, State and municipality shall be held by men of ability, integrity and true patriotism. We hold that no citizen is a true patriot who owns superior temporal allegiance to any power above that of his obligation to the principles of the Constitution of the United States.

Second—As the fathers established, so are we resolved to maintain the complete separation of church and state.

Third—We deny the right of any political or ecclesiastical organization to manipulate or control the sovereign citizenship of our people, or to dispose of their rights and privileges for political office or power, and we are determined that every citizen shall exercise his civil rights and privileges unmolested, answerable only to his conscience and to his God.

Fourth—We unite to protect and preserve the free institutions of our country, especially our public educational system, against any foreign or menacing influence and we particularly protest against the diversion of any public funds or lands to any religious purpose whatever.

CONSTITUTION

ARTICLE I

Sec. 1. The government of the order of the Guardians of Liberty is divided into national, State and local courts. A State court shall not be established until the officers of ten or more local courts, in joint session, have framed a constitution and passed resolutions petitioning the National Court for a warrant to organize a State Court, and the National Court shall have issued such warrant; provided the State Constitution submitted by the petitioners shall be approved by the National Court. The petition shall state the time and place proposed for the election of State Officers, which shall be within thirty days after receiving a warrant, timely notice of such election having been given to all Local Courts within the State. State officers shall be elected by the officers of the Local Courts, a majority vote electing. The National Court shall take immediate supervision of all Local Courts until the formation of a State Court, and shall afterward assume such supervision whenever any Local Court shall by petition of ninety per cent. of its membership make such request, provided such supervision shall be for a period not longer than two years.

Continued from preceding page

Sec. 2. The National Court shall at first consist of five qualified persons who have subscribed to the Constitution and taken the obligation of the order at the time of its formation. The officers of the National Court shall be a Chief Guardian, a Chief Attorney, a Chief Recorder, a Chief Custodian, and a Chief Vigilant. The first officers chosen shall hold office until the third Tuesday in June, 1915, and until their successors are elected, as hereinafter provided. The National Court reserves to itself the ultimate authority of the order and, as an appellate body, finally to pass upon all questions of policy and upon all disputes which may arise between the State and Local Courts. An appeal from a decision of the National Court may be taken to the National Convention by petition of three-fourths of the State Courts. It may grant Warrants of authority, for the establishment of State and Local Courts, and, for cause, recall the same, and may make such general rules and regulations as may conduce to the welfare, harmony and prosperity of the institution.

Sec. 3. On the third Tuesday in June, 1915, a meeting shall be held in the City of New York, unless otherwise ordered by the National Court, for the purpose of electing a Chief Guardian, a Chief Attorney, a Chief Recorder, a Chief Custodian, and a Chief Vigilant. The Chief Recorder shall give at least thirty days' notice, by mail or otherwise, to all State and Local Courts, of the time and place of such election, and a majority vote of those officers of State and Local Courts present, or by proxy, shall elect. Thereafter biennial meetings for the election of the National officers shall be held under like conditions.

Sec. 4. Advisory Board—Deputies. The National Court, on the third Tuesday in June of each and every year, shall appoint an advisory board of twelve members of the order, who shall constitute the National Court of Counselors. Deputy or Departmental Guardians may be appointed by the National Court, who shall be granted Warrants of authority to establish Local Courts, within designated districts, and to perform such other duties as may be set forth in such Warrants.

Sec. 5. Local Courts. Warrants shall be granted by the National Court for the formation of Local Courts until State Courts have been established, after which all such Warrants shall be issued by State Courts. Five persons of Constitutional qualifications shall be necessary to form a Local Court, and such Local Court shall be governed by a Master Guardian, a Master Attorney, a Master Recorder, a Master Custodian, and a Master Vigilant.

Other clauses follow, relating to the duties of members and the powers and duties of the National Court. Section 14 reads:

It shall be the duty of all members to support candidates for political office who are good and true men, earnest patriots and loyal to the principles of the Order.

Catholic journals have attacked the Guardians of Liberty on the ground that the new organization is a revival of Knownothingism. Nothing could be farther from the fact. But Rome is afraid of the new organization, knowing that her own methods of political and ecclesiastical campaigning in this country will not bear the searchlight. Her truckling with presidential candidates; her arrogant claim of equality with royalty for her cardinals at public functions; her attitude toward civil marriage, and her imposition of the ban of illegitimacy on ecclesiastical marriages between Catholic and Protestant; her widespread interference in politics and her dictation to the "bosses"; her declaration that "the church will not come to her own until there are more Catholics in Congress"; and her demand, reiterated in her church organs throughout the country, that American Catholics should work together "to make of the United States according to a dream that is no longer visionary the first Catholic nation in the world"—these are among the reasons why the free and independent American people must jealously guard their privileges against a power which has been repudiated in every country in Europe, with one solitary exception.

Is free America, with its inheritance of liberty, to become Catholic America? That is the great question which now overshadows all others. Zion's Herald, an influential Methodist publication, puts the situation in a nutshell: "Unless all signs fail the last stand of the Roman Catholic Church for supremacy is to be made here. . . . This is the explanation of recent events that have found their way into public print. Rome is determined to conquer in the United States. Her power in the Old World is all but gone. France has left her, Portugal has repudiated her, Spain has broken with her, Italy openly defies her. What is there left? Austria? Yes, but hardly anything else. If Rome is to continue a power, then she must be supreme on this side of the Atlantic. And here in the United States is to be made the last stand. . . . Do we want a Roman Catholic America? If not, we must be prepared to meet the challenge of the present."

Similar views are expressed by conservative journals in many parts of the country. Recent events have forced home the conviction that the Roman hierarchy is a political machine which aims to control the balance of power as between the two great parties, casting its influence in favor of those who are willing to serve, not the best interests of their country, but of the Catholic Church. All the public pageants, the great military masses, and the monster parades of the Knights of Columbus are simply object lessons designed to impress the public and especially the politicians with the voting power of the vast political machine, which unites politics and religion so deftly as to justify the ruling of Pius X., who wrote in an allocution: "It is our duty to direct every individual, and also the rulers, in public, social and political matters." Having already dictated the choice of judges, congressmen and many high public officials in State and nation, Rome is now engaged in attempting a far weightier task—to dictate the choice of a Chief Magistrate to preside over the destinies of 100,000,000 Americans. What a triumph for the Catholic Church to win in such a struggle! And what a humiliation for the Republic!

. . .

The Guardians of Liberty make no religious distinction, but regard all with the equal freedom and tolerance to which they are entitled under the Constitution. With creeds and beliefs they have no antagonism. It is only where a religion endeavors to impose itself upon the State and attempts for its own purposes to abridge the liberties of the citizen that the organization interposes in defense of these liberties, which its members are solemnly pledged to uphold and preserve. It means that with God's help and the united power of a free and independent people, no religious organization, papal, Protestant or pagan, shall ever control the destinies of the Republic.

The chief recorder, Augustus E. Barnett, 50 West Twenty-fourth Street, New York, will answer all communications.

AN EGYPTIAN FUNERAL BOAT, 4,000 YEARS OLD

SOMETIMES the tombs of the ancient Egyptians of four thousand years ago are found to contain, along with the mummies and treasures and furnishings, a little model of a boat. More frequently on the inner surface of the coffin the picture of a boat was painted. The boat in the illustration is manned with several oarsmen with long oars. In the bow is the captain with club in hand to urge the oarsmen on. Two masts stand erect to receive the sails, and between them is a pillar bearing the symbol of their god. In some of the paintings the boats are represented as bearing, besides the mummy, great treasures, the furnishings of the tomb, and food and drink for the soul of the dead. What is the meaning of the little boat? Or what purpose was it supposed to serve?

The dead of the ancient Egyptians were always buried to the west of the Nile, on the very edge of the valley. Somewhere in the far west, it was believed, were the happy isles of the dead. Thither the sun-god went each evening, and thence he sailed beneath the earth to reappear in the east the next morning. There the Egyptian believed he would go after death.

At the time of the burial, the dead, who were to the east of the Nile, were transported across the river in a special funeral boat laden with the mummy and all that was to be buried with it, whatever the soul, or the ka, might need in the hereafter. As the boat reached the western shore a procession was formed to march to the tomb; the final ceremonies took place at the entrance, and the mummy and its treasures were sealed within. The boat thus formed so prominent a part in the ceremony that sometimes a model of it was made and buried in the tomb, or a picture of it was painted on the coffin. At the base of the pyramid of Sesotris III., of the twelth dynasty, were found buried in the sand five large, well-preserved boats made from the cedars of Lebanon. It is only in a country like Egypt where the sand and the air are dry, that wood has survived such a great age. One of the boats, now in the Field Museum in Chicago, is thirty feet long, eight feet wide and four feet deep.

A "Funeral Boat" from an Egyptian Tomb

However, the chief purpose of the boat was to serve the soul after death. The "happy isles" of the dead could be reached only by crossing the great waters, and for this a boat was necessary. There was a boatman named Turnface, because he poled his boat while looking backward, who ferried souls across, but he would receive only the righteous—only those of whom it could be said, "He hath done no evil." A boast commonly engraved on the Egyptian tomb to persuade the ferryman Turnface of the righteousness of the soul confined there, is: "I gave bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, clothing to the naked, and a ferry-boat to the boatless." Sometimes those who possessed no boat were transported across the waters by the hawk or the ibis, or friendly souls might be persuaded to provide a boat for them, or they might accompany the sun-god on his journey. The boatless, however, might wait long before reaching the "happy isles," and so a boat, all provided with oarsmen and provisions for the voyage, was buried with the mummy or painted on the coffin. Such was the real purpose of the little model of the boat in the illustration.

PROF. EDGAR J. BANKS.

The Greatest Force in the Middle West

THE most important industrial innovation ever experienced by the Middle West seems sure to follow the completion of the largest water-power plant in the world, now about being constructed in the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Ia., in the very center of the Mississippi Valley—a dam and power house with mammoth turbines and electric generators of over 300,000 horsepower capacity. This is over half the quantity of power produced by all the companies on both sides the international boundary at Niagara Falls.

Hitherto the chief water-power development of the United States has been around the edge of the nation, from California, Oregon and Washington along the Canadian border to Maine and thence down the Atlantic seaboard to Georgia. But this new installation in the middle of the Mississippi River is accurately centered both for the transportation of raw materials to its mills and factories and for the shipping of its manufactured products to the immense consuming area, populated by about half the inhabitants of the United States, between the Alleghany and Rocky Mountains from Canada to the Gulf.' This single power-house has a capacity of one-seventeenth the horsepower produced in all the West of this great country. It is more than is produced in any State except New York, Maine and California, which have held the lead in turning water power into electricity.

This new water-power development is being built at a cost of about $25,000,000 by the Mississippi River Power Company, under the supervision of the War Department. The chief engineer is Hugh L. Cooper, an eminent hydraulic engineer. The dam is located at the foot of the Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi, at the junction of the States of Iowa, Illinois and Missouri. The new dam floods the rapids and makes deep-water navigation even in dry seasons for sixty-five miles of hitherto impassable river. This is of immense value to navigation and saves the government the cost of constructing a deep-water channel, which was ordered by Congress a few years ago.

A General View of the Construction Operations on the Mississippi, at Keokuk, Iowa

At the Iowa end of the dam there is to be the largest dry dock in fresh water and a lock in the dam, the gates of which are planned to be larger than any in the Panama Canal. Here, also, is the largest power-house ever built, over a third of a mile long, one hundred and twenty-three feet wide and reaching from twenty-six feet below the bottom of the river to high above the bluffs. There are to be thirty turbines in the substructure of the power-house, each by far the largest in dimensions ever built, and each attached to a huge electric generator of 7,500 kilowatts capacity, which is the equivalent of a little over 10,000 horsepower. The water goes to the turbines through tubes in the concrete large enough to permit one to drive a threshing machine through; and the water leaves the turbines and enters the tail-race in the river through openings each large enough to contain a bungalow.

The production of such an unprecedented quantity of electric power there in the center of the Mississippi Valley is already building up near the site of its development a new industrial center. The turbines will be connected directly to electric generators and transmission lines will run northward to Burlington, Ia., and southward to St. Louis.

The dam, power-house, lock, dock and sea-wall are one continuous mass of concrete, nearly a mile and two-thirds long. There are over 650,000 cubic yards of concrete in the structures, and the whole comprises the largest waterpower plant in the world, the largest electrical installation in the world, and the greatest power dam in the world. About fifteen hundred men are employed in its construction, which has gone on almost without interruption summer and winter, day and night—Sundays religiously excepted.

The churches of the community deserve praise for their alertness in looking to the uplift of this army of workmen. Without exception all Christian organizations near this great power are reaching out to claim the newcomer with commendable thoroughness.

FRED H. ENO.

ECHOES FROM THE METHODIST CONFERENCE

THREE and a half million Methodist church members are directly concerned with what the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church did during May at Minneapolis.

Methodism is a system which is not afraid of being systematic. It has a lot of machinery, because it has found that organization is a large help to religious progress. And, of course, like all good systems, the Methodist system needs frequent adjustment and rearrangement. So, every four years, the Methodist Episcopal Church calls together the representatives of its wide-scattered forces, and these, over eight hundred in number, spend a month together overhauling the machinery and planning for its larger effectiveness.

But they did not minimize the spiritual side of the church's work—far from it. Every day during the first three weeks evangelistic services were held—noonday shop meetings, street meetings, and a notable series of meetings in one of the largest churches of Minneapolis. Billy Sunday preached in the Auditorium twice in one afternoon, the second time to the overflow from the first crowded meeting.

The first roll call of the Conference was a modern repetition of the scene at Pentecost. Instead of Parthians, Medes and Elamites," and the rest of the older catalogue, it might have been written Danes and Swedes; Germans from Berlin and from San Antonio; the dwellers in Norway and Finland and parts of Africa about Liberia, Rhodesia and the Portuguese provinces; Chinese and Koreans; sojourners from Rome, both Italian and American; men and women of South America and of India; and they of Africa now dwelling on the western shore of the great Ocean."

A roll call is usually uninteresting, but you can see that this would be different. For example, when the secretary was calling the names of those from Italy, a thrill of exultant joy ran through the multitude as he spoke out loud and clear, "Italia Garibaldi!" And a quiet, modest little woman, shrinking from the thunderous applause, rose and answered "Here!" Do you wonder the great audience cheered? This cultured Christian woman comes from the Methodist headquarters in the "Street of the Twentieth of September" in Rome, and that street's name marks the day, a little over forty years ago, when the dream of Miss Garibaldi's grandfather, Giuseppe Garibaldi, was realized, and the troops of United Italy entered the Eternal City. Another great emotional moment came when four Chinese delegates spoke, on a later day, in favor of a resolution asking the United States to recognize the Chinese Republic.

But now to business. This General Conference was a democratic body. It was not always able to give definite form to its passion for democracy in church life, but always it showed its disapproval of concentrated and arbitrary power, even when exercised under the forms of law. And the next General Conference will do more than that.

The eight new bishops elected are a representative body of Methodist leaders. Homer C. Stuntz is a great missionary and an inspiring speaker. Theodore S. Henderson is devoted to the work of direct evangelism. William O. Shepard is a wise and successful administrator and a pastor of notable gifts. Naphtali Luccock is one of the shrewdest, most genial of men, a Sidney Smith without the faults of the original. Francis J. McConnell is an educator and a writer who has made the whole church think. Richard J. Cooke is a man of books and a master of Methodist history and polity. Frederick D. Leete is a pastor who has the art of understanding and winning and holding men. And Wilbur P. Thirkield is a helper of the black man worthy to be ranked with Booker T. Washington and General Armstrong.

The bishops are hereafter to come a little closer to the churches in the sections about their residences. Around each episcopal headquarters is a group of conferences over which the resident bishop will have full authority except for the thirty days just before and the thirty days just after each session of the Annual Conference, when the bishop appointed to preside at that conference will be in charge. In addition to this, each bishop is to preside during the next four years over conferences in his part of the country, instead of being assigned first to one side of the continent and then to the other. This is a sort of combination of "presidential" and "residential" supervision, and it is expected to bring the bishops and the churches into a much more intimate and definite relationship.

The Conference elected a number of new editors and secretaries of its great benevolent enterprises, who must prove themselves. They have their work cut out for them, if they are to advance beyond the mark set by the men they have succeeded. For among those who retired at this Conference were James M. Buckley, thirty-two years editor of the Christian Advocate, and for even more years the most notable figure in Methodism, and Adna B. Leonard, with a record of twenty-four years of great service as missionary secretary.

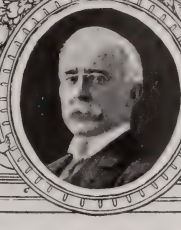
A determined and well-supported attack was made on the so-called "amusement paragraph" of the Methodist Discipline. The bishops for the third time had recommended its restatement and the omission of the admittedly incomplete and unsatisfactory catalogue of prohibited pleasures, and the question was debated with great earnestness. The conservatives won the day by a majority of seventy-seven. But later in the month the paragraph was greatly improved by being divided, so that hereafter the people who go to the theater will not be reckoned as offenders in the same category as the church member who rents his building for a saloon.

The Conference had the unusual experience of accepting a bishop's resignation. Bishop W. F. Oldham, missionary bishop for Southern Asia, including the Philippines, was elected a Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. He could not be at once secretary and bishop, so, for the sake of a wider executive service and influence, he resigned the missionary episcopacy. Two missionary bishops were elected, John Wesley Robinson for India, and William P. Eveland for Malaysia and the Philippines.

The General Conference lasted twenty-nine days and cost a good many thousand dollars. But it was worth while. It gave the Methodist Episcopal Church better working conditions, and said to it, "Now go and do four years of really Christian work in your world-parish, and do it all in the name of Jesus Christ through the Holy Spirit."

DAN B. BRUMMITT,
Editor, The Epworth Herald.

KEPT FROM THE EVIL ONE



A SERMON

BY

Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.*

TEXT: "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." John 17: 15

SO THAT it is not necessary for death to take us out of the world in order that we may become holy. It is well for us to remember that death itself is not a fashioner of character. Death translates us, but it will not transfigure us. Death is a mode of transit and not a means of grace. It is not a discipline, but an unveiling. No one meets death in uncleanness and awakes in holiness. "He that is filthy let him be filthy still." Death changes our circumstances, but it leaves the character unchanged.

"I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world." Then retreat is not needful for victory. Indeed the most secluded retreat will never secure our holiness. Where can we find a retreat that would take us out of the world? Where can we build such an abode? Shall we seek it on the countryside? I remember that it was in a garden that the worldly spirit was first born. The gracious and beautiful provisions of Eden did not shut out the subtlety of the tempter, nor did they secure our first parents from yielding to his enticements. If a rich and glorious environment could give us immunity from evil our race would never have fallen.

Shall we then seek the privacy of monastery or convent? But worldliness is not a matter of company or crowds. We can take the world with us into the most lonely place. It was in the wilderness, away from human society, that our Lord encountered one of the great crises of his spirit. It seems as though it would be comparatively easy to live a pure life if one's home were on the Malvern Hills, and if the soul could be feasted on sunrise and sunset, and could be trained and chastened by the moving panorama of the passing hours. But the Malvern Hills have been the scene of many a great crisis in the spirit of man. Wherever the soul is worldliness can be, for worldliness is a certain manner of life, it is the response of the soul to a certain kind of inner seduction. And therefore our Lord does not pray that we may be taken out of the world, but that we may remain in it, in the very thick of its affairs, and yet be so empowered as to be able to be delivered "from the evil one."

The Ministry of Evil

And what is the ministry of the evil one in the world? How does he go about it? By what methods does he seek to undo us and subject us to his own dominion? First of all he seeks to pervert the holy impulses and sacred initiatives of the soul. He delights to interfere with good things just as they are being born. It is a deadly part of his plan to interfere with seed. "Then cometh the evil one and snatcheth away that which is sown." Who does not know his ministry here? Some experience has happened in our life. Some conjunction of circumstances has led our mind into sober thought and decision. A tender impulse is springing in a longwhile barren soil. A pure desire is rearing itself where there has been only the weed of indifference. Some happy promise is appearing like a flower on the plains of the spirit. Good seed and receptive soil have met, mind and truth have come together, the soul has encountered her Lord. "Then cometh the evil one and snatcheth!" He leaps at the chance of destroying a young impulse, or a desire that is just at the birth. And therefore he is very active at church doors. He is waiting for people as they return from the service, and many holy seeds are snatched away before they reach the top of the street. He is very subtle in his ways. He can lead us into an apparently justifiable conversation, but we have not gone far before we have lost our seed.

And, secondly, the evil one seeks to undo us by presenting glittering snares to our gaze. "He shewed him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them." The kingdoms have never appeared so vivid, so alluring, so magnetic! The evil one paints everything in a most attractive guise. He can make rose trees climb over slaughter-houses and hide them. He makes me think I am getting a fortune when I am really stepping into an abyss. These bucket-shop circulars I sometimes get—how seductive their statement! How easily I may become a millionaire! There is no difficulty in the road. If certain simple conditions are fulfilled I shall gloat in gold! And the advertisement goes on to tell me what good I could do with an augmented income. But I know the hollow voice that speaks behind the pleasant mask. And these bucket-shop circulars are symbols of the messages that come to me from the devil. He can make deadly perils seem vitally attractive. There is always a sweet grassy path leading me into the swamp. They are like a certain short cut to the top of Snowdon; no one takes it without arriving maimed and bruised. The evil one is a fraud.

The Contagion of Worldliness

And, thirdly, the evil one seeks to steep me in worldliness through the contagion of worldly men. He likes to insert one rotten apple in the barrel. He loves to get his pinch of evil leaven into the meal. He plans to get one bad man into a holy fellowship. He knows that if he can introduce his spirit it will do its contagious work. "The spirit that now worketh in the sons of disobedience." That is a very pregnant phrase. It suggests the evil influences that are silently operative in the very presence of evil men. I do not wonder, therefore, that the apostle Paul offered the prayer that he might be "delivered from them that are disobedient in Judea." Nor do I wonder that the Psalmist in an earlier day prayed that he might be delivered "from evil men." The evil spirit is very catching, and "evil communications corrupt good manners." In all these ways and in many more the evil one is at work. He seeks to nip the young buds in our spirits, he endeavors to snatch away the good seed, he is always presenting fascinating snares, and he works through the malign introduction of evil men.

How are we to be kept from his deadly ministry? We must remember that if we are to be secure there must be co-operation between ourselves and the Lord. Our Master will not carry us as though we were logs. He will not defend us as though we had no will. The condition of more power is that we use the strength we have. We are to bring all our reserves out before reinforcements will appear on the field. When we bring the five loaves our Lord will work the miracle.

The Source of Deliverance

But let us look first of all at our Master's part in the defenses. He came to deliver us from the evil one. That was the very purpose of the incarnation and of all his willingness to encounter suffering and death. "He gave himself for our sins that he might deliver us from this present evil world." I find a mighty inspiration in those words. His very coming into the world was directed immediately to my deliverance. Let me affirm that to myself again and again in quiet and positive words. Our Lord came into this world to liberate me from sin! I say, let me nerve myself with that affirmative. Let me repeat it again and again when I am oppressed by my frailty. Let me use all the powers of my being in seeking to realize the wonder of the great evangel.

He came from on high to suffer and die
And save a poor sinner like me.

And, secondly, to deliver us from the evil one is the constant aim and ministry of his love. "Having loved his own which were in the world he loved them unto the end." He never lets go. His love is not a passing warmth, a genial mood which is apt to change into chilling frost. His love endures all along the changing road, and it is as sunny and strong in the remote autumn of life as in the early days of spring. And let me remember this, the Lord's love is love at its best. And therefore it is sympathy at its best. And therefore it is insight at its best. And therefore it is service and sacrifice at their best. "His banner over me is love," and abiding under that banner my security is complete.

In the Father's Keeping

And, thirdly, "deliver them from the evil one" is the burden of his mystic intercessions. "I pray for them. Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me." We cannot see far into that wonderful depth of glorious secret. But at any rate it has this marvelous significance for thee and me; we are personally known and named in the councils of Deity! What presumption to state it! Ay, it is, and I would never have dared to think it had he not made me bold to do it. "My way" is not "overlooked by my God."

And what is our part in the keeping? First of all, the simple and constant ministry of prayer. "Deliver me from the evil one." That prayer makes me hospitable and receptive to the good One, and I invite and welcome into my life the love energies of the Eternal God.

And with prayer there must be a holy purpose. "What shall harm us if we be followers of that which is good?" It must be the steady aim of my life to follow the gleam, to be a disciple of the truth, to keep the good always in sight. There is marvelous defense in holy purpose and lofty ideal. No one can measure the strength that comes from the contemplation of vast and noble ends. It is the looking off that interferes with the getting on. The steady purpose is a great ally in the work of salvation.

And, lastly, I must have a quiet confidence in the Captain of my salvation. "The Lord will deliver me from every evil work." I must not doubt his efficiency. I must not take the campaign into my own hands as though the Leader were incompetent. Let me never esteem the evil one as mightier than the holy One. Let me be joyfully assured that when these two meet in combat the Lord will be a mighty victor. "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

* Pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Conference at Niagara Falls

MOST of the secretaries of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, both denominational and interdenominational, were present at a conference held at Niagara Falls, Ontario, June 13-14, to which clergymen and laymen of New York State and Canada were called. The theme of the conference was: "How can efficient volunteer missionary workers be multiplied, and how can these workers serve the missionary cause to the best advantage?" The various sub-topics were opened by experienced leaders and then discussed by the delegates.

One of the greatest needs in the church life of our day is the development and wise use of volunteer workers. If the two hundred thousand churches of North America are to be enlisted deeply and permanently in missionary activity, a very large force of such workers will be required.

Among the aspects of the general theme which were considered, the following were of special importance: 1. Principles to be recognized in developing volunteer workers. 2. The opportunities for volunteer service and for developing workers: In the missionary committee of the local church; in the denominational missionary committee of a district, presbytery or diocese; in the city or county committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement; in the public advocacy of missions. 3. What is needed in the way of supervision and follow-up methods in order to develop volunteer workers most effectively? 4. The place of prayer in the enlistment and development of volunteer workers.

Poems Worth Knowing

TWIN STARS ALOFT

TWIN stars, aloft in ether clear,
Around each other roll alway,
Within one common atmosphere
Of their own mutual light and day.

And myriad happy eyes are bent
Upon their changeless love alway,
As, strengthened by their one intent,
They pour the flood of life and day.

So we through this world's waning night,
Shall, hand in hand, pursue our way;
Shed round us order, love, and light,
And shine unto the perfect day.

AUSTIN DOBSON.

LIFE, I KNOW NOT WHAT THOU ART

LIFE, I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part;
And when, or how, or where we met
I own to me's a secret yet.
Life, we've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear—
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not Good Night—but in some brighter clime
Bid me Good Morning.

MRS. A. L. BARBAULD.

Do You Know Your Bible?

THE last publishing date in June comes so soon after the last issue of May that if we publish now the list of successful students of the questions in List No. 5 many names would necessarily be omitted. To give our readers a little more time to win a place in the honor rolls we are postponing the publication of the names and the answers to the questions till next week. We can get back to the regular routine next month, as July has five publishing dates instead of four. But send your answers in just as promptly as possible so there will be no uncertainty about their reaching us in plenty of time.

Here are the new questions, List No. 6. New members welcome. See how many of these answers you can find.

List No. 6

1. (a) What prophet received the divine call to his work by being touched with a live coal? (b) To which prophet did the Lord say: "Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth?" (c) What prophet saw a mysterious vision of living creatures and wheels?

2. To what great warrior did Jehovah promise that he would accompany and aid him as he had his predecessor?

3. What bountiful supplies and provisions were brought to David and his followers by a few friendly men during his campaign against Absalom?

4. What is the first recorded instance of clapping hands as a testimony of joy?

5. Who was the youngest king of Judah, and how old was he when anointed?

6. What other extremely young king became a great reformer and remained faithful to righteousness to the end of his life?

7. What letter-carrier's name is mentioned in the New Testament?

8. Where have we an instance of certain officers falling backward when confronted by their victim?

9. Where is God's covenant declared to be more lasting than the mountains?

10. Where is God's covenant declared to be as unchangeable as the law of day and night? (Two places in one chapter.)

11. In what passage does Jesus liken himself to a faithful man who gives his life for his charges?

12. In what single epistle is Christ shown to be our Joshua to lead us into rest, our High Priest to bring us to perfection, and the Sacrificial Victim to purify us through his blood?

Prizes the Premiums Highly

I have just received my premium Bible, also The Christian Herald Almanac, both of which came safely. Many thanks. I shall prize them highly, as I do THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which I feel that I cannot do without. The prizes have been admired by many of my friends, and they all wonder, as I do, how you can afford such beautiful prizes for so little money. The paper alone is worth much more to me than you ask for it. That it may find its way into many new homes is the earnest wish of one of its many readers.

MRS. M. C. MORTENSEN.
St. Thomas, Danish West Indies.

A Little Song of Gladness

I'M GLAD there's room for singing in the crowded, busy day.
I'm glad that music in the heart makes work as light as play.
I'm glad I needn't work alone, nor carry all the load.
I'm glad a FRIEND walks by my side and cheers me on the road.
I'm glad the heaviest burden leaves a little strength to spare.
I'm glad there's power enough, withal, a brother's load to share.
I'm glad my task is greater than my puny strength can grip.
I'm glad to have so sure a claim upon God's partnership.
I'm glad that when men say, "You can't," my heart responds, "I will."
I'm glad the steep ascent leads to the summit of the hill.
I'm glad things called "impossible" I sometimes dare to do.
I'm glad, with faith, "nothing shall be impossible to you."
I'm glad the strain and stress are given to make the spirit strong.
I'm glad that pain and battle scars enrich a victor's song.
I'm glad that in the stormiest fight my heart is held in peace.
I'm glad I hear a quiet voice bid fear and tumult cease.

I'M GLAD that from the darkest night there springs a rosy morn.
I'm glad that from my foolish fears new hope and trust are born.
I'm glad, in every rainbow, sun and shower each has its part.
I'm glad, where tears flow, smiles of love make rainbows in the heart.
I'm glad I may enjoy the fragrant beauty of the rose.
I'm glad to learn the lesson of the thorn that with it grows.
I'm glad that pain and sorrow are for some good use allowed.
I'm glad the sunshine's beauty is its contrast with the cloud.
I'm glad the pains of yesterday are all forever past.
I'm glad the troubles of to-day have little time to last.
I'm glad to-morrow, all unspoiled, may have more good than ill.
I'm glad each day helps, drop by drop, the cup of joy to fill.
I'm glad, again, for yesterday, for every lesson learned.
I'm glad for gain of strength and for each bit of progress earned.
I'm glad to-day is still my own to plan, and work, and pray.
I'm glad a future full of hope inspires the hardest way.

I'M GLAD I'm heir to boundless wealth, displayed on every side.
I'm glad my treasures fill the earth, abundant, far and wide.
I'm glad I own the trees and rocks and all the grass and flowers.
I'm glad the deep blue sea is mine, the hills, the leafy bowers.
I'm glad the birds belong to me, the butterflies, and bees.
I'm glad I have refreshing rain, and cooling summer breeze.
I'm glad I sometimes have the storm to rouse my sluggish soul.
I'm glad to see the lightnings flash and hear the thunders roll.
I'm glad I need not guard this wealth lest anything be lost.
I'm glad it need not be insured to cover all its cost.
I'm glad the burden is not mine to care for sea and land.
I'm glad He holds them safely in the hollow of His hand.
I'm glad for true and loyal friends who cheer a fellow on.
I'm glad for those who know they're friends before the victory's won.
I'm glad for chance to be a friend, to pass the cheer along.
I'm glad to steal away a sigh and substitute a song.

I'M GLAD the dollar sign is not the only mark of wealth.
I'm glad it cannot measure life, or light, or bounding health.
I'm glad to count a priceless store of sympathy and love.
I'm glad such treasure, gathered here, is bankable above.
I'm glad a poor man may be rich and free to give or lend.
I'm glad investment surely brings a noble dividend.
I'm glad for laughter, fun, and play, to keep the spirit sweet.
I'm glad the serious and gay are making life complete.
I'm glad the road of life is up—up, ever to the end.
I'm glad there'll be no call at last in darkness to descend.
I'm glad the last beam shall not fade "to shine again no more."
I'm glad I need not face the time when all "man's work is o'er."
I'm glad to go from little things to "greater things than these."
I'm glad I'm called forever to obey a King's decrees.
I'm glad I need not name the whole long list of why I'm glad.
I'm glad my Father knows it all. I shall be always glad!

GOD'S WORD

A WONDROUS tree I find God's Word,
And 'neath it day by day
I take the fruit that gives me strength
To bear me on life's way;
A stately tree, so large and tall,
There's shelter, rest, and food for all.

A telescope I find God's Word,
And be skies dark or clear,
This trusty instrument reveals
God and my Saviour dear;
While mirrored daily on my heart
Are splendors that can ne'er depart.

A treasure house I find God's Word,
With all its contents free;
And reaching forth, I take, and say,
"The Lord meant this for me."
And for my faith, what joys are given!
True peace, and love, and life, and heaven!

I find God's Word a river deep,
No ripple, yet a tide;
I launch my bark and glide away,
My Saviour e'er my guide.
And sweet the comfort, sweet the rest,
While sailing toward the haven blest!

GEORGE WHITEFIELD D'VYS.

Pentecost in India

YOU will be glad to know that God has heard the prayers of his people, and we are now in the midst of another mighty revival. During the evangelistic campaign month [February] which is just over, we baptized seven hundred and seventy-seven people, and there are more than a thousand more waiting for me to come."

This glad news comes in a personal letter from Rev. Charles E. Parker, superintendent of the Hyderabad District of the South India M. E. Conference. In an earlier letter, written on January 18, he said:

"In my last letter I asked you to join us in prayer on the first Thursday in each month, for this year, and especially for our District Conference. . . . The Holy Spirit came with great power upon our District Conference. Every worker, I believe, went out endued with power from on high. They began to have visions of the mighty work before them. They have gone out to do great things for God this year. Oh, if we would really pray as we should, God would do wonders. As I look at these men and think of their possibilities, my soul cries out, 'Lord, teach me to pray, for their sakes.'

"We have many great problems before us in the work this year. As I look at it from the human standpoint, the situation seems impossible. Alone, we could not go forward, but 'Emmanuel, God with us' is our watchword, and I know that he will lead us on to victory. Plague is raging all about us. In the city of Hyderabad, fifty miles away, for the past two months, people have been dying at the rate of two and three hundred a day. The disease is gradually spreading nearer to Vikarabad. Thus far, the Lord has spared our lives. That little verse: 'Neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling,' means more to us now than ever before. My appointments for this year read as follows: 'Superintendent Hyderabad District (this district is as large as an annual conference in America); Missionary in charge of Vikarabad, Tandur, Kohir and Shankerapully Circuits; Principal of the J. L. Crawford Boys' School, until a missionary can be gotten out from America for this work.'"

Passages from Mr. Parker's letters read like selections from the Book of Acts. His whole life is a romance of divine love and care and of direct interference with material things and events to make way for the triumphs of the Holy Ghost. We want the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to get acquainted with him and learn more of his unique work. Put him and his associates on your prayer list. In this way you can have a real part in these new victories of the Cross in India, which are bringing fresh glories to the name of Jesus.

Pleased with Almanac

I am highly pleased with your Almanac. It is a world of knowledge contained in a small space. It also contains enough spice to make it interesting to all. Many thanks for same.
Indianapolis, Ind. J. A. VAN CAMP.

Negro Refugees Photographed Shortly Before Making Preparations to Break Camp

THE PROGRESS OF THE FLOODS

VICTIMS OF LOUISIANA'S GREAT DISASTER RETURN TO THEIR HOMES. FINAL RELIEF MEASURES

THE most recent reports from the flooded section of Louisiana are extremely encouraging. The people of the flooded districts have now practically all returned to their homes, and the problems which face them are those that have been outlined in former accounts of flood-country conditions. Although up until the middle of June the backwaters from some of the crevasses continued to rise, these changes affected very little new territory and were the cause of more inconvenience to the railway companies and officials than to the general population. The railways, most of which have done their utmost during the trying time of the flood to continue their freight service wherever it was possible, got together and by using one another's tracks and here and there adding extra switches were able to put on a service which has been of the greatest assistance in returning the flood sufferers to their homes and in supplying them with the necessities of life.

The work of repairing the railway roadbeds and embankments has brought to light a number of interesting aftermath stories of the flood. For instance, among the pictures which were sent by one of its Louisiana correspondents to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was one taken where the embanked railway line passed near the edge of the forest. Here were gathered a number of deer which had been forced out of the depths of the forest by the flood. The section men along the railways have had to exercise the greatest of care in clearing away the débris which in many cases the currents have piled against the rails. Seeking the only remaining dry places the snakes, such as the water moccasins, have made these accumulations of débris their temporary homes. Several quite serious bites have been reported.

The water from the great Torras crevasse has been going down rapidly. The districts over which it poured such a devastating flood are now slowly resuming their ordinary appearance. Early in June a second break in the Hymelia levee was reported, but this was almost immediately denied, and coupled with the denial came the report that the waters were now running in the channel of an old break. The waters from this crevasse have been the slowest to abate. Plantations which had successfully held them back from the time of the first break until well into June were forced to give up the fight when the waters commenced to run in the sixty-foot channel of the former break in this levee.

The river steamers have been busily engaged in returning the refugees from the camps to their homes. It has been deemed wise to close the refugee camps and return the people to their homes in this way even though a continuation of rations and other assistance will be necessary for some time. Military officers have been making tours of inspection, and at the request of the Central Relief Committee have appointed local committees to superintend the purchasing of rations wherever this may still be necessary, and to take charge of the distribution of household goods. New Roads, Donaldsonville, and Paincourtville all have local committees of this type, and the relief work is being continued in this way.

Governor Hall's Committee, which is known as the Central Flood Relief Committee, is now in charge of all the funds and stores which have been gathered throughout the country. These stores will be distributed as wisely as possible and the remaining relief fund will be used to carry over the destitute until fall, to lend medical aid where that is necessary, and in some instances to provide seed.

The Louisiana State Legislature has had under serious consideration the matter of providing seed for the farmers of the devastated districts. It was stated on the floor of the House that unless some action were taken immediately almost twenty-eight thousand acres of land will grow up in weeds this year when one of the finest crops that the State has ever raised should be produced from the enriched soil left by the floods. At the time of the preparation of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the legislature had taken no definite action but was thoroughly agreed that the need was one which should be met, at least to a great extent, by funds from the State treasury. As far as possible the relief funds will be used to augment the State aid which, it is altogether likely, will take the form of such staple crops as cow-peas, corn, cotton, sorghum, and onions.

The funds already received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for relief work in the flooded districts have now been sent forward to the scene of the disaster and are being applied as was intended by their donors. In reply to the telegram sent him by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Governor Luther E. Hall writes as follows, under the date June 7:

Christian Herald, New York.

MY DEAR SIRS: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your telegraphic despatch of June 4 instant, authorizing me to draw on you at sight for Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000) additional contributions from your readers for relief work among the flood sufferers, and I beg you and your readers to be assured of my appreciation and gratitude and that of the suffering people of Louisiana for your generosity.

Obedient to your instructions, I have this day made draft for the sum indicated in favor of Mr. L. J. Ricaus, the Treasurer of the Central Relief Committee, at Baton Rouge, La. This committee has been organized for the purpose of covering the entire State in the work of relief.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) L. E. HALL,
Governor.

The Disastrous Torras Crevasse with the Waters at Their Height

The following contributions have been received for this fund since the last acknowledgment:

D. L. Miller	5.00	M. R. Benchley	1.00	A Claremont Reader, Calif.	1.00	A Friend, Pleasant Brook, N. Y.	2.00
Estw. H. Howell	5.00	Mrs. Joseph Keach	1.00	Mrs. A. F. Porter & Mrs. A. R. Wright	2.00	A Friend, Salem, O.	1.00
A Sympathizer, Belchertown, Mass.	5.00	Mrs. Jennie R. Slosson	2.00	E. G. T., Allentown, Pa.	15.00	In His Name, Reading, Pa	1.00
D. J. Keen	5.00	O. A. Seastrand	2.00	C. R. Gearhart	5.00	——, La Belle, Mo.	1.00
J. A. Parker's Est.	5.00	Charlotte Weaver	1.00	One of the C. H. Family, Reading, Pa.	5.00	Mrs. A. J. Hofmann	2.00
V. T. & H. E. Hinshaw, ——, San Francisco, Calif.	10.00	L. M. Stanton	1.00	A Friend from Elyria, O.	2.00	H. W., Divernon, Ill.	2.00
M. J. Grimes	5.00	N A C, W. Haven, Conn.	2.00	M. Fryer	2.00	Mrs. Mary Lane	2.00
The Cleveland Family	5.00	David M. Clark	2.00	Miss Lucy Hubbard	2.00	Mrs. J. B. Campbell	1.00
Edward H. Smith	5.00	J. W. Diggs	1.25	Mrs. F. M. Hubbard	1.00	C. E. Vandecarr	1.00
Miss S. E. Jackson	5.00	Mrs. J. L. Knight	.25	Mrs. Lydia H. Emmett	2.00	Mrs. Hester B. Smith	2.00
O. A. Olney & N. M. Ferris	5.00	Mrs. J. Moss Diggs	.50	——, Washington, D. C.	2.00	H. C. Northcott	1.00
Mr. Anson	1.00	Otto Liman	.50	Mrs. A. M. Raeder	1.00	E. A. Barber	2.00
A Reader of C. H., Jersey City, N. J.	1.00	Herbert E. Rice	.50	E. B. Adams	4.00	Mrs. Cora Van Schaack	2.00
Mrs. Agnes A. Schneider	10.00	Miss L. Bothmer	1.00	Mrs. Fanny Swan	2.00	Paul Chretien	2.00
E. F. Morton	1.00	Mrs. E. W. Bates & Miss A. V. Woodson	2.00	Mrs. Wm. F. Hall	2.00	A Friend, Knoxville, Tenn	5.00
Alex. Hamilton	1.00	Martin Shroth	1.00	A Reader, Sharon Spgs., N. Y.	1.00	Clarence Johnson	1.00
A Friend, Northborough, Mass.	1.00	C. E. Soc. of Crooked Creek, Pa.	4.00	Mrs. S. C. Rodden	1.00	Hannah Staples	1.00
E. L. & T. M. Kufus	1.00	Mrs. Otto Kohler	2.00	Daniel McCarty	1.00	W. A. Miles	1.00
G. R. Mapes	1.00	W. T. Jones	1.00	Mrs. F. O. Bailey	2.00	J. A. Miller	.50
A. B. Brown	1.00	——, Hawley, Pa.	1.00	Wm. Cotton	2.00	M. F. Baker	.50
The Mrs. Martha Anderson Memorial Fund	10.00	Mrs. M. B. Beals	1.00	Prathersville S. S., Mo.	4.00	Fred Walker	.50
		A Sub'r., New Orleans, La.	1.00	Elsie L. Smith	2.00	O. Letteke	.50
		John Thomas	2.50	O. Larson	1.00	John Brenning	.50
						——, Perry, Kan.	10.00
						Caroline Wroutghen	5.00
						Emma Wroutghon	1.00
						Mabel Schwake	.25
						Mrs. Margaret Hammond	5.00
						Horace Martin	5.00
						Miss Justina Castor	5.00
						Henry Sykes	5.00
						Mrs. C. W. Weeks	1.00
						Mr. Ora Green	1.00
						Albert E. Ogy	2.00
						Mrs J M & G Freeman	1.00
						——, Sycamore, O.	1.00
						Miss M. Ewing	5.00
						Mrs. R. McLaughlin	5.00
						William Bevan	5.00
						Mr. & Mrs. G. W. Smith	5.00
						J. Woltman	5.00
						Miss L. J. Christ	5.00
						Mr & Mrs N M Milroy	10.00
						Marcia Sherwood	1.00
						Mrs. M. E. Sherwood	5.00
						Mr. & Mrs. G. M. Horne	5.00
						W. C. Filber	5.00
						Mrs. James T. Burns	5.00
						Mr. & Mrs. R. H. Seadin	5.00
						M. A. Atkinson	1.00
						——,	.50
						A. Luginbill	2.50
						Mr. & Mrs. D. K. Hyatt	10.00
						A Friend Rushmore, Minn.	2.50
						John A. Lane	2.00
						Mrs. D. A. Miller	1.00
						Mrs. Catherine A. Candy	2.00
						Edward W. Miller	10.00
						S. S. Barnes & Wife	10.00
						Miss S. S. daughter, Opelika, Ala.	5.00
						Mrs. I. E. Montgomery	5.00
						Dr. S. D. Booth	3.00
						Mrs. E. A. Haring	2.00
						F. H. Miller	1.00
						A Friend, Garden Grove, Iowa	1.00
						Mrs. H. B. D., Syracuse, N. Y.	1.00
						A Friend, Castile, N. Y.	.50
						A Friend, Chicago, Ill.	1.00
						M. M. R., Acampe, Calif.	2.00
						Mrs. J. M. Kyle	1.00
						Mrs. Lucy H. Garrison	1.00
						Mrs. Temperance Hurlburt	2.00
						C. Z. Russell	2.00
						Mrs. T. E. Nelson	1.00
						Mrs. D. S. Fowler	2.00
						Mr. & Mrs. F. C. Gurnee	2.00

Women Who Have Made Their Mark

BY LUCY B. JEROME

"WHERE," asked a man traveler, recently returned from abroad after an absence of ten years, "is the pink-tea woman, the fancy-stitch embroidery woman, the kitchen drudge and the helpless female? Have they become an extinct type?"

Well, if they're not an extinct type yet, they're rapidly becoming one. The pink-tea woman, for instance, finds her energies absorbed in showing other women how to manage their social affairs with the smallest amount of labor and the largest amount of benefit. The fancy-stitch embroidery woman lends her attention, not to sewing for the poor, but to teaching them to sew for themselves; the kitchen drudge is possibly giving lectures on household economics, and the helpless female may be capably directing the work of some civic department as its head.

Prominent in this new class of women one sees Mrs. Isaac Rice, the famous "Queen of Silence." Mrs. Rice confesses to a musical ear and a set of ordinarily sensitive nerves. She owns a magnificent home on Riverside Drive in New York, and she and her family wanted very much to enjoy it. But one thing prevented—the incessant tooting, whistling and shrieking of the river steamboats, as they let out blasts heard for miles up the Hudson. She listened to their whistles all day, and at night she was aroused from uneasy slumber by the hoarse bellowing of fog horns. Mrs. Rice began to think a good deal about noise. Why was all this noise, anyway? Was it necessary? If not, why couldn't it be abolished?

She lifted her voice in protest. But it didn't appear to be anybody's business to suppress unnecessary noises, and personal interest was lacking. Then Mrs. Rice's militant spirit was roused, and she went to Washington, where she worked with such good effect that the American Association of Masters, Mates and Pilots passed a resolution that needless whistling and signaling by any master, mate or pilot on the Hudson should mean a heavy fine. Satisfied on this point, Mrs. Rice began to think about noises in general, and to wonder if something couldn't be done to abolish them.

She set municipal activities to work, and though little impression was made at first, gradually people began to realize that Mrs. Rice meant what she said. She showed them that all over Manhattan thousands of unnecessary, strident noises rent the air, that the sick in private homes and hospitals were helpless, and that the clangor, racket and din were fast becoming a national menace. Then she started a society for the suppression of unnecessary noise. She insisted that a city law be passed establishing zones of silence near hospitals. Mrs. Rice sums up her activities in these terse words: "There are over three hundred varieties of unnecessary noises in New York alone, and I shall never give up the battle until I have regulated, if not suppressed, at least two hundred of them."

A young woman one day walked quickly into one of Boston's department stores. She wanted to make a simple purchase of a yard of ribbon, but found the salesgirl who waited on her weary, indifferent and contemptuous of the small sale. Miss Diana Hirschler, who stood next to the customer, took all this in, and, like Mrs. Rice, began to think. "Now," she told herself, "while I have plenty of sympathy for this girl, who is evidently tired, I feel, too, that it is only right that the customer should be waited on civilly. Couldn't clerking be made a little more interesting? Couldn't selling be raised to the level of a science?"

Miss Hirschler thought all this out. Then she adopted the plan of forming a class to teach selling as an art, and invited several girls to join. They came, more from curiosity than anything else, but Miss Hirschler made her little talks on the selling art so attractive, that almost before they knew it they were putting the principles gained into active practice. Then the department stores began to engage Miss Hirschler to lecture to their employees. Every day members of the sales force attend her lectures and demonstrations.

"Treat your customer," Miss Hirschler tells them, "as if she were a psychological study. In selling anything, look at your customer first, and adapt what you show her to her particular style and character. Make yourself an efficient saleswoman, and you will be satisfied with your work, and your value to your employer will be increased."

If one hasn't capital and is forced to "do something" for a living, it is helpful to know that one can be a woman—a very womanly one, too—and still make good. Mrs. Luella White had opened a tiny millinery shop in the Ryan Annex Building, St. Paul, and her new life had just begun with a good outlook, when, one night, she was roused from sleep by the clang of the fire engines as they whirled past her home. A premonition seized her, and throwing on some clothing, she rushed out of the house toward her shop, several blocks away.

Sure enough, the Ryan Building was in flames. With an ominous sinking in her breast, Mrs. White stood in passive silence and watched her little shop, the fruit of seven years' planning and working, go up in smoke. It didn't, however, take long for her to dispel discouragement, for she is not of the sort that disaster overwhelms. By ten o'clock the next morning she had paid the first month's rent of a basement storeroom, obtained a stock of goods on consignment, and her employees were hard at work on orders placed before the fire.

But that storeroom had to be furnished if she meant to conduct business there, and her bank book showed a balance of $47. How buy all she needed with that paltry amount? "You've got lots of pluck and nerve," her friends told her, "but when it comes to furnishing this place on $47 it simply can't be done. Why don't you borrow money and do it right?"

Mrs. White closed her lips firmly. "I won't borrow, and I can furnish this basement—in my own way," she declared.

Her friends went away, prophesying dire things. Then Mrs. White set to work. That same afternoon she bought a couple of tables, several hat stands, some Japanese screens and lamp shades, several rolls of crêpe paper, some Japanese material for curtains, and some grass rugs, and at five of the clock her new shop was furnished.

That little basement shop in St. Paul became known as the most unique millinery store in the country. Artistic and sound common sense together had worked a seeming miracle. She can buy any sort of furniture she desires now, not even drawing the line at antiques—for she has two large establishments—but the memory of that little shop in the basement is still very dear.

In the heights of one of the dizziest skyscrapers of New York sits a quiet little blonde woman who is said to have baffled the keenest minds of Wall Street when it comes to keeping secrets. Miss Katherine Giles is the head of the famous Giles Cotton Report, which comes out three days before that of the government, and which is regarded as an authority that often influences the market as much as the government report. She has the distinction of being the only person engaged in this work, and she began it ten years ago by accepting a position as clerk to a cereal statistician. This work taught her the advantage of the system of correspondents all over the country, and the art of sifting their letters to the hardpan of potential possibilities. Nobody has ever been able to obtain a tip from Miss Giles regarding the possible state of the cotton market, though she could make thousands by her advance knowledge.

Did you ever hear of the "Help Yourself" booth? That was an idea evolved from the consciousness of a fifteen-year-old girl, Mary Elizabeth Evans, whose family were in financial difficulties, and wondering which way to turn. Sitting with her mother one evening, Mary Elizabeth broke out:

"There's one thing I can do. You all like my home-made caramels and chocolates awfully well. Why can't I sell them?"

"Oh," said her mother reprovingly, "making them and selling them are two very different things."

"Well," persisted Mary Elizabeth undauntedly, "I don't see why I can't try."

She hadn't even a dollar for capital. But she made her candy, put it in a dozen home-made boxes, tied each with a narrow ribbon, wrote the name of the special kind of candy on each box in a large, sprawling hand, and took her boxes down to the University Building in Syracuse, in which city she lived. She asked permission to display her candy in one of the booths. There was no one to attend to it, no cash register, and she couldn't stay herself, for she was needed at home, so she just piled her boxes effectively and wrote her first business card. It said, "Home-made candy. Twenty-five cents a box. Help yourself." She placed it against the pile of boxes, then went home and waited.

The little booth jumped into favor in a day. The candy was good, and those who tried it once came again. Mary Elizabeth was kept quite busy for a while; in fact, until she moved to New York and rented a little white shop in Fifth Avenue, known to every lover of sweets. It is not so very long ago that she asked the public to help itself, and lost only five dollars through her childish trust, but to-day you can't ask any one in New York, or even farther afield, who Mary Elizabeth is without receiving the answer:

"Why, she's that famous candy shop! And didn't she do something odd? What was it? Oh, yes, of course. She's the 'help yourself' girl, isn't she?"

Photo copyrighted 1912

MISS MARY ELIZABETH EVANS

MISS KATHERINE GILES

MRS. ISAAC RICE

MRS. LUELLA E. WHITE

MISS DIANA HIRSCHLER

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Under One Banner

ON JUNE 24 a religious conference of world-wide interest opened at Lambeth Palace, the home of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and may continue for several months. Some time ago a number of bishops were appointed by the Episcopal Church in the United States as a commission to arrange for this event, and a considerable body of leading American churchmen from different States will be present. This conference is a preliminary one, its purpose being to confer with a view to a plan of unification for all the Christian churches and denominations of the Protestant faith. It is expected that it will be followed by a conference in New York City, at which commissioners who have been appointed by the Methodists, Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Baptists and the Reformed churches will participate.

It is unquestionable that the desire for a basis of union among the Christian denominations is steadily gaining in favor. Without any sacrifice of organic identity, they can unite on many points which will have the effect of drawing the churches closer together. It would certainly be a great step forward to have a thorough union on the essentials, and such an agreement on general working principles as would render the efforts of the churches as a whole more practical and consequently more effective. Years might be required for this work; but if they meet in the right spirit, much may be accomplished now. It should not be an impossible task to decide what is and what is not essential to the holding of a common religion and the expression of a common creed on which all might unite. Whatever may come of it, the thoughtful Christian people of two continents will watch the proceedings of this international conference with deep interest, and will assist it with their earnest prayers, that it may result in advancing the Kingdom of Christ throughout the world.

Three great denominations in Canada have taken a remarkable step toward church unity. Last year the Methodist and Congregational bodies voted to form a union with the Presbyterian Church, and on June 10 of this year the Presbyterian General Assembly voted unanimously in favor of the project.

It is a fine thing to see such exhibitions of the spirit of religious unity which is drawing men together for such a purpose. We are living in an age when great things are being accomplished in every line of human activity. Why not in religion as well? Let us hope and pray that the day of dissension and antagonism in the Christian ranks may soon pass away and that we shall yet see the time when all who name the name of Jesus, and who love to serve him, will be as members of one great army, each battalion of which is doing loyal service and all co-operating like brothers under the banner of the Cross for the redemption of the world.

Rights of Citizenship

JUDGE C. H. HANFORD of the United States Court of the State of Washington some time ago rendered a decision annulling the citizenship of Leonard Oleson, of Seattle, because he was a Socialist. In his decision, Judge Hanford said he adopted this course as Oleson admitted he is a Socialist, a frequenter of assemblages of Socialists, in which he participates as a speaker, advocating a propaganda for radical changes in the Constitution of the country, and because he entertained those views at the time he applied for his naturalization papers, more than two years ago.

This extraordinary decision has aroused a storm of protest in many quarters. It is a case without precedent—the first instance on record since the foundation of our government in which a man's citizenship has been revoked by any court because of his political belief or affiliation. Under our constitution and laws, the political and religious liberty of the citizen is guaranteed, and any judge taking such action as the record in the Oleson case shows renders himself liable to removal. Steps have already been taken in Congress looking to formal impeachment proceedings against Judge Hanford for his cancellation of Oleson's certificate of naturalization. It is of the highest importance that this case should be made a test of the inviolability of the constitutional privilege which belongs to every American citizen, whether born or naturalized, in order that a ruling may be established for the future. Attorney General Wickersham has the matter in hand and has given instructions to have the decree re-opened and a new trial secured, failing which it will be taken to the Court of Appeals. Mr. Wickersham writes that "upon the facts stated by Judge Hanford in his decision, the Department is of the opinion that a gross injustice has been done to Mr. Oleson."

Whatever the political opinions of a man may be, and however radical his beliefs, or those of the party to which he belongs, he is entitled to precisely the same protection in his citizen rights as the members of any other political party. This judge apparently has a record of disregard for citizen privileges. He has been on the Federal bench since the admission of Washington as a State. Several of his decisions have been called in question. He attempted to block the recall of a mayor of Seattle on the technical ground that the city council did not include the cost of the election in its regular budget, which had been passed a month before. The State courts, however, sustained the recall. Again, he issued an injunction prohibiting the residents of Rainier Valley from refusing to pay more than a five-cent fare within the Seattle city limits on a local line, although the State Supreme Court had already decided in the people's favor. From overriding the courts, he has now attempted to override the Constitution. No report was taken of the testimony at the Oleson trial and the whole proceeding seems to have been irregular and unauthorized. At the next session of Congress it will probably be made a test case, for the purpose of establishing a national precedent that will effectually prevent such examples of gross injustice hereafter.

What Flowers Are For

EVER been sick? Ever been sick away from home? Ever been sick in a hospital—lonely, in pain, with a queer heartache in addition to the hurt in your flesh?

Then do you know how the breath of a rose, stealing up to your face, or the scent of lilacs, or syringas, or lilies of the valley, or carnations, or a big, hearty peony, has seemed suddenly to make the pain a little easier, and to ease a little the tightness around your heart?

You are well now, but thousands of other folks are ill. Think of the long rows of hospital cots where girls and boys, women and men are lying in pain, and away from friends and home. Or some who are ill at home have no real comfort, no one who can or will manage to find flowers for the old vase or the broken cup on the mantel.

There is no service more simple, more sweet, more practical than this service of sending flowers to the poor, the sick, the lonely, the sad. Many of you will find, by sending for information to the nearest big city, that arrangements have already been made for receiving and distributing the flowers you send. Express companies will carry flowers free. There is nothing to do but pick and pack them.

But be sure to send them fresh. Wilted flowers are worse than none at all. Flowers left over from church or home decorations are of little or no value. Fresh from garden or field to the cool box, packed in wet newspapers and sent immediately by express—that is the only way.

The earlier flowers are gone by this time, some of the most fragrant, like lilacs and syringas. But daisies and buttercups are crowding the fields, and roses keep coming along all summer. While most wild flowers are not so fragrant as those from the garden, they bring a breath of the fields and woods which may cheer more than the rarer blossoms.

It is the finest kind of a task for a children's Sunday school class, or for the Junior Endeavor or Junior Epworth League. While the poor people in the sweltering cities are being blessed with fragrance and beauty and the proof that somebody cares, the people, little or big, who send the flowers are being blessed in learning to think of others, while the Saviour rejoices again that his folks are learning how to share their blessings with those who are in need. Perhaps—you needn't wait to send your flowers to the city. Maybe some one on the next street, in your village, is lonely this afternoon, or sick, or sad, and would like a cluster of the roses out there in your side yard.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, June 26 1912

	PAGE
Summertime	Cover
From a painting by Hugo Darnaut
The Guardians of Liberty (Illustrated)	647, 648
An Egyptian Funeral Boat 4,000 Years Old (Illus.)	648
The Greatest Force in the Middle West (Illustrated)	649
By Fred H Eno
Echoes from the Methodist Conference	649
Kept from the Evil One. Sermon	650
By Rev J. H Jowett, D.D.
A Little Song of Gladness	651
The Progress of the Floods (Illustrated)	652
Women Who Have Made Their Mark (Portraits)	653
By Lucy B. Jerome
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	654
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	655
Margaret E. Sangster's Last Story	656
Anxious Moments	656
From a painting by Jose Israels
A Cube of Lead	657, 658
Story by Charles Lee Sleight
Memorial Day at the Bowery Mission (Illustrated)	658
Happy Cozy Corner Days (Illustrated)	659
Our Mail-Bag	660
Sunday School Lesson By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	661
What Others Say	662
Press Opinions on the Late Mrs. Sangster	663

A Constructive Critic

THERE are two kinds of Biblical criticism: one constructive, the other destructive. To the first class belong those scholarly and capable men who, consecrating their talents to the interpretation and illumination of Bible truths, and devoting their energies to researches in the domain of archeology and philology, have done service in their day and generation that cannot be forgotten. To this body of able men belonged the late Professor Willis J. Beecher, whose earthly career closed on May 10 at Auburn, N. Y. Professor Beecher was one of the leading authorities of his time, and his labors and writings have greatly enriched the Bible-loving world. In an age when it seems to be the object of a large part of modern scholarship to pull the Bible to pieces, the work of Professor Beecher stands out prominently for its authoritative character, its profound scholarship and conclusive reasoning. He regarded truth as above all else; he was painstaking and accurate in the last degree, and he possessed a gift of close observation and conscientious investigation which largely eliminated the speculative tendency that has been the bane of much of the scholarship of our day. Professor Beecher was looked up to by students as a reliable chronologist, an eminent authority on Bible history, and a safe guide in almost every department of religious study. There was practically nothing in the line of philosophical inquiry and scientific work in Bible lands within the last half century with which he was not altogether familiar, and he made this wonderful knowledge clear and helpful to others, both through his writings and his lectures. A logical thinker, a sound Christian scholar and a man of most genial personality, he will long be lovingly remembered by the Bible students of America.

General Notes

—THE APPROPRIATION COMMITTEE of the House of Representatives has included in the Sundry Civil Bill a provision for six additional surgeons to aid in the examination of arriving aliens at the port of New York who are suspected of being mentally defective. This is in response to the demand for additional help, the present force being insufficient to deal with the very large immigration.

—FOR THE SECOND time within two years, London is facing famine in consequence of a gigantic labor strike. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dockers, truckmen and transport workers are out, and over 200 steamers, with perishable cargoes of food, are held up in the Thames. Prices of food of all kinds are soaring and apprehensions are felt that, unless the government intervene, the situation may become very serious. Besides, there is a strike among the bakers, with the possibility that other trades may join. The real question at issue among the dockmen is between union and non-union workers, and hinges upon the refusal of one man to join the union. The men demand higher wages, shorter hours and the employment of unionists exclusively.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

"Carpathia's" Captain Honored

Captain Rostron of the "Carpathia" and His Memorial Cup

CAPTAIN ARTHUR HENRY ROSTRON, of the Carpathia, which figured as the life-saver in the Titanic tragedy, was honored in a singular manner by those whom he had saved from the wreck. Receptions were given to him by individuals and by the public in general. A beautiful loving cup was presented to him, and a purse of $10,000. In receiving the purse the captain said that material value was of little consequence, but as he had sons to educate he would accept the money and sacredly devote it to that purpose. This act was a window unconsciously opened by him through which could be seen the splendid qualities of this manly man, this hero of the sea. At one of the public gatherings the audience arose and cheered him, and cheered again. The orchestra played "The Star-spangled Banner" and "God Save the King." The captain made a modest response, expressing gratitude at the kindness shown the officers and crew of his ship. The White Star Line offered to reimburse the Cunard Line for putting back to New York with the survivors, but the latter would not accept it. It did, however, allow the White Star Line to give $500 to Captain Rostron, $250 each to Surgeon McGee, Purser Brown, and Chief Steward Hughes, and a month's pay to every member of the crew. When officers of ships were blind and deaf to the terrible tragedy that night amidst the ice, Captain Rostron hastened to the scene and became one of the real heroes and benefactors of the centuries. Captain Rostron in this rescue from the sea calls to mind this reference to safety from the ocean wreck:

Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea; and he shall be for a haven of ships. (Gen. 49: 13.)

Splendid Advice

PRESIDENT HIBBEN'S baccalaureate sermon opened the one hundred and sixty-sixth commencement at Princeton June 9. It would be hard to find a more appropriate message to a graduating class. Among other things he said: "It is often thought that men who become ministers, or missionaries, or workers in social settlements, or who are engaged in some particular form of Christian work, have thereby chosen a peculiarly religious life, and therefore necessarily are called upon to assume responsibilities of the definitely religious nature. But the same, however, is equally true of the doctor, the lawyer, or the man of business. Every one is called to consecrate his life to the great cause. There are many pursuits in life, but only one cause—and that is to realize in ourselves and to help others to realize the divine nature in man, and thus to prove the dignity and the power of human life in the higher ranges of its possibilities. We may worship and bow down before a god with feet of clay and fail utterly to find the God in whom we live and have our being. Do not be complacent in the security of a narrow-minded prejudice, which places exclusive stress upon the material values, and thereby starves the soul. This is not a world in which you are merely to seek fortune, pursue pleasure, or endeavor to achieve name and fame. There are two factors which combine to determine your responsibility—the world's need on the one hand and your ability to meet it on the other. One of the most significant results of your education is to give you a more vivid and real sense of the need and at the same time to increase your powers of ministering to it. Whether your life is a success or failure will be determined solely by the set of responsibilities which you recognize as supreme and which you heartily endeavor to discharge. As you enter the world, with its bewildering confusion of clashing interests, its lights and darkness, good and evil, its strife and discord, its hopes and fears, its stubborn questionings, its mystery, its doubts, its brute facts, and its deeper and triumphant tones of prophetic promise—as you face it all, impatient to become a part of it all, I beseech you in this quiet hour, pray that you may quit yourselves like men. Give your strength to the world's weakness, your faith to its doubt, your hope to its despair." This lesson of religion in business is one of the most important that can be taught to a graduating class or to those in the broader university of everyday life. Christ announced it, and President Hibben took those words for his text:

Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's. (Luke 20: 25.)

Fearful Submarine Disaster

IN the course of a mock battle off Cherbourg Peninsula the submarine Vendemiaire was cut in two by the French battleship Saint Louis, and disappeared in one hundred and fifty feet of water. Twenty-three, all on board, perished. The submarine attempted to come to the surface at the rear of the battleship, but by mistake came up directly in front of it and the fatal collision occurred. This is the sixth submarine the French navy has lost, among them the Lutni, Le Farfadet and the Pluviose. The submarine just lost was 160 feet long, with a beam of 16.4 feet and a draft of 13.6 feet. Her displacement was 398 tons, and she had 700 horse power. The engines of war on the sea are dangerous things. They will kill even in play, and kill their own men too. We have here an illustration of the folly as well as fatality of war. Christ and a Christian civilization are demanding and will have an end of this murder for pride and power which we call war, and supplant it with wisdom and peace.

A French Submarine of the Same Type as the Destroyed "Vendemiaire"

Wisdom is better than weapons of war. (Eccles. 9: 18.)

Indians Against Prize-Fighting

AMONG the many protests against the Johnson-Flynn fight scheduled for July 4 at Las Vegas, N. M., none is more significant than that of the Indians: "We, the Indians of the Laguna Pueblo, Valencia County, New Mexico, in meeting assembled, express our disapproval of all kinds of fighting, prize-fighting for money included. What is not good for Indian boys and men is not good for white boys and men. Many parts of our country do not allow fighting, and we do not want it permitted in New Mexico. We believe fighting to be bad and a sin. Sin is bad, whether it is big or little. Sin does not care who it hurts. Fighting will be bad for Indians and all. . . . White men tell us not to fight and then fight themselves and set us a bad example." This petition should both shame and stir the white man to proper action. These children of a savage race are protesting against the barbarism of a civilized people. The missionaries had done their work well and the Indians had learned the great truth that If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die. (Rom. 8: 13.)

Surprised with a Fortune

LOUIS LE BOUT, a farm hand at twenty dollars a month at Bird's Corner, N. J., went West the other day to get a fortune estimated at $200,000, left to him in the will of Mrs. Josephine Watts of Lengby, Minn., the widow of a wealthy lumber merchant. Le Bout was not related to the deceased, but was said to resemble her only son who had died and was a young man who, while a farm hand near her summer home, had done her many favors. Le Bout was about to have been married, and the wedding had to be postponed till his return. If to this good fortune there be added a continuation of industry and correct living it may be an untold blessing to them and to others. This earthly bequest suggests the inheritance received by all servants of Christ.

Ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance. (Col. 3: 24.)

Lincoln, the Bible, and Shakespeare

MR. E. J. EDWARDS, in a recent contribution to the New York Mail, called to mind a trip made by Mr. Lincoln, Secretary Chase, General Wool and a few personal friends on the boat from Washington to Fortress Monroe in May, 1862. Lincoln was lost to the company for some time, and on searching he was found in a secluded place reading a copy of the Scriptures. A little later he asked for a copy of Shakespeare. The President opened the volume, first saying: "There are two books I read when I have time. They are the Bible and Shakespeare. I'll read you a passage that I am fond of." And he read one of the scenes from "Macbeth." That finished, he read a scene from "Hamlet." Then he opened to "King John," turning so quickly to a scene in one of the acts that it was apparent he was familiar with it. It was the scene in which Queen Constance, in the agony of her maternal love, describes her sense of loss in the death of the prince, her son. Lincoln's voice was very tremulous as he read those lines. Then closing the book, he said: "Have you ever in a dream found yourself in conversation with one who is very dear to you and who is dead, and yet in the dream have been conscious that the conversation was not real?" "Mr. President," one of the company said, "that is not an unusual experience." "It is mine," said Mr. Lincoln, "and has often been mine since the death of my boy. Many times I hold conversations with him in my dreams that seem real, and then I awake to the unreality." The President's young son "Tad" had died a few weeks before this, and the loss of this child was a sorrow from which Lincoln never recovered. Lincoln was the jolliest and the saddest man that ever lived. Wit and pathos lie side by side and are made of the same material. It would be natural that such an intellectual giant should have such books as the Bible and Shakespeare as his favorites, and natural that they should contribute so immensely to his mental and moral stature. When his heart broke at the death of his boy "Taddie" he found sweet solace in the Bible and in the life and reunions it promised. With the king he could say:

I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me. (II. Sam. 12: 23.)

Margaret Sangster's Last Story

This Charming Sketch Was Written for "The Christian Herald" Shortly Before the Author's Fatal Illness

The Catnip Woman

THEY call me the Catnip Woman," she said, while a smile lit up her face. She had taken off her plain Shaker bonnet and laid her long cloak over a chair, and had given me the little basket which she had brought with her down the long hill road. When I opened it I saw two or three articles tempting enough to delight an epicure and dainty enough to please the most fastidious housewife. There was a pound of golden butter; beside it a box of lucent honey in the comb, and wrapped in a white napkin; completing the gift was a loaf of such brown bread as I had praised when, several years before, I had been a guest at the hospitable board of the Mount Lebanon Shakers. Bread and butter and honey! Are they not the requisites for a feast? My friend has passed many years of her quiet and beautiful life as a member of the tranquil community who have their home on a hilltop overlooking a wide range of country, well timbered, well cultivated and inhabited by good people whose homesteads can be seen nestling among orchards and fields, as far as the eye can discern.

"Why do they call you the Catnip Woman?" I inquired. It seemed to me that she might better have been called after a garden flower or a wild rose than after this humble denizen of pasture lands and fields. She explained. I will put the explanation into my own words.

The Shaker people, following, I suppose, the example of early Christians, have no single possessions of their own. Everything goes into the common fund. They live in celibacy and are called brothers and sisters. They unite on the Sabbath in their morning worship and they have an agreeable family life. The men and the women alike work and work hard, the tasks being subdivided. The sister who was talking with me had charge of a large dairy, cared for the milk, cream and butter, and rose the year round as early as five in the morning. I knew the immaculate cleanliness of her dairy and the scrupulous nicety with which every detail of her work was carried out, and I also knew how severe and ascetic was her entire life. I had been entertained in her room and had there seen the austerity softened by her books and plants and the reading matter which she enjoyed. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had long been her favorite paper, and she subscribed for it herself. From time to time she had shared in its benefactions, sending her contributions to sufferers from earthquake or famine or to Mont-Lawn when the opportunity came. Understanding that the members of her community had little spending money and went, when they required clothing or other essentials, to the heads of the family, very much as children go to parents, asking and receiving what was necessary, I had desired to know where this bountiful soul obtained what she wanted for her little luxuries and her larger charities. This was why she went out and gathered catnip, finding a market for it in a Massachusetts town and spending the money thus earned in the personal ways she chose. Not all of it, however. A certain share was devoted conscientiously to the community funds. She said with the same irresistible laugh of amusement in reply to my inquiry as to the uses of catnip: "Why, my dear! Catnip has a dozen uses. Everybody who has a cat must have catnip. It is the finest thing for babies. All old-fashioned people will tell you that catnip tea is very soothing for fretful little children, while it never can do them any harm; and when grown people are nervous and cannot sleep, there isn't a thing in the world that soothes them like a cup of hot catnip tea just before they go to bed. It is a wonderful nerve tonic. I mean to give you some, though I don't think you can be nervous. Still, it may do you good. I will tell you just how to make the tea, and you must sweeten it with loaf sugar.

"When I go to gather my catnip, I know all the best places where it grows. I generally take a little girl along with me, for I enjoy talking with children and I like to have the children I am interested in learning all about the woods and the fields. We come on the most charming surprises sometimes. There are places where the wild bees make their honey, and I have found them out, and more than once I have suddenly discovered a hen that had stolen her nest and felt herself perfectly safe because she had wandered away from the place where she should have been. You sit down in the woods sometimes, and you hear the birds singing just as if they were pouring out their little hearts in a flood of perfect joy. The squirrels are very friendly. They don't mind me in the least, and when the rabbits scurry past it isn't because they're afraid. It's only their way. I gather my catnip in meadows and pastures, and I cut long stalks and lay them out even to dry, and when I carry it in to the man who buys it it is perfect; every stalk and flower and leaf free from dust, and fragrant. I love every bit of it. It is my recreation, for I never go to gather my catnip until every bit of my real work is done, and I have an hour or two to spare. One of my rules is that you must put work before play. I give good weight and measure, and when my catnip is put in the druggist's window, he is proud of it and so am I. Then I portion out my money and it makes me happy to think that some of it will help a poor little famished city child to get two whole weeks of beautiful life in the country, with milk and eggs and wholesome food and fresh air, and that some of it may go far across the sea to the Chinese or the Hindus or whoever else happens to be starving at the time I send it, and that part of it will bring me every week in the year a visit from the paper they print in the Bible House, letting me sit down on Sunday afternoon and have a talk with you and with the rest of the people who do not have to look after milk and butter, and so have leisure to write for busy women like me to read."

I smiled in my turn. I wondered whether the Catnip Woman, bless her! considered me a pers of leisure and herself a busier woman than Everything depends on the point of view. I wo der again what the sister will say when she rea her story on this page. I am venturing a little, b not very much, in telling all the many other bu women about her talk with me. I am reasonab certain that there are few idlers among the wom who gather about our CHRISTIAN HERALD hear from week to week. Some of us are notable hous wives. Perhaps we have even taken prizes for t excellence of our bread and cake at the county fai Some of us have our hands full with the fami sewing and mending. Then I look at a heaped-u mending basket with a vast amount of respect. is the symbol of a mother's never-ending industr Some of us are on committees for clubs and hosp tals and neighborhood settlements. A few of u have a great deal of money and it taxes ou powers to act as stewards for God in its di tribution. We have seen how wisely and we the rich women of this lan have recently administere their great estates in doin good here and in othe countries. The women wh plan and execute munif cent charities, who buil better homes for the poo who fight tuberculosis an strive to bring about im proved sanitary condition in congested quarters of th town, those who endow co leges and assist foreig missions, work in their wa with precisely the sam spirit that is shown by m Catnip Woman. Women re alize that what they d must be done quickly. Ther are seven days in the wee and twenty-four hours i the day, and sixty minute in each hour. We wome are thrifty of time, and s we have learned that w may properly take time fo rest and for play, if ou tasks are well done.

There are other sisters i the little Shaker Commu nity where my friend lives They address one always b her Christian name, an use as a matter of cours the form "Yea" and "Nay," instead of "Yes" and "No." The simple language fall pleasantly from their lips There are women here o gentle birth and breeding and among them are wome of liberal education wh have chosen for one or an other reason this life o partial withdrawal fro the world. On occasion the go away and pay visits t their friends, and they have as much interest in the happy marriage of young people whom they know, as have others who have never adopted their peculiar creed. One dear sister said to me, with shining eyes, alluding to a young girl who had been brought up in their community, but who is now a happy wife: "I wish you could see her babies. She is the dearest little mother you can imagine." One sister with a singularly spiritual face and a manner of quiet dignity has a gift for writing, and expresses her thoughts in the choicest style of composition. A book of hers is on a shelf near my desk.

Only a little while ago at an advanced age Eldress Anna passed away. She entered the Shaker Community by her own desire in her girlhood, bringing to it her fortune of forty thousand dollars. She was beyond eighty when she closed her eyes in the last sleep. One of the brothers with whom I have long had a pleasant friendship came to Mount Lebanon as a little lad of eight, and is now confidently marching toward ninety. Life goes on so quietly with these good people that they seem to live as the trees do, having few maladies to interrupt the progress of health, and finally falling quietly on sleep. Their community life is an anachronism in our period, and as they are not now often recruited from the ranks of the world, a day is coming when their fields and farms must be tilled by other hands.

ANXIOUS MOMENTS

From a painting by Jose Israels

AN IMMENSE burden of anxiety is sometimes laid upon the faithful hearts at home when the bread-winner is delayed at sea. Wives, mothers and sisters and little children watch and wait, gazing with longing eyes for the first glimpse of the sail, and fearing they know not what when a storm has tossed the waves to fury. The artist has caught the feeling of the fisherman's family when the boat has not come home. When first the sail is seen on the far horizon, anxiety is lost in joy. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A CUBE OF LEAD

BY CHARLES LEE SLEIGHT

MAY I have one or two specimens?" asked John Spencer, leaning over the pile of mineral near the shaft's mouth.

"Sure! help yourself," returned the ner, as he swung the empty bucket down to his rtner below.

Spencer pawed over the bits of lead, and suddenly ked up one and held it out, saying: "Isn't that a auty?"

"Thunder!" exclaimed the miner, pouncing upon article and examining it carefully; "you've and the thousand-dollar cube!"

"The what?" queried Spencer.

"The thousand-dollar cube," repeated the miner. at Ryan has a standing offer of a thousand dol- 's' reward for the first perfect cube lead found."

"But by right it belongs to you," d Spencer.

"No, it don't. I gave it to you. sides, the reward goes only to the an who finds it. I'm making good y here, and I reckon"—he paused, d glanced at Spencer's threadbare at and rusty hat—"I reckon you n find use for the money. If you'll it till we knock off work, I'll go th you and tell Pat it's a square al."

Spencer sat down upon an empty g. A thousand dollars! It was the ry sum he had been trying in vain r three long years to lay by. With at he could go back East, restock d enlarge Aunt Mary's little store, d be with his motherless boy always. s eyes grew misty as he pictured e foregathering with the dear little rly-haired, blue-eyed chap, the iage of his lost wife, and realized at he had at last, by a miracle, ached the turning of the long lane.

They found Ryan in the office of e smelting works, a stocky, red- ced Irishman, in shirt sleeves, ewing a big unlighted cigar.

"Faith!" he cried, delightedly, on holding the cube of lead, "I've been oking for that same these five years. ire, I know it's all right, if Bill unce vouches for you."

Opening the safe, he took a thou- nd dollars from a package of bank- otes. "There you are, and heartily elcome! and here's a ten-spot extra pay Bill for his trouble."

On the way to his lodging Spencer opped at the post office and got a tter, postmarked from his home, t addressed in an angular chirog- aphy unfamiliar to him. He thrust unopened in his pocket, and pro- eeded homeward. In the vestibule, hile searching for his door-key, he oticed a man standing on the side- alk, looking expectantly up and own the street. Presently another an appeared, and said to the first ne: "Did you get the stuff?"

"No," growled the other, dis- ustedly. "I dropped your doctored ube on a pile of mineral at Bill unce's mine, for I knew Pat Ryan would take Bill's ord that everything was on the level. Then I alked away, meaning to come back and pick up the ube, casual-like, while Bill was a-looking; but when come back, the cube was gone! Some other galoot ad found it."

"Well, you were a fool!" cried the other, angrily. And they walked away.

Mechanically Spencer unlocked the door, and en- red his room.

So the cube he had found was a fraud! He might ave known it. Among his specimens, gathered during three years, he had a score of cubes, but every one was defective, a corner off, a nick in the side, something to mar perfection.

Taking the thousand dollars from his pocket he counted it several times, and spread the tempting bills upon the table.

They were his—legally. Pat Ryan had given them willingly, and would never miss them. Ryan owned the big smelter, he practically owned the First National Bank, he was receiving big royalties from acres of mineral land. Moreover, he would never know of the deception, for the two men who had concocted the scheme were blacklegs, and would not dare mention it.

He reasoned the matter pro and con, until it grew so dark he could not see the bank-notes spread before him. Then he lighted the lamp, and gazed about the little room. A ray of light fell upon a photograph of his boy tacked upon the dingy wall opposite. As he caught sight of little Jack's face, he groaned. How could he ever face those honest, trustful blue eyes, with the brand of a thief upon his brow?

Hastily sweeping together the bank-notes, he put them in an envelope, sealed it securely, and wrote upon it "For Pat Ryan," muttering, "I'll refund the money, and tell him the truth."

As he thrust the envelope into his pocket, he felt the forgotten letter received at the post office. Drawing it forth he studied the address a moment, and then opened it, not without misgivings, however, for he feared his aunt must be ill and had asked some neighbor to write in her stead. Such seemed to be the case, for the letter, which filled one whole sheet of note-paper and a page of a second sheet, was in the same large, angular handwriting as the address, and was signed "Hester Baker," a girl living next door to Aunt Mary.

Apprehensively he began to read, as follows:

MY DEAR MR. SPENCER: I am writing this for your aunt, who after all the excitement and worry is completely tired out. Your grandfather is quite well, although he misses his departed chum, as he called him.

"Heavens! what does she mean?" muttered Spencer, shivering. "Is it little Jack?"

Leaning his arms upon the table to still the trembling of his hands, he went on doggedly:

They were not like grandfather and grandson, but were more like two children, with their games and romps and make-believes. Often they would talk of you, and of the great times they would have when you came home with plenty of money. But God willed it otherwise.

Dear little Jack passed away peacefully last Tuesday after a short illness—pneumonia. Had we known the illness was so serious, a telegram would have been sent you at once.

Your little boy and Grandpa Spencer have always been much beloved, and the neighbors have gladly done all they could for your aunt in her trouble. She sends love, and will write you soon.

Hoping you are well and prospering, believe me

Very sincerely yours,

HESTER BAKER.

Spencer folded the letter, slipped it in his pocket, and stared with unseeing eyes at the wall before him. Little Jack was gone—gone irrevocably—forever! He sat for a while, dazed and stunned. Then, blowing out the lamp, he stumbled to the door, bent like an old man, and going forth bareheaded, walked up Main Street and turned into a side street that led around the base of Schwindel Hill and gradually lost itself in the prairie. He may have remembered, half consciously, that out in the wild prairie the road led by a number of abandoned shafts, black holes filled with dark water, into which other men had purposely or by accident fallen and found surcease from trouble.

The last shanty on the street was occupied by a young clergyman, the Rev. George Ward, a Harvard chum of his. Noticing that the door was open and the front room lighted, Spencer quickened his pace, but as he passed the house, Ward himself ran out, grabbed him by the arm, and, after a moment's scrutiny, led him indoors and seated him in a chair.

"What's the trouble, old man?" demanded the clergyman.

"Jack is dead," said Spencer, dully.

"Oh, poor fellow! your boy!" murmured Ward, his big brown eyes suffused. "You've had a letter?"

"Yes; here it is. Read it," said Spencer.

Ward glanced hastily through the letter, and then stared at his friend in bewilderment.

"I don't understand. Your boy—dead?" he queried.

"Read the letter, man!" cried Spencer, fiercely.

Ward, perplexed, turned the letter back and forth and studied it attentively. Presently a light broke upon him, and he asked, with twitching lips: "How did you read this?"

"How did I read it? What do you mean?"

"In what order did you read the pages?"

"Why, straight ahead, of course. The first page first, then the second, then the third—or, rather, the second and third together, they are written lengthwise of the sheet—then the fourth page, and then the second sheet.

"But, my dear man, no up-to-date girl writes in that straightforward way."

"Aunt Mary does."

"Your aunt? no doubt, in the old style, copperplate Spencerian manner. The fact is, Spencer, you've misread the letter. Your grandfather is dead, but the boy is well."

Spencer leaned forward, gripping the chair arms. "Are you sure, Ward?"

"Of course I am. Haven't I three sisters writing me every week?" and the clergyman waved his hand toward a row of photographs tacked to the wall, with a crimson Harvard pennant draped above them. "Each one has her own ridiculous way of writing. Sallie begins on the fourth page and then skips to the first. May's style is page one, three, two and four. Elizabeth starts on page one, jumps to page four, and then cavorts down the second and third pages—like your correspondent.

Continued on next page

Drawn by Joseph Cummings Chase

Spencer sat down on an empty keg. "A thousand dollars!"

Memorial Day at the Bowery Mission

A UNIQUE memorial service was held at the Bowery Mission on Decoration Day. A list containing the names of over seventy of the Mission's workers, converts and patrons who have passed away had been prepared, and was hung over the platform immediately under the beautiful gilt pipes of the famous old Marquand Chapel organ.

As these names were in full view of the congregation, they were eagerly scanned by the men. Strange emotions were stirred within the hearts of many of them as they recalled old associations with almost-forgotten comrades.

The service was of the simplest character. After the singing of the hymn, "When the Roll is Called up Yonder," the reading of the 90th Psalm, and the general prayer, the workers spoke in earnest and tender terms of those with whom they have been most intimately associated.

"Mother" Bird selected three names. The first was that of "her" boy, Victor Benke, the "Volunteer Organist," whose wonderful conversion, devoted service, and musical genius have made his connection with the Mission memorable. The second was that of "Big Tom the Thief," who spent twenty years in State's prison, and came to the Bowery Mission from Sing Sing some twelve years ago. Mrs. Bird gave some touching incidents concerning his devotion to herself, and his terrible struggle to live a Christian life. The third name was that of a man descended from one of the noblest families in Virginia, himself bearing the name of one of the most distinguished of our revolutionary patriots, but who fell through drink, and was for many years a denizen of the Bowery.

Mr. Thompson, the oldest convert, spoke of the Rev. A. G. Ruliffson, the founder of the Mission, and former superintendents, Mr. J. Ward Childs and Mr. W. D. Hughes. Mr. Putnam recalled the memory of Dr. G. D. Dowkontt, who did such splendid service as a physician; Mr. Church referred to the late Chaplain Law and to Mr. W. H. Horner, the author of one of the most popular of the Mission hymns, "I'm Holding On." Mr. Hunt, Mr. Chambers, Mr. Balevre and Mr. Alec Smith referred to several of the rank and file; whilst Mrs. Hallimond spoke of Mr. Simon Trenwith, the late financial secretary of the Mission, and of "Little Tommy Long," the child of the Mission, whose father, John Long, was so long and honorably associated with the work.

To Dr. C. H. Mead, the president of the Mission, fell the honor of referring especially to the Bowery Mission's great friend and benefactor, the late Dr. Louis Klopsch.

A member of the Brotherhood, Mr. J. P. Moran, contributed the following poem:

The matron mourns beside the graves,
Around the vaults where heroes rest;
Their children's children deck the sod
With floral gifts, from East to West.

The dead march solemnly resounds,
Where reverent crowds, by tomb and gr
Join in the nation's fervent prayers
For those who fought, their land to sa

The greatest battle ever fought
For country, honor, home and kin,
Dwindles to nought beside the fight
That strong men wage 'gainst crime an
The Christian soldier, armor-girt,
Nerved to great deeds by strength divin
Fights for a trophy, heaven itself,
That may be yours, that may be mine.

For these, called to the great Beyond,
In God's good true, repentant, brave,
For these, the Lord in Heaven be praised,
Who died our sinful souls to save.
Long may the Bowery Mission live,
Long may its teachings touch the hearts
Of sinful men; and bring from death
To life and love, God's counterparts.

The Memorial Lists Over the Bowery Mission Platform

The two center panels of the bore the names of departed wor and friends:

Louis Klopsch, T. DeW. Talmage, A.
Ruliffson, John Hall, D.D., G. S. Dowkont
J. Fernie, J. W. Childs, W. D. Hughes, I
Mackey, D.D., George H. Corfield, R. S. B
H. E. Rowland, S. S. Haight, Joseph Fi
Owen Kildare, F. S. Minaldi, W. H. Stew
M.D., A. Nathan.

The following is a list of conve whose names were honored:

Victor Benke, Simon Trenwith, W.
Horner, J. E. Barrett, Frederick Card, T
Strouse, Thomas Fairbanks, W. Denyse, Ja
Dodd, Charles Sandford, Thomas Nolan, J
Martin, William Roberts, John Randolph, V
ter Quivedo, Harry McGee, William Bro
Charles Ryanson, N. Eagleson, Oba Cu
John Carr, H. McCloskey, John Ginn, Ha
North, G. W. Luther, John Reid, John Kel
M. Roth, Harry DuBois, William McOwatt,
Mulholland, D. Whalen, W. P. Rogers, Ja
McComb, Wm. Elliott, John Kelly, D. Whit
William Schopf, Harry Finnell, Louis Hec
Thomas Seaver, Charles Ellis, William Lack
John Mann, Thomas N. Long, F. Connell
W. H. Pearson, Charles Wallheim.

On the last panel were the names three female workers, to whom m kindly tributes were paid:

Mrs. C. H. Kendall, Mrs. Grant Hopkins, M
C. Aery.

A CUBE OF LEAD

Continued from preceding page

"Listen a moment. This is the way your letter was written:

"MY DEAR MR. SPENCER: I am writing this for your aunt, who after all the excitement and worry is completely tired out. Your grandfather—

"Now, old man, we turn from page one to page four:

"passed away peacefully last Tuesday after a short illness—pneumonia. Had we known the illness was so serious, a telegram would have been sent you at once.

"Your little boy—

"Now we turn back and read down the second and third pages:

"is quite well, although he misses his departed chum, as he called him. They were not like grandfather and grandson, but were more like two children, with their games and romps and make-believes. Often they would talk of you, and of the great times they would have when you came home with plenty of money. But God willed it otherwise.

"Dear little Jack—

"Now we go to the second sheet of note paper:

"and Grandpa Spencer have always been much beloved, and the neighbors have gladly done all they could for your aunt in her trouble. She sends love, and will write you soon.

"Hoping you are well and prospering, believe me Very sincerely yours,

"HESTER BAKER.

"You see," commented Ward, "while it seems to make sense read the other way, a little reflection shows that the girl would naturally tell of the death before she speaks of the missing chum. Your mistake, however, was quite natural. Only last week Elizabeth sent me a letter that could be read two ways, but as it was all on one sheet of paper the signature showed which pages must be read last. So your boy is all right, and you can see him soon."

"Yes. But—" began Spencer, and then suddenly checked his speech, hurriedly thrust the letter in his pocket, and murmuring incoherent thanks, started homeward.

After all, it was unnecessary to tell Ward of the thousand-dollar cube. If he decided to retain the money—luckily he had not sent it back to Ryan—no one need know anything about the false cube.

Strange to say, the revulsion of feeling when he had learned that little Jack was alive and well seemed to have nullified his decision to return the money. The question was still open. The temptation was stronger than ever, for he knew now what it would mean to have no boy waiting for him. He began going over the ground again. Ryan would never miss the money. Aunt Mary needed it in her business, especially now that her father's pension had ceased. Jack was at the age when he needed a father's care and presence. Dear little Jack! As Aunt Mary said in her last letter, he was still an eternal interrogation point. He could imagine the little chap at the railroad station to meet him. The first thing would be a bear's hug, then would come the everlasting questions. "Did you bring lots of money back?" "Yes; a thousand dollars." "Phew! that is a lot! Did you earn it?" "No; a kind Irishman gave it to me." "Isn't that fine! What did he give it to you for?" "He gave it to me because"—the blue eyes were looking straight down into his soul, the eyes of the mother that always dragged the truth from every one's soul and lips—"he gave it to me because I was a cheat, and a liar, and a mean, contemptible thief."

Spencer found himself standing opposite the pump-shaft, hearing, but not heeding, the puffing of the huge engine and creaking of the machinery.

He looked around, and up at the still stars, like a man suddenly awakened. Then, turning, he fairly ran over the hard clay road back to Ward's house, burst open the door, and holding out the envelope breathlessly told his story.

"Come along with me now, will you, Ward?" he finished.

They found Ryan still up, dressed as usual in shirt sleeves, with the inevitable unlighted cigar between his teeth. "Walk in, gentlemen. It's highly honored I am," he exclaimed with exaggerated courtesy. "Step into my den. I'd call the wife, but she went to bed two hours ago."

"This is merely a business call," said Ward.

"Ah!" The good-humored features visibly hardened. "Well, Reverend, what can I do for you?"

The clergyman handed him the money and told the story.

"So it was a dirty trick!" growled Ryan, an angry frown contracting his bushy brows as he tossed the envelope on his desk. "When did you first learn about the fraud?" he asked of Spencer.

"About five o'clock."

"Huh!" sneered Ryan, "and it's now gone twelve. It took you some time to make up your mind to be honest."

"Good heavens, man!" cried Ward, "don't rub it in!" Then he told of the anguish his friend had been through in the hours just past, thinking his son was dead, and of his bewilderment on learning his mistake. "The poor fellow has been sorely tried," Ward continued, "and I doubt if another man in the town of Jasper would ever return your money under the circumstance He wanted it for the boy."

Ryan's face went white, and h staggered back and sank into a cha as if he had been hit squarely betwe the eyes. "The boy!" he repeate hoarsely, "his boy!"

"Yes," replied the clergyman; a he told of the motherless boy an lonely father waiting, toiling, hunge ing to be together.

When the tale was ended, Ryan aros and approaching Spencer, placed hand upon each of his shoulders, an said, gently: "What does he look lik —your boy?"

"He was a sturdy little fellow whe I left him," faltered Spencer, "wit curly, golden hair—and—and blu eyes—like his mother's."

The bluff Irishman's features worke convulsively. "Curly hair—blue eye —like—like—" and turning away, h walked across the room and stood fo some moments with his back towar the others.

Presently, brushing his hand acros his eyes, he again faced Spencer. had a little kid once, like yours—curl hair — blue eyes — like — yo know. The good Lord took him. I give every cent I own to have hi back. I'd scrub floors, shovel dirt, d anything to be with him. And you with your boy alive and well—you for lack of a paltry thousand dollars stay in this God-forsaken place eating your heart out—"

Suddenly snatching the envelope from his desk, he thrust it in Spencer's hand. "Take it, God bless you and go home to your boy. Tell him Pat Ryan sends this as a present to him in memory of another little kid with curly hair—and—and—blue eyes —Ah! clear out, the two of you, and give an old man a chance to go to bed!"

Happy Cozy Corner Days

THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL

WHERE there is Faith there is Love.
Where there is Love there is Peace.
Where there is Peace there is God.
Where there is God there is no Need.

How to Camp

Continued from Last Week

FOR the plates, knives, forks, spoons, and other odds and ends of your camping outfit a nest of pockets like a two-story shoe-bag is the very neatest and best thing ever, and can be easily made from a yard and a half of denim bound round with braid. Brown or green are best colors. The pockets accommodate the many little and important things that get so easily misplaced or broken. It can be rolled up and folded over in such a way as to take up very little space, and once you try it you will learn its value. Experienced campers use a camp pocket even when they go to the woods for a single day's picnic.

The Way to Make a Table in the Woods

What Mrs. Sangster Said to Home Girls

TO BE sure the woman nowadays may care for herself. She will not be a burden on her toil-worn father or a clog upon her brothers, since, if the necessity exists, she may herself become a wage-earner.

Nevertheless, the home daughter who is not discontented with her lot, but on the contrary who is willing to accept her household, her people and her quiet post of service as the one God meant for her will not find time hanging heavily on her hands. There is much room for tillage in the home vineyard. No background ever stands for so much to the conscientious young woman. Nowhere else can she find so many occasions for that lending a hand which lightens every pack, and bravely helps the fellow pilgrim along on his journey to the heavenly city.

It is not merely an affair of putting a flower in the father's buttonhole and mending mother's laces, and making the desserts and acting as the go-between and lieutenant in the domestic camp when servants are irritating and the mistress of the house bewildered. These little things count, but they are not all, nor is it the singing of a song at twilight, or the playing of a sonata to listeners whose hearts keep time to the melody. . . . This also is much, but it is not all. It is being mother's representative at any and every neighborly and social and church function which she cannot attend. It is taking her place when she goes away for a trip, after twenty-five years of absence, to the old home of her girlhood; it is reading to the infirm, and resting eyes that are growing dim, aged eyes of grandparents, tired eyes of the student. It is helping the pastor who knows to whom he may turn in an emergency, who will play a piano at prayer meeting when the regular accompanist is absent. It is being young and dear and sweet and well poised, and consecrating all you are to God. Surely the home daughter need not fear to magnify her place of honor in God's world.

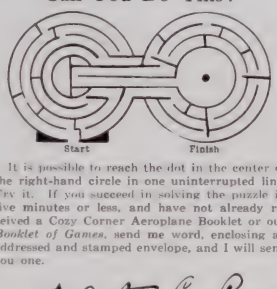
How to Use June Roses

THERE could scarcely be a lovelier gift than a string of tiny beads, an amulet, or a trinket to slip among your kerchiefs and laces to keep them sweet, made of roses and of the love and taste and patience that must go into the fashioning of such a gift.

The making of rose trinkets is an ancient custom revived and rosaries made hundreds of years ago are fragrant to-day.

Gather the rose petals when the dew is on them and screen them clear of every foreign substance. Put the clean dewy petals through a food chopper—the finer they are ground the better—and all the house will smell of roses. Spread the pulp on a china platter and set it in the sun for three days, stirring in a few drops of spring water now and again to keep it moist. When the pulp "works" in the sun and reaches the consistency of a light foamy dough that can be pressed smooth without crumbling it is ready to mold. Before they are quite dry, run a good-sized hatpin straight through the middle of the beads or amulets into a board and set the board in the sun for ten days, and they will grow hard and fragrant. Thread the beads on a strand of silk, the amulets on fine ribbon, and the older they grow the sweeter they will smell.

Can You Do This?



It is possible to reach the dot in the center of the right-hand circle in one uninterrupted line. Try it. If you succeed in solving the puzzle in five minutes or less, and have not already received a Cozy Corner Aeroplane Booklet or our Booklet of Games, send me word, enclosing an addressed and stamped envelope, and I will send you one.

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

OUR LITTLE PEOPLE

Who Stole the Yellow Bird's Nest?

"To-whit! to-whit! to-whee!
Will nun listen to me?
Who stole four eggs I laid,
And the nice nest I made?"

"Not I," said the cow, "Moo-oo!
Such a thing I'd never do;
I gave you a wisp of hay,
But didn't take your nest away;
Not I," said the cow, "Moo-oo!"

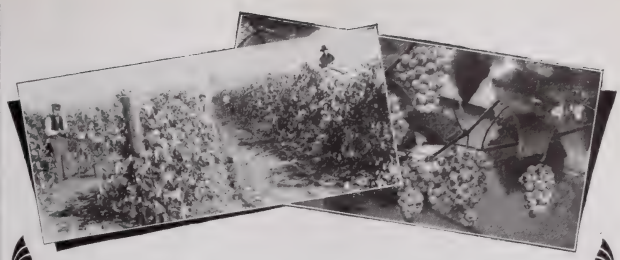
"Not I," said the dog, "Bow-wow!
I'm not so mean anyhow!
I gave my hair the nest to make.
But the downy couch I did not take.
Not I," said the dog, "Bow-wow!"

"Not I," said the sheep, "Oh, no!
I would not treat a poor bird so.
I gave wool the nest to line;
That stolen nest is none of mine.
Baa! Baa!" said the sheep; "No, no."

"Cluck! Cluck!" said the hen;
"Don't ask me again!
Why, I haven't a chick
Would do such a trick.
We each gave a feather,
She wove them together.
I'd scorn to intrude
On her and her brood.
Cluck! Cluck" said the hen;
"Don't ask me again!"

A little boy hung down his head,
And went and hid behind the bed,
For he stole that pretty nest
From poor little Yellowbreast;
And he felt so full of shame,
He didn't like to tell his name.

M. L. CHILD.



No Need For Tonics If You Drink Grape Juice

THE grape itself is the best of all tonics—a storehouse of health which yields energy and vitality, prevents dyspepsia, increases appetite.

Pure rich grape juice gives you all these priceless health qualities in a delicious, convenient, refreshing form.

And the purest and richest grape juice that it is possible to produce is

Armour's Grape Juice

The Family Drink

Bottled Where the Best Grapes Grow

The Armour Plants, situated in the heart of the famous Michigan and New York vineyard districts, command the best of each season's Concord Grape crop.

The splendid purple fruit left on the vines until ready to burst with the juice, goes to press the day it is gathered.

No sweetening or dilution of any kind.

All the goodness is retained by sterilization and air-tight bottling only.

Where there are children in the family Armour's Grape Juice should be on the table at every meal, and a bottle always in the ice box to quench between-meal thirst.

It will not only go far in keeping them in robust health; its wholesome natural sweetness satisfies their craving for sugar, and they will forget candy.

Armour's Grape Juice is sold by all grocers and druggists at fountains, buffets and clubs.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will send you a trial dozen pints for $3, express prepaid. Address Armour and Company, Dept. 167, Chicago.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

The Girl who doesn't Smile

The habitual expression of the face depends most upon the condition of the teeth.

Youth and beauty soon fade in features where smiles are not allowed to play freely. Two habits that soon grow inseparable are smiling features and the daily use of

Dr. Lyon's PERFECT Tooth Powder

Prepared for almost half a century by a Doctor of Dental Surgery.

First of all Dr. Lyon's is safe to use. It is a velvet, pure and gritless powder. It contains no glycerine, gelatine or saccharine to slowly work harm.

Dr. Lyon's preserves the teeth by keeping them unscrupulously clean. A beautifully polished natural whiteness with hard and healthy gums result from the thorough brushing it induces. A pure and lasting fragrance is imparted to the breath.

Three generations owe lifetimes of perfect teeth to Dr. Lyon. Before you have used one can you will fully understand why.

Use Dr. Lyon's night and morning—above all at night. Teach its use to your children to assure them perfect teeth even in old age.

What Dr. Lyon's does not do should be entrusted only to your dentist to do.

SOLD EVERYWHERE

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

A. N. G., Oregon. Is it proper for a minister in the pulpit to be personal in his remarks?

It is neither proper nor common. There may be cases where great provocation exists, or where it would seem necessary in order to make a point clear; but generally, personalities should be avoided. They are distasteful to hearers, and breed bitterness of heart, which a preacher of the Gospel should always avoid. If the pastor has any reason to personally address an auditor, whether a member or a stranger, it would be well for him to select an opportunity after the service for a quiet and suitable talk. We have seen occasions, however, where a sermon was rudely interrupted by the misbehavior of some one in the audience. In such a case, a personal admonition may be justifiable.

R. E. C., West Finley, Pa. What are the passages in the Bible which have been supposed by some to refer to the use of automobiles and airships?

Nahum 2: 4 has been quoted as referring to automobiles, but this appears to strain the meaning of the passage, which was written as a direct prophecy of the destruction of Nineveh. The verse describes the mad rush of those in chariots to escape the enemy. Isa. 60: 8 has been thought by some to be a reference to the coming use of airships, but here again the direct meaning is obvious, that in the time of Judea's prosperity ships shall flock to her shores as doves to the windows of their dovecotes. Hab. 1: 8 might be thought to presage manflight, but the figure is used to express the terrific haste with which the Chaldeans shall come against Judea.

Mrs. L. W., Prophetstown, Ill. Where there is no usher, should the lady or gentleman go first in passing down the aisle of a church? Who should precede when escorted by an usher?

If there is no usher the gentleman goes first. It is his duty to find a comfortable and available seat. In other words, it is his duty to act as usher to the lady he brings. When he has selected the pew the lady enters before him. When escorted by an usher the lady follows the usher, and the man comes last, unless the aisle is broad enough for them to walk comfortably side by side. These rules apply to all public gatherings.

H. T. D., Buffalo, Ala. 1. Who was the founder of the Catholic Church, and when was it organized?

1. Although Papal historians claim a much earlier date, so distinguished an authority as Hon. James Bryce says, "Strictly speaking, it is from the year 800 A.D. that the beginning of the Holy Roman Empire must be dated." It was during the bishopship of Siricius that the title of Pope was first applied to the bishop of Rome. That was during the fourth century, and he was the first to use the word as a title. After the fifth century, it was made the exclusive prerogative of the Roman bishops. The Roman Church claims a line of Popes in straight descent from Peter, although there is nothing in sacred or secular history to warrant the claim.

M. L. C., Bradford, N. Y. Please explain I. Pet. 3: 15.

This passage is one of encouragement to the sincere but timid Christian. Fearing God, and having nothing else to fear, we should not be afraid to honor him whenever the occasion serves, by confessing him before men and by giving a testimony to the saving power of the Redeemer and the assurance of immortality. It means that we should run up the flag whenever occasion demands. This is a holy duty and one need not be afraid nor even agitated in revealing what is in the heart—in showing, "the reason of the hope" that is in us in order that others may know that we are Christ's followers.

H. B. H., Newville, Pa. A noted evangelist conducting services here lately asked "all to stand up who are saved." Some ministers in the audience did not stand. Can any one say he is saved, if he has confessed Christ and is living a sinless life, as far as he knows how?

There are many good people who are unduly sensitive on the subject of personal religion, and who resent any inquiry as to the state of their souls. Now, there is a time for everything. Were an entire stranger to accost you on the street and suddenly inquire if you were saved, it might be disconcerting; but surely there can be nothing out of place in the act of an evangelist, while speaking to a religious assembly, if he were to ask such a question in a proper and reverent manner. Jesus says: "Every one who shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God," and surely if we are his followers and believe in him, we should be willing to confess him at such a time. Besides, there is a great blessing and joy that can only be known to those who confess him before the world. On the other hand, we have heard of evangelists who, in their presentation of the Gospel, used meretricious claptrap methods that were both undignified and irreverent and which far from attracting would rather repel. It is not necessary for any evangelist to indulge in theatricals. However, we think there is nothing more effective or persuasive than to see a large number of men and women rise in the audience to testify that they have accepted Christ as Saviour. It would be a very weak-kneed Christian, indeed, who would sit stolidly under such an invitation, instead of "showing his colors" like a true follower of the great Captain of Salvation.

Reader, Hackensack, N. J. What should be the attitude of a Christian (who aims to be consistent) when traveling with a company across the continent, with regard to Sunday observance? The plan is to arrive at the Grand Canon of the Colorado early Sunday morning and spend the day in exploring the place, in carriages or on burros.

See answer to another correspondent on Sunday observance. While some take a latitudinarian view of this question, we find no warrant in God's Word for devoting the Lord's Day to pleasure or sightseeing. Even under such conditions as you describe, one who is sincere in his belief can find a way to honor the Sabbath and can set an example which may influence others. We know that the modern tendency is to interpret Sabbath observance very broadly; but it is greatly to be deplored when pleasure or business is allowed to supersede the religious duties of the day. The question you ask, therefore, must be one for the individual conscience, and even if it should involve some self-denial, you should not hesitate to make the sacrifice, rather than desecrate the day which God's people ever since the beginning of history has set apart as sacred. Reasonable recreation may not be excluded, but to deliberately set aside the day for pleasure or entertainment is to violate the spirit of its observance.

S. B. Y., Cornwall, N. Y. Please explain in regard to the first resurrection.

The most definite statement occurs in Rev. 20: 4-6, in which it is stated that "the rest of the dead live not till the thousand years shall be finished." Some writers have interpreted this as referring to the spiritual awakening, which began to work in mankind after the coming of Christ, and that the millennium is the period from that awakening onwards. The majority, however, accept it as the promise of a literal resurrection of the righteous, when Christ will reign with his transfigured saints over men in the flesh. The nations in the millennium will be prepared for this higher spiritual condition, which will be the manifestation "of the world to come." Many volumes have been written on this subject, to show that the first resurrection is to be an actual, corporeal resurrection. This accords with the belief in the early church, which Paul expressed in I. Cor. 15: 23, 24.

A. E. W., Palm Beach, Fla. Please explain Rev. 17: 8: "The beast that was, and is not, yet is." Is not this confusing? In verse 1 of the same chapter, what is meant by "sitting on many waters?"

1. The language of Revelation throughout is mystical and figurative. The time when the beast "is not" is the time when it has the "deadly wound"—a time when the seventh head became Christian externally, while the beastlike character was only temporarily suspended. Enough books to make a fair-sized library have been written on Revelation, many of them with special reference to the "beast," which typifies the Antichristian world-power which, after a period of quiescence, returns worse than ever. Its semblance of Christianity is spurious and is quickly followed by open anti-Christianity. 2. The "many waters" are explained in verse 15 of the same chapter as typifying peoples, multitudes, nations and tongues. Many modern commentators identify Papal Rome with this terrible picture in the Apocalypse.

J. R., Hawarden, Ia. Was the saying "government of the people, by the people and for the people," original with Abraham Lincoln? If not, when and by whom was it first used?

It is claimed by some authorities that the quotation in question was first enunciated by Lycurgus, the Athenian statesman and orator, who flourished 396-323 B.C. We have not been able to verify the claim, however. Lycurgus was a pupil of Plato and supported Demosthenes against Philip. He was one of the greatest statesmen of his period, who served the public and safeguarded their rights against the corruption of the time.

Reader, Philadelphia. Your very question contains its own answer. You write: "Jesus says, 'Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.'" The only question is: Does Jesus tell the truth or does he lie? And you know, dear suffering soul, that he does not lie. There is nothing in the world to do but trust him. You repeat the question in your letter: "What must I do to be saved?" And there is one eternal, unchangeable answer to that: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." But you must really believe; really believe that he does actually forgive you now. And as soon as you believe you are forgiven. But the faith must come before the feeling; trust him, and as you trust you are comforted. It is a rule to which there are no exceptions that so long as we are troubled about our spiritual condition we have not "sinned away the day of grace." If there are people who have really done that, they ceased caring about it long ago. Of course you know that before forgiveness must come confession. If no one but yourself was affected by your sin it is only necessary to confess to God himself; if others were affected by it it will be necessary to confess to them, if it is possible to reach them. It may seem painful to do this, but the joy of forgiveness and the assurance of safety will be so great and so delightful that they will be worth infinitely more than the difficulty of confession costs. Some parts of your letter lead us to think that the act to which you refer preceded a former state of spiritual peace. If this is the case, it would seem quite evident that you are being tormented by the devil rather than convicted by the Holy Spirit. If you ever had the peace of God, you may be sure that all the sins you committed up to the time the peace came have been forgiven. Your peace came from the fact that all your sins were forgiven. And God is not going to open an account that has been closed and condemn you now for something of which he has once forgiven you.

N. V. R., Birmingham, Mich. 1. How many papers do the Presbyterians publish in the United States and in Canada? 2. What is the difference between a church college and a theological seminary?

1. In the United States thirty-six; in Canada eight. 2. A church or denominational college is a college more or less strictly under the control of a religious sect, such as Brown University (Baptist) and Syracuse University (Methodist). A theological seminary is a school for the training of clergymen. It is sometimes one of the schools of a university, as the Yale Divinity School, and sometimes entirely separate from any other academic affiliations, such as the General Theological Seminary in New York (Episcopalian). The regular college course is supposed to precede the theological training, though many theological students enter the seminary without taking the college course.

M. B., Warren, Pa. The Holy Spirit is God. No clearer explanation of the Holy Spirit can be given than that expressed in the creeds of the orthodox churches. This is that he is the third person of the Trinity. It is apparently impossible fairly to interpret the Scripture references to the Holy Spirit and the experiences of Christian people in regard to him in any other way than by accepting this doctrine of the Trinity. Jesus said he would send the Holy Spirit. Peter declared on the day of Pentecost that he had come, and explained that Christ, after he had been exalted to the right hand of God, had sent him in fulfilment of the promise. (Acts 2: 16-33.) His work is to convict of sin, to lead to repentance, to guide the believer, to reveal Christ, to be the Comforter in trouble, to strengthen and to sanctify the soul, to be the Guide, the Energizer, the Sanctifier of the Church.

Miscellaneous

A. A., Magnolia Springs, Ala. We know of no reason why such a person could not be a Christian. We are too apt to judge of others, and should strive to avoid doing so.

P. M. P., Norfolk, Va. The purchase of stocks and bonds, cotton or other legitimate investments cannot be objected to. Dealing in futures, however, is a species of gambling.

Mrs. S. R. D. In OUR MAIL-BAG of May 8 we replied to your inquiry concerning the disposition of the remains of John Wilkes Booth. If you will communicate with Miss Elizabeth Wright, at 1427 Asquith Street, Baltimore, Md., she will be glad to furnish more complete information.

E. B. A., Lovejoy, Ga. We think the statement is greatly exaggerated. The only way to arrive accurately at the average salary of a missionary is to get the figures from the various missionary boards. We believe you will find the average salary to be considerably less than $1,000.

Reader, Sapporo, Japan. It is humanly impossible to decide the question. We may be sure, however, that no gift ever came from the hands of Deity that would result in injury to the human race or in a degradation of whatever is noble, intellectual and spiritual in man. We should certainly take this view in preference to all others.

P. H., Marquette, Neb. King Saul's life was a tragedy of the evil passions. Toward the end, he seemed to be forsaken of God and entirely given over to his sins. Whatever may be the influence of such a career, as far as the final judgment of Saul is concerned it must be left with a higher power. We have no right to pronounce judgment on any one.

A Missionary's Appreciation

The Christian Herald Almanac is a capital "institution"—a splendid idea. Why, I culled a great deal from it, and sent it to Bonne Terre, Mo., thinking my grandsons would be much benefited by it. MARY C. WINSOR.

Sirur, India.

BECOME A NURSE

THIS school prepared these three women in their own home, to become successful nurses. One writes, "I have more work offered than I can accept." Another, "I have worked for eight different physicians." The third, "I received $20 to $30 a week."

Our method of training has made it possible for thousands of women, with and without previous experience, to earn $10 to $25 a week as professional nurses.

Send for a copy of "How I Became a Nurse" and our Year Book explaining method; 248 pages with interesting experiences by our graduates. Eleventh Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Jamestown, N. Y.

BUST and HIPS

Every woman who attempts to make a dress or shirt waist immediately discovers how difficult it is to obtain a good fit by the usual "trying-on-method," with herself for the model and a looking-glass with which to see how it fits at the back do away with all discomforts and disappointments in fitting, and render the work of dressmaking at once easy and satisfactory. This form can be adjusted to 50 different shapes and sizes; bust raised or lowered, also made longer and shorter at the waist line and form raised or lowered to suit any desired skirt length. Very easily adjusted, cannot get out of order, and will last a lifetime.

"HALL-BORCHERT PERFECTION Adjustable Dress Forms"

Write for Illustrated Booklet containing complete line of Dress Forms with prices.

Hall-Borchert Dress Form Co.
Dept. 17, 30 W. 32d St., NEW YORK
Dept. 17, 163-171 North May St., CHICAGO
Dept. 17, 70-75 Pearl St., TORONTO, CAN.

A Safe Investment at 5%

Your money with this Company is secured by mortgages on the very best New York and suburban Real Estate. Every year 150,000 additional home-seekers are added to Greater New York. We loan them money to help build their homes. That is why we have been enabled to pay our depositors 5 Per Cent for the past nineteen years. Our business is conducted on a safe and conservative basis, under the stringent regulations of the New York Banking laws, and our records are open to the public.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Any amount, from $25 to $3,000, draws 5 per cent from day of deposit to day of withdrawal, which may be upon short notice.

Write for Interesting Booklet.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

LADIES EASE YOUR FEET

A customer writes, "You could not have fitted me better. For the first time in years my feet are comfortable. The soft glove-like feel of is simply charming." Soft, easy, durable, neat, stylish; genuine hand-turned shoes of Vici kid. Nolining to wrinkle and chafe; no breaking in necessary. Absolute comfort and fit guaranteed or money refunded. Price includes O'SULLIVAN RUBBER HEELS, the shock absorbers of new live rubber. Write for free catalog and self-measure blank. All styles. Customers everywhere.

PILLOW SHOES

$3.00 Postpaid in U. S. A.

PILLOW SHOE COMPANY
184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

CHALLENGE Brand WATERPROOF COLLARS & CUFFS

A perfect substitute for the linen man. Linen-style linen fit, linen appearance and no laundry bills. At Dealers—Style Book FREE on Request. The Arlington Co., 725 Broadway, New York

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on manufacturers' prices. Buy our Factory Rebuilt Typewriter. Nearest-to-new on the market. Has trademark and guarantee like new machines. Are thoroughly rebuilt, highly polished, and perfect in appearance. Satisfaction guaranteed. We are the largest rebuilt typewriter concern in the world. Branch stores in leading cities. Write for catalog of standard makes.

American Writing Machine Co., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

DEVELOPING—PRINTING—ENLARGING

Best Work, Quick Delivery, Low Prices. Developing 10 cents per roll. Prints 3 cents up. Send 2 negatives for Free prints.
H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ENTHUSIASM*

International Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE Lord Jesus was an enthusiast, and when we say this we are describing his untiring zeal in being about his Father's business. His enemies, the Pharisees, said he was "beside himself." His loving home friends, including his mother, tried to restrain him, as they thought, for his own good. Both kinds of hinderers followed him one day to a house where he was staying in Capernaum, probably Peter's house. It was soon after his return from preaching the Sermon on the Mount. He had healed a man with a withered hand in the synagogue, he had cast out devils, and had healed all manner of diseases for those who thronged about him. Even when sitting in Peter's house he was not exempt from these demands. The diseased might not indeed enter there, but his critics, the Pharisees, hesitated not to fill the house. They interpreted his great activity as being himself possessed of the devil, even the prince of devils, Beelzebub, and they told Jesus so. His answer was most sagacious—in substance, if he really was possessed of a devil, how could he be desirous of destroying the works of the devil and be successful in doing so? For the time being the enemies' guns were spiked, but their hard hearts were still filled with malignant unbelief.

Very different was the feeling which caused the mother of Jesus and his brothers to come to Peter's house and enter their protest against the excessive activities of Jesus. They wanted him to halt because of a loving concern for his welfare. They had been told that his works of healing had been so many that he had not had time to eat bread, and so they came to beg him to desist. The crowd was so great they could not come near enough to speak to him, so they sent word to him. He did not go out to speak to them, but sent a message to them in words that we might easily interpret in the language of our day to be: "You must not bother me, I am about my Father's business. If you are truly my loving friends, you will help, not hinder me." As we read the message of Jesus from our English Bibles, it seems somewhat harsh, but we know that Jesus could never have been harsh to his mother, nor even impatient, but only desirous of having her understand him and assume the right attitude toward his work. We might well consider which was the harder for him to bear, the malignant unbelief of the Pharisees, or the unwise interference of his mother and his brethren?

When D. L. Moody was a young man, just beginning his Christian work, he did it with so much zeal that some people, not a few, said to him, "You must go to work more easy and calmer, or your enthusiasm will soon drive way." As he told this after years of service, he said, as his face brightened up, "Thank God, the fire of my enthusiasm has never gone down yet, and it burns stronger to-day than ever. I feel as though even my bones were on fire. It is the fire of the Holy Ghost in our hearts that will give us enthusiasm in God and make us ever zealous as Christian workers."

Archdeacon Farrar once preached a sermon in Westminster Abbey on "Enthusiasm and Enthusiasts." He said among other things: "Enthusiasm is a Greek word. It means the fulness of divine inspiration; it implies an absorbing, a passionate devotion to some good cause. It means that when a man is an enthusiast, a spirit greater than his own has swept over him, has flashed into his conscience the conviction of absorbing truths, has made him magnetic to multitudes, has made him as a flame of fire which leaps up among dying embers, as a wind of God which breathes over the slain that they may live."

The Lord Jesus was an enthusiast by first right. It was his own vital energy that actuated him, a quality of the Godhead of which he was a part. It was his enthusiasm for souls that brought him down from heaven to earth to be the Saviour of men. How could anybody then, either from hatred or loving concern, stop him in his work? The friends of God and the followers of Christ have themselves become enthusiasts. Moses, in his devotion to Israel, dared to go before the Lord and offer a prayer for their forgiveness when they had sinned in worshiping the golden calf: "Oh, this people have sinned a great sin and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin—; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written" (Ex. 32: 25-35). And the apostle Paul wrote: "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren" (Rom. 9: 3).

How willing should we be in our smaller way to spend and be spent in service for others in Christ's name, and never to be weary of that service even though we may sometimes get weary (in body) in doing it!

Enthusiasm Other Than Religious

We quote again from the sermon of Archdeacon Farrar: "Think what enthusiasm has done even in the lower spheres which are not immediately religious. The enthusiasm of the student, of the artist, of the discoverer, of the man of science—what else could have inspired their infinite patience and their unlimited self-sacrifice? . . . It plunged Roger Bacon into torture and imprisonment; it made Columbus face the terrors of unknown seas; it caused years of poverty, of suffering, of persecution, of ignorant calumny to Galileo, to Kepler, to Newton, to the early geologists. They gave to mankind a toil intense and infinite, and if in these days man puts forth his power, his pomp, his skill, and makes fire, flood and air the vassals of his will, it is only because pale-featured sages have for his sake outwatched the stars. And what supported them? The inspired enthusiasm, the fervency of spirit which prefers labor to sloth, and love to selfishness, and truth to falsehood, and God to gold."

Malignant Unbelievers Becoming Followers of Jesus

The Golden Text for to-day (John 3: 19) is to be found closely following the story of the visit which Nicodemus made to Jesus by night. Nicodemus belonged to the company of men, the Pharisees, who gathered in the house at Capernaum with their hearts full of malignant unbelief and personal hatred of Christ. But Nicodemus, unlike them, opened the secret chambers of his soul for Jesus, the Light of the World, to enter in; at least he had not closed his soul to utter darkness. So he sought Jesus, coming by night to the room where Jesus lodged, saying to him, "No one can do these signs that thou doest except God be with him." What a contrast to his brother Pharisees, who thought Jesus' deeds were the works of the devil! We recall the incident here because it gives us assurance that malignant unbelief may give place in the same soul to loving trust. It certainly did in the case of Nicodemus, for we hear that he afterwards defended Jesus against bitter injustice of the Pharisees who were eager to bring Jesus to trial for preaching and teaching on the last, the great day of the feast in Jerusalem (John 7: 50). So brave and true was Nicodemus' defense of Jesus that "every man departed to his own house" (John 7: 53). Afterwards when Jesus had been crucified Nicodemus was willing to be counted among his chief followers, for he bought and brought to the garden tomb a mixture of myrrh and aloes, one hundred pounds weight, with which to embalm the body of Jesus. Nicodemus was not the only Pharisee who changed for the better. There was Joseph of Arimathea, who actually went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and assisted in taking it down from the cross, and then provided a tomb in which to lay the body of Jesus.

"Sin No More"

It is from the ranks of the malignant unbelievers that the hosts of Christ's followers must be recruited, and for our encouragement to work and pray for such persons we cite a few examples. Akaba was the captain of a robber clan. His treasures were filled with countless stolen stores. He came to Ben Achmet, a hermit living on the borders of a wilderness in Arabia, and thus addressed him: "Five hundred swords obey my nod; innumerable slaves bow to my control; my storehouses are filled with silver and gold; tell me how can I add to all these the hope of peace everlasting." The hermit led him to a rugged mountain track, pointed to three immense stones, bade him take them and follow him to the top of the hill. Akaba took them up; but with such a weight he could scarcely move. One by one he was obliged to leave them, and then he easily climbed the hill. "My son," said the hermit, when they sat on the top, "you have a threefold burden to hinder you on the road to a better state. Dismiss the robber band, set your slaves free, give back your ill-gotten gains. Sooner would Akaba reach the mountain top bearing those heavy stones than find real happiness in power, lust and wealth." Akaba obeyed the hermit and he found the peace he sought.

How Mr. Moody Worked for Unbelievers

For those who deny the divinity of Christ he quoted the following texts: I. Cor. 15: 47; John 5: 20; 17: 3; Mark 14: 60-65.

For those who felt too weak to undertake a Christian life he quoted Rom. 5: 6.

For those "afraid they will sin after they become Christians," I. John 2: 1: "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father." No believer is to make provision for sinning, but God has. When one has come into darkness shortly after conversion, it may always be assumed that it is due to one or both of two causes: either the inquirer has been ashamed to go home and confess his new purpose to his friends, or he has remembered some enemy whom he has been unwilling to forgive. Read to such Rom. 10: 9-11 to rebuke their fear, and Matt. 18: 21-35 to rebuke their hatred. To those who do not see that unbelief is the greatest sin read I. John 5: 9 to show that it is "giving God the lie." Challenge those who "can't believe" to show a broken promise of God.

For those who stumbled over the doctrine of instantaneous conversion Mr. Moody read the passages that speak of conversion as a "gift." Surely a gift can be instantaneously received. "Never tell a man he is converted. When he has been instructed and become submissive get him on his knees beside you and pray for him, and get him to pray aloud for himself, if nothing more to repeat the Syrophenician's victorious prayer, 'Lord, help me!' or the publican's prayer, 'God be merciful to me a sinner.'"

*THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS for July 7, 1912. Malignant unbelief. Mark 3: 20-35. GOLDEN TEXT: "This is the judgment, that the light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than the light, for their works were evil." John 3: 19.

Get your free jar

Don't allow good garden stuff or fruit "to go to waste." Preserve it for winter use—vegetables and fruit will not spoil in these air-tight, all-glass sanitary jars.

ATLAS "E-Z SEAL" JARS

These are the all-glass jars, with the all-glass cap—no metal to taint the fruit. No twisting and turning. No shattering, no splattering. Easy to fill, easy to seal, easy to open and clean.

Try putting up beets, beans, corn and tomatoes this season. It is fun when you use the E-Z Seal Jar.

Free Jar and Free Book

Cut out this coupon, take it to your grocer—he will give you one E-Z Seal Jar—FREE. Be sure and write us for FREE Book of Recipes—it tells many things you should know. Get the Jar from the grocer. Get the Book from us.

Quart E-Z Seal Jar FREE

In order to secure free jar, present this coupon to your dealer before Sept. 1, 1912, properly filled out.

HAZEL-ATLAS GLASS CO. Wheeling, W. Va.

This is to certify that I have received one "Atlas" E-Z Seal Jar free of all cost or obligation. This is the first coupon presented by any member of my family.

Name .....

Address .....

HAZEL-ATLAS GLASS CO. Wheeling W. Va.

TO THE DEALER—Present this to jobber from whom you received E-Z Seal Jars. All coupons must be signed by you and returned before Nov. 1, 1912.

DEALER'S CERTIFICATE. This is to certify that I gave one "Atlas" E-Z Seal Jar to the person whose signature appears above.

Dealer's Name .....

Address .....

Low Factory Price On Empire Fence

Sold direct to you. The fence that has stood the hardest test of service on some of the biggest farms in the country.

The Empire is made of

ALL BIG WIRES

Of Basic Open Hearth Steel with special Stay Tie—the strongest made. Heavily galvanized against rust.

All No 9 Wire

Knot Can't Slip

Write for Free Book

full of profit-making facts for you. A postal brings it. Also free sample and direct-from-factory price. Write BOND STEEL POST CO. 52 Maunee St., Adrian, Mich.

"RANGER" BICYCLES

Have imported roller chains, sprockets and pedals, New Departure coaster-brakes and Hubs, Puncture Proof Tires, highest grade equipment and many advanced features possessed by no other wheels. Guaranteed 5 yrs.

FACTORY PRICES are less than others ask for cheap wheels. Other reliable models from $12 up. A few good second-hand machines $3 to $8.

10 DAYS' FREE TRIAL We ship on approval, freight prepaid, anywhere in U. S., without a cent in advance. DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you get our big new catalog and special prices and a marvelous new offer. A postal brings everything. Write it now.

TIRES Coaster Brake Rear Wheels, lamps, parts, and sundries half usual prices. Rider Agents everywhere are coining money selling our bicycles, tires and sundries. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. P-71 CHICAGO

MARVEL SOLDER

INSTANTLY MENDS ALL LEAKS

is all kinds of household utensils—enameled, tin, iron, copper, brass, etc. Soldiers Without Heat. Just squeeze from tube and spread over hole or crack with fingers. Hardening, it makes solid, smooth surface. Patches all machinery. Fine for motorists.

Send 10c for trial tube.

MARVEL SOLDER CO. 1937 Broadway Dept. 8, New York

AGENTS WANTED QUICK SALES BIG PROFITS

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

War on the Deadly Fly

THE man, woman or child of average intelligence has learned that the fly is a deadlier enemy of man than any wild beast in the forest. Its malign work is accomplished silently, steadily and successfully by reason of its ubiquity and immense numbers. It has been calculated that a pair of flies beginning housekeeping in the spring will, if uninterrupted, have a progeny of three millions, whose little feet will be busy throughout the summer conveying bacteria to our food and drink.

It may not be untimely at this season to remind the reader, especially if a vacation to the country is contemplated, to examine the premises around the domicile with reference to the vicinity of stables and piles of refuse. The latter are the principal breeding places of the fly; it is wise to select a bedchamber as distant as possible, or to protect one's self by insisting that kerosene be poured upon the breeding places. It would be well also to war upon these migrants when they appear in rooms, and to insist upon wire covers for all food, especially milk and sweets.

An excellent fly poison may be prepared by adding a tablespoonful of formaldehyde, which may be obtained at the drug store, and an equal quantity of sugar, to one pint each of milk and water. Some of this mixture should be poured into a plate and a piece of bread saturated with it placed in the fluid, out of reach of children and animals.—New York Sun.

. . .

One Touch of Nature

STRIKINGLY sympathetic was the act of the girls in the white goods shops who struck because their sisters not so pretty as they were being discriminated against in the matter of pay merely as a matter of pulchritude. A few more instances like this, where genuine humanity asserts itself in an altruistic spirit, will do much to rid the city of the stigma, so oft implied, that nothing amounts to anything in New York but money.—New York Herald.

. . .

Playing With Fire

FIRES in the United States, according to plausible estimates, cost the people of this country $600,000,000 a year. Last year property worth $234,000,000 was destroyed by fire in this country. The expense of fire departments, water and similar "protections" and the money expended for fire insurance bring the total to more than twice that sum. The per capita property loss by fire in the United States between 1901 and 1910 was $2.71. Each man, woman and child lost much more than this, if the truth were known, by reason of the nation's terrible fire waste. The slowing down of industry because of the heavy tax upon the nation's resources, through the blotting out of great masses of property by flames, represents a loss that is absolutely incalculable. During the decade mentioned fires cost each European only thirty-three cents, each German only nineteen cents. Each of them burned up no more than a pocket handkerchief. Europeans have systematically taken precautions against fire as nations and as individuals. The responsibility is individual when matches and cigarette stubs are carelessly thrown about, when curtains are left to blow into gas jets, when inflammable rubbish is left lying in or near buildings, when any carelessness that may lead to a fire is permitted.—Chicago News.

Suffering in Alaska

DR. J. H. ROMIG, of Seward, Alaska, a well-known missionary, has sent the following telegram to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"SEWARD, ALASKA, June 10.

"Mount Katmai, the great volcano in Alaska, is in eruption. Two thousand four hundred people are destitute here. Many villages are covered with lava and ashes. Kodiak Island, sixty miles away, is covered with ashes from one and a half to forty feet deep.

"There are great slides of volcanic ashes in the mountains. The streams are dried up and all vegetation is covered with an acid mist, which is floating over an area of two hundred miles, killing vegetation. Live stock is perishing within the radius of devastation.

"We need food for the people here—enough for a short time, at least, until they can be permanently relieved. Can THE CHRISTIAN HERALD send any help? (Signed) J. H. ROMIG."

Associated Press despatches bring additional particulars of this sudden visitation. The towns of St. Paul and Wood Island, both in Kodiak, are buried beneath lava, ashes and pumicestone, and other villages have suffered in the same way. The volcano eruption in Katmai began on June 9 and lasted forty-eight hours. Dr. Romig's despatch was evidently telegraphed before the eruption ceased. Wireless messages from the revenue cutter Rush, relayed from Seattle, state that many lives are probably lost and the damage has been very great. Captain Perry of the Rush expresses the belief that the extent of the disaster "is far beyond that of any in modern history in that region." He asks for help "in the name of humanity." The gases emitted by the volcano cover an immense area and there is danger that many persons have been suffocated by them. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will receive and forward to Dr. Romig any contributions its readers may give for the relief of the sufferers.

MENNEN'S
Borated Talcum
FOR MINE

For Prickly Heat and Sunburn
Relieves all Skin Irritations

Sample Box for 4c stamp

GERHARD MENNEN CO.
Newark, N. J.
Trade-Mark

Modest Savings

We welcome the small investor. Our specialty is service to men with modest savings for investment.

Send for Circular 21—"Odd Lot Investment."

John Muir & Co.
SPECIALISTS IN Odd Lots
Members New York Stock Exchange
71 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Among the Workers

—REV. JOHN A. CHAMBLISS, long time pastor of the First Baptist Church, Plainfield, N. J., has been called to the presidency of Anderson College for Women in South Carolina.

—REV. OLAF MATHIASON, of Washburn, N. D., has just closed a series of meetings at Ingersoll, Okla., and is planning an evangelistic journey on foot from San Francisco to New York. He will do missionary work as he travels along. He plans especially to visit hospitals and prisons. He expects to finish his journey in about one year.

—EVANGELIST BILLY SUNDAY recently closed a series of revival meetings in Wheeling, W. Va. For about a month before these special services the churches of the district met for united prayer for the success of the movement. An auditorium seating 8,500 people was built especially for the campaign. As a result of this agitation 8,400 confessed Christ, and thousands were strengthened and helped. Above all, this sudden awakening of the people has terrified the great evil of the community—the saloon. So great was the interest shown that the large auditorium soon proved too small to accommodate all who wished to attend. People made excursions from the neighboring cities, over 700 coming on one train from Canton, O., nearly 100 miles away.

—FOR TEN CONSECUTIVE summers, missionaries of the Brooklyn City Mission and Tract Society have held Gospel services every day during the season on the beach at Coney Island. At least 270,000 people were thus reached. One of the society's missionaries recently visited the captain of a canal-boat lying in the Erie Basin, who said to him, "Coney Island was the means of my conversion. Four years ago I went down one late afternoon to the island. As I was strolling along Surf Avenue, I heard the sound of singing and went over to gratify my curiosity. I joined a small crowd which was listening to one of your missionaries, Mr. Rein. His Gospel message was clear and convincing. After the meeting he spoke to me and gave me this Bible. I read the Word, believed it, and now for four years I have tried to live a Christian life and to bring others to Christ. I believe that during these four years I have led one hundred and forty people to Christ."

—REV. H. J. VAN QUALEN, of Canton, China, writes: "I am very grateful to you for your kind favor of December 13, last year. Three of your readers have responded and sent me some cards for the children. Our Sunday school cards the children are just wild to get and many others as well. I am now working in two districts, having 120 towns, said to have about 300,000 inhabitants. There are about 300 schools for boys—none for girls—and in these schools as a whole about 15,000 boys. But there are many more thousands who cannot go to school, as their parents are not able to give five dollars per year for a boy. I am trying my best to get the teachers in the schools interested. Am now giving one hundred teachers each a Bible in their own language. Wherever I come the children crowd me and follow me outside the town to get cards. However, I am grateful to God and all the dear people who send me help from different parts of America. I hope THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may increase to millions, so as to be able to do as much as possible for our blessed Master."

—THE GOOD NEWS comes from Virginia that Accomac County has been swept by the most remarkable evangelistic campaign in its history. Under the preaching of E. T. Liddell, the Philadelphia evangelist, over eighteen hundred adult persons have been converted and have joined the church. A member of the Grand Jury reported that that body had never experienced such an eagerness on the part of men summoned as witnesses to rid the county of all illegal sellers of rum, and that indictments were readily found, for the witnesses were converts of the recent revival victory, and were ready to tell the truth concerning previous illicit buying. Accomac County has been entirely changed. Mr. Liddell is now laboring in the town of Keller in the same county, and the revival fires are still burning.

SAVES A FAMILY $1.86 PER WEEK In Cooking Expenses
Our 60-Day Free Trial Offer will prove this to you.

Pay for This Cooker With What It Saves You!

Fully Guaranteed. Freight Prepaid. Lowest in Price.
Send your name and address for valuable receipt book and catalog. Do it Now! Address
Dept. L 45, PIONEER MFG. CO., Racine, Wis.

Boys Who Have Won

Under this heading we shall print from week to week the photographs and records of some of our CHRISTIAN HERALD boys. It is an honor to be a CHRISTIAN HERALD boy.

John Alden Reed
Our Energetic Sales Boy from New Jersey

John commenced selling The Christian Herald in March of this year, and by a systematical, gradual increase, has built up a splendid business which requires 100 copies each week.

The secret of John's success is regular customers. He has 87 of them at the present time, and he is continually on the lookout for more.

John writes:

"I received the Certificate and Pin. I am very proud of the Certificate and the boys liked the Pin, but not as much as I did. Father was proud of me too, so was mother. I guess I won't have to wait long for the purse."

Aside from the Certificate and Pin, John has won a Coin Purse, a Name Stamp, a Pocket Knife and a fine pair of ball-bearing Roller Skates.

If he continues with his splendid increases, it is probable that he will soon be laying his bicycle aside and riding one of our beautiful Shetland Ponies.

From week to week we are adding the best CHRISTIAN HERALD boys to our staff. Any boy who would like to try should fill out this coupon and mail it.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a start in business and tell me all about how I may win the beautiful Shetland Pony, if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

MONUMENTS

Over $50,000 worth of White Bronze Memorials sold through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Moss-growth, chipping, cracking and crumbling, common to marble and granite are impossible with White Bronze. It will outlast the pyramids. More artistic, less expensive. Investigate. Write now for free illustrations and prices. State approximate cost desired. We deliver everywhere. Good Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
355-G Howard Ave.,
Bridgeport, - - Conn.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. "How?" Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

made low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

A GREAT DISCOMFORT

is a sour stomach. It often results in a sour disposition, as well as pain and distress. Sure relief may be obtained by the use of Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), which absorb gas and acidity, prevent fermentation, and sweeten both stomach and disposition. Once only, 10 cents in stamps will secure a full size, 25 cent box. A. J. Ditman, 9 Astor House, N. Y.

I Was Deaf 25 Years

I CAN NOW HEAR

with these soft, pliable, artificial ear drums, I wear them in my ears night and day. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them in my ears. Write me and I will tell you the true story,—how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Drum
1st Nov 4 1908

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
Address GEO P WAY, Manager
G. P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

BUY FENCE RIGHT

Get a fence that embodies both strength and beauty. Wood and flimsy metal fences are continual expense.

Ward Fence is made in the most beautiful and graceful patterns, built to last. Over 100 patterns from which to select for cemeteries, churches, parks, etc. Send for 1912 catalog.

WARD FENCE CO., Box Q, Decatur, Ind.

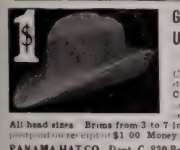
Buy the Original
ZIMMERMANN "AUTOHARP"

Trade Mark

"The Nation's Favorite"

None genuine without our trade mark "Autoharp". A musical instrument adapted to all classes. At all music stores, direct from us. "Easy to Play, Easy to Buy." Send for Free Booklet. Particulars about Phono-Harp postpaid.

THE PHONO-HARP CO.
East Boston, Mass.



Genuine All Hand Woven Unblocked PANAMA

From Weaver to Wearer

Can be worn in the condition by Men, Women and Children. Easily blocked in any shape or style. Just as serviceable as the $10 kind.

All head sizes. Brims from 3 to 7 inches. Light weight. Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. Money refunded if not satisfactory.
PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, NEW YORK CITY

SEND SAMPLE OF HAIR

and I will send on approval a 22 inch guaranteed natural wavy switch.—Price ... $3
If satisfactory, remit money order.
MME. FRIED, 25 West 34th Street, New York
Send for illustrated catalogue D

LADY AGENTS make large profit selling Radium Elastic Supporters; sanitary, made of soft perforated web. By mail 25c. Catalog free. Other good selling articles.
Illinois Suspender Co., 416 So. 5th Ave., Chicago

THE PUBLIC are requested to ask Congressmen about Circular 9, Navy Department, dated March 21st, 1878, and duly published at all Navy Yards. Respectfully, GEO. HIRAM MANN, 210 Fisher Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

PRESS OPINIONS

On the Late Mrs. Sangster

The Charm of Her Personality

AS a writer on topics relating to the home, Mrs. Sangster attained pre-eminence, and girls all over the country came to depend upon her for inspiration and guidance through the medium of the departments that she conducted in the different magazines and periodicals with which she was associated during her long literary career.

The charm of her personality that left its impress upon all who came into acquaintance or friendship with this gifted author, was translated into her writings, and to hundreds who knew her only by name she filled the place of a near and dear friend. In church circles no less than in the literary world she occupied a high place, and she was a most valued worker in missionary and other church organizations.—Brooklyn Eagle.

. . .

A Literary Admirer

AS ONE who admired her writings, and remembers gratefully a kind note she sent me, I want to send sincere sympathy in the loss of dear Mrs. Sangster. AGNES LOW ELLIS.
Canaan, Conn.

. . .

Loved Throughout the Country

FEW women have attained so distinguished a position in the realm of American literature as that occupied by Mrs. Sangster. As a poet of high merit, as a writer of strong yet graceful prose, Mrs. Sangster was known and loved throughout the country, while as an editor she had held responsible positions on leading periodicals for many years.—Newark Evening News.

Called Higher

Miss Edna L. Bowker (21), of Hawthorne, Calif., passed away a year ago in the bloom of her youth.

Rev. D. K. Flickinger, D.D. (87), of Columbus, O., died August 28, 1911. He was an old missionary, having made twelve trips to Africa.

Mrs. C. A. Rogers, of Moorefield, Neb., passed away August 31, 1911. She was for a number of years a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

J. G. Fisehbach (82), of Rossburg, O., passed to his reward a few months ago. He was a loyal church member for sixty years, and a devoted reader of this paper.

Mary E. Stanbrough, of Westfield, Ind., passed away May 18, 1910. She was for many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and a contributor to Mont-Lawn.

Mr. J. Wheeler (86) died at his home in Miniota, Manitoba, Can., where he for many years enjoyed the pages of this paper, which he asked for the day before his death.

Mrs. Adelaide B. Fletcher (79), of Blacksville, W. Va., an appreciative reader and subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for several years, was called home on August 20, 1911.

Mrs. A. M. Pierce (83) of South Bethlehem, Pa., passed away on August 22, 1911. She was for years a subscriber to this paper, and when she became too blind to read it herself, enjoyed having it read to her.

Mrs. Anna L. Carr, and eight weeks later her husband, William M. Carr, both aged eighty-five years, died in their home at Lansing, Mich., in 1911. They were loyal church members for fifty-three years, and devoted readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Answered Prayers

C. W. G., Litiz, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to my prayer."

Mrs. A. C. G., Litiz, Pa. "When in deep trouble my prayers have been answered."

Mrs. J. K. S., Avon, S. D. "I wish to acknowledge God's love in answering my prayers."

Mrs. D. C. G., Sterling, Kan. "I acknowledge God's answer to my prayers on behalf of a sick one."

Mrs. J. O. L., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. "I wish to thank God for a recent direct answer to prayer."

A Reader, Carroll, Ia. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness and mercy to me and my dear one."

Mrs. A. C. H., Lansing, Mich. "The Lord has answered my prayers through special trials and difficulties."

Mrs. C. A. B., Palo Alto, Texas. "God has been good in answering many prayers of mine; I was very ill, and he healed me."

S. M. C., Prophetstown, Ill. "God has kindly answered many prayers for me in the past year, for which I return thanks."

Mrs. L. M. L. "I wish to thank our Lord for his great blessing in restoring my daughter to health. I also asked him to give me my health, and am better."

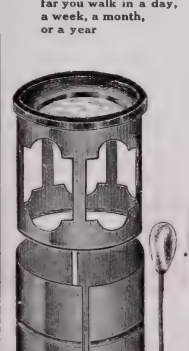
IN THE WOODS AND ON THE HILLS AND MOUNTAINS

Boys and Girls

Need these Articles

A Reliable Compass
A Powerful Pocket Microscope
A Pedometer

That will register how far you walk in a day, a week, a month, or a year



A Pedometer

A Powerful Microscope

A Reliable Compass

A COMPASS

is necessary in case, by chance, you lose your way in the mountains, among the hills, through the woods, or fishing or hunting.

By the aid of a compass, you can find yourself and get in the right direction.

We are prepared to give you the very best kind of a guaranteed compass FREE. Read carefully the offers below.

A PEDOMETER

Almost nobody realizes how much a healthy, good-natured boy or girl will walk in a day. Often miles and miles are covered just running errands alone. It is astonishing and entertaining, too, to keep your own record, and see how much sooner than you guess, you will have reached the hundred mile round. See offer below.

A Powerful Pocket Microscope

is useful in a thousand ways. With it you can examine insects, flowers, molds, and animalculæ: the whole fairy-land of science is entered through the magical doorway of the microscope.

If you do not own a microscope, leave no stone unturned to get one. Your world will be added to a thousandfold! We want you to have a microscope of your own, and we will give you one FREE. Read carefully the offer below:

OUR OFFERS

We will send entirely FREE to any boy or girl either Compass or Pocket Microscope, postpaid, as a premium for securing one new subscription to The Christian Herald for one year at $1.50. We will send entirely free to any boy or girl, postpaid, the Pedometer, as a premium for securing two new subscriptions to The Christian Herald for one year at $1.50 each.

SPECIAL COMBINATION OFFER: We will send the Compass, Microscope and Pedometer—all three articles, to any one, postpaid, as a premium for securing three new subscriptions to The Christian Herald for one year, at $1.50 each. Address,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK

MAKE YOUR BOY HAPPY!

By giving him THE BOYS' MAGAZINE. You could not give him a greater pleasure or a stronger influence for good.

WALTER CAMP edits The Boys' Magazine. Each issue of this splendid publication is filled with clean, fascinating stories and instructive articles, all of intense interest to every live boy. Also, each issue contains, departments devoted to the Boy Scouts of America, Electricity, Mechanics, Athletics, Photography, Carpentry, Stamps, and Coins. A new handsome cover in colors each month. Beautifully illustrated throughout.

SPECIAL OFFER! For only $1.00 we will send you THE BOYS' MAGAZINE for a whole year and a copy of the most useful book you ever read, "Fifty Ways for Boys to Earn Money," and this Electric Engine. This is a perfect little engine, considerably larger than illustration, with speed control and reversing lever. Runs 1,000 revolutions a minute on one dry battery. Safe; easy to operate. A marvel of mechanical and scientific ingenuity. Send in your subscription to-day. It will have immediate attention and the engine and book will be forwarded to you by return mail, all transportation charges prepaid.

SATISFACTION—OR MONEY REFUNDED

Address The Scott F. Redfield Co., 1103 Main St., Smethport, Pa.
THE BOYS' MAGAZINE is on sale at all newsstands at 10c a copy

Corns removed without pain or danger by A-Corn Salve. Try it on that stubborn corn of yours. 15 cents at druggists or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

Typewriters Slightly used machines, $10.00 up. Ten Days' FREE TRIAL. Express prepaid. Price List Free.
FRANK C PAYNE CO., Rosedale Station, Kansas City, Kan.

AGENTS BIG PROFITS

GUARANTEED SHOES.

Must wear one year or new pair free. All styles. Fit guaranteed. Quick seller, 98c profit on every sale. Write today for complete outfit. A postal will do.
GUARANTEED SHOE CO.
8724 Barny St., Dayton, O.

Powerful Physical Forces
Must be Governed by Mind and Brain
To Secure Results

Grape=Nuts
FOOD

supplies true nourishment for brain work.

Made of selected parts of wheat and barley, Grape-Nuts is rich in Phosphate of Potash—the vital tissue salt of gray nerve and brain cells.

A regular morning dish of this appetizing food Brings Results.

"There's a Reason"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited
Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.

Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.
Windsor, Ontario, Canada

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

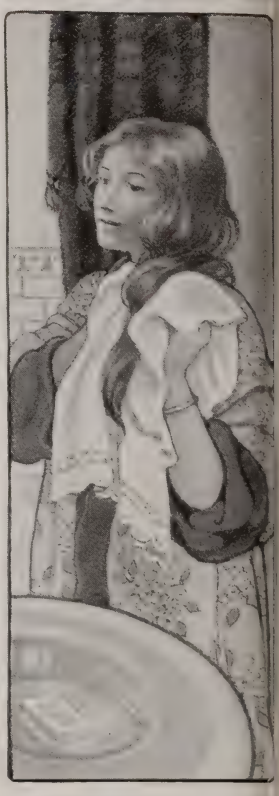
COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JULY 3, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 27. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

SUNSET ON PUGET SOUND

See description in this issue



Some Personal Uses of Ivory Soap

It is remarkable the number of toilet purposes for which Ivory Soap is used. From the top of the head to the soles of the feet it meets every requirement.

This, however, is not surprising when one remembers that Ivory Soap contains just the qualities which make for all personal cleanliness and much bodily comfort.

First of all, it has the cleansing power—cleanses in that refreshing way which is more than the removal of soil and perspiration.

Then, it is pure. Containing no "free" (uncombined) alkali, it can be used safely for any toilet purpose.

Last, but not least, it is mild and pleasant to use, and—it floats.

The Procter & Gamble Co.

Shampoo

To a bowl of warm water add enough Ivory Soap Paste (see directions below) to make a good suds. Immerse the hair inch by inch to prevent tangling and, with the hands, saturate hair and scalp. Alternately rub the scalp with Ivory Soap Paste and dip the warm suds over it but do not rub the hair. Do this about five minutes, then draw the head up and down to straighten the hair. Squeeze out the lather and rinse with spray or cup, gradually cooling the water. Dry by shaking and rubbing, in the sun if possible, but do not use strong heat. The color of grey hair is improved by adding a few drops of blueing to the last rinse water.

Dentifrice

Dissolve a small cake of Ivory Soap shaved fine in two cupfuls of hot water. When cool, add four tablespoonfuls of peroxide of hydrogen and four teaspoonfuls of essence of wintergreen. For paste, add more water. Keep in jars.

Manicuring

Dissolve half a small cake of Ivory Soap shaved fine in a half cupful of hot water. Then stir in two teaspoonfuls of olive oil and let cool. This cream rubbed around the nails will both cleanse and soften the cuticle. To polish the nails, shave fine a dry piece of Ivory Soap, rub the shavings on the nails with the tips of the thumbs and finish with chamois.

To Remove Stains from Hands

Dissolve a quarter of a small cake of Ivory Soap in a pint of hot water. Add two tablespoonfuls of household ammonia, three tablespoonfuls of alcohol and beat with an egg beater.

Massage

After washing and steaming the face, apply Ivory Soap Paste and massage gently. Then rinse repeatedly with warm water, splash with cold water and pat vigorously.

To Relieve Burning Feet

Make a hot foot-bath with Ivory Soap Paste and add five drops of oil of eucalyptus, a powerful, pleasant antiseptic. Keep the feet in the water for fifteen or twenty minutes.

Foot Powder Grate a cake of Ivory Soap very fine and put it in a can with perforated top. Sprinkled in shoes and stockings, this will give great relief. If a new shoe burns, rub a moistened cake of Ivory Soap in the shoe and stocking.

Shaving Lather

Moisten the beard thoroughly. Then rub over it lightly the end of a cake of Ivory Soap until there is a thin layer like cold cream. Work up a moist lather with the brush. Rinse. Work up another lather as before.

Razor Strops Rub with a fresh cake of Ivory Soap until there is a thin, even coat. Then moisten the palm of the hand slightly and rub the soap into the strop.

For Sting of Mosquito, Bee, Etc.

Wet a cake of Ivory Soap. Rub on affected part so as to form a paste and exclude the air.

How to Make Ivory Soap Paste

Shave one large cake of Ivory Soap into three quarts of water, or two small cakes into four quarts. Do this with a knife, vegetable grater or food chopper. Keep nearly, but not quite, at boiling point until the soap is dissolved. When cold, it will be like jelly. Keep in jars.

NEW YORK, JULY 3, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Hopi Basketry Worker

A Hopi Village on the Crest of a Mesa

An Old Expert Craftswoman

WHERE WOMAN RULES THE HOME

BY JOHN L. COWAN

The Head of the House

THERE are people of many languages, creeds and colors, deriving from their ancestors many peculiar customs, who enjoy the rights and privileges of American citizenship; but of all the diverse elements that enter into the making of this composite nation there are none more remarkable than the Hopi Indians of northern Arizona. Though citizens in name only, the Hopi are quite content to let things go as they are; others may vote for presidential candidates, run for office and enjoy all the privileges guaranteed by our Constitution, and it affects the Hopi not at all. If the government at Washington and the entire white population of America were wiped out of existence, the event would make little impression upon them beyond relieving them of the disagreeable necessity of sending their children to the schools which the United States Government has established for its Indian wards.

A Hopi Doll

A Hopi Maiden

To reach the strange mesa towns of the Hopi, a long but fascinating trip across the Painted Desert is necessary. The starting point may be Holbrook, Winslow or Cañon Diablo in Arizona, or Gallup, N. M. From Gallup, by way of St. Michaels and Keams Cañon, the distance is much longer than by any other route, but it is this way that the mail is carried by the only stage line to the borders of Hopiland.

There are eight Hopi villages, situated on three mesas. Upon the "First Mesa," the most eastern, are three villages, Tewa, Sichumovi and Walpi, so close together that they may almost be considered as constituting a single community. Seven miles west is the "Second Mesa," upon which are also three villages, Mishongnovi, Shipaulovi and Shumopovi. Mishongnovi and Shipaulovi are only a short distance apart, each on a hill upon the mesa. Shumopovi may be reached by a four-mile trail on the mesa's summit, or by a much shorter but very difficult path that first descends to the plain and then ascends again to the village. This is the most isolated and the most rarely visited of the Hopi towns. Still farther west is the "Third Mesa," upon which are located two villages, Oraibi and Hotevelte. The latter is commonly known as the "hostile village." It was established seven or eight years ago as the result of a dispute between the Snake and Eagle clans of Oraibi. Members of the Snake clan favored obedience to the command of the "White Father" at Washington, that the children of Oraibi be sent to the government school at Keams Cañon, while members of the Eagle clan counseled resistance. The dispute waxed so acrimonious that it resulted in a pitched battle of two days' duration, which was stopped only by the arrival of troops from Fort Wingate. The belligerents were ignominiously carted off as prisoners of war. On their release the disgruntled Eagle clan withdrew from Oraibi and established an independent village. The total population of these eight villages is about two thousand. Oraibi is by far the largest, with possibly eight hundred inhabitants. It is also the most ancient, occupying the same site to-day as in 1540, when Coronado sent his lieutenants, Pedro de Tobar and Fray Juan de Padilla, to visit the province of Tusayan. Of the eight villages, Walpi is the most picturesque, Sichomovi the smallest and Shumopovi the most primitive and conservative.

A Hopi Brave and His Son

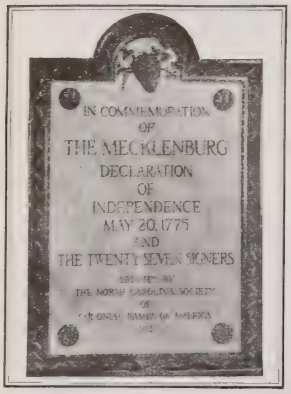
The Hopi are divided into numerous clans, each with its own ancient traditions and ceremonies. Each clan is represented in several of the villages, and some in all. From the traditions of these clans, as well as from a study of the language, it is evident that the present Hopi population is composite, made up of accretions from many widely separated sources. The language is classed as Shoshonean, but it contains many words of Keresan, Zuñi, Ute, Navajo, Apache and Pima derivation, and many archaic words not found in any other dialect. Dr. J. W. Fewkes, of the Smithsonian Institution, who is probably better qualified than any other authority to give an opinion, believes that the Hopi are the nearest modern representatives of the prehistoric cliff-dwellers of the Mesa Verde region of southwestern Colorado. By this it is not meant that the Hopi are of the same blood and race as the cliff-dwellers; but that the cliff-dwellers constituted one of the many tribal elements in the ancestry of the Hopi, and that the Hopi have inherited the culture of the cliff-dwellers to a greater extent than have any other surviving tribes of the Pueblos.

The Hopi reservation covers an area of nearly 2,500,000 acres, but much of it is occupied by the Navajos. They raise a considerable number of sheep, goats and burros, cultivate corn, beans, melons and a few other crops, and have extensive peach orchards. Most of their reservation is desert or semi-desert in

Continued on next page

MECKLENBURG'S DECLARATION

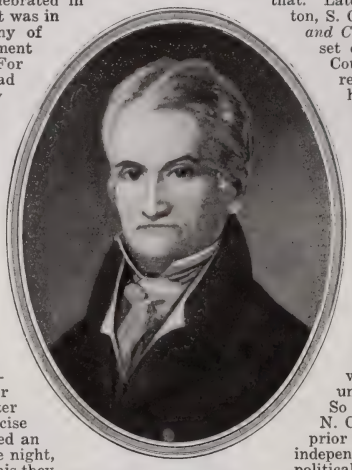
America's First Written Statement of an Independent Government



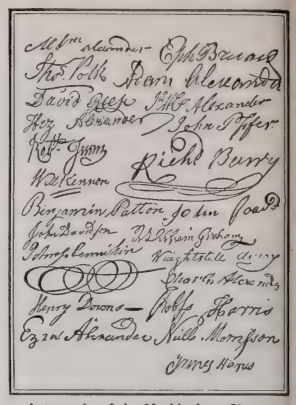
The Raleigh Memorial Tablet

ON MAY 20 the Colonial Dames of North Carolina unveiled in the Capitol in Raleigh a tablet commemorating the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence and its signers of May 20, 1775. The day is a legal holiday in North Carolina and is always a gala occasion, but special recognition has been given to it this year on account of the unveiling. North Carolinians from all over the country gathered in Raleigh for the impressive ceremonies, and the enthusiasm, born of patriotic pride, was worthy of the event celebrated. That was an incident which might well be accorded a more prominent place in our national history.

The general public pays but little attention to the fact that the birthplace of American liberty was North Carolina, but to the inhabitants of the Old North State this fact is the most precious record in all history. As July 4 is celebrated over the rest of the country, May 20 is celebrated in North Carolina, especially in the town of Charlotte, for it was in Charlotte Town, Mecklenburg County, that a company of patriots met in May, 1775, and established a government separate from that of England. The story runs thus: For some time previous the conditions in North Carolina had been critical. The feeling of resistance to British authority ran high, and nowhere was resentment greater than among the sturdy Scotch-Irish of Mecklenburg County. On account of the bitter opposition to British misrule, the royal governor of North Carolina, Josiah Martin, in June, 1775, retired to the protection of Fort Johnston and never returned to the governor's home. Several public meetings were held in the winter and spring of this year in which the grievances of the people were discussed, and finally the Colonel Commandant of the County of Mecklenburg, Thomas Polk, issued an order to the captains of militia to have two delegates chosen from each militia company for a convention to be held in Charlotte in May, 1775. About the time of the meeting, which was attended not only by the delegates but by half the male population of the county, news of the battle of Lexington arrived, and the people were so aroused that liberty became the keynote of the convention. Accordingly, the resolutions adopted declared for independence, dissolving political connection with the mother country and declaring that "whatever Person shall hereafter receive a Commission from the Crown, or attempt to exercise any such Commission heretofore received, shall be deemed an Enemy to his Country." The meeting lasted far into the night, and the resolutions were adopted after midnight. After this they were read from the court house steps and received with great enthusiasm by those who had not been so fortunate as to be present in the convention. Later a copy of the resolutions was sent to the North Carolina delegates in the Continental Congress, but the Congress at that time was seeking conciliation with Great Britain, and the matter was never presented to the body. Unfortunately, the country as a whole had no knowledge of the action taken in Mecklenburg County until 1819, when the matter was published in the Raleigh Register and North Carolina Gazette. Controversy at once arose in regard to it because of the fact that not only in spirit but in wording the Mecklenburg Declaration and the Declaration of July 4, 1776, were very similar. Both Jefferson and the signers of the Mecklenburg Declaration were accused of plagiarism. Vigorous defense was made upon both sides, and in 1829 the legislature of North Carolina ordered an investigation. This established the fact that resolutions amounting to a declaration of independence had undoubtedly been adopted in Mecklenburg County in the spring of 1775, but no paper known to be an exact copy of the famous manifesto was produced. The majority of the witnesses testified to May 20 as the date, and the State accepted that. Later, in 1847, there was brought to light, both in Charleston, S. C., and in England, copies of the South Carolina Gazette and Country Journal for June 13, 1775, in which appeared a set of resolutions adopted by a committee of Mecklenburg County, N. C., May 31, 1775. Several other copies of these resolutions have since been found in this country, and most historians, among them Bancroft, have considered these the true Declaration. They are not of a flaming character, and they do not declare permanent dissolution of political bonds with Great Britain, but in a dignified manner they state that "all commissions, civil and military, heretofore granted by the Crown, to be exercised in these colonies, are null and void; that the Provincial Congress of each province, under the direction of the great Continental Congress, is invested with all legislative and executive powers within their respective provinces; that the inhabitants of this county, having formed themselves into nine companies, do choose a Colonel and other military officers, who shall hold and exercise their several powers by virtue of this choice, and independent of the Crown of Great Britain and former constitution of this province," and "that these Resolves be in full force and virtue, until instructions from the Provincial Congress . . . shall provide otherwise, or the legislative body of Great Britain resign its unjust and arbitrary pretentions with respect to America." So the fact is well established that Mecklenburg County, N. C., whether on May 20 or May 31, 1775, thirteen months prior to the general Declaration in Philadelphia, did set up an independent form of government, severing for the time all political connection with Great Britain. Though premature, North Carolinians may well be proud of this action, and commemorate it in any way befitting the memory of the exalted patriotism, the courage and the fire of the men who gave it birth. The author of the "Thirty-first Resolves" was Dr. Ephraim Brevard, who later lost his life as a result of illness contracted during imprisonment while the hostilities of the Revolution were in progress. ROSA PENDLETON CHILES.



Witt Polk, a Son of Thomas.
The Leader of the Investigation of 1829



Autographs of the Mecklenburg Signers

WHERE WOMAN RULES THE HOME

Continued from preceding page

character, so that the struggle for existence is unending, and the fear of want never far removed.

Inasmuch as the Hopi live in a harsh and forbidding land, with the specter of famine ever before them, they are profoundly impressed with their dependence upon the caprices of the elements. Hence, to placate the unseen powers that give or that may withhold the rains, that control the springs and streams and that cause the corn to germinate, becomes the main business of life. All supernatural beings, whose name is legion, including the spirits of their ancestors, are supposed to influence the rains, and consequently the growth of the crops. To win the favor of this host of major and minor deities calls for one of the most elaborate systems of religious ceremonies known anywhere in the world. There are no less than thirteen nine-day ceremonies and a host of shorter duration. Then every day has its rites and religious duties. At every spring, at the graves of the dead, in the fields, gardens and orchards, around the shrines, and in niches and crevices in the rocks and cliffs, are deposited innumerable bahos, or feather-tufted prayer sticks. Even the children's toys are not devoid of religious purpose. Their dolls are fashioned, painted and decorated to copy in miniature the elaborate headdress, painted face and body and costume of the katchina dancers, who represent in the religious ceremonies the ancestral gods. These dolls are made by the priests. They are toys only, but by playing with them the children become familiar with the marks, ornaments and garments worn during the various ceremonial dances of the "medicine-men." Of all the Hopi ceremonies, the Snake Dance is the most famous. It is, in fact, considered the most remarkable religious observance known in the world. It takes place in August, the exact date varying from year to year. The entire ceremony, with the prescribed preliminaries, occupies nine days, but its crowning feature, the Snake Dance proper, lasts not more than half an hour. Then members of the Snake fraternity dance with live, venomous, wriggling rattlesnakes held in their mouths. At the conclusion of the dance the serpents are taken to the foot of the mesa and released, to carry to the great plumed serpent of the underworld, which controls the springs and waters under the earth, an account of the ceremonies and of the prayers and devotions of the people.

Perhaps the feature of Hopi culture that has excited the most remark is the status of the women, which is unique among the aboriginal peoples of America. In most of the tribes the squaws are little more than beasts of burden, trained to fetch and carry and minister to the wants of the braves. However, among the Hopi the women are far from occupying a servile or subordinate position. The women own the houses, the wife receives the newly married husband into her home; the children belong to her clan and receive her clan name. She is considered the owner of all household goods, food supplies and other possessions of the family. The men perform all outside and field labor, cut and carry the wood for fuel, attend to the live stock, and see that the wants of their wives and children are provided for. In civilized communities this would all be considered a matter of course, but among the American Indians it is nowhere paralleled. This is by no means all that is expected of the Hopi husbands. They must shear the sheep, card the wool, and weave blankets, belts, ceremonial robes, and even dresses and shawls for the women. On occasion they must even mind the babies and help with the housework. Strangely enough, the women build the houses, although the men must cut the timbers on distant mesas, transport them to the villages on the backs of mules or burros, and place them in position as ordered by the builders.

The two industries in which the Hopi excel—basketry and pottery-making—are exclusively in the hands of the women. Nampeya, a squaw living on the First Mesa, is the greatest of living Indian potters, and wares made by her and her daughter are prized by collectors in all parts of the country.

Among the Hopi, girls of marriageable age signify their willingness for matrimony by doing their hair up in whorls, one over each ear. In the symbolism of the tribe, these whorls represent the blossoms of the squash vine. These whorls are taken down at marriage, and thereafter the matron wears her hair in two rolls, one hanging down each side of her face. These rolls are said to represent the fruit of the squash.

MONT-LAWN WILL CELEBRATE

OUR CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home reopened on June 29 for the summer season. It is expected that some 3,000 tenement waifs from the poorest sections of New York City will be welcomed at Mont-Lawn this year. Many improvements have been made since last summer and more are in progress. Toilet annexes have been added to the large dormitories on "Sunshine Alley," and the projected new bathing pavilion, plans for which were made last summer, is nearing completion. It will be a great boon for the children, and will add largely to the comfort and sanitation of the Home.

The Fourth of July is always the crowning day at Mont-Lawn, and this year will be no exception to the rule. A stirring patriotic program has been prepared. A large number of visitors will come to the Home on the Fourth to participate in the exercises in the afternoon. These will begin at two P.M. with a special song service in the Children's Temple, after which all will assemble on the lawn to witness the patriotic parade in costume which has been arranged for the occasion, in which a number of historical American characters will march in procession to the music of the band. The parade will conclude with the reading of the Declaration of Independence, all being grouped around the great flag on the lawn during this ceremony.

Evolutions on the lawn by the children, under skilled instructors, will follow, concluding with Dr. Klopsch's famous "bean game," which never fails to excite intense interest. Then will come an exhibition of daylight fireworks, after which Twilight Tea will be served, with ice cream and cake. Stages and carriages will be in readiness to convey the guests to their trains between 6 and 7 o'clock. The whole day will be a delightful series of enjoyable events, and everybody will carry away a pleasant recollection of the Fourth at Mont-Lawn.

Our annual pamphlet, telling of the work of the Children's Home during the past year, is now ready. Friends of the Home who may not have received copies can do so by sending a postal to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Contributions in aid of the work will be welcomed. Twenty-one dollars endows a cot for the season, giving seven little boys and girls a delightful and healthful summer outing in succession. Three dollars provides for the entertainment of a child for ten days at the Home. Small contributions, however, are equally welcomed and will be duly acknowledged.

A Fourth of July Scene at Mont-Lawn

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, who passed away lately, was a warm friend and patron of our Children's Home and a welcome visitor there. Shortly before her last illness, she wrote the following touching appeal to the friends of Mont-Lawn:

"The season is rapidly approaching when our beautiful Mont-Lawn will open its doors to a great throng of city children, to whom a holiday in the country affords their only opportunity for seeing God's blue sky and his green grass during the entire year.

"These little children of the poor live in narrow tenement homes, have no place to play, even the streets being dangerous and the policemen ever on guard to warn them back from running and romping in the parks. Their parents work hard and live from hand to mouth. Sometimes the father is out of work and the children skirt the edge of starvation. Sometimes the father is dead and the mother goes out to daily work, and little boys and girls of eight and ten have faces lined with care and prematurely old. They are the little fathers and mothers of our great metropolis. When Louis Klopsch was living he invested the love of his big heart, his labors and prayers and his means lavishly in caring for little children. Over the gateway of Mont-Lawn his words are inscribed: 'I love God and little children.'

"If you, who year after year have sent a contribution to Mont-Lawn through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, wish to do the greatest possible good that may be done by the expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money, send your gift without delay. There are three thousand children who must be entertained during the summer weeks. They come in successive relays. To see them at the table three times a day is a rare treat. To stand by their little white beds when they are asleep stirs the heart of every parent who has children safe at home. Numbers of the Mont-Lawn children have never slept between white sheets in their lives before their first visit to Mont-Lawn.

"Let no one forget that many hands make light work, and that if each will send a contribution now, Mont-Lawn will have a more than ever blessed and successful summer. I wish every one could see the place as I have seen it, and love the children as Louis Klopsch loved them.

"MARGARET E. SANGSTER."

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

I AM very much interested in the Bible questions, and would like to join the class. My Bible has been sadly neglected until within the past two years, when I began studying. I find so many beautiful things there, and I think this a good way to find more."

This is the sort of a letter that cheers the editor's heart. He wants the Bible questions to make people love the Bible itself. The way to love it is to study it. And the questions get people to do that. Another student writes: "This is my first attempt toward answering the list of Bible questions. Have found looking them up a very good way to study the Bible." Another says: "The questions are most interesting and the study fascinating. I can hardly wait for the next list to appear." Another writes: "I cannot express to you how much I enjoy these Bible questions." Young and old continue the work. In close proximity come letters from a fourteen-year-old and an eighty-five-year-old pupil.

Remember there is no red tape about joining the class. You do not have to enroll as a member, or do anything but send on your list of answers. Above all, be sure to sign your name. More than once persons have missed a place on the Honor Roll because they failed to write their name. One student wrote to protest that her name had not appeared, but even her letter of protest was unsigned, so we are helpless to make matters right, or to communicate with her except in this public way. So please be careful to sign all communications.

Another word before giving the names on the Honor Roll. For the tenth question it was impossible to be sure of finding the correct answer without using the Revised Version. The little line in Num. 21: 17 looks like a complete song, and if it were it would be the shortest in the Bible. The Revised Version, however, shows that the three lines following also belong to the song, being arranged in the form of verse. The shortest song is Luke 2: 14. But knowing that many of our readers use the Authorized Version almost exclusively, we have counted both answers correct. Here are the successful competitors:

HONOR ROLL

The following 54 sent 12 correct answers:

M. J. Archibald, Bell W. Brown, Mrs. D. I. Biggar, Mrs. S. M. Baker, Emma B. Burrill, Mrs. C. M. Brown, Mary U. Brown, Mrs. H. H. Barrows, Fanny C. Bracken, Bertha Beckwith, Mrs. Kittie Baldwin, Mrs. Luanna Baldwin, Mrs. Mary Coupland, Mrs. E. E. Cammack, I. Daigleish, Abbie F. Dillingham, Mary J. Elmore, Mrs. A. P. Fassett, M. Etta Fiske, Mrs. William Findlay, George A. Gilderson, Mary Graham, Mrs. Susan A. Glover, Mrs. Percy N. Holmes, Jennie E. Holmes, Mrs. H. J. Hughes, Mrs. Emily H. Harrington, Mrs. Annie Howell, Mrs. W. C. Henderson, Mrs. Charles M. Hale, Mrs. Elizabeth Hoover, Mrs. E. E. Hubbard, Mrs. K. A. Jackson, Mrs. Ella Jameson, Mrs. E. L. King, G. M. D. King, H. C. Leake, Abbie J. Leach, Mrs. Alice Lee, Anna E. Middleton, Caroline E. Moyer, Mrs. Addie Perrine, Mrs. M. Perry, Mrs. A. C. Rhodes, Rosina Rausch, Mrs. E. D. Stivers, Ida Shields, Mrs. Nancy D. Stotlin, Miss P. E. Seofield, Winifred Sargent, W. W. Waring, J. Warrenfelt, Mrs. E. S. Webb, No name, Dennisport, Mass.

The following 15 answered 11½ questions correctly:

Mrs. Philip Allen, Mrs. H. A. Borgers, Sallie Davidson, Nancy R. King, W. E. Light, Melvin C. Myers, William C. Rife, Mrs. E. H. Roberts, Mrs. Dennis Skutt, Mrs. Alonzo Sedgwick, Mrs. Sarah A. Strong, Mrs. Amanda R. Starks, Mrs. Mattie C. Vivens, Mrs. John F. Wilhite, Mary E. D. Smith.

The following 93 answered 11 questions correctly:

Mrs. J. A. Andrea, Georgianna Alexander, Harriette M. Ashley, Mrs. William Anderson, Mrs. Mary Anders, Mrs. Will T. Aitchison, Emma Bierbaum, Mrs. Louis A. Black, Mrs. O. C. Barnes, Mrs. A. L. Brackett, Mrs. R. S. Bridgman, Maud F. Brackett, Fannie L. Bell, Mrs. George Brill, Mrs. S. B. Barnes, Winifred P. Cairns, N. Miriam Cornell, Jennie Cunningham, E. DeMott Case, Mrs. Isaac T. Coppock, Elizabeth Cook, Mrs. Mary E. Diament, Mrs. Neli Davis, Annie S. Dyer, Duke Davis, Mrs. Nettie Dymond, Mrs. Arthur DuBois, John Erickson, Mrs. Anna M. Glover, Mrs. F. M. Gainfort, Marion F. Grinnell, Bertha Hutchings, Mrs. J. P. Hubert, J. F. Hannay, Cornelia Hutchings, Mrs. Edith Hupert, Mary Hasselbacher, Mrs. Russell Hancock, Mrs. L. G. Jordan, Esther D. Jones, Delinda A. Jackson, Mrs. W. J. Jemison, Caroline Johnson, Mrs. Helen M. Jones, E. M. King, Mrs. L. E. Kern, Mrs. J. A. Koontz, Katie Kennel, R. Livingston, Flora W. Leonard, S. E. Lyle, Mrs. Emily O. Lewis, C. H. Mather, Mrs. E. J. Merrill, Mary Means, Mrs. E. M. Matthews, Eva J. Moscrip, W. D. Moore, Alfred Morton, Mrs. G. W. Metzger, Mrs. Ella McMillen, Mrs. Lizzie Morse, Mrs. Dora Nelson, Mary Norris, C. G. Nelson, H. Maud Plaisted, Mrs. William J. Pitt, Samuel Peter, Mrs. Ella Powers, C. H. Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Rodgers, Iva A. Robinson, Annie E. Roberts, E. C. Randall, Mrs. A. S. Ross, Ellen Simkin, P. J. Stone, Mrs. Frank Sherman, Mrs. C. A. Shurtleff, W. G. Shirey, Mrs. Myron D. Smith, Lucy Saussy, Rhoda B. Thompson, Mrs. C. G. Townsend, Mrs. A. W. Trueblood, A. Tombaugh, Miss Lizzie Vestal, Amelia Williams, Julia E. Wilson, Charles S. Watrous, L. F. Whitmore, Florence N. Relyea, No name, White Cottage, O.

The following 47 answered 10½ questions correctly:

Mrs. George Apthorp, Mrs. J. A. Ainslie, Mrs. M. W. Barr, H. Elizabeth Bunn, Una Corner, Mrs. H. B. Cope, Mrs. R. W. Davis, Sadie L. Dawson, F. A. Dyer, Mrs. E. L. Ebbert, William Eason, Mrs. N. E. Emmons, Mrs. Minnie E. Eyer, Jane C. Elliott, Fanny D. Emerson, Elisha Frail, John Fleming, Martha Fletcher, Martha A. Goings, M.D., Mrs. Ray Giffin, Etta Grano, Mary Harris, Elizabeth Jorstad, Mrs. A. G. James, Julia E. Kemp, Altie E. Kemble, H. Ellis Lininger, Mrs. A. Lobdell, Minnie Lohr, Mrs. R. D. McCleery, Sara McCoy, Cora A. Martin, Mrs. W. A. Melton, Cora M. Mills, Mrs. Lyman Porter, Mrs. Helen Russell, Alberta B. Reynolds, Nellie Robinson, Roy R. Shause, Hallie McP. See, Mabel L. Tanner, Julia Thomas, Annie Tipton, Mack Wilson, L. M. West, Mrs. Andrew Wilson, No name, Piqua, O.

The following 110 answered 10 questions correctly:

Susan T. Adams, Mrs. Fannie M. Abbott, Mrs. Lula W. Allen, Sarah F. Bartlett, Annie L. Boorman, Mrs. O. G. Beard, S. J. Black, Emma Bothscall, Mrs. Charles Bartholme, Nellie M. Blanchard, Mrs. Mary Byron, C. Jane Barton, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bosworth, Mrs. John Burgoyne, S. R. Buckwalter, Annie Currie, Stella Crosby, E. P. Currie, Mrs. J. R. Carr, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Camp, Ora M. Curry, Ruth Cooper, Henrietta W. Condit, Mrs. T. W. Cole, Mrs. H. A. Caird, Mrs. R. Cance, Mrs. Harriet N. Cheney, Mrs. H. P. Calkins, Bess M. Carpenter, Mrs. B. A. Constable, Mrs. Sarah J. Crosby, J. Harry Deems, Olive M. Dodd, James B. Davidson, W. K. Dean, Mrs. E. M. Doan, Josiah Davis, Anna Dill, Mrs. Laura A. Dexter, Mrs. I. O. Dodge, Mrs. E. A. Edgar, G. M. Elliott, E. M. Freeman, Mary Fitzgerald, Anna Fitts, Mrs. Fred Francis, Martha Fry, Elina Guyer, Mrs. James A. Gale, Mrs. W. H. Gage, Mrs. B. Grimshaw, Emma M. Gray, Mrs. M. L. Harkness, Ina G. Henry, John C. Heys, Rosa Hirschy, Mrs. George H. Hartley, Mary Hickerton, H. W. Humphrey, Mrs. J. E. W. Howell, Mrs. Wm. L. Jones, Mrs. C. P. Knox, M. D. Keithly, S. T. Lewis, M. N. Lees, Gertrude B. Lozier, Mrs. W. W. McCarty, Mrs. A. E. Malhorn, Mrs. Mary L. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. C. I. Morgan, M. E. Miller, George McLachlan, J. M. McMillen, Michael Murray, Mrs. J. H. Masten, Mrs. C. R. Moore, Mrs. T. W. McWilliams, Mrs. Grace E. Miner, Mrs. Sarah J. McQuaid, Charles Miller, Flossie Patten, Mrs. E. M. Pennington, Mrs. William Peabody, Velie Powell, Carrie L. Ray, Frances A. Wallis, Emma W. Reynolds, Emma M. Ridgeway, Mrs. D. W. Reynolds, Maria L. Rue, Edwin Rowe, Sr., Fred Rowe, Mrs. S. F. Stahl, Mrs. Elisabeth Stout, Cynthia F. Senter, Rosa Stevenson, Anna M. Smith, Mrs. James Scott, Lucy Searing, Stella V. Sparrow, N. W. Taylor, Mary N. Thomson, Mrs. J. J. Van Der Schaaf, Reu Williams, James Wilson, W. A. Wilson, Mrs. J. H. Wallace, Ellen H. Wilson, No name, Stafford, Mo., No name, Estill Springs, Tenn.

Forty-four answered 9½ questions correctly; fifty-five answered 9.

Answers to List No. 5

1. To whom was the title of prophet first applied? Ans. Abraham, Gen. 20: 7.

2. Where is the first mention of thread in the Bible? Ans. Gen. 14: 23.

3. In what two Epistles does Paul present his great argument for the superiority of faith over law as a means of salvation? Ans. Romans and Galatians.

4. What town did Jesus make the headquarters of his work during the first months of his public ministry? Ans. Capernaum.

5. Whose daughters were to be made cooks, confectioners and bakers? Ans. The daughters of the people of Israel, I. Sam. 8: 13.

6. Where are "wise ladies" mentioned in the Bible? Ans. Judges 5: 29.

7. How many deacons were appointed by the apostles? Ans. Seven, Acts 6: 5.

8. On what two occasions did Christ receive the assistance of angels? Ans. Matt. 4: 11 (or Mark 1: 13); Luke 22: 43.

9. How many times did Christ cleanse the Temple? Ans. Twice. John 2: 15 (at the beginning of his ministry); Matt. 21: 12, or Mark 11: 15, or Luke 19: 45 (near the close of his ministry).

10. What is the shortest song in the Bible? Ans. Luke 2: 14.

11. What did Moses pray for before his death? Ans. To be permitted to see the land of Canaan. Deut. 3: 25. Also for a successor. Num. 27: 15-17.

12. Who said "Who is on the Lord's side?" and when? Ans. Moses, calling for volunteers to attack the idolaters. Ex. 32: 26.

Send answers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bible Question Class within two weeks after questions appear. The new questions were published last week.

TRUE PATRIOTISM

A Fourth of July Sermon

By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon

Author of "In His Steps"

TEXTS: "Ye shall be unto me an holy nation." Ex. 19: 6. "But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation." I. Pet. 2: 9

IT IS a very significant fact that the Old Testament and the New Testament alike have the same definition of patriotism. Under the rule of Jehovah and under the rule of the Master the same unity of thought runs through the mind of the true citizen of Israel. The basis of any national life is righteousness. In fact, there is no other. It is the one definition which is continually being expressed by the prophets, in the Psalms, in the Gospels, and by the apostles. One may search the Bible through to find any definition of citizenship which does not contain the thought of holiness. This definition is the only one which ought to be considered at the present time. It has been a not uncommon practice for the ministry even, and in most cases for the politicians and the press, to glorify this republic in terms of physical power. I remember hearing, when I was a boy, a Fourth of July oration delivered by a man who was called the leading citizen in the town. He was a lawyer, a member of a church, a college graduate; and even as a boy I was impressed with the fact that the things he mentioned the most and emphasized the loudest were the physical advantages of the United States over other countries. He said we could raise more wheat, manufacture more goods, build greater cities, make more money than any other nation in the world, and therefore we were a great nation. He boasted openly in the course of his remarks of the fact that we could whip any other nation on earth—not because we had a very great navy and army, but because we could manufacture one on short notice, and the fact that we could whip any other people on earth he cited as an instance of our national greatness.

The Injustice of Power and Wealth

As a matter of fact the possession of great wealth and power alongside of rank injustice and cruel wrong is a thing which ought to cause every patriot to hang his head in shame. The fact that the United States has abundant provision in itself for the needs of all its citizens and that many of its citizens go without these things through no fault of their own is a disgrace, and not a source of pride.

The first essential of a really patriotic spirit is the definition which the Bible has of national responsibility. All through life there runs the temptation to the dual definition of conduct. This dual definition is common at this moment in the minds of men who are members of legislatures and of Congress, and it has existed sometimes in the minds of men who have been in the presidential chair. That is the sophistry that an individual is bound by one rule of life and a nation by another; that what is wrong for an individual to do is not always wrong for a nation to do.

I believe the world is beginning to understand better the relations which should exist between nations, and it is beginning also to understand that moral issues are just as much demanded between nations as between men—in other words, that nations have no more right to be excused for being unholy than individuals. If this is the case the definition of national patriotism would have to include the following items:

A nation cannot maintain its right to the term "holy" if it does not pay as much attention to its education of the citizens as it does to the incidental parts of its national life. Congress meets from time to time and spends months and years in discussing matters of very small importance. The people pay vast sums of money to maintain its representatives at headquarters, and they take up the people's time talking about a great variety of things, some of which are not worth considering; while the real interests of the people are neglected. For example, months and sometimes years are spent in discussions of subjects which are of insignificant importance compared with the health of the people or with the education of the people. As a concrete instance, what could be more important to the welfare of the people than proper instruction in regard to sex and the proper use of religious instruction in the schools? Yet these vital matters are utterly ignored or even antagonized in order that politicians may have a chance to argue and debate over matters which in themselves are often of no account. A nation which has the right to be holy and should be holy is using a vast amount of time which belongs to righteousness when it spends its time in trivialities. An individual who does such a thing is counted irreligious and lacking in value to the republic. But how about the republic as a whole?

Unchristianity in Politics

This nation will never be a "holy" nation until its political life is governed by the same principles as its religious life. It is astonishing what unchristian things are done by Christian men in politics. During the present presidential campaign every man in this country has read newspaper accounts of debates, newspaper letters, speeches, and criticisms made by Christian men, members of churches, letters of fierce invective, reviling, charges of falsehood, subterfuges, sophistry, downright lies in regard to political opponents. These men would not think for one moment of using the same language or carrying out the same policy in regard to a neighbor with whom they might have a difference, but they merge for the time being the individual into the collective, and do as members of some great political party things they would be ashamed to think of as individual men. One of the prominent candidates for the highest office in the gift of the people in this country, a few weeks ago, in a public speech, applied to his political opponent terms of reproach and abuse. And yet we are told by the Master to love our enemies. I suppose this man would say it did not apply to politics, but as I understand Christianity, it applies to every condition in life, and this nation will have no right to call itself a holy nation until the political parties are merged into one great national party for the common good.

After two thousand years of the teachings of Jesus Christ in the world and the emphasis put by him and his disciples upon the brotherhood of mankind, the civilized world faces the astonishing contradiction of military activity unparalleled in all the history of mankind. No nation can consider itself in any degree entitled to the word "holy" as long as it is contending along lines of barbarism. Here again the dual conceptions of the necessities of nations and the necessities of individuals comes out with sharp emphasis.

The World's Mad Game of War

If I as an individual were to garrison my house, throw up a six-foot wall around it, bank cannon on the top of it, fill my cellar with gun-cotton, gunpowder, bombs and explosives, and then carry around with myself a half dozen loaded guns, bowie knives and other warlike equipment simply because a man I did not know or was afraid of had moved into the same block with me, I do not think it would be long before I would be having trouble with him or he with me; and in any event I would be regarded as a fit subject for a lunatic asylum instead of being considered what I would like to call myself, a Christian gentleman. Yet the nations of the world which call themselves Christian are practicing this plain absurdity as nations under the plea of preserving the peace. In other words, what seems to be considered perfectly proper for a nation to do in the way of equipment of warlike material would be considered the act of a fool on the part of an individual. If, in addition to the fact that I turned my private house into a bristling arsenal to ward off some supposed danger, I took the money which my children needed for education to buy gunpowder and lay in a stock of new guns every time a new one was made, I think in all probability I would be arrested as a dangerous citizen. If I let my wife and children go hungry or turned them out into the streets in order to provide more room for guns and powder in the parlor and sitting-room I would probably be promptly put into the lunatic ward; yet the United States Government, nominally under a Christian management, practically does the same thing in spending millions for useless material while many of its citizens who pay these bills go hungry, uncared for, uneducated, and in desperate need. I do not believe it is the wish of the majority of the people of this republic to keep up these insane war expenses. It is all due to the tremendous influence of a comparatively few people, the manufacturers of war material, the army and navy clique in Washington, the rank and file of selfish politicians, together with a powerful lobby of men and women in society whose lives depend upon military activity. Add to this the unchristian attitude of some powerful newspapers and you have what is really a small minority out of the one hundred million population maintaining the monstrosity called military equipment. If the people could vote on this question directly, if it could be referred to them in a great primary election whether their money should be used for the maintenance of a growing army and navy, I believe the vote would overwhelmingly demonstrate the fact that, so far as war is concerned, the common people, the taxpayers and what are known as the masses, are decidedly against it. But until we dispense with this nightmare of civilization we have no right to call ourselves a holy nation, an elect priesthood.

The True Patriotism

Certainly a nation cannot with any pure patriotism call itself a holy nation as long as it spends its money in the proportion it does for the things which are on one side of the line called luxuries and on the other side called necessities. Starting with the unit of zero this nation spends 500 per cent. of its annual income for malt liquor, over 400 per cent. for tobacco; over 75 per cent. for candy; nearly the same amount for patent medicines; over 50 per cent. for jewelry, and only 12 per cent. for school books; and a fraction of 10 per cent. in education in general. If these figures were reversed we might make some claim to the title holy, but until we are willing and eager to spend God's money for God's necessities, we cannot even after two thousand years of Jesus Christ claim to be a holy nation.

The great business of every patriot is to hold up the true definition of patriotism. It does not consist in letting off some fireworks once a year. It does not consist in praising up one's own political party in comparison with every other. It does not consist in crowning some man as the hero of the nation and lauding him to the disparagement of every one else. It does not consist in emphasizing the material wealth of the country. The definition of true patriotism must always center about the Bible definition of righteousness. It is not a supremely difficult thing in most cases for a man to shoulder a gun, leave his home and go off to physical war. There is a glamour and excitement about it, the beating of drums, the waving of flags, the marching of troops, the excitement and exaltation of public display, and then the physical roar and confusion of battle in which men take more or less delight in proportion to their savage and animal instincts.

But the patriotism which suffers in silence and endures persecution for right living and holds up standards of high living when they are not followed, which tries day and night to right the wrongs of those who are oppressed, which believes in brotherhood and in spite of human hardness of heart tries to practice it, which works to establish laws which will help establish fair dealing between man and man—this is the patriotism which counts. It is not the dramatic kind. It does not come in with the flourish of music, with martial airs or the beating of drums. It is the quiet, unsensational love of country which in the end will mean the righteousness of national life; but it is infinitely harder to establish this kind of patriotism than the noisy effort which brags and boasts of material greatness.

It may be well for us to accustom our thought to the vision which God has of his own world as he yearns for its redemption. It must be an unspeakable source of sorrow to God, the Father of mankind, to see his children fighting so feverishly to build more engines of murder—that is, murder on

Continued on next page

* Mr. Sheldon has for many years been pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Topeka, Kan.

AFTERWARD

I'D rather lie in a little plot
Of ground, some happy, sunny spot,
Than in a spacious lofty tomb,
With all its marks of funeral gloom.

I'd rather some kind old apple-tree
Should drop its blossoms over me,
Than that costly marble, wreath, and pall
Should mark my grave from spring till fall.

I'd rather, some day, your faithful feet
Should seek and find me, resting sweet,
That your tears should fall in swift appeal
Than that all the world at my tomb should kneel!

ALICE E. ALLEN.

True Patriotism

Continued from preceding page

the grand scale which war always is; to see his children squabbling in the market place to see who can make the most money out of the rest; to see his children exploiting the poor and wringing out the last atom of labor for the smallest amount of wages. It must be an unspeakable heartbreak to the Divine to witness men and women quarreling over their creeds, divided into little camps or castes, dressing themselves up in the peacock show of society and boasting of their ancestry and wealth and their superior education. It must be an infinite source of grief to the Almighty when he sees his children who are grown-up men and women playing like boys and girls with the baubles of life when they should be using its tools, priding themselves on foolishness and strutting about in the equipments of self-satisfaction, while the chimneys of great factories smoke blood from the work of little children, in the din of a great commercial uproar which regards nothing so great as the coining of money out of the necessities of human flesh.

It must be a source of unspeakable regret to God at times to think that his creatures have so far debased themselves in this country of ours that they seek after human flesh to buy and sell it out of lust or for sheer passion of gain, to behold little groups of men reaching out after the necessities of the earth, its oil and its coal, its food and its medicine, and the very sunshine itself in order to get more money than they know what to do with, and then, compounding with their consciences which they have not been able thoroughly to kill, by turning back a part of the money they have robbed from humanity to heal the wounds that they themselves have inflicted upon it. And it might not be out of the rightful order of things for the people in the churches of this country to take themselves to task for the unfinished product of that magnificent institution which we love, which Jesus called the church, and see whether it lies within its power to help create a nation which shall have some right to the great name of "holy." The patriotism of which we have often boasted is not worthy of the name by the side of that righteousness which is eternal, and when justice of man to man shall be proved before the great judgment seat of God, the United States of America and Great Britain and Germany and France and all the civilized nations will not have one place upon which to stand and plead their cause unless it is the great basis of righteous dealings, of holy living on the same basis which an individual must have in the sight of God.

The individual will be judged for the deeds done in the body, and the nation will be judged in the same way. It behooves us, therefore, as members of the republic, if we wish to share in the triumphs of the future commendation of God, to do all that in us lies to create a holy government, where God is the master and not money, and where righteousness rules and not selfishness. There is no hope for this nation or for the world except in the righteousness of God, and no resting place from its unrest, its turbulence, its sin, except in the doing of his will. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

A DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

WHEN in the course of human development, it becomes necessary for a man to dissolve the bonds which have held him, and to assume, among men, the station of power and influence to which the laws of his Creator and of his country entitle him, a rightful regard for the effect of his example upon the thoughts and actions of other men requires that he should declare the causes which impel him thus to cast off his bondage.

I hold this truth to be self-evident: that every man was created in God's image; that into his nostrils the Creator breathed his own breath, and that so man became a living soul; that he was made a little lower than the angels and crowned with glory and honor; that when man was put upon the earth he was given dominion over all the earth and commanded to subdue it, not as a brute nor a savage, but as a prince; that to secure these powers and make good his claim to his royal estate it was decreed that he must first subdue himself and have dominion over his own spirit, and that "he that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."

It is plain that whenever any form of life or any habit of thought becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right and the sacred duty of a man to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new system of self-government, laying its foundation on such principles as shall seem most likely to effect his happiness, his usefulness, and his influence upon the welfare and happiness of all other persons.

I, therefore, a man and a pilgrim on the road of life, do hereby publish and declare, that I am, and of right ought to be, free and independent of all the injuries and usurpations of mind, soul and body hereinafter named, and that for the support of this declaration I rely upon the help of Him who made me, and to whom I pledge my life, my fortune, and my sacred honor.

. . .

FROM Worry, which eats away courage from the heart; which disturbs the hours of sleep; which makes the body weak; which casts dark clouds over the way; which befogs the brain; which causes hope to fade and faith to fail, I Declare my Independence.

From Prejudice, which blinds the eyes to the clear light of truth whenever it seems to contradict my own notions; which makes it hard to treat my fellow man with fairness; which causes me to hug error to my bosom and cherish hatred in my heart; which hinders my progress toward better things in social, religious, political, and business life, I Declare my Independence.

From the Fear of Criticism, which holds me back from doing the thing I believe to be right; which makes me resent in another a freedom I claim for myself; which deprives me of many wholesome benefits which would come from an honest consideration of the adverse opinions of others, I Declare my Independence.

From Imitation, which bids me follow slavishly the things that others do; which demands that I make myself one of the crowd; which destroys my originality and my own standards of right; which stifles high ideals of the soul and limits me to mediocrity, I Declare my Independence.

From Keeping Up Appearances, which places a cruel burden upon the home and social life; which causes discontent to grow apace; which brings all manner of hardships and suffering and hides it behind a mask of deceit; which makes life a sham, and multiplies falsehoods without end; which brings no honor from without and destroys character within, I Declare my Independence.

From Habit, which holds me in a narrow rut; which enchains me a prisoner within walls of my own building; which tricks me into doing that which I would not do, and hinders me in the thing I want to do; which grows stronger, if let alone, than my own strength, and makes me a slave, where it is my place to be a master, I Declare my Independence.

From Second-Hand Thinking, by which I become the willing slave of another man's thoughts; by which I am deceived into taking my convictions, not from the studious development of my own reason, nor from the deep promptings of my own soul, but from the passionate appeal of some orator, from the dishonest arguments and misstatements of some selfish seeker of privileges or some assassin of character, or enemy of a good cause, from the influence of environment, or from the bequeathal of ancestry—from all such thinking by proxy and delegating to others my decisions on the vital issues of human rights, privileges, and obligations, I Declare my Independence.

. . .

FROM Greed of Gain, which lashes me on to an unholy task; which destroys in me the sense of true and permanent values; which blinds me to the rights and needs of others; which causes me to count jealously, and to cherish selfishly, the little things, while the great things of priceless worth are wasted or ignored; which shuts the door to joy and opens it wide to discontent; which engages my time and strength in the pursuit of a day's vanity, and thus prevents my occupation in work which shall last for eternity—from all such slavish greed for gain, I Declare my Independence.

From Restrictions and Limitations imposed by doubt of my own powers or possibilities of growth; or fastened upon me by narrow habits or conventional customs; or thrust upon me by skeptics, timid advisers, or the failures of other men; or created in my own mind through fear, or weakness, or satisfaction with a life of littleness; or fixed around me as the penalty for disobedience to my greater vision, I Declare my Independence.

From Difficulties, which block my path, but never with so solid a wall that somewhere a breach cannot be made; from Difficulties which rise, threatening, before me like giants, but shrink, in the grapple, to dwarfs, or expose, in time, the one weak point in their ponderous hulk where the sword of attack can lay them low; from Difficulties which were ordained not to defeat a man in his worthy endeavors, but to try his mettle, to develop his strength, to call forth his courage, to prove his royal blood, to give him battle that he may win victory, and to make his victory sweet and his reward great—from the threatenings and the hindrances of Difficulties in my journey onward, upward to my goal, I Declare my Independence.

FAITH

I HAVE sailed the sea of the soul's desire,
With its sapphire sky so clear,
And I've hailed the ships of the men who yearned
For a wider, broader sphere.
I have passed the wrecks of the conquered weak,
And the straining sails of the brave;
And I've found in the sea of the soul's desire
The bounty our Maker gave.

I have sailed the sea when the tempest raged;
I've sailed when the sea was stilled;
I have sailed when the goal was almost reached,
And scarce a sail was filled.
I have braved the tides of adversity,
And listened to strong men rave;
But I smiled, and success has come to me
From the bounty our Maker gave.

I have sailed the sea of the soul's desire,
And I've found the master key
That opens the door to our heritage,
Life's golden treasury.
When I ask in faith of the God of Gifts
For the things my soul doth crave,
Then my own doth surely come to me
From the bounty our Maker gave.

AUGUSTUS WITTFELD.

Old Abe the Eagle

OLD ABE was probably the most famous eagle that ever wore feathers. He was a genuine eagle, and a handsome specimen of his kind. His authentic history apparently begins with the day in 1861 when Chief Sky, a Chippewa Indian, made him prisoner on the Flambeau River in Wisconsin. Sky sold him to a white man for a bushel of corn. The man who paid the corn for him sold him in turn for $5 to a Mr. Mills. Mills made a present of him to a company just about to start out for the war, Company C of the Eighth Wisconsin. No time was lost by them in naming this winged inspiration after the man in the White House. Old Abe the bird became and Old Abe he stayed until his death many years after.

They carried him alongside the colors on a perch at the end of a staff. The army soon came to know them as the "Eagle Regiment." Beginning with Farmington, Miss., the eagle and his followers went through thirty-six battles. He was wounded before Corinth and again at Vicksburg. It is said that at Corinth the Confederate marksmen made special efforts to kill Old Abe, at the direction of General Price. "I would rather have him than a whole brigade," Price is said to have remarked, such was the eagle's value in encouraging the troops.

Old Abe stayed with his command until it was mustered out in 1864. In September Lewis, the Wisconsin war governor, formally accepted him on behalf of the State. Old Abe was exhibited at the Chicago Sanitary Fair that winter, and his history, published in a pamphlet, brought $16,000 for the sick soldiers.

It is pleasant to record that he lived long and happily afterward. He was much in demand at conventions and veterans' reunions. He died in March, 1881, as a result of breathing smoke at the fire of the Madison capital. Leonard W. Volk, the sculptor, used him as the model for several eagles on his war monuments.

Anvil Sparks

..THE birds sing for those who listen.

..PEOPLE who love children may become aged, but never old.

..A GLOOMY religion has no attractions for the cheerful mind.

..THE cold hand of a Christian is the coldest thing in the world.

..WHO has learned to delight in the Lord always has a soul full of joy.

..IF WE mix our seed-sowing with doubt the harvest is apt to be weeds.

..A SANCTIFIED sourness is the notion some folks seem to have of religion.

..IF YOU don't build any castles in the air, you will never build any on the ground.

..IF THERE is anything in the world sweeter than a baby's smile, it would be worth a trip to the North Pole to get a glimpse of it.

A STORMY NATIONAL CONVENTION

Courtesy of New York "Sun"

The Republican National Convention, Photographed on the Opening Day in the Great Chicago Coliseum, with 15,000 Present

THE Republican National Convention, which assembled in Chicago on June 18, 1912, will pass into history as one of the stormiest political gatherings ever known in American politics. It met in the Coliseum at noon on that day. The vast building was packed with nearly 15,000 persons. There was a very large sprinkling of elegantly dressed women in the galleries. The delegates and alternates seated in the main body of the auditorium made an imposing showing with their State guidons fluttering in line in front of each delegation. The large platform was filled with leading Republicans from all the States. American flags by the hundred, intertwined with masses of bunting, gave the interior of the Coliseum a holiday aspect. Thousands were unable to gain admittance.

For many days before the convention assembled, the rival hosts had been gathering in Chicago preparatory to the great struggle which was to decide not only the supremacy of the Roosevelt or Taft influence in national affairs, but possibly the fate of the Republican Party as well. The Roosevelt men were present in force from many States, and kept up an enthusiastic canvass, while the Taft contingent, strong in their control of the "machine," expressed themselves as confident of victory in the convention. It was a season of conflicting political rumors, and up to the hour of assembling it was practically anybody's fight, if one might judge from the confident claims by the two great factions into which the Republican party had divided.

Victor Rosewater, chairman of the National Committee, on the stroke of noon on Tuesday, called the great convention to order. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Father Callahan, a Catholic priest. Then the chairman pounded with his big gavel on the table and announced that the secretary of the National Committee would read the call of the convention. When this was concluded, Governor Hadley of Missouri, the floor leader of the Roosevelt hosts, rose at the head of his delegation and was recognized by the chair and invited to the platform. He rose to a point of information and asked whether the National Committee had framed a proper temporary roll. The floor leader of the Taft forces, James E. Watson, of Indiana, here made a point of order that this question was out of place and that there was nothing before the convention until it had been organized. This was the first clash and was important, since, had Governor Hadley's question been entertained, he was ready with a formal motion to take from the temporary roll the Taft list of delegates and substitute the Roosevelt delegates in certain contested States. This point conceded, the majority of the delegates' claim for President Taft would have been practically wiped out at the very beginning of the battle.

Now the struggle began in earnest over this motion. Speaker after speaker, representing both sides, went to the platform, advocating their respective claims. Governor Deneen of Illinois, Ex-Governor Fort of New Jersey, and Congressman Sereno E. Payne of New York, champions of the rival factions, addressed the vast gathering. It was the first movement in the plan of battle which Theodore Roosevelt himself had carefully mapped out. He was in Chicago and personally in telephonic communication at his hotel with his lieutenants in convention hall, directing the fight. One of the principal speakers was Governor Hadley—"my fighting governor," as Roosevelt had lovingly dubbed him, and right well did he justify the soubriquet, for he fought Roosevelt's battle throughout with a skill that was everywhere admired. He demanded, in behalf of the Roosevelt delegates amid tremendous cheering, that the question as to their admission be decided by the convention itself. For the Taft forces, James E. Watson made a strong argument, taking the ground that all precedents were against the claim. He was frequently interrupted by outbursts from the Roosevelt delegates.

Finally Chairman Rosewater declared the motion of Governor Hadley out of order. This excited an uproar and there were protests and appeals from every side; but the chairman stood his ground and the first contest showed, in its preliminary stage at least, that the Taft forces controlled the convention.

Chairman Rosewater then presented the name of Elihu Root for temporary chairman as the choice of the committee. Henry F. Cochems of Wisconsin, a La Follette leader, placed in nomination Francis C. McGovern of Wisconsin. Both nominations were instantly seconded. Job E. Hedges of New York addressed the convention in seconding Root's nomination, and referred to the fact that Colonel Roosevelt once declared Root the "ablest man in the public life of this or any other country." The mention of Roosevelt's name was greeted with loud cheering; indeed, whenever his name came up it was the signal for an outburst. Governor Hiram Johnson of California seconded the nomination of McGovern and in the course of his speech said: "The great Republican State of California denies the right—the rank and file of the Republican party denies the right—of any Republican National Committee—any set of repudiated men—to select a chairman for us, and we won't tolerate it." This was construed by some as a threat to bolt by the Roosevelt delegates. At this juncture, William Flinn, the redoubtable Roosevelt leader from Pennsylvania, excited another sensation while seconding McGovern's nomination. He declared that Pennsylvania is "here as a progressive State; she is here to stay; and no matter who may be nominated, Pennsylvania will be a progressive State. Unless you get 540 clean votes in this convention for your candidate for temporary chairman," he warned the Taft delegates, "I doubt whether my constituents in Pennsylvania will support your action. I don't want you to understand that I am notifying the convention that I intend to bolt."

One of the strongest spokesmen for the Roosevelt party was Francis J. Heney of California, the famous fighter of corruption in that State. He declared to the assembled delegates that the nation was confronting a crisis—that its action might uproot principles and disintegrate political parties. His strong utterances excited a new outburst from the audience and there were scenes of disorder which lasted several minutes. A wave of cheers from the Roosevelt men would be followed instantly by a storm of hisses from the Taft delegates. But the delegates were getting impatient at this long preliminary skirmish. They were shouting "Make the speeches short!"

Secretary Hayward then announced the roll call, which was proceeded with not by States but by individual delegates. It went on, with occasional interruptions, including both protests and cheering. Illinois gave 49 for McGovern to 9 for Root. Indiana split on 20 for Root and 10 for McGovern. Iowa gave Root 16, McGovern 10. Kansas gave Root only 2. Maine went solidly for McGovern. Colorado gave Root 12. Connecticut gave him 14, Florida 12, Arizona 6 and Arkansas 17. California cast 24 for McGovern and 2 for Root. New York gave Root 76, McGovern 13. Ohio, President Taft's own State, gave Root only 14, McGovern 34. Pennsylvania gave McGovern 64, Root 12. The Keystone State's vote was cast amid a furious passage-at-arms between the warring factions in the convention, in which William Flinn, the Roosevelt leader, was a prominent actor. Epithets such as "thief" and "robber" were flung about recklessly. "I want to say to you," cried Flinn to the chairman, "that if you steal this vote, you will call no roll on this convention to-day."

Wisconsin divided its vote among four men: McGovern 13, W. S. Lauder of North Dakota 9, W. L. Hauser 1, Senator Gronna of North Dakota 1.

When the roll call was concluded, the vote for temporary chairman was announced as follows: Root 558, McGovern 502, Lauder 9, Hauser 3, Gronna 1, whereupon Elihu Root was declared the choice of the delegates. Senator Root then appeared on the platform and assumed the gavel, while the immense audience yelled itself hoarse and the band played a stirring tune, which could hardly be heard above the vocal tumult.

Chairman Root then began his address to the delegates. He finished speaking at 7.30, and at 7.46 the convention adjourned for the day.

After a night of planning and caucusing, the delegates reassembled at 11 A.M. Wednesday. Encouraged by their initial victory of the day before, the Taft forces were confident, but the Roosevelt contingent was no less so. There was a general air of determination and many signs of a storm brewing. Chairman Root announced as the first business of the day a motion that the convention proceed to the appointment of the regular committees, and the substitute motion of Governor Hadley, that the Roosevelt delegates be accepted for the temporary roll. Three hours' debate was allowed. It was opened by Governor Hadley, who was cheered as he referred to Roosevelt as "one whose voice to-day is the greatest in the Western world." He read a protest from fourteen members of the National Committee against the action of the majority in seating many delegates whose seats were contested. He was followed by W. T. Dovell of Washington in favor of the Taft delegates, Henry J. Allen of Kansas (Taft), Senator Hemenway of Indiana (Taft), and George L. Record of New Jersey (Roosevelt).

Continued on page 681

ROMANIST IDOL-WORSHIP IN PERU

From a Missionary Correspondent

SEMANA SANTA," or Holy Week, is a week of preparation. The sacred white donkey is decked with "trappings rich and rare," and makes a house-to-house visitation of the faithful, even entering the houses to collect money to carry on the fiesta. Booths dedicated to different saints are erected and arches built at intervals from the church to the foot of the Calle de las Palmas, or Street of Palms. On Saturday the arches are decorated with fruit, vegetables, live fowls, kids, etc., and everything is gotten in readiness for the great day, Palm Sunday.

Early Sunday morning the few remaining things are added to the arches, and the procession leaves the church. The procession consists of the Sacred Donkey with the image of Jesus on its back, the donkey bedecked with her rich trappings, the image—which by the way looks like a North American Indian, with flying hair, war paint and feathers, and wearing a royal purple mantle adorned with gold and precious stones—and the priests. This year there were two priests here, all these under a canopy carried by four men, taking its way to the booth at the foot of the street, where they remain for the faithful to make their offerings until between five and six at night, when the procession again forms at this booth and is accompanied by soldiers, the band and a crowd of people. After they form there is a song by the musical professor or singer of the church, music by the band, and they start slowly, all carrying palms (young branches of sugar cane) in their hands, and waving them. They stop at each booth for more singing and to worship each saint, so the trip to the church is a long time getting over.

We stopped in front of one of the booths to see what was done. Gertrude and I were bareheaded, as it was just at night. All the people reverently uncover their heads, and as Mr. Stevens (the missionary) is not baring his head to idols, he stepped inside a store and sat on the counter, where he could look out. The priests glared at him as though they would like to annihilate him, but said nothing. The major domo or head officer of the committee—or "society" they call it here—offered us a palm. He said, "Accept it as a souvenir of the day." I said, "In that case I will take it."

The procession kept on slowly to the church, deposited the image, and then a night of revel followed, with fireworks, dancing and drinking. This was kept up almost without intermission till Thursday noon, when began the time of silence or tiempo de silencio, which was to last till Saturday morning. All the music played during this time was dirges.

On Friday night was the great event of the week, the great procession, beginning at ten o'clock, and headed by three men; one of them carrying the crown of thorns; the second, the nails which nailed the Lord to the cross; the third, the cock that crew. This was followed by a float beautifully trimmed and lighted, containing the image of our Lord so painted that blood appeared to be on the forehead and face. Very realistic it looked in the semi-darkness. Next was a float containing the Virgin Mary beautifully dressed in purple velvet, trimmed with priceless lace and jewels, her long train held up by angels. As the streets were dark only for the lights on the floats and torches carried by the crowd, who were all dressed in black, and the procession moved so slowly, appearing to mark time, and swaying from side to side, they were more than two hours going around two blocks. On reaching the church, the floats were put within to remain till the resurrection at 9:30 Saturday morning. No train whistled, no bells rang, no teams were in the street from Thursday noon. Even the children were told not to talk, for the Señor [Lord] is dead," till 9:30 Saturday, when the bells clash, bands play, firecrackers bang—anything to make noise—the image is restored to its niche in the church, and the Lord is risen. And the people believe it.

Cholos or Indian Half-breeds of Peru

I asked one who is now a convert, "Did you really believe all this before?" He said, "I truly did, but since then the Lord has opened my eyes."

Now some questions: What is a Christian land, or what is a Christian? A Christian person is a real disciple of Christ, one who believes in the truth of the Christian religion and studies to follow the example and obey the precepts of Christ; a believer in Christ, who is characterized by real piety. So a Christian land must be one whose laws are founded on God's Word, and where he is worshiped and respected, must it not?

What is an idolater? A worshiper of idols, one who pays divine honors to images, statues or representations of anything made by hands, one who worships as a deity that which is not God; a pagan.

What is an idol? An image, form or representation, usually of a man or other animal, consecrated as an object of worship.

What is idolatry? The worship of idols, images, or anything made by hands, or which is not God.

What is God's command? "Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in the heavens above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them," etc.

According to the above definitions, and the Word of God, it is easy to tell whether a country has the right to be called Christian or not. Pray that the lands now in the darkness of Romanism may be liberated by the Gospel. L. E. S.

Monsefu, Peru.

RELIEVING LOUISIANA'S NEED

THE victims of the Louisiana floods have now all returned to their homes and the expenditure of the funds in the hands of the Central Relief Committee at Baton Rouge is taking the form of medical aid, the purchase of seed and the advancement of funds to be expended in the rehabilitation of farm dwellings, machinery and general buildings.

Large funds are still being raised in various parts of the country to carry on this work until the harvesting of the first crop from the overflowed sections. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been enabled by the gifts of its readers to forward another remittance of $2,000 through Mayor Gaynor's Flood Relief Committee. It is most sincerely to be hoped that those among our readers and friends who feel the magnitude of this disaster will forward their contributions as soon as possible so that the relief fund may be swelled to meet the needs of our fellow citizens in the devastated region.

The following contributions have been received since the last acknowledgment was made in these columns:

Mrs. C. C. & Miss Hope Converse	2.00
Wm. D. & Effie M. Walker	1.00
Bertha Senft	1.00
M. A. Longeworth	1.00
Mrs. J. W. Francisco	1.00
Mrs. Julia A. Millard	1.00
Miss Emma A. Millard	1.00
Mary E. Symonds	2.00
S. J. Wilder	1.00
C. E. Steell	1.00
Mr. A. W. & Mrs. S. J. Hopper	2.00
Mrs. F. Kirkpatrick	2.00
Gowan Family	1.00
Two Sisters, Valley City, N. Dak.	2.00
Mrs. S. J. Maloy	1.00
Mrs. Eli Shafer	1.00
Mrs. M. C. Moser	1.00
Jessie F. White	2.00
Levi Snavely	1.00
Mrs. J. J. Ridout	1.00
Mrs. J. Marshall	1.00
C. E. Mount	1.00
—, Carrollton, Ohio	3.00
Mrs. H. Cross	2.00
Mrs. J. F. Bartholomew	1.00
Mrs. Thomas Smith	1.00
Anthony J. Florian	2.00
Ellen Smith	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. Nolen	2.00
Samuel Ricker	1.00
Mary S. Ricker	1.00
Annie R. Ricker	1.00
Mrs. R. O. Moulton	3.00
M. A. Lucas	1.00
M. O. Handy	1.00
M. A. Douglas	1.00
Mrs. D. Sheldon	1.00
Wm. Richter	3.00
Mrs. Delia Preston	1.00
Geo. M. Reeves	1.00
Louisa L. Housel	1.00
Mary J. Housel	1.00
Mrs. R. W. Dillingham	1.00
A. G. Howell	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. A. F. Hart	2.00
Mrs. L. E. Smith	2.00
Mrs. Elvira W. Beal	2.00
Henry L. Davis	1.00
Mary B. Allen	1.00
A Friend, Leominster, Mass.	2.00
A Friend, Hastings, N. Y.	1.00
J. W. McClelland	5.00
Sarah J. Gray	5.00
Mrs. T. A. Allen	20.20
Mrs. A. R. Hayes	5.00
Albert G. Shaw	1.00
W. H. Shepard	24.00
W. R. Tanner	5.00
F., Jodie, W. Va.	1.00
—, Black Diamond, Wash.	1.00
—, Scappoose, Oreg	1.00
—, Steubenville, Ohio	2.00
Hannah R. Harshberger	3.00
N. B. Bason	1.50
Amelia Holcomb	1.00
Edward W. Shoemaker	3.00
Mrs. J. C. Merriman	1.00
Winifred A. Wood	2.00
Mrs Sarah F Bickenbach	.50
Mrs. Fred Dipman	2.00
D. A. Townsend	2.00
L. H. Easterling	1.00
Mrs. H. D. Anderson	1.00
Mrs. Jennie L. Sayward	2.00
Mrs. H. A. June	1.00
A Friend, Woodburn, Iowa	1.00
Ira Clynick	2.00
Chas. H. Thurston	1.00
A Subscriber, Grand Rapids, Wis.	2.50
Decker Thomson	1.00
Mrs. Julia C. Ramsay	2.00
Sarah E. Townsend	2.00
W. G. Steadman	2.00
Otto Engel	1.00
T. P. Rockford	1.00
A Friend, Watertown, Mass.	2.00
James Dunstone	2.00
Mrs. Rev. Nelson Brown	1.00
Alfred Van Slyke	5.00
Mrs. E. W. Leonard	5.00
Mrs. N. Mitchell	2.00
Mrs. C. C. Glenn	5.00
John & Ella Johns	2.00
—, Lawyers, Va.	1.50
Mrs. A. T., Summerside, Can.	5.00
Miss Eliza J. Fowler	1.00
Mrs. R. S. Gardner	2.00
Frances E. Shannon	1.00
Mrs. A. M. Walters	1.50
R. W. Meinhardt	3.00
Geo. D. Thompson	5.00
Mrs. D. F. Berry	1.00
C. Lorenzer	1.00
Minnie Stroven	2.00
A. F. McCormack	10.00
T. E. C., Wood River, Nebr.	5.00
Mrs. Kirk Jones	2.00
Rev. & Mrs. H. M. Goodwin	1.00
—, Dayton, N. J.	5.00
Lillie F. Krigger	2.00
Mrs. Benj. Waterman	1.00
Mrs. A. H. Mcimber	1.00
Mrs. Susan H. Poor	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. B. A. Bailey	2.00
Mrs. M. M. Burford	5.00
John J. Kennel	1.00
Martha Murdock	2.00
T. J. Beardsley	.50
Susan P. Putman	5.00
G. Smith	10.00
M. E. Currens	1.00
Presby. Church of Three Forks, Mont.	7.50
Sarah Ellis	1.00
A Friend, Rose City, Mich.	2.00
Mrs. E. M., Allegan, Mich	1.00
D. N. Sawyer	5.00
T. J. Pifer	1.00
M. A. Martin	2.00
A Reader, Bunkerhill, Kans.	3.00
Mrs. S. E. Ayres	1.00
Mark Campbell	5.00
A Friend, Blackearth, Wisc.	5.00
A Friend, Elmira, Mo	6.00
Louis De Lancett	1.50
F. D. Hall & Wife	2.50
Alza J. Binns	1.00
Morris Stanley	1.00
Caroline Heald	1.00
Dr. Alice Ross	1.00
Celia & Bertha Emmons	1.00
Samuel Embree	1.00
Ella Taber	1.00
Morris C. Smith & Family	5.00
Miriam P. Dewees	1.00
Eliza D. Smith	1.00
L. Franklin Bedell	1.00
Adna J. Hoge	1.00
J. Floyd Hall	1.00
Wm. P. Young	1.00
Wm. B. Stanley	1.00
John W. Mott	1.00
Anna B. Hampton	1.00
Anna L. Wood	1.00
Miss Lizzie A. Martin	10.00
B. E. Seymour	5.00
—, Can.	5.00
A Friend, Oshkosh, Wis.	5.00
Marion Travis	5.00
Miss M. C. Leonard, Miss J F Nelson, A E Nult	5.00
—, Chicago, Ill.	2.00
Mrs. A. Seaton	5.00
Miss Lorena Reed	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. Axthelm & Daughter	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. C. W. Kessler	5.00
Wm. W. Hammond	10.00
W. A. S., Detroit, Mich.	5.00
Charles Jones	5.00
J. T. Van Petten	25.00
J. F. Miller	5.00
—, Philadelphia, Pa	5.00
Mrs. R. H. Shively	5.00
Mrs. R. E. Miller	5.00
I. E. Weaver	5.00
Mrs. R. A. Cretzmeyer	1.00
Wm. A. Cretzmeyer & Family	5.00
Helen J. Brainerd	1.00
S. Carnes	1.00
Mrs. E. J. Longenecker	1.00
C. W. Charles	2.00
Mrs. M. J. Otis	2.00
Charles Hyatt	2.00
H. P. Calkins	1.00
John P. Judson	5.00
H. H. Tompkins	4.00
Friend, London, Tenn.	1.00
C. L. Moseley	5.00
E. A. Buttrem	10.00
H. S. Chapman	5.00
—, Pawnee City, Neb.	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. Lott Shoemaker	5.00
H. M. Sharon, Wis.	1.00
Isaac Foster	5.00
Bancroft Rest Home, Ocean Grove, N. J.	4.00
Mrs. E. A. Finlay	1.00
—, Washington, D. C.	1.00
John Walmsley	1.00
T. B. White	1.00
Mrs. G. Stoll	1.00
C. W. Young	1.00
Knecht Milling Co.	5.00
Isaiah Dreyer	2.00
Cornelia Lewis	1.00
Ellen Simkin	1.00
R. Nitsch	2.00
Mrs. E. K. Lambert	1.00
J. W. Jack	1.00
Mrs. T. J. Pennell	2.00
J. T. Ogden	1.00
D. S. Watson	5.00
Mrs. G. B. Temple	1.00
Miss Allie Smith	1.00
Mrs. M. W. Tandy	1.00
—, Northampton, Mass	1.00
E. C. Carrington	1.00
Mrs. H. M. Stewart	4.00
Mrs. C. R. Thomas	1.00
J. R. McClain	5.00
Geo. Ravn	5.00
Mrs. Jennie P. White	2.00
A Friend, Clinton, N. Y.	1.00
C. A. McKay	2.00
Graver Bros.	10.00
Mrs. Mary M. Burton	3.00
Mrs. J. C. Ginchell	2.00
W W F, Marlboro, Mass	1.00
Mary Dorney	1.00
Clay Co., Ind.	1.00
H. S. P., Havre De Grace, Md.	1.00
John Kittel	10.00
Mrs. Thad Getchell	1.00
W. N. Hedges	1.00
Rev. J. W. Bertz	1.00
Grace Smith	2.00
—, Delmar, N. Y.	1.00
Emma E. Devan	1.00
Mrs. M. W. Appelgate	2.00
Mrs. L. A. Davis	1.00
In His Name, Boise, Idaho	1.00
Mattie Hitt	1.00
E. D. Thomas	3.00
W. M. F. Dennis	2.00
Miam, Laura, Lois and Edward Dugan	1.00
F. W. Seidel	1.00
Thomas Fletcher	1.00
L. Pennsylvania	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. Harper Hazen & Daughter	15.00
Mrs. Louisa J. Combs	2.05
Miss M. C. Bonndage	1.00
Mrs. Matthew Blauvelt	1.00
Two Friends, Pylesville, Md.	3.00
Mrs. M. E. Barker	1.00
W. A. Tyler	1.00
Mrs. Virginia Van Hail	2.10
A Friend, Westport, Me.	2.00
Phillip Boller	1.00
A Friend, Kempton, Ill.	1.00
A Sub'r, McBain, Mich.	1.00
Mrs. E. Runge	1.00
Miss Emma Frierson	1.00
Miss Jennie Frierson	1.00
Samuel Huffman	2.00
C. J. Harvey & Family	1.00
Mrs. M. A. Blackburn	2.00
Julia H. O'Neal	1.00
I. B. Castleman	1.00
M. M. Valentine	2.00
Mrs. Thos. Barber	2.00
Arthur C. Oakes	1.00
R. G. Doxey	1.00
Mrs. J. B. Koontz	1.00

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Secret of Pulpit Power

FEW men of our day are more widely known and respected by lovers of education as well as by the spiritually minded than Bishop John Heyl Vincent, the founder of Chautauqua, now in his eighty-first year. It was in 1874 that the first Chautauqua was held in the woods by Chautauqua Lake, N. Y. A notable gathering it was, of Bible students, Sunday school teachers, prominent educators, professors of Latin, Greek and Hebrew, and students of all denominations. It was the beginning of a movement which has since grown to remarkable proportions, and which had for its object not only the diffusion of education but a higher standard of ideals and a wider fellowship among thoughtful people everywhere.

This broad and successful work had its genesis in the brain of a man who had not the benefit of a college education. At fifteen a school teacher, at eighteen a preacher with spiritual charge of three parishes, at twenty a founder of Sunday schools, Bishop Vincent's work has now grown to be a national institution. Chautauqua is known everywhere and it has been acclaimed as "the divine idea." But although John Heyl Vincent never went to college, he was a man of most thorough education. In his own experience he demonstrated the truth that education is not necessarily confined to the early years of life. He was an omnivorous reader, and an ardent student. He had fifteen years of continuous student life, some of it under tuition, others following his own methods, and his mind became a storehouse of intellectual riches. Greek, Hebrew and French he acquired through laborious effort, and he was familiar with the writings of the great thinkers and philosophers. He traveled widely and observed closely and wisely. At eighty he writes: "I am at school now as a student. I shall never 'finish' my education."

His passion for learning induced him to leave the active ministry and seek opportunities for greater mental development. This decision his father, who was a firm Christian, strongly deprecated, taking the ground that while it was desirable to have a learned ministry, a preacher should not place his sole dependence on mere learning—that he must look to the power of the Holy Spirit to make his work successful. And now, looking back over his eighty years of life, the great educator, who has been an inspiration and a guide to multitudes, records in his autobiography that he never for one moment placed the slightest dependence upon intellectual culture as a source of spiritual power! There are many ministers who expend their strength in a show of eloquence and learning, instead of depending upon the spiritual inspiration and guidance which Bishop Vincent made the mainspring of his phenomenally active career. They mistake the husk for the kernel, the setting for the jewel itself. It is only the preacher who goes to his people with a message direct from God who can ever hope to reach the hearts of men. All the learning in the world cannot redeem an unspiritual ministry or win precious souls to Christ.

Investigating the Coal Trust

THERE are good and bad trusts just as there are good and bad people. Among the trusts, beneficent and maleficent, one stands out prominently for its woful lack of redeeming virtues. It is the Coal Trust. Its recent course in deciding to raise the price of coal twenty-five cents per ton immediately after the settlement of the late strike drew sharp criticism from many quarters as being prompted solely by the selfish desire to make the public pay the cost of the strike. Now the news comes that the Interstate Commerce Commission has decided to make a thorough investigation of the anthracite monopoly, involving freight rates, the arbitrary fixing of coal prices, and the practices, rules and regulations of common carriers governing the transportation of anthracite coal from producing fields to all points in the United States east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers; . . . also that the inquiry shall ascertain whether the coal is mined or produced by or under the authority of the public carriers engaged in the transportation thereof, or whether common carriers own in whole or in part any mine or mines producing anthracite coal which they transport.

In order to get at the heart of the matter, hearings will be held covering a period of nearly a year, and we may anticipate a good deal of interesting testimony. There is crying need of such reforms as will regulate the coal supply and prices to consumers, command fair wages and treatment for the employees and prevent the anthracite resources of the country from being selfishly exploited by a group of trust magnates for their own personal profit. The New York Tribune has made a strong fight against the Coal Trust, and it is due largely to its efforts that the present investigation has been ordered. If it result in bringing about such conditions as will prevent the imposition of exorbitant freight rates and stop the present system of choking off legitimate business rivalry by the piratical "rule or ruin" plan, it will have rendered the public a valuable service. There has been too much tyrannical domination in coal production, too much crushing out of weaker rivals by the combined power of the Trust, too much merciless squeezing of the public to pile up big dividends for a few. Let the investigation be a searching one, and the reforms substantial and permanent.

Legislation Concerning Amusements

THERE has been so much misunderstanding about what was done by the recent Methodist General Conference on the subject of amusements that a further brief statement of the facts seems to be called for. In 1904, 1908, and again in 1912, the bishops recommended that the phraseology of the paragraph in question be changed by eliminating the mention of specific amusements and leaving on record the "General Note" prepared by John Wesley against "taking such diversion as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." Those who favored the change were most emphatic in declaring that they still disapproved of the amusements specified, but believed it to be impracticable to form a list which is comprehensive, safe, and suited to all eras of church progress.

The resolution to change the paragraph was defeated by the decisive vote of 446 to 369. But at a later session of the conference the paragraph was divided, and that portion of it relating to intoxicating liquor was transferred to the paragraph entitled "Immoral Conduct." The title of the amusement paragraph was changed from "Imprudent and Unchristian Conduct" to "Imprudent Conduct." After the General Conference of 1908 some Methodists took the view that since the bishops had expressed themselves as in favor of eliminating the specifications and since there was some confusion at the end of the conference session making it uncertain whether or not the delegates had given a positive decision on the matter, they were free to follow their own consciences. But the 1912 vote was conclusive. The Methodist Church is a democracy, and its own representatives have decided that the wording of the rule must not be changed.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, July 3, 1912

	PAGE
Sunset on Puget Sound	Cover
Where Woman Rules the House (Illustrated) By John L. Cowan	667, 668
Mecklenburg's Declaration (Illustrated) By Rosa Pendleton Chiles	668
Mont-Lawn Will Celebrate (Illustrated)	669
Do You Know Your Bible?	669
True Patriotism. Sermon By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon	670, 671
A Declaration of Independence	671
Stormy National Convention	672, 681
Romanist Idol-Worship in Peru	673
Relieving Louisiana's Need	673
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	674
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	675
Mamie (Illustrated) Story by Evelyn Gill Klahr	676, 677
Sunday School Lesson By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	678, 679
Equipment Obligations	680
Our Mail-Bag	682, 683
A "Fly Catechism"	682

Mrs. Sangster's Last Message

WHILE Margaret E. Sangster, beloved in American homes, was still in good health, and shortly before her fatal attack of sickness, she prepared for publication a book which was to be a love message to the American people. Little did she know at the time that it would be her farewell work. With her own hand she signed the "Foreword" or préface, in which she said:

"My thought is that for the daily loaf on the table and the flowers in the garden, the toil and the task, the music and the song, the joy of love, the wife's kiss, the child's prattle and the strength that comes to us of communion with God, we should alike lift our continual thanksgiving. So this volume goes forth—a friendly book for old and young."

This book, which bears the quaint title, Twilight Tales, has been placed by her executors in the hands of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for publication and is now on the press. Before this notice reaches our readers, the book will be ready for delivery. We bespeak for it a wide popularity. It is a volume in which Mrs. Sangster has given twenty-four delightful, complete stories from real life, charmingly told, and each of which carries with it some definite message of cheer, entertainment or uplift. Those who read it will feel that this wonderfully gifted Christian woman has kept her choicest treasures to the last, for no finer work has ever come from her pen. Twilight Tales touches almost every side of human nature. Love, romance, self-denial, ambition, and the success that true character commands are here pictured in her own inimitable style, with a fragrant setting of country lanes, woodlands and old-fashioned gardens. Reading Twilight Tales, with its little dramas of real life, one feels, more strongly than in any other work by Mrs. Sangster, the spell and charm of that wonderful pen, now forever laid aside. In a very special sense, the book comes like a parting message from the one who has gone. Some of the most famous authors have left their last work unfinished and their final message uncertain. But there is nothing of this in Twilight Tales, the last pages of which sound the triumphant note of Christian faith and give foregleams of immortality. It is a book which none can read without feeling that it contains a personal message that should not be missed.

In order that the book may have the widest circulation, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is placing it within everybody's reach, and as the first edition will no doubt be soon exhausted, we would urge our readers to send in their orders promptly in order to secure quick delivery. Book and binding are both beautiful and make the most desirable kind of a volume for summer reading. Here are the titles of the stories contained in this last literary work from the pen of one who has been very dear to all the readers of this journal for many years:

When Buckwheat Bloomed
At Lonesome Ford
The Little Old Lady
Mr. Warriner's Change of Heart
The Romance of Marcia
Letitia's First Love
A Refrain in Lilies
Mrs. Christy's Beginnings
Sister Hannah
The Patience of Hope
One Easter Day
Barbara Graham
The Saving of Benjamin Ray
Cousin Mary
Golden Sunsets
A Bend in the Road
A Midsummer Meeting
The Peacemaker
The New Pupil
A Little Corner
A Reparation
A Long Lane
The Snowdrop's Message
The Opposite Shore

Twilight Tales will be sent free, postpaid, as a premium to old subscribers who will send us one new six months' subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at 75 cents. This new subscription must be one not now on our list, nor one to replace one now on our list. This is an excellent opportunity for our readers to get the book for themselves and to send the paper to some friend not now a subscriber, for half a year. To any of our present subscribers the book will be sent with one year's CHRISTIAN HERALD renewal for $2. If your subscription does not expire for some time to come, send in your renewal now with $2, and the date of expiration on your paper will be advanced for one year. All orders should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

American Athletes Sail for Sweden

ON JUNE 14 the American athletes sailed on the steamer Finland for Stockholm to take part in the Olympic games which began on the 29th of June. The ship was eautifully decorated, and five thousand friends ere at the dock to wish the contestants a safe voyge and abundant victories. All sorts and sizes omprised the team as they were seen in many roups about the deck, from the great Ralph Rose, he world's record-holder with the shot, to the little aston Strobino, the South Paterson A. C. Maraioner. They were all there—John Paul Jones, the astest distance runner for an amateur the world as ever seen; Marc S. Wright, the Dartmouth lad ho has soared higher with a pole than any man; eorge Horine, whose 6 feet 8¼ inch in the high mp stands unparalleled at the game; James Dunin, scaler of the discus a dozen feet farther than ny one else ever sent the Grecian missile; Tom ongboat, the Canadian Indian runner; and ores of others with fine records; all were oard the ship and determined to win the prizes. lany university men were the Olympic team that iled. Matt McGrath, lichael J. Ryan, Abel Kivit, Melborne Sheppard, latt and Ben Adams, Egon rickson, Frank Irons, Pat cDonald, George Bonhag, scar Hedlund and other llege men were among the umber. Two former Olymic title-holders will strive retain the honors won in 908 when Sheppard toes ie mark in the 800-meter id the 1,500-meter events, nd when Frank Irons, who aped 24 feet 6⅛ inches in ie London games, undertakes to duplicate the perrmance. The trap-shooting team of eight men sailed the George Washington. his is the first time Amerans have entered into this ort at the Olympic games. he world's Olympic games hich are in imitation of ie Grecian games of anquity are only a picture of ie contests of life in the aterial, intellectual and iritual realms. Paul makes ese games and the condions of success illustrate ie spiritual contests when says:

Let us lay aside every weight, d the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with paence the race that is set before us. (Heb. 12: 1.)

America's Crack Atheletes Ready to Sail for the Olympic Games

Newsboy Going to College

WHEN a little fellow in Philadelphia, standing at the Thirty-third Street and Ridge Avenue ntrance to Fairmount Park, Wendell Sooy began lling newspapers. In twelve years he saved 2,600, which he deposited in the bank as a fund to ay his way through college. He will begin his colge education at the opening of the University of ennsylvania this fall, and there is every reason to elieve that he will make a good student and a rong, useful man. Any number of distinguished en in professional and business life in this country egan their careers as newsboys. The self-dependce and dogged persistency in the boy's work are reatly to be commended, but the deep abiding purose to secure a liberal education is laudable in the xtreme. Society will await with hope a young an of his type of industry and ambition. Through l hours and all kinds of weather, for years as he old the million papers there ran through his soul is thought of the wise man:

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom. (Prov. 7.)

Barbara Frietchie's Monument

THE women of Frederick, Md., propose to erect a monument over the grave of Barbara Frietchie. any persons believe that Barbara Frietchie was a yth and that Whittier's story in verse has no storic foundation. The proposed monument indiates that such a woman did live and die in Fredrick, and the following facts verify the authenticity of the event that prompted the poet's verses. A man of character recently wrote to a Baltimore paper: "I remember that about thirty years ago I was presumptuous enough to write to Whittier to inform him that certain literary critics were disputing the claims of his poem in question. I shall give a copy of his reply, which I have just found in my trunk, dusty with age." Whittier's reply is as follows:

DANVERS, MASS., 10th mo., 1883.

DEAR FRIEND:—Barbara Frietchie is a true historical character and the story as told in my verse substantially correct. I have seen her nephew and other friends. She died not long after the event related in the poem, between ninety and one hundred years of age, and lies buried in Frederick.

I had the story told me first by Miss Dorothea Dix and Mrs. Southworth, of Washington. I have a cane from the framework of her house and pieces of two of her silk dresses. The brave old lady is as authentic as George Washington or "Ben" Franklin.

Thine truly,
JOHN G. WHITTIER.

More durable than any monument of marble or brass is the one Whittier erected in his verses immortalizing woman's loyalty in these words:

"Shoot, if you must, this old gray head,
But spare your country's flag," she said, and equally immortalizing the chivalry of one of the truest gentlemen and greatest generals on either side of the conflict, Stonewall Jackson, in these words:

"Who touches a hair of yon gray head Dies like a dog! March on!" he said.

Sacred literature has embalmed the loyalty of woman's love in the words of Christ:

Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her. (Matt. 26: 13.)

Calls Rich Women Vampires

THE Rev. Dr. Edward F. Sanderson, of Brooklyn, addressed the graduating class of Mount Holyoke College recently, saying some very plain things to the young ladies going out from the classic halls. Among other things he said: "If you are ever tempted to envy the women who are free from financial care and above a life devoted to work, remember such women are vampires. I believe that most college women have a deep purpose to make their lives count. I know also the temptations which come at times to the best to be selfish. The woman living on dividends must realize that for every cent's value taken out of a dollar, one cent must be put into the dollar by the labor of men, and oftentimes of tired women and children." Vampire is a pretty strong word to use with reference to women who are not vicious—a word suggested by a ghost or bat that sucks human blood while the victim sleeps; and yet a strong word of caution and warning is needed to guard against the enervation and selfishness so likely to injure the younger and older women of idle wealth. Idleness and the dissipation naturally offered as substitutes undermine the health, happiness and character of many women best equipped for responsibility and service. Many rich women and their daughters are symbols of industry at home, in charitable work, and in the church. But there are enough who are spoiled with indolence to justify the strong language of the minister to the graduating class. It will be difficult to find a better description of an industrious woman than that given by the wise man:

She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. (Prov. 31: 27.)

United States Coffee-Drinking

THE people of the world consume two billion five hundred million pounds of coffee each year, and the people of the United States drink more than one-third of that amount, or pretty nearly a billion pounds. From a recent report of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, at Washington, we learn that the United States uses 875,000,000 pounds, Germany 404,000,000, the Netherlands 265,000,000, France 245,000,000, Austria-Hungary 127,000,000, Belgium 95,000,000, the United Kingdom 88,000,000, and Sweden 65,000,000. Italy, Norway, Switzerland and Denmark consume from 45,000,000 to 25,000,000 pounds each. Of the countries on the Western Hemisphere, Argentina and Cuba each import about 20,000,000 pounds a year; Canada, about 8,000,000, Chile 7,000,000 and Uruguay about 3,000,000, while Australia, the island continent, consumes between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 pounds. Certain of the African countries are comparatively large importers of coffee, the imports into Egypt averaging about 15,000,000 pounds a year, the Cape of Good Hope 20,000,000 and Algeria about 15,000,000 pounds. The world's leading coffee-producing countries are: Brazil, 2,250,000,000 pounds in 1909; Venezuela, 94,000,000 pounds; Mexico, 80,000,000; Colombia, 92,500,000; Porto Rico, 45,000,000; Hayti, 41,000,000; Dutch East Indies, 35,000,000; British India, 28,000,000; Arabia, 15,250,000; and Abyssinia, 10,000,000. The world's supply in 1909 aggregated nearly 3,000,000,000 pounds, but in 1910 fell below 2,000,000,000 pounds, due to a decrease of about 950,000,000 pounds in the exports from Brazil. Of the 875,000,000 pounds imported last year 651,000,000 pounds was from Brazil, as against 224,000,000 from all other parts of the world. The coffee bean that originated in Abyssinia is a stimulant and nutrient. In excess, it acts as a poison. The apostle lays down this rule:

Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. (I. Cor. 10: 31.)

Terrible Tornadoes

DEADLY storms have swept over the country recently, especially in the Middle West. On one day terrific tornadoes left wrecks in their path through West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio and Missouri. Perhaps the worst was one in Missouri. Two cyclones moved about six miles apart along parallel lines. One started at a point near Merwin, and went eastward along the south side of Adrian and Altona; the other originated near Drexel and reached its maximum velocity near Creighton. Besides enormous loss of property twenty-nine people were killed. Relief trains were sent from Windsor, Warrensburg and Sedalia. The families who have had loved ones thus suddenly snatched from them have the sympathy of the whole country. We live in a world of danger. These cyclones are the effort of nature to purify the atmosphere for man's health and life. We live in a world of moral and spiritual danger with wrecking storms about us. Nature, observation and revelation all encourage us to find safety in the storm. The prophet saw it.

And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain. (Isa. 4: 6.)

MAMIE

BY EVELYN GILL KLAHR

BEN gave Father an encouraging little slap on the shoulder. "First thing we know," he declared jovially, "Father'll be dashing around the city in his own motor-car, and Mother'll be joining a lot of women's clubs. D'you know, you're going to be ever so much more comfortable in the city, both of you, than you are here on the farm."

"No, Ben," Mother corrected him gently, "we are more comfortable here than we could possibly be shut up in the city."

Ben saw his mistake and quickly rectified it by resorting to the tactics that he knew would work. "But, of course," he promptly added, "it's on Mamie's account that we're doing this."

Father's eyes went wandering over to the orchard on the hill, longingly, wistfully. "Yes," he assented, "for Mamie's sake."

"You see," Ralph explained—he was the younger son—"you see, it would be awfully hard for a girl like Mamie when she's been studying art for two years in Paris to come back to a farm where she wouldn't see anything. She ought to be in the city where she can have pictures and art galleries and lots of people, and have a studio and all that."

This project of selling the farm had been under consideration for weeks, now pushed forward by the commercial zealousness of Ben (he was a wholesale merchant in the city), now dropped into the background because of the reluctance of Father and Mother, until at last Ben—just yesterday, in fact—from his office had telephoned Ralph at the bank to come around that afternoon and talk it over. He had succeeded in persuading Ralph that it was utter financial folly to sink any more money into the old place when a real estate agent could get them something handsome for it. They had further decided that it would be better to run out to the farm the very next day and settle the thing once and for all.

"And remember," Ben had said, "the folks'll be less apt to hesitate if they think they're doing it for Mamie's sake. Remember that."

And now as they were all on the vine-covered back porch of the old farmhouse, with the matter practically settled, Ben, big, handsome, successful, businesslike, leaned against the post of the porch and looked complacently out over the fields. He was confident that he was doing what was best for the old people; they'd see it, too, presently, and be glad that he had persuaded them to sell.

But Ralph, with his keen gray eyes scrutinizing his father's face, was not so sure. He had been persuaded that it was best to sell in a city office, not out here on the farm; and although his mind now habitually thought in dollars and cents, he had kept the heart of that boy who years ago had brought home dilapidated puppies wrapped in his jacket. And so to-day his quick sympathy seemed to detect a wistfulness about his father's eyes and a new sadness on his mother's sweet, patient face.

"Look here!" he broke out impetuously. "It's your farm, and if you don't want to sell, just say so; and that's all there is to it."

Mother gave a quick, eager glance at Father. He was still staring at the orchard hill.

"No," Father replied slowly, "we'll go to town, if it's best for the little girl."

The eager look faded from Mother's face. "Yes," she agreed softly, "whatever is best for Mamie. I suppose," she added, "it would be lonely—after Paris. Girls are so different nowadays."

"Different!" exclaimed Ben. "They certainly are. I wish you could see—Hullo! here he comes!"

From the back porch they saw an automobile coming around the curve in the road. "It's the agent," explained Ralph, "the one that went over the place last week. We told him to come again this afternoon. Ben and I'll look after him, Dad; you won't have to bother about the arrangements."

As the two sons walked around the house to meet the agent, Father and Mother with common, unspoken consent slipped away from the porch. They wanted, both of them, to get as far away as possible from the "arrangements."

They started through the back yard to the garden. At the old summer kitchen near the garden gate Mother stopped and touched a flat stone with her foot.

"Do you remember?" she asked softly.

"Remember?" cried Father, reading again the figures his own hands had cut into the stone. "'May 1, 1870.' Do I remember the day we bought this place? You were a proud one that day, Mother."

"I suppose you think you weren't," she teased him tenderly. "You thought you owned half the United States that day."

"I still think it is a very decent farm," he replied with dignity.

Drawn by Wilson C. Dexter

"Reading again the figures his own hand had cut into the stone"

Mother gave him a little pat on his arm to show him that she thought so, too. "And look!" she cried. "How Ben's onion bed is growing!" They still called it Ben's onion bed although it was nearly a quarter of a century since Ben, with grubby little hands, had planted onions there.

"I wonder what will become of it," mused Father. "And this too!" With a half rueful smile he pointed to the collection of stones, some of them still upright, in a little grass plot beyond—Mamie's cemetery for dead kittens.

Through the garden they went, and on and on, until at last they stood at the orchard hill where the whole farm lay before their eyes: pastures with cattle grazing on the thick, luxurious grass, fields bathed in sun, bringing forth their crops abundantly, quite as if Ben had not pronounced them a poor investment.

Father folded his arms and looked around him. Two hard lines came about his mouth.

"There!" he said at last. "You see forty-two years of my muscle and energy and hopes and life in those fields. Forty-two years!"

"And you've done so much in those years, Father. Why, just think of that north pasture! It w nothing but rocks and brush when we first can and now see it!"

Father nodded. "I thought I'd never get th field cleared; and then when I was about to give along would come Jones and help me with it for day or two."

"The Joneses have been awfully good neighbo It'll be lonely without them in the city."

"Not lonely. We'll have the boys and Mamie."

"I wish we could take the north pasture alo with us," Mother sighed. "It's been 'most like child we've raised."

Father laughed, but his cheerfulness did n somehow, ring true. Mother furtively slipped h handkerchief from her waist to have it convenie in her hand, for all she was so well schooled in kee ing back tears. Father pretended n to notice it and went on with his a sumed cheerfulness.

"It's not as if we had to leave rig away," he consoled her. "We c probably stay here a year or longer."

Again his eyes lovingly made t circle of the land, until they fell up the farmhouse and saw Ralph on t back porch beckoning to them.

"Ralph's wanting us," he sai "we'd better go down."

They made their way down the h in silence, until Ralph, coming to me them, joined them.

"Sorry to bother you, Dad," he sai "but there are some papers and thin we'll have to get you to sign."

"You'd better wait here on the ba porch, dear," Father told Mother.

But that wasn't Mother's way; a these years she and Father had fac together all their troubles and fai ures and losses; and she refused to l spared now. She went with the into the front room where Ben ar the agent sat, her shoulders straigh her eyes clear and calm, but her han kerchief still in a tight, hard litt wad in her hand.

Ben was as jovial as ever. "In year you'll feel you can't be thankf enough you did this, Father," he sai enthusiastically. "And it isn't as you were going to leave to-day. Tak your time to it—three weeks, a mont if you want to."

Father did not answer, and thos two lines had come around his mout again.

Mother had refused the rockin chair Ralph pulled up for her and wa sitting in the corner in a stiff, har little chair.

"Where are the papers?" aske Father.

Again Ralph was seized with com punction. "Dad, are you sure yo want to? It's not too late now, yo know."

For a moment Father hesitated, an Mother knew that his mind was ou on the fields where he had so tir lessly, so splendidly given more tha forty years of his life. She waite breathlessly, her handkerchief to tured by the tight grip of her finger scarcely knowing what she hoped or what sh wanted.

"Yes," said Father at last. "It'll be best fo Mamie."

"Of course it'll be fine for Mamie," Ben reassure him. "It'll be a great thing all around." And h put the papers in Father's hand.

"I think it's a great thing, too," said a voice fro the doorway.

Startled, they all turned to stare at the doo That voice was as young and lovely and as exquisit as the radiant young girl who had suddenly ap peared there before them.

Amazement held them petrified for a moment and then she was in all their arms at once, gasping laughing, sobbing, trying to explain.

"I wanted to surprise— Yes, just landed to-day took the first train over. Yes, I got a carriage a the station. Of course, I'm all right, can't you see Dad, you old dear! you're nicer than ever! An Mother's ten years younger, isn't she? There Please! There! Sit down, all of you, and I'll try to tell you."

Continued on next page

Chiclets

REALLY DELIGHTFUL

The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

Look for the Bird Cards in the packets. You can secure a beautiful Bird Album FREE.

Half a million folks of all kinds—including grown-ups, children, teachers, etc., are collecting our wonderful Bird Studies—faithful reproductions of American birds in full colors, with description of the birds' plumage, habits, and how to know them on sight. You will find one beautiful bird picture in each packet of Chiclets. Send us any fifty of these pictures with ten cents in stamps and we will send you—free—our splendid Bird Album.

The refinement of Chewing gum for people of refinement. It's the peppermint—the true mint.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores 5c. the Ounce and in 5c., 10c. and 25c. Packets

SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY
Metropolitan Tower
New York

Chiclets
Chiclets
Chiclets

LABLACHE FACE POWDER

WHEN ROSES BLOOM

When Nature is glorious with the first blush of summer—then is the charm of beauty most appreciated. LABLACHE imparts that touch of delicacy and refinement to the complexion which assists Nature in retaining the bloom of youth.

Refuse Substitutes

They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream, 50c. a box of druggists or by mail. Send 2c stamp for sample box.

BEN. LEVY CO.,
French Perfumers
Dept. 22, 125 Kingston Street
BOSTON, MASS.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium

FOR THE SCIENTIFIC TREATMENT OF

CANCER

WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE.

With an early diagnosis and prompt treatment practically all accessible cancerous growths are curable. When writing for information describe case in which you are interested. Address

WALLACE E. BROWN, M. D.
(Formerly Drs. W. E. Brown & Son.)
North Adams, Mass.
Established thirty-five years.

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

at your home. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Banjo, Cello, Brass Instruments or Sight Singing. Beginners or advanced pupils. One or two lessons weekly. Your only expense is for sheet music and postage and averages 14 cents a week. We have successful pupils all over the world. Our lessons are simple and easy. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. Write today for free booklet and free tuition offer. International Institute of Music, 98 Fifth Ave., Dept. 341-B, New York.

THE BEST LIGHT

BEST BY TEST

makes and burns its own gas. Costs 2c. a week to operate. No dirt, grease nor odor. A pure white light, more brilliant than electricity or acetylene. None other so cheap or effective. Agents wanted. Write for catalogue and prices.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th Street, Canton, O.

PRICE $7.50 UP

Make Big Money

with our wonderful Champion Picture Machine. Takes, develops, finishes photo in half minute; 500 an hour. No dark room. Experience unnecessary. Photo Post Cards and Buttons all the rage! You coin money anywhere. Small investment; big profits. Be your own boss. Write for Free Book, Testimonials, etc.

AMERICAN MINUTE PHOTO CO.
813 Nehoc Blk. Chicago, Ill.

WANTED—Men and Women Agents in every locality to sell direct or through subagents, our guaranteed hosiery for men, women and children; elegant profits; exclusive territory; permanent business; write to-day. HIGHLAND HOSIERY CO., 782 Hiland Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair

Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 5c postage. Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods.

ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A618 22 Quincy St., Chicago

Good-Bye To Corns!

Arthur's "Corn-Off" removes them in a jiffy. Thin medicated plaster—no crowding in the shoe. Send 10 cents for full-size package—guaranteed to remove.

Arthur Chemical Co., 437 Congress Av., New Haven, Ct.

New York New York City Avenue A, 63d and 64th Sts.

Have You Chosen a Profession?

There are Opportunities in Medicine especially Homeopathic Medicine. Send for Catalog. P. New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital, Rev. Alfa Copeland, A. M., M. D., Dean.

SEND SAMPLE OF HAIR

and I will send on approval a 26 inch guaranteed natural wavy switch. Price ... $3

If satisfactory, send money order.

MME. FRIED, 25 West 34th Street, New York
Send for illustrated catalogue D

SOWING THE GOOD SEED*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

Jesus as a Bible Teacher

IF JESUS were a Sunday school teacher to-day, we should all want to be in his class. No one of us would be without a Bible in hand, not taken from a pile of Bibles left in the class—such Bibles do not appeal to us—but a Bible of our very own, with our name written in it, more or less soiled by use. We were glad when the new look disappeared. "I should think you would be ashamed of your old, ragged Bible," said a young man one day to his aunt, who had pretty well used up her Bible with more than thirty years of study. "No, indeed," the aunt replied, "the older it gets the more it delights me. I should be quite ashamed to have an unworn Bible." As scholars in Jesus' Bible class, we would be dextrous in turning to different passages in the Bible on his request, not floundering first in the New Testament and then in the Old, or vice versa. We know that Jesus would be a Bible-in-hand teacher, because when he was here on earth he frequently said: "Have ye not read?" "Did ye never read?" "Have ye not read even this?" (Matt. 12: 3, Matt. 19: 4, Matt. 21: 16, Matt. 22: 31, Mark 2: 25, Mark 12: 10, 26, Luke 6: 3.) And as we glance through the Red Letter Bible and see how many of its parts Jesus quoted, we are sure that he had the Scriptures in his head as well as in his hand. Let these thoughts of him inspire us to be such a Bible teacher as he was.

Jesus Teaching the Multitude

One day Jesus sat in a boat while he taught the waiting people on the land. The Old Testament only was in existence at that time, and Jesus probably did not have that in hand, so he taught them out of the Oldest Testament as it lay spread out before them in a field of grain. We cannot say that it was the Sabbath day, for all days were teaching days to Jesus. On that particular occasion it was not so much the purpose of Jesus to explain the teachings of the Bible as it was to impress the people with the thought of what should be their attitude toward the Word of God, and so he taught them by the parable of a sower. Possibly a sower may have been at work in the field hard by at the very time Jesus was talking to the people, or, what is more probable, they were looking on a field that had been sown some weeks beforehand, and which plainly showed by the different kinds of growth of what kinds of soil the field was composed: there were stones that had little or no growth upon them; there lay a bare track; there was a part which had a few sickly stalks almost choked by the weeds, and there was still another part where there was a rich harvest ready to gather. We do not read that Jesus explained all of this to the people; indeed, they knew full well the wherefore of it all. Jesus taught inductively, although he lived in the first century instead of the twentieth. We know that he did, because his twelve apostles afterward asked him to make an application of his teachings: "what this parable might be." They wanted to hear Jesus' own interpretation of it because they had been appointed by Jesus "fishers of men." Then Jesus explained that the seed sown was the Word of God; that the field was those who had heard; that the bare ground from which the birds had picked the seed was like those who had heard the Word of God, but allowed evil influences, even Satan, to destroy the teachings that had been given them; that the places where there was little

Continued on next page

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for July 14, 1912. "The seed in the four kinds of soil." Mark 4: 1-20. GOLDEN TEXT: "Receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls." James 1: 21.

The Howard Watch

SIX hundred thousand Americans go abroad every year.

Once the American tourist preferred a foreign watch. Now he goes to Europe with a HOWARD bought here—or comes back with a HOWARD bought there.

He has an example in the ship's officer on the dock, who orders up the gang plank on HOWARD time.

You find more and more of the responsible men carrying HOWARD Watches.

The great railroads started it. The time inspectors of 180 American railroads have officially certified and adopted the HOWARD.

It is carried by leading technical men—by the heads of great industrial and commercial enterprises—by scientists—by army and navy officers and government officials.

Many a man buys a HOWARD for the sheer pleasure of owning the watch that is so well spoken of by men whose opinion he respects.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel at $150—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post-card, Dept. W. and we'll send you a copy.

E. HOWARD WATCH WORKS, Boston, Mass.

You Can Make These at Home!

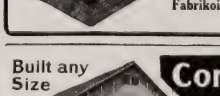
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
FABRIKOID LEATHER

FABRIKOID is soft and pliable, easily sewn by hand or machine, fine for embroidery. All colors.

Better than leather for many purposes, washable, cheap, durable. Ideal for home upholstering, wall covering and fancy work. Send now for free sample and color plates, showing articles made from Fabrikoid.

Fabrikoid Dept. No. 372, Du Pont Powder Co.
Wilmington, Delaware

Built any Size



Cornell Sectional Cottages
Complete Painted Ready to Set Up

GARAGES, STORES, CHURCHES, SCHOOL-HOUSES, PLAYHOUSES, STUDIO, E
Built in sections convenient for handling, and are quickly and easily erected, simply by bolting sects together. Skilled labor is not necessary to set them up, as all sections are numbered and everything f
Built of first-class material in the largest and best portable house factory in America. Buildings are s ential and as durable as if built on the ground by local contractors. Are handsomer and Cost Much La
We build homes to meet every requirement. We pay freight. Art catalog by mail on receipt of 4c stam
WYCKOFF LUMBER & MFG. COMPANY, 433 Lehigh Street, Ithaca, New Yo

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C

YOU CAN AFFORD a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person; "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," Round or Shape Notes, for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. HACKETT, 128 North Wayne Street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

KEEP BRIGHT

Any bathroom can be kept clean, bright and shiny with little work and no trouble by using 3-in-One oil. It cleans and polishes nickel, prevents tarnish and rust on brass and metal, removes stains, spots and scars from wood.

3-in-One keeps everything about every home spick and span. Try on piano cases, furniture, brass railings, door plates, cutlery.

FREE If you will give us name of your dealer we will send sample bottle and valuable booklet—both free.

3 IN ONE OIL CO. 42 CM, Broadway, New York

YALE PRESS

Best most practical durable press for making Jellies, Jams, Grape Juice, Cider, Wine, Fruit Ices, Lard, Stuffing Sausages, etc. No woman has strength to press fruits with her hands, besides, without a press half the juice and nearly all the flavor, which only great pressure brings out, is lost. All steel and iron plated. Clamps to table or shelf. With a few turns of wheel, material is put under 2000 lbs. pressure. $4.50

qt. size.....

A superior patented sanitary and instantly detachable spout for stuffing sausages furnished free with each press

If dealer won't supply, take no substitute—order from us. Sold on 10 days' trial, money back guarantee. Write for FREE booklet "Aunt Sally's Best Recipes," also describes press.

VICTOR M. GRAB & CO.
177 Ashland Block, Chicago, Ill.

Hello, Polly!

Secure one of these entertaining companionable pets at lowest summer rates. Absolutely no risk. Guaranteed to talk or may be exchanged. Book on care of Parrots, shipping box and food for several weeks furnished FREE. Mexican Red Head Parrots $4.50 each, or $8.50 including cage. Mexican Double Yellow Head Parrots $9.50 each or $12 including cage. Order a "Live Talking Machine" now.

$4.50

The Bird House with a National Reputation
Bishop "THE BIRD MAN"
Established 1874
10 North Front Street
BALTIMORE, MD.

Genuine All Hand Woven Unblocked PANAMA

From Weaver to Wearer

Can be worn in that condition by Men, Women and Children handy blocked in any shape or style, just as accurately as the $10 kind.

Head sizes. Brims from 3 to 7 inches. Light weight. Sent prepaid on receipt of $1.00. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, NEW YORK CITY

Are You Interested In

pleasant, permanent and profitable agency work? We offer a position as exclusive distributing salesman either all or spare time for the Automatic Combination Tool, a Fence Builders Device, Post Puller, Lifting and Pulling Jack, Wire Stretcher, Wrench, etc. Used by Contractors, Teamsters, Farmers, Factories and others. Weighs 24 lbs., lifts or pulls 3 tons. Write for offer and county desired.

AUTOMATIC JACK CO., Box 54, Bloomfield, Ind.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

TRY THIS WONDERFUL DISHWASHER FOR TWENTY DAYS FREE

This is the Kitchenette—a dishwasher that will wash, dry and sterilize all the dishes used by a large family in three minutes. No need to put your hands in water or perform any labor whatever, and the Kitchenette does it all and does it better. It is so easy and simple that a child can work it, and it is equally adapted for the smallest home. Every housekeeper should have one at once. We don't ask you to buy it until you have tried it for 20 days and proved to your own satisfaction that it is worth its weight in gold. We don't ask you for a penny down. We ship you the Kitchenette FREE. Try it for 20 days—then if you like it pay us our easy payments of each payment plan—$1.00 a month for a few months. If you don't like it return it to us at our expense.

Pay $1.00 a Month

KITCHENETTE CO., 42 Pearl St., Buffalo, N. Y. Dept. C

Please send me a Kitchenette for 20 days' trial with the understanding that I can return it if not satisfactory.

This coupon is to be worth $1.00 if I keep the Kitchenette.

Name .....

Address .....

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

soil in the rocks was like shallow-minded people who do not persist long in doing the good they are taught; that the places where the good seed had been choked by the weeds were like those who allowed thoughts of riches and worldly matters to make them forget what they had learned about the Word of God; and that the places in the field where the rich harvest had grown typified those who had made their lives rich in good deeds by the hearing and doing of the Word of God.

The Bible Influencing Life

A missionary met an elderly man (a savage) who looked very downcast, and he asked, "My friend, what is the matter? Who is dead?" "Oh, no one is dead," replied the man. "Well, what is the matter? you seem to be mourning." With a gesture of despair, he replied, "My son tells me that my dog has eaten a leaf of the Bible." "Well," answered the missionary, "perhaps I can replace it." "Oh," said the man, "the dog will never do any good; he will never bite anybody; he will never catch any jackals; he will be as tame as I see people become who believe in that Book. All our warriors become as gentle as women, and my dog is done for!" That was the savage's impression of the work of the Bible as he had seen it.

It would be a long way from the thought of the savage about his dog to the understanding of those grand words of the prophet Jeremiah about the Bible. "Thy words were found and I did eat them, and thy words were unto me a joy and the rejoicing of my heart" (Jer. 15: 16). But by the grace of God many so-called savages have been brought to Jeremiah's point of view, and to be themselves "living epistles." Fiji, once the worst cannibal spot in the world, is now one of the most Christian. When we visited the islands in 1907 we were told there were ninety thousand Fijians, and that the whole population were adherents of churches. That fact illustrated the power of the Bible in the nineteenth century, eighteen centuries after Jesus had spoken his marvelous words: "The seed is the Word of God." "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Dr. John G. Paton, the heroic missionary to the New Hebrides, tells how the natives planted and sold arrowroot for fifteen years, raising the sum of $6,000 to pay for the printing of the Bible. When it was printed, Dr. Paton read a part of the Book to an old chief. The old man fairly shouted with joy. "It does speak! It speaks my own language, too! Oh, give it to me!"

The Bible has power not on savage life alone, but on those whom the world calls "great" as well. Rev. Milton Merle Smith, D.D., has said: "It has been my privilege to have in my possession for a day or two the Bible of the late Rear Admiral Philip. I have never seen a Bible more marked and thumbed than his. The chapters most marked are the fourteenth chapter of John and the eighth of Romans. In the former chapter every verse except three is marked. It was his custom to note the dates on the margin when he began either the Old or New Testament in his readings by course. I find twelve dates noted when he began to read the Old Testament, and thirty-four when he began to read the New. Many, many times he must have read the Bible from its beginning to its end. I find here the secret of his gentleness and his power. A number of quotations are pasted carefully in his Bible. On the first page of the New Testament is pasted this card:

Put any burden upon me, only sustain me.
Send me anywhere, only go with me.
Sever any tie but this tie, which binds
Me to thy service and thy heart.

The verse most heavily underscored are the words of Jesus: "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will also I confess before my Father which is in heaven." Possibly it was that he had read many times, "Love your enemies; do good to them that hate you," that made him able to say when the Spanish fleet had been overcome at Santiago, and the Spaniards were struggling for life, "Don't cheer, boys; the poor fellows are dying!"

The Golden Text: "Receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls" (James 1: 21), brings us back again to the field and to the sower, and we realize that there must first be a sower before the seed can grow. From Jesus the Sower we receive the seed which is the Word of God. The life-giving power that is in the seed was thus expressed by Jesus: "Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me" (John 5: 39). Jesus is the life principle of the seed—does he therefore sow himself? Yes, he did, when he was here among men, and until he ascended up on high, returning to his Father; then he gave over the sowing to those whom he commissioned to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Parents and preachers and Sunday school teachers are now the sowers.

Beside the Bible there are other so-called "sacred books," but they all lack the Christ. Their seed only spreads error and wrong practices in the lands where they are studied and obeyed. Witness the cruelties meted out to women and children in India, China and Turkey. Compared with the good seed of the Bible, those books have in them seeds like thistles and deadly nightshade. We turn from them to "Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth" (Isa. 52: 7). We cannot count them all, but it has been told us under a statement of "Twentieth Century Missions," in the Missionary Review of the World, that there are 6,500 American foreign missionaries and 8,000 British foreign missionaries, and 3,000 European foreign missionaries. In these figures are not included the 2,607,371 Sunday-school officers and teachers reported at the last World's Sunday School Convention in 1910, and these are among the best sowers in all the world, and they are sowing in the best field—the youth of the world. Nor yet are numbered the faithful parents in all lands, and the ministers of the Gospel, and other Christian workers.

The Sunset Splendor

(See Cover)

THE one-color reproduction from a photograph which forms the cover for this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is printed as an example of the excellent results that may be obtained by the careful selection of a subject, the expert manufacture of plates and extreme care in the selection and application of the ink. This photograph is reproduced mainly because it is an example of the successful accomplishment of one of the most difficult feats possible for a photographer. All who have experimented even with a little camera have realized that to take a picture with the lens pointed toward the most brilliant light and get any other result than a round white spot on the center of the film or plate is extremely difficult. In this case, the photographer has caught the sun as it nears the horizon, emerging from a bank of clouds. It is a scene with which we are all familiar yet which few of us have ever before seen photographed. The picture was taken in the Straits of Juan de Fuca between the island of Vancouver, B. C., and Cape Flattery in the State of Washington.

Are you one of those who have intended to but have not?

SINCE January, when the discovery of the new, vegetable cooking product was announced, many statements have been made regarding its remarkable superiority.

Some women could not believe them — said it seemed impossible. But there were thousands of others who were so interested that they purchased a package of Crisco and tried it.

These women now know that it does give a finer, richer cake than does butter; that Crisco pastry is tenderer and more easily digested; that their fried foods are the best they ever have eaten.

This announcement is addressed especially to you who may not have given Crisco a chance to show what it will do.

Try it for frying potatoes, making pie crust and making cake.

These three experiments will show you what a wonderful thing Crisco is.

Do not put it off any longer. Order your first package today.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.
Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Bond House for the Conservative Investor

The conservative investor used to be satisfied with the moderate income afforded by bonds yielding 3 to 4 per cent. In these days a higher income with equal safety is not only desirable but attainable through the service of the representative American bond house.

Among the attractive securities that appeal to thrifty men and women as sound and profitable are the first mortgage bonds of public service corporations, yielding 5 to 6 per cent. The marvelous development of our country in recent years has given particular value to bonds of this character.

The service of E. H. Rollins & Sons is essentially for conservative investors.

All bonds we buy are first thoroughly investigated. We make a searching inquiry into the proposition back of the bonds. If it measures up to the Rollins standard, we purchase the entire bond issue outright, and offer the bonds to our clients at a moderate profit.

When you are looking for investment bonds — public service, railroad or municipal — that will assure you a satisfactory income, communicate with us.

The July number of the Rollins Magazine will be sent free to investors on request. Also ask for circular No. 563.

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS
Founded 1876
INVESTMENT BONDS
Boston New York Chicago Denver
San Francisco Los Angeles

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP

First Class Machines Fresh from the M'f'rs —Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

Equipment Obligations

THE average investor is fairly familiar with such securities as are comprised in the general classification of bonds and stocks, but comparatively few are familiar with the form of investment known as car trust or equipment trust certificates, notes and bonds.

Car trust certificates and equipment bonds and notes are each used extensively by railroads in this country and Canada to finance purchases of locomotives and freight and passenger cars which are needed to take care of their increasing traffic. The railroad company is thereby enabled to purchase on the instalment plan an amount of equipment for which it would be unable to pay the entire purchase price in cash.

The method of accomplishing this result is as follows: The railroad company agrees to purchase the desired equipment, and pays on account anywhere from ten to twenty-five per cent. of the purchase price. For the balance of the purchase price car trust or equipment trust certificates or bonds and notes are issued. A bond or note is issued in a case where the title to the equipment is vested in the railroad company; a certificate is issued in a case where the title to the equipment is retained by some individual or association, the latter leasing the equipment to the railroad company, the rental being so adjusted as to net the entire balance due upon the purchase price with interest before the trust matures. Most equipment trusts run for a period of ten years, though now and then such trusts are created for a period of fifteen years.

Terms of the Contract

It is usual to embody all the terms of the contract between the railroad company and the certificate holders in a trust deed or car trust agreement. If the railroad company has taken title to the cars and locomotives for which the notes or bonds are to be issued, then the transaction takes the form of a trust deed conveying the equipment to the trustee by way of mortgage or pledge, and giving the trustee, in respect of the particular cars and locomotives involved, all the rights and securities which an ordinary mortgagee of real estate or chattels would have in a like situation. If, on the other hand, the transaction is one where the railway company does not take title to the equipment, a car trust agreement takes the place of the trust deed. This agreement is made between the owner of the cars (which may be an individual or association), the railroad company, and a trustee representing the certificate holders.

Details of Agreement

The owner of the cars, by executing the agreement, agrees to lease the cars to the railroad company, and the railroad company to rent them from the owner, the title at the end of the rental period to vest in the railroad company. Payments of rental are, by the agreement, required to be made to the trustee, who is also clothed by the agreement with the usual remedies to protect an owner under similar circumstances. Though these agreements are in form leases, they amount in fact to conditional sale agreements; what the agreements designate as rent being really a part of the purchase price.

Although purchasing on the instalment plan is generally frowned upon by household economists as a reprehensible practice, many of the best managed railroads in the country have availed themselves of the instalment plan of purchasing railroad equipment through the issuance of equipment trust certificates. The Pennsylvania, Lehigh Valley and other well-managed roads have outstanding many thousands of dollars of these obligations.

They furnish from many points of view a most desirable form of investment. One of the leading trust companies in New York City, in a pamphlet on the subject, calls attention to the remarkable record of this form of investment in the past twenty-four years. Out of twenty-eight railroads which were foreclosed and reorganized during that period, all of which had equipment obligations of some kind outstanding, only one (that of the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton) failed to protect from loss the holders of its equipment obligations. One of the reasons for this is that the equipment is necessary to continue the operation of the railroad, and inasmuch as a receivership and reorganization are always had under court supervision, and the courts have laid it down as a guiding principle that the railroads must be kept in operation for the public convenience, a receiver is customarily authorized by the court to pay both the principal and interest on outstanding equipment obligations when and as they mature. Very few forms of investment can be cited which show in the past decades so small a loss to the investor.

Reorganized Railroads

It is pointed out by the writer of the pamphlet that the following railway companies, all of which had equipment obligations outstanding, were reorganized between 1888 and 1912, either with or without foreclosure: Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Baltimore and Ohio, Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia, Chesapeake and Ohio, Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton, Chicago and Southern, Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo, International and Great Northern, Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf, New York, Lake Erie and Western, Norfolk and Southern, Northern Pacific, Philadelphia and Reading, Pere Marquette, Richmond and Danville, Georgia Pacific, Seaboard Air Line, Southern Indiana, Toledo, St. Louis and Kansas City, Union Pacific. In every case the equipment obligations of these roads were paid in full with interest, while other securities of the same roads were reduced in rate or amount or both. In the case of two other railroads, Denver and Rio Grande and Norfolk Western, which were foreclosed and reorganized, the holders of their equipment obligations were given the option of surrendering their securities upon being paid in full, or exchanging them for securities of the reorganized company on advantageous terms.

It is evident from the foregoing recital that equipment obligations offer a most desirable form of investment so far as security of principal is concerned. As they sell at a price netting the investor from five to six per cent., securities of this class also possess another requisite of a good investment—an attractive yield. Although not regularly listed on the New York Stock Exchange, railway equipment obligations usually have a fairly broad market, thus adding to the investment qualities of security and satisfactory yield the addition of marketability.

DAVID PAINE.

Poles Fighting Church Greed

THERE are 4,000,000 Poles in the United States, mostly Catholics. There are 1,000 Polish priests. These 4,000,000 Poles have contributed over $200,000,000 of their money for building churches. In connection with this, a somewhat remarkable case has come up in Milwaukee, where the Polish publication, Kuryer Polski, is conducting a hot campaign against the Catholic authorities and charging that many of the churches "are used not for worship, but as political and business agencies." Another case belonging to this class was recently brought into court in Wilkesbarre, Pa., when Judge Fuller held that the congregation of St. Stanislaus Church were entitled to the deed for the property, which had been withheld from them by the church authorities Judge Fuller in his decision said: "The principal bone of contention is whether the bishop defendant shall continue to hold the title in his own name as trustee for the congregation, in accordance with the law of the Roman Catholic Church, or convey the title on request of the congregation to designated trustees, in accordance with the law of the commonwealth."

DUBIOUS
About What Her Husband Would Say.

A Mich. woman tried Postum becaus coffee disagreed with her and her hus band. Tea is just as harmful as coffe because it contains caffeine — the sam drug found in coffee. She writes:

"My husband was sick for three year with catarrh of the bladder, and palpita tion of the heart, caused by coffee. Wa unable to work at all and in bed part o the time.

"I had stomach trouble, was weak an fretful so I could not attend to my house work—both of us using coffee all the tim and not realizing it was harmful.

"One morning the grocer's wife sai she believed coffee was the cause of ou trouble and advised Postum. I took i home rather dubious what my husban would say—he was fond of coffee.

"But I took coffee right off the tabl and we haven't used a cup of it since You should have seen the change in us and now my husband never complains o heart palpitation any more. My stomach trouble went away in two weeks after began Postum. My children love it an it does them good, which can't be said o coffee.

"A lady visited us who was usually hal sick. I told her I'd make her a cup o Postum. She said it was tasteless stuff but she watched me make it, boiling i thoroughly for 15 minutes, and when don she said it was splendid. Long boilin brings out the flavour and food quality." Name given by Postum Co., Battl Creek, Mich.

Look in pkgs. for the famous little book "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

5%

Write to-day for the Calvert Book—it is a book that everyone who is saving money or has money to invest ought to have.

It is full of interesting information for investors, and tells in detail of this Company and its 17 years of successful experience.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Company pays 5 Per Cent interest on all money entrusted to its care.

Money begins to draw interest the day it is received, and it may be withdrawn at any time without notice.

In the entire history of the Company there has never been a day's delay in the mailing of interest checks or in the repayment of principal when demanded.

It is an ideal savings or investment plan. Don't fail to write for the book.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

GUARANTEED MORTGAGES
for Large and Small Investors

You can now invest small sums in first-class mortgage bonds. You can have the same advantages which for hundreds of years capitalists alone have enjoyed. Whether you have $10 or $10,000 to invest, you can have the same security and the same returns. Send for our booklet on yielding 5% to 6%, with the guarantee of this Company and the highest class New York and Suburban Real Estate back of them. The safest, surest, most profitable investment for earnings consistent with absolute security.

FIRST MORTGAGE TRUST BONDS

Under Supervision of New York Banking Department

Write for Booklet.

NEW YORK MORTGAGE CO.
Dept. D, 1475 Broadway, New York City

10¢ Stamps or Coin brings you a tin o
GOLDEN WEST SALAD DRESSING POWDE
Makes a pint of delicious Salad Dressi
Address Clauet & Devers, Portland, O

A Stormy National Convention

Continued from page 672

When Governor Hadley took the form in response to many calls, a arkable scene of excitement fol-
ed. The convention seemed to go l with enthusiasm. There was a mendous outburst of cheers, mingled h whistling, yelling and stamping feet. Hats were flung in the air.
negro delegate opened his um-la and tossed it aloft. Governor bbs of Kansas led the cheering for lley. The California delegates tried out up their Roosevelt banners to the demonstration to account for r candidate, but the convention had arently taken the bit in its teeth for lley. It was a veritable pandeium of noise. The Taft men on the form looked uneasy. Ten minutes sed without any diminution. Olders began to talk of a stampede, as its of "Hadley! Hadley! He's our didate!" came from the frenzied gates, while the audience in the eries added to the picturesque con-on by waving flags and hats, and ating like the rest.

t this juncture a woman in white e forward from the balcony and ed a large lithograph of Roosevelt iew of the whole convention. For oment all eyes were centered upon
In her excitement she dropped picture, and by the time it was reed to her, the opportunity for a orable division had passed.

When order was restored, Governor lley addressed the convention, after ch Mr. Watson moved to refer to Committee on Credentials the mo-for seating the ninety-two Roosedelegates. Governor Deneen moved mend so that no contested delegates ld vote on the membership of the mittee of Credentials, or on its re-
. A motion to table the motion of ernor Deneen was declared by the r to be not debatable, and a roll-call n it was demanded and ordered.
result showed a new line-up of the l forces, giving the Taft delegates ght increase in numerical strength.
motion to table Governor Deneen's ion was carried by a vote of 564 to the announcement bringing a roar heers from the Taft delegates.
he Watson motion, to refer the stion of the Roosevelt contested gates to the Committee on Creden-s, was then adopted by a viva voce
, without division. Another motion the appointment of the regular nding committees was also adopted the committees were announced.
rtly afterward the convention adned until noon on Thursday.
Wednesday night was one that will soon be forgotten in Chicago. The xpected Hadley demonstration had a surprise, and while it was taken ome as an evidence of the strength he Roosevelt faction, it was inter-ed by the more experienced as ting to the possibilities of Hadley a "dark horse."
here was plenty talk of the probaties of a "bolt." It was said that Roosevelt was more than chagrined he turn affairs had taken, and that had become cold towards Hadley, m he now regarded as his possible l in the race. Besides, Hadley, with eral others, had openly declared inst a "bolt," and this opposition growing, both in the convention out of it.
ne significant incident, however,
e new strength to the "bolt" rumors.
hteen Roosevelt members of the dentials Committee, which met in evening to consider the contested s, finding themselves in a hopeless ority, refused to submit to gag law s and left the committee room at 0 P.M. They returned later, when rules were greatly modified.
ne of the rumors current the same ning was that the Taft leaders had d to tempt Governor Hadley with nomination for Vice-President, ch he declined; also that they tried uccessfully to persuade Senator nmins and Senator La Follette to stand as compromise candidates. There were other indications that, while the Taft men had scored slightly in the convention, they were paving the way for a compromise, Mr. Taft's personal success being a consideration of secondary consequence when the very life of the party was in jeopardy. It is very doubtful whether any of the political leaders slept much on Wednesday night.

Samuel G. Blythe, correspondent of the New York Tribune, summarized the situation in these pregnant sentences:

> This convention marks the passing of Republican national conventions of a similar character. There never will be another convention like this. It is quite possible there never will be another Republican national convention of any kind, that this is the last. . . . Moreover—and this is even more important—this convention gives a date to the death of the Republican Party as it is at present constituted and as it has been constituted for many years. The name Republican may live, but the Republican Party that name has typed since 1856 is dead. The funeral services are being conducted in Chicago at the present.
>
> The Republican Party is no longer a cohesive, fighting, definite organization. But instead it is really two parties—a "stand-pat," or conservative, party, and a radical, or progressive party. There isn't the slightest doubt if there had been primaries in all the States instead of in a few of them the old crowd would have a pitifully small representation here, no matter whether Mr. Roosevelt was a candidate or not.
>
> The Republican Party, as such, no longer exists. It is dead. The old Republican Party of high protection, of war memories, of notable achievement has passed. . . . No compromise candidate can make a cohesive party of the Republican Party. It is split wide apart.

During the early morning hours of Thursday, rumors began to circulate that Mr. Roosevelt's plans had changed. It was reported that he had "released" his delegates, but this was promptly denied. As the day wore on the talk of a "bolt" grew stronger, especially when the news came that there was little prospect of the Roosevelt delegates from Washington, Arizona, California and Texas being seated. Some of the Colonel's leaders, including Flinn, Heney and Governor Johnson, were said to be strongly urging the formation of a new party. It was even said that La Follette had begun to frame the new party platform. But Mr. Roosevelt kept his own counsel. He issued a statement to the American people which ran as follows:

"The time has come when I feel that I must make certain statements, not merely to the honestly elected members of the Republican National Convention, but to the rank and file of the party and to the honest people of the entire nation.

"I went into this fight for certain great principles. At the moment I can only serve those principles by continuing to bear the personal responsibility which their advocacy has brought to me. THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

About the time this was issued, a long-distance telephone message came from President Taft to Senator Crane at Chicago, reiterating the President's intention of staying in the fight as long as there was any chance that he might be nominated.

The convention reassembled at 12 o'clock on Thursday and almost immediately adjourned until 4 P.M. to await the report of the Committee on Credentials. At 4 o'clock, a second recess was taken until 11 o'clock A.M. Friday.

. . . .

At 9.25 P.M. Saturday, June 22, the convention nominated Taft for President. The vote stood: Taft 561, Roosevelt 107, LaFollette 41, Cummins 17, Hughes 2, not voting 344, absent 6. James Schoolcraft Sherman was nominated for Vice-President. Roosevelt's name was not formally placed in nomination. A statement was read in behalf of the Roosevelt delegates, asking that his name be not presented. A separate convention was held later in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, after the other convention had adjourned. Colonel Roosevelt was nominated for President and accepted conditionally. Another convention will be held in August.

The Real Health Drink

Pure Pineapple Juice
Helps to Digest Your Food

THAT IS THE REASON WHY

Dole's Pure Pineapple Juice

is unsurpassed as a digestive by any other known beverage. It clears the system of waste tissue, and creates a sense of comfort and well-being is a cooling, refreshing drink, of peculiar and "tangy" taste. It is simply the pure juice of the golden-ripe pineapple, kept PURE by our special process from the pineapple to the bottle; even air does not touch it.

Dole's Hawaiian Pineapple Juice

Dole's Hawaiian Pineapple Juice

SOLD BY YOUR GROCER
DRUGGIST OR FOUNTAIN

"Cooling Drinks and Desserts" and how to make many delectable dainties. Mailed free on request.

Hawaiian Pineapple Products Co., Ltd.
112 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

The Fanless Man Wears B.V.D.

WHILE others ply fans and mop faces, mumbling and grumbling at the heat, the wearer of B.V.D. is coolest. In his Loose Fitting B.V.D. Coat Cut Undershirt, Knee Length Drawers or Union Suit he is free from the irritating discomforts of summer heat.

B.V.D. Underwear is made of light, durable woven materials, soft to the skin. Quality of fabrics, true-to-size fit, careful workmanship and long wear are assured and insured by

This Red Woven Label

MADE FOR THE B.V.D.
BEST RETAIL TRADE

B. V. D. Coat Cut Undershirts and Knee Length Drawers, 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50 the garment.

B.V.D. Union Suits (Pat. U.S.A. April 30th, 1907.) $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $3.00 and $5.00 the suit.

(Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. and Foreign Countries.)

THE B.V.D. COMPANY, NEW YORK.
London Selling Agency: 66, Aldermanbury, E. C.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

M. J. S., Charleston, S. C. Will you kindly inform me as to the Connecticut State law as to inheritance in the following case: A woman dies without leaving a will, leaving some real estate. Her nearest relation is an unmarried sister of her father, and she has also many "own cousins" on both her father's and mother's side. Who will be her heirs?

If the real estate came from the father of the deceased, but she herself purchased it, the father's sister would be the heir-at-law. (Section 398 General Statutes of Connecticut.)

A. R. B., Albany, Ore. Please explain Ps. 119: 147, 148. We had this verse in our last lesson text.

The use of the word "prevent" is an illustration of the necessity of frequent Bible revision to keep pace with the changes in language and the meaning of particular words. The English of two centuries ago contained many words that would puzzle the reader of to-day. "Prevent" in the ancient form meant to come before, to anticipate: consequently, we are justified in reading this sentence thus: "I anticipated the dawning of morning" (that is, "I lay awake and watched for it"), and "mine eyes anticipated the night watches" (that is, "were opened and sleepless during the night").

W. B., Mindon, Neb. What was the rule of faith during the compilation of the New Testament?

Among the Christians in the first century, a summary of the doctrines preached by Christ and emphasized by his apostles was taught to inquirers and converts, and they were required to assent to them before baptism. This is the first simple form of the rule or exposition of the faith which found expression in the Apostles' Creed long afterwards. One may gather from the Gospels and the Epistles what was taught in those early days, and also from the writings and teachings of Clement of Alexandria, Irenæus and other writers of the second and third centuries, fragments of whose writings are still in existence. The divinity of Christ was distinctly taught and likewise the atonement and justification by faith. The other questions in your letter are purely controversial.

B. M. H., Salem, Mass. 1. What causes volcanic eruption? 2. Name some of the largest volcanoes. 3. Where have been the greatest outbreaks of volcanic action?

1. The mass of the earth has not yet sufficiently cooled to solidify and it is believed that towards the center it is yet molten. A few miles beneath the surface large masses of rock are in process of folding at a great temperature, over 2,000 degrees F. These masses contain water vapor, occluded, but ready to expand when pressure is relieved at weak points. At such points it bursts forth, sending up rocks and molten stuff, which form the elevations called volcanoes. 2. Popocatepetl (17,783 feet) in Mexico is the highest, but Vesuvius (4,000 feet) in Italy is the best known. Others in Europe are Etna in Sicily, Stromboli on one of the Lipari Islands, and Hecla in Iceland. Krakatoa in the Strait of Sunda, Rotomahana in New Zealand, Kilauea in Hawaii, and the West Indian volcanoes of Pelee in Martinique and La Soufriere in St. Vincent have been the most destructive. 3. Krakatoa, which is an island in the Strait of Sunda between Java and Sumatra, after two centuries of repose, became active in 1883. In August of that year a fearful explosion took place in which half of the adjacent island of Rakata was blown away and the depth of the crater increased by two hundred fathoms. The ashes were projected so high into the air that the finest particles were carried all over the world, causing wonderful sunset effects in all latitudes. Sea waves over one hundred feet high started from the crater and devastated the surrounding coasts, drowning thousands of people. These waves crossed the oceans and were traced to California and the Isthmus of Panama. In 1902 Pelee and La Soufriere burst into action, discharging immense clouds of steam and ashes. Two thousand perished through the latter and the former wiped out the city of St. Pierre with its 30,000 inhabitants in a few minutes. A later eruption of Pelee in the same year was equally paroxysmal.

A. C. P., Adel, Ga. Will you kindly tell me, through OUR MAIL-BAG, something about the place of missionary training in our larger schools and universities?

A number of the more important colleges, like Yale, Harvard, University of Chicago, and Ohio Wesleyan, have established departments of missions in which training is given in the history of missions, comparative religions, people and customs of foreign lands, etc. A still greater number of theological schools give special training for missionary work. There are a number of special schools, such as Northfield and Mount Hermon, Mass., the Moody Bible Institute and the Baptist Missionary Training School, Chicago, and the Christian and Missionary Alliance, Nyack, N. Y., where still more attention is given to missionary preparation. Under the Student Volunteer Movement volunteer classes are conducted at many schools and colleges, and summer assemblies for missionary training are held at Silver Bay, N. Y., Lake Geneva, Wis., Northfield, Mass., and other places. The Missionary Education Movement, formerly the Young People's Missionary Movement, conducts work among the young people of the churches. There are also a number of denominational organizations for giving missionary training to young people.

Mrs. C. N. Y., Chicago, Ill. Why do the Jews trust the Turks? What is the mysterious bond between them?

With the fall of Jerusalem and the victory of Titus the Jews had to flee to wherever they could find a refuge in Europe; they scattered over Italy, France, Spain, Portugal, England, making a living as best they could. They received the worst treatment in what was known as the Holy Roman Empire. Hadrian was very severe on them and so was Constantine. However, when the Roman Empire fell, conditions changed, and with more freedom and peace the Jews began to prosper and continued to do so up till the tenth century. Then came the Crusades, when the fury of the warriors who proposed to capture the Holy Land and Jerusalem for Christendom was loosed against the Jews. Wholesale slaughter, torture and pillage characterized their treatment. From this time onward their position became worse. Towards the end of the thirteenth century they were expelled from England. France sent them adrift later, and Spain promulgated an edict against them in the year Columbus discovered America; Portugal did likewise. Like hunted animals the exile race fled into Italy, Germany, and the east of Europe, wherever they could find a temporary shelter from their persecutors. Turkey also extended a welcome to them. They were invited to Constantinople and other Islamic cities and given freedom to pursue their callings and profess their religion. Since then, the Jews have always had a warm corner in their hearts for the Turks.

Subscriber, Stockbridge, Mass. John Hay was an American statesman and diplomat of our own times, born in 1838, sixty-two years after the Declaration of Independence was signed.

Continued on next page

A "FLY CATECHISM"

THE Board of Health of Indianapolis, Ind., has issued a "Fly Catechism" which it would be well for all CHRISTIAN HERALD readers to commit to memory, particularly at this time of the year, when every effort made in exterminating this national pest will count for so much more than it would later in the season, when so many more billions of flies will have been brought into existence. It follows:

1. Where is the fly born? In manure and filth.

2. Where does the fly live? In every kind of filth.

3. Is anything too filthy for the fly to eat? No.

4. (a) Where does he go when he leaves the vault and the manure pile and the spittoon? Into the kitchen and the dining room. (b) What does he do there? He walks on the bread, fruit and vegetables; wipes his feet on the butter and bathes in the buttermilk.

5. Does the fly visit the patient sick with consumption, typhoid fever, and cholera infantum? He does—and may call on you next.

6. Is the fly dangerous? He is man's worst pest and more dangerous than wild beasts or rattlesnakes.

7. What diseases does the fly carry? He carries typhoid fever, tuberculosis and summer complaint. How? On his wings and hairy feet. What is his correct name? Typhoid Fly.

8. Did he ever kill any one? He killed more American soldiers in the Spanish-American War than the bullets of the Spaniards.

9. Where are the greatest number of cases of typhoid fever, consumption and summer complaint? Where there are the most flies.

10. Where are there the most flies? Where there is the most filth.

11. Why should we kill the fly? Because he may kill us.

12. How shall we kill the fly? (a) Destroy all the filth about the house and yard; (b) pour lime into the vault and on the manure; (c) kill the fly with a wire-screen paddle, or sticky paper, or kerosene oil.

13. Kill the fly in any way, but—kill the fly!

On every outing:

KODAK

Add to the pleasure of the trip itself by taking pictures of the places and the people that interest you—then you will have the after pleasure that comes from possessing the pictures themselves.

Anybody can take and finish pictures by the Kodak system—and do it well. Because simpler to handle, Kodak films give better results than glass plates. You need no dark-room for loading the camera, or for unloading. Even the developing is done without a dark-room and print making is easy (again no dark-room) with Velox paper. If you don't care to do your own developing and printing, Kodak film, being light and unbreakable, may be readily mailed to your dealer for finishing.

Kodak means photography with the bother left out. It offers the simple, easy way to good pictures—and it is less expensive than you think.

Catalogue of Kodaks and Brownies (they work like Kodaks) free at your dealers or by mail.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY,
433 State Street, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Prophy-lactic Tooth Brush
The one with the popular reputation. Your dentist will tell why.

"Baby's" Weight

In hot weather baby will require a very efficient diet—not only to counteract the debilitating effects of the heat, but to maintain a constant gain in weight.

Mellin's Food is entirely digestible, requiring a minimum amount of digestive effort, and not only nourishes but repairs the body cells and builds new tissues so rapidly that a constant gain in weight is assured.

If your baby is not gaining, write to us and we will send you a trial bottle of Mellin's Food.

We give special attention to mothers' letters regarding the use of Mellin's Food.

Mellin's Food Co., Boston, Mass.

Gerald M. Bull
Hartford
Michi

OUR MAIL-BAG

Continued from preceding page

. B. C., Chicago. Amundsen used a centigrade thermometer at the South Pole. What is the difference between it and the Fahrenheit and Reaumur instruments? 2. When it is 25 degrees C. what is it F.? 3. How can one be expressed in terms of the other?

1. Centigrade, the thermometer of Celsius, is used by scientific men all over Europe. On it the freezing point of water is zero and the boiling point 100 degrees. On Reaumur's the freezing point is also zero, but the boiling point only 80 degrees, while Fahrenheit indicates freezing at 32 degrees and boiling at 212 degrees. 2. Seventy-seven degrees. 3. To convert F. into ., deduct 32 degrees, multiply by 5 and divide by 9; F. into R., deduct 32 degrees, divide by 9 and multiply by 4; C. into F., multiply by 9, divide by 5 and add 32 degrees; C. into R., multiply by 4 and divide by 5; R. into C., multiply by 5 and divide by 4; R. into F., multiply by 9, divide by 4 and add 32 degrees.

. S. R., Dayton, O. Explain specific and ad valorem duties on goods.

A specific duty is one levied at a specified sum per yard, gallon, ton, etc., while an ad valorem duty is one levied at a certain percentage of the value of the goods at the port of exit.

W. A. S., Detroit, Mich. Any child who spends ten days at Mont-Lawn is sure to benefit by the experience for several reasons: The child meets, often for the first time, with sympathy, kindness and encouragement. This softens his nature and brings out the best there is in him. He soon learns that his little troubles may be confided to the willing ear of the teacher, who takes the place of a mother to him. His own mother, overworked and tired, rarely has time to listen. He is taught to be useful at home and to be good, kind and patient to his little brothers and sisters, and to keep himself clean and neat, thereby setting a good example to the other children. He learns to sing the little songs and hymns, which he never forgets. When he goes back to the city, he sings these to his little friends in the slums, and this, with the training he has received during his outing, helps to cheer and brighten the pathway of those at home. We have found hundreds of cases in which the influence has been a lasting one.

C. T., Omaha, Neb. 1. Please explain the metric system. 2. Is it going to be adopted by the United States? 3. What are its advantages? 4. Do many use it?

1. The metric system originated in France, 1801. The unit of length is the meter, which was originally intended to be the ten-millionth part of the distance from the pole to the equator, but this was found too small, and now the meter is the length of a certain bar of iridio-platinum kept in the Bureau of Archives, Paris. It is a fraction over 39.37 inches long. The unit of capacity was made a cube, the edge of which is the tenth part of a meter, and was called a liter. A liter of distilled water at its greatest density was called a kilogram and the one-thousandth part of this was taken as the unit of weight and called a gram. 2. The system was authorized in this country by Act of Congress, 1866, but is not compulsory, although it is gaining in favor. 3. It is simple and convenient, as its multiples and submultiples are based on the decimal notation, which makes reduction very easy. 4. It is a legal standard for 300,000,000 people in twenty countries.

W. M., Louisiana. 1. What form of Sabbath labor is justifiable and in what instance did Christ teach it in his examples? 2. Is it not possible that one's conscience may become seared until it is not wise to follow its dictates?

1. From the earliest Christian times, the Lord's Day was consecrated to religious worship and "to such employments as were proper to set forth God's glory." It was marked by a cessation of all regular labor, as far as possible, but not to exclude works of necessity, charity, and mercy. Christ and his disciples walked in the fields on the Sabbath Day and he performed miracles of healing and doubtless did many unrecorded acts of kindness and helpfulness. He taught that "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath;" it was to be a day of personal privilege and beneficent usefulness and not of heartless neglect and sanctionless rigors. (See Matt. 12: 1-8; Rom. 14: 5; Col. 2: 16.) 2. Yes; it is possible for the conscience to be blunted by long persistence in wickedness and resistance of the pleading of the Holy Spirit. On the other hand, the quickened or spiritually enlightened conscience is a true monitor to guide man's thoughts, feelings and actions, and to aid in forming a sound moral judgment.

L. C. P., Reading, Pa. 1. Please tell me something of Anneke Jans, who owned the ground where Trinity Church, New York City, now stands, and what was the dispute about this ground? 2. Did any of her descendants fight in the Revolution?

1. Anneke Jans was a Dutch colonist of New Netherlands, who acquired about sixty acres of landed property in Greenwich, now the lower part of New York City. She was twice married, her second husband being a minister named Everard Bogardus. After her death in 1663 her heirs sold the property to Governor Lovelace. It was confiscated by the Duke of York, 1674. In 1705 Queen Anne made a grant of it to Trinity Corporation, but as it had enormously increased in value the descendants of the original heirs instituted many suits against the corporation until 1847, when Vice-Chancellor Sanford of New York decided the corporation had acquired an indisputable title by prescription. 2. As she had several sons it is probable some of their issue fought in the Revolutionary War.

A. W. G., Pennsylvania. Please explain Rev. 8: 1, where we read: "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."

While the whole book of Revelation is of that literary character which may be described as mystical, dealing extensively in types and metaphors, there are occasional passages in which the writer descends to simpler language for the purpose of more clearly conveying his meaning. The half hour of silence in heaven at the breaking of the last seal is not to be reckoned by minutes and seconds, but is purely a figure of speech. It is meant to convey to the mind a long, solemn pause by way of introduction to the joys and activities of the eternal Sabbath rest of God's people, which begins with the reading of the sealed book. The preceding chapters have run through the course of Divine action, where everything unites in a solemn hush for the final act. In the ancient Jewish temple, the instrumental music and singing, which formed the first part of the service, were hushed immediately before the offering of the incense, so this pause immediately precedes the adoration of the blessed spirits and the angels and the imminent unfolding of God's judgment. See similar figurative expressions in Rev. 17: 12; 18: 10, 19.

L. E. S., Bridgeport, Conn. 1. What significance has the word "Abba," as when it precedes the word "Father" (Gal. 4: 6)? 2. In Rom. 8: 11 it says: "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead," etc. Why was the name Jesus used first and that of Christ second?

1. "Abba" is the Hebrew word for "father," in the emphatic or definite state, as "thy father." Its use in referring to God was common among the Jews; but in order that it might not seem too familiar or irreverent, the New Testament writers gave it the twofold form, which has become a recognized phrase in Christian worship. It is as though they said: "Father, our Father." 2. The change of name is significant and is designed to point out that Jesus is the historic One, whom God raised from the dead, and who, as Christ, is also the Lord and the head of all his members and of redeemed humanity. This is the interpretation given by Alford and other commentators, explaining Paul's purpose in using this form of address.

Miscellaneous

J. S., Sligo, La. The subject of elders and their duties was discussed in THE MAIL-BAG of June 12.

W. R. R., Chesterfield, Md. It is plainly stated in the Gospels that the Magi came to the manger in Bethlehem. See Matt. 2: 1.

X. Y. Z., Calgary, Alberta, Can. If you will send your full name and address we will forward sheet giving full information in connection with the support of native missionaries in various fields.

W. C. F., Guymon, Okla. 1. Any indulgence that is unnatural, or which produces abnormal results, is sinful. 2. Vanity, while it may be excused in the young and inexperienced, is absurd in the aged, who ought to know better.

J. H. K., Flint, Mich. The representation of divinity on the stage is, to a great majority of our Christian people, very distasteful. It is regarded as sacrilegious. When the "Passion Play" was first proposed in New York over twenty years ago, it was frowned down by public opinion, as a theme altogether too sacred to be profaned.

A. H. B., Warren, Mass. There are very few perfect people in this world and we must not be too exacting where the imperfection is not serious or deepset. Remember, Paul had his "thorn in the flesh." It would doubtless be more pleasing, however, if in the case you mention the habit were avoided, so that there might not be even "the appearance of evil."

Reader, Montague, P. E. I. John himself regarded his mission as a lower one and as not having the divine authority of the Saviour's work. He considered the existing Judaism as a stepping-stone by which the Gentiles were to arrive at the Messianic kingdom. He taught with the authority of a prophet who in his long wilderness sojourn had received spiritual inspiration and guidance for his work. "Repent and be baptized" was the order of his mission. His baptism, however, was not regarded as conferring an immediate consecration, but as being preparatory; and the disciples of Jesus, taking this view, rebaptized the followers of John (see Acts 19: 3-5).

Big Ben

Makes Early Rising Easy

Big Ben, the national sleep-meter, is making early rising easy and punctuality popular. Ting-aling-aling! goes the gentle, clear, sleep-ending bell of this "minute-man." And you spring from your bed to joyous action. Big Ben rings for 5 minutes straight, or 10 minutes at intervals, just as you wish. Big Ben never varies, never fails—he's a masterpiece of accuracy. His specialty is getting you up "on the dot." And he does his work in a 100 per cent efficient manner.

Big Ben is hand-built, like a fine, thin-model watch, and "chronometer-checked" for 140 hours for accuracy. The famous Westclox Community of La Salle, Ill.—nine hundred skilled watchmakers—build Big Ben, the clock of character and charm.

2,500 People Buy Big Bens Daily

2,500 Big Bens now leave the Westclox Community every 10 hours and the demand gets bigger daily. Big Ben has ticked himself into popular favor because he is built right, runs right and is priced right.

The first Big Ben cost $12.85 to make. The first hundred cost $6.50 each. But the tremendous demand has brought the price down to everyone's pocketbook—$2.50.

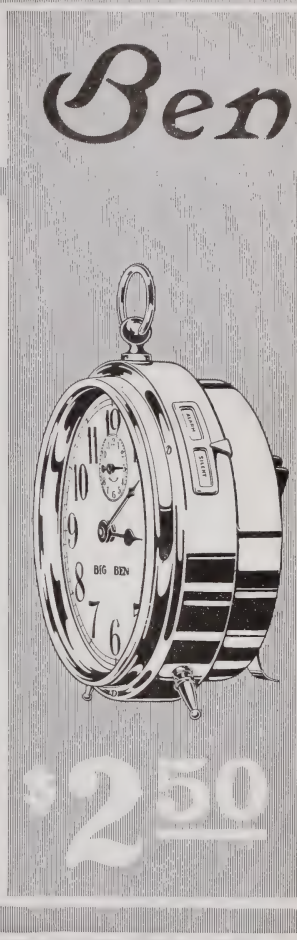
Send for Big Ben Today

Big Ben is sold by 16,000 jewelers. 60 per cent of the total United States number have already adopted him. If you cannot find him at yours, send $2.50 to us today and we will send him by return express, all charges prepaid.

Leave Your Call With

Big Ben

Westclox, La Salle, Ill.



Would You Prefer 3½ or 5%

—Both Being Equally Safe?

Like savings banks, our business is conducted subject to the supervision of the Superintendent of Banks. Assets over $2,500,000. Any sum deposited from $25 to $3,000 draws 5 per cent from day of deposit to day of withdrawal, which may be upon short notice. Dividends remitted by mail or compounded, as preferred. Accounts opened by mail or in person. Our certificate system of deposit prevents the possibility of loss of bankbook.

Write us for valuable booklet.

We will probably be able to refer you to some one in your vicinity who has had dealings with us, for we have patrons all over the world.

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS & LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

COMFORT and EASE FOR TENDER FEET

For every woman who will wear WHITCOMB'S "FLEXSOLE" SHOES. The most comfortable shoe for women ever made. Soft, flexible, perfect-fitting and handsome. Very durable. No tacks. No Lining to wrinkle and hold moisture. No seams.

An Iowa woman writes: "First leather shoe I have been able to wear in 20 years."

A Pennsylvania woman writes: "Enclosed find order for a friend. My feet are cured entirely."

Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded.

Can be bent double

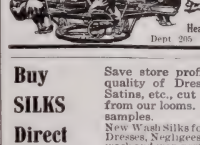
Prices: LACE, $3.00; BUTTON, $3.25; OXFORDS, $2.50 Prepaid. We refer to any bank anywhere. Send outline of foot and size usually worn.

Eastern Shoe Co., 55 Broadway, Beverly, Mass. Agents Wanted Everywhere. Special Inducements.

THE HEALTH MERRY-GO-ROUND keeps children healthy

Children never tire of the Health Merry-go-Round. It gives them healthful out-door amusement at home—fresh air and exercise that develops their muscles.

This machine is strongly built, of seasoned hardwood, iron and steel and is repairproof. It is an ornament to the lawn.



Every machine guaranteed. Sent on Free trial. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

Health Merry-go-Round Co., Dept. 209 Quincy, Ill. U. S. A.

Rider Agents Wanted

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 bicycle. Write for special offer.

Finest Guaranteed 1912 Models with Coaster-Brakes and Puncture-Proof tires, $10 to $27

1910 & 1911 Models all of best makes.... $7 to $12

100 Second-Hand Wheels All makes and models, good as new..... $3 to $8

Great FACTORY CLEARING SALE

We Ship on Approval without a cent in advance, pay the freight, and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL.

TIRES, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, parts and repairs for all makes of bicycles at half usual prices. DO NOT BUY until you get our catalogues and offer. Write now.

MEAD CYCLE CO. Dept. P 71 CHICAGO

Buy SILKS Direct From the Mill

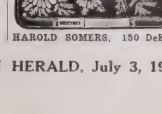
Save store profits and get better quality of Dress Silks, Taffetas, Satins, etc., cut any length direct from our looms. Send 10 cents for samples.

New Wash Silks for Petticoats, Waists, Dresses, Negligees, Men's Shirts. Will wash and iron perfectly. Samples Free.

Experienced CANVASSING AGENTS Wanted. Please state if agency desired.

Auburn Silk Mill
Dept. C. - - - Auburn, N. Y.

DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent prepaid for $1



HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Copyright 1912
The Bauer
Chemical Co.,
New York.

Sanatogen brings new strength to those who have fallen by the wayside

WITH nervous vitality broken down—digestion and assimilation impaired—men and women—their grip on life and success broken—fall by the wayside—victims of the stress and toil of our modern life.

But every day, under just such conditions—more and more men and women are learning to appreciate the splendid help proferred by Sanatogen.

When your nerves fly signals of distress—telling plainly that they need help—nothing is more welcome than Sanatogen—marvelous revitalizer of nerve health. Nerves have their own peculiar hunger—a hunger that must be always satisfied if you are to continue in health. When illness, worry or work drain the nerves, they become exhausted and starved—they must be fed to restore their health.

The answer to nerve hunger is a food answer—Sanatogen. Its nerve foods—glycerophosphate and purest albumen—are eagerly taken into the nerve cells, there to revitalize and endue the nerves with energetic health.

When you remember that 15,000 physicians have endorsed Sanatogen—in writing—that a multitude of noted men and women have found their nerve-health answer in its use—you will probably decide it is your answer.

This Remarkable Book FREE

We ask you earnestly to get acquainted with Sanatogen. Investigate our claims first if you like, and we are only too glad to have you do so. Ask your doctor about it, and in any case write at once for our book, "Our Nerves of Tomorrow," written in an absorbingly interesting style, beautifully illustrated and containing facts and information of vital interest to you. This book also contains evidence of the value of Sanatogen which is as remarkable as it is conclusive.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes, $1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Get Sanatogen from your druggist—if not obtainable from him, sent upon receipt of price.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO., 26F Irving Place, New York

The Rev. T. S. CHILDS, D.D., of Chevy Chase, writes:

"Last Spring I had a long and severe attack of grippe the effects of which for one in his eighty-sixth year was dreadful. I resigned the charge of my church and rested. A friend, an English gentleman called my attention to Sanatogen. I have used one small box and two large ones with marked results. In the first place there has not been the slightest ill effect. Then, whatever the cause, I find myself in such renewed health that I have accepted a call to another charge and—if one may judge for himself—am as able to preach as I have ever been in my life. I am a convert to Sanatogen."

C. H. STOCKTON, Rear Admiral U. S. Navy and Pres. of Geo. Washington University, writes:

"Some time ago my physician recommended Sanatogen to be used in my family. After giving it a fair trial, I am thoroughly convinced it is most excellent for the nerves and an invigorating food tonic."

His Grace the Most Rev. ARCHBISHOP OF BOMBAY writes:

"I use Sanatogen every now and then, under my Doctor's advice, and always derive great benefit from it."

Rev H. N. COUDEN, Chaplain National House of Representatives, Washington, D.C., writes:

"Your Sanatogen is admirable. It has been taken with excellent results by a number of my family who felt the need for a strengthening tonic. For overworked people especially Sanatogen should be a great boon."

The Right Rev. THE BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, England, states:

"Sanatogen has been taken by a lady staying in his house, who finds it most satisfactory and has now been ordered it by her medical man."

The Right Rev. THE BISHOP OF CHICHESTER, England, writes:

"I have found Sanatogen most beneficial as well as pleasant."

Mrs. BELVA A. LOCKWOOD, LL.D., Sec'y International Peace Bureau, writes:

"I have used according to directions your Sanatogen, and find it not only very pleasant and palatable food, but a good digester and assimilator. I find my stomach in a better condition after a two weeks' trial of it than it has been before for two years. I cheerfully recommend it to dyspeptics, overworked clerks, feeble children and aged people."

Christian Herald

SCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
LISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JULY 10, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 28. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

A SUMMER DAY

From the Original Painting by Corneille Max

See description on this page

What the Millions Are Doing With Foods Shot from Guns

I mix the Puffed grains with berries for a morning dish. They seem to fit together as do nuts and raisins.
—Average Man.

I like them best just with sugar and cream. Sometimes I mix the Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.
—Average Woman.

My favorite dish at night time is Puffed Wheat or Rice in milk.
—A Child Who Knows.

Once serve Puffed Wheat as wafer crisps in soup and you'll never serve soup without it.—A Housewife.

I scatter the grains over every dish of ice cream. That's better by far than freezing nut meats in it.
—A Famous Chef.

I use Puffed Rice in fudge. It tastes like nuts, yet it melts in the mouth like sugar.—Schoolgirl.

I stuff my pockets full of Puffed Wheat when I go to play, and eat the grains like peanuts.—Average Boy.

I care not how folks eat them. But eat them in some way whenever you seek absolute ease of digestion.
—A Physician

All Because Prof. Anderson Thought of Exploding Grain

He conceived the idea of sealing wheat and rice kernels up in great bronze-steel guns.

Then heating those guns until the moisture in the grains changed to superheated steam.

Then exploding the steam, blasting all the food granules to pieces.

Thus he made whole grain wholly digestible for the first time in food history.

He filled the grains with a myriad cells—puffed them to eight times normal size.

The terrific heat gave the thin-walled grains a taste like toasted nuts

Thus came these airy wafers—the most delightful cereals ever known.

Now people are eating—in all these ways—a million dishes daily In countless homes nearly every meal in some way includes these crisps

Puffed Wheat, 10c Except in Extreme West Puffed Rice, 15c

The Quaker Oats Company—Sole Makers—Chicago

NEW YORK, JULY 10, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Dr. Sun Yat Sen
Provisional President

Tang Shao Yi
Premier

Copyright, Brown Bros

Entrance to Wai-un-Pu, the Residence of President Yuan

Dr. Wang Chun Gin
Minister of Foreign Affairs

Dr. Yen Jun Yon
Minister of Justice

Copyright, Brown Bros

Hopes and Fears of the Youngest Republic

CHINA continues to make, unmake and remake history with dazzling rapidity. Just at the moment when the press of the world was congratulating the youngest republic on arranging successfully for an enormous loan from the bankers of six great nations, she turned up her youthful Oriental nose and said she did not know whether she wanted it or not. The United States was the moving spirit in bringing about the consent of five other Powers—Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia and Japan—to join with her in advancing to the Chinese Government three hundred million dollars. Commenting on the success of the new nation in securing this loan the New York Evening Mail declared:

"There is no item of the news of the day more important than this. When Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his courageous comrades put forth their revolutionary proclamation, they were literally trusting their lives, and not only their lives but those of millions of others, to the tossing of a coin. If one could imagine that the coin which they tossed up, and upon which they chanced their lives and the fortune and future of their country, possessed twenty tails and only one head, the chances against them of their throw would be correctly represented. But the coin came down heads up. The revolution succeeded. The monarchy of six thousand years disappeared in a day. And the present investment of three hundred golden millions by the solid men of the world means that it has disappeared never to return."

But this note of congratulation and praise was changed, on June 26, to one of bewilderment and blame when it was found that acceptance of the offer had been delayed. The blame, however, should not be too severe because China, in these first months of her new life, is trying valiantly, not only to establish her own governmental régime, but to keep entirely free from any sort of control by other Powers. The nations advancing the loan were insistent upon retaining a fairly direct supervision of the nation's finances, and it is easy to see how intolerable this would be to the awakening spirit of liberty in the new republic.

As during the revolution itself, news from China will be awaited eagerly. The situation is again extremely grave. There is pressing need for immediate funds. Reports of uprisings come from some of the provinces. The premier himself left the capital, and was said to have been in flight. There were rumors that he had been in disagreement with President Yuan and might not return to the cabinet. Charges were made of misuse of the republic's scant funds even while desperate efforts were being made to secure the further loans. Rumors of the resignation of cabinet ministers flashed over the wires. But in the midst of the confusion some constructive work has been done, much of which will be permanent.

Of particularly thrilling interest to Americans are some items of the constitution proposed for the new republic. Under President Yuan Shi Kai a Bureau of Constitutional Preparation has been at work drawing up an instrument of government. One of the striking provisions is that the president of the republic shall not be eligible to a second consecutive term. The presidential term is six years, and at the expiration of his service the president becomes a life member of the "Council of Provinces," the upper house of the National Assembly. This keeps the former president in touch with the affairs of the nation and gives permanently to the Assembly the benefit of his sagacity and experience. Whether or not the president will ever be eligible for re-election remains to be seen, but the determination to forbid a second consecutive term seems for the present to be most emphatic.

Judge Lee Fong Ahlo, to whom has been assigned the task of presenting the constitutional bureau's report to the Assembly, has made some illuminating comments upon its provisions concerning the presidency: "In America and France," he says, "presidents sink into the oblivion of private life. In ancient Rome to the erstwhile consuls seats in the Senate were given, that they might give to that august body the benefit of their knowledge and experience of public affairs. It would, therefore, seem a pity that the first citizens of our republic should not receive a dignity consonant with the exalted position once held by them."

General Yuan Shi Kai, China's President

According to the proposed constitution the Chinese president and vice president are to be chosen by the National Assembly. The choice must be by a two-thirds or more vote of the total number of votes cast by three-fourths, or more, of the total number of members of the National Assembly. While it might seem that election by the Assembly is not in fact a popular election, Judge Ahlo, referring again to American methods, insists that the method of this country does not insure the election of the man who is the choice of the majority of the American people. He declares that our elections result merely in the election "of a party leader by a party vote."

Referring to the quadrennial consternation of American elections, he writes:

"A presidential election in America is a costly affair, running into millions of dollars. The whole country is excited and thrown for several months into a state of turmoil. It is needless to say that such a costly, strenuous and roundabout way of choosing a president will not appeal to our people."

These words from an expert legislator of the youngest republic come with forceful earnestness to America, now almost the oldest republic.

In further emphasizing the necessity of abolishing the possibility of a second successive presidential term, Judge Ahlo declares:

"A man who is chosen for the high office of the presidency of the Republic of China should devote his whole time and attention to his duties as chief executive of the nation. He should have no other ambition than to serve the people faithfully and well. He should not play at politics while he holds that office. It is the greatest weakness of the American system that by holding out the temptation of a second term it makes a politician of the country's president."

An influential resident of China has sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the following personal sketches of two of China's present leaders:

Yuan Shi Kai, who is the first president of the united great Republic of China, is about fifty-seven years of age. He is a native of the province of Honan. His first public office was as resident-general of China in Korea, which was then a vassal of the empire. He was in this position when the war broke out between China and Japan in 1894. After peace was restored, Mr. Yuan turned his attention to military affairs, and began to put into execution the scheme of reorganizing the army. His success on this line gave him great prestige, and has been undoubtedly the main element of his popularity during recent months. He is a strict disciplinarian, but is beloved by his officers and men. The uniform in which he appears in the photograph is that of a general in the Chinese army.

Tang Shao Yi, the present premier of the Chinese Republic, is a native of Canton. He has been associated with President Yuan in various positions for thirty years. He was educated in America, and came to the United States during the winter of 1908 on a special mission to thank the government for the return of the Boxer indemnity.

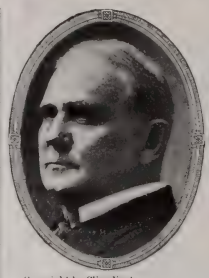
DEMOCRATS MEET AT BALTIMORE

Copyright by Pach

Mayor Gaynor of New York

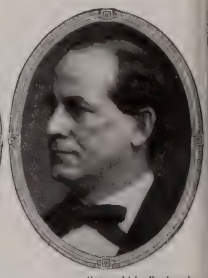
Governor Woodrow Wilson

The Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore



Copyright by Clinedinst

Hon. Champ Clark



Copyright by Fredericks

Hon. W. J. Bryan

WARM, wet, uncomfortable weather marked the assembling of the Democratic National Convention in Baltimore on June 25. For many days before the opening of the convention, delegates and thousands of visitors had been gathering in the beautiful Maryland city. As was the case at Chicago, the first struggle was expected to occur over the temporary chairmanship.

In any national convention the first vote is usually an index of the strength of the different factions, and is therefore regarded as full of significance. In the present case, there were two distinct divisions over the temporary chairmanship. The dominating faction, which included New York, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Ohio, Michigan, and Kentucky, with other States, favored the candidacy of Judge Alton B. Parker, who had been selected for the position by the National Committee. The second great faction was led by William Jennings Bryan, and was nominally in favor of choosing Senator John W. Kern of Indiana, with the underlying possibility that Mr. Bryan might ultimately secure the chairmanship for himself. In such event he would very likely be able to control the convention and with his consummate parliamentary skill might once more succeed in becoming the presidential candidate of the national Democracy. Mr. Bryan had prepared an extended speech and it was known that he would make a hard struggle against the selection of Judge Parker. In expectation of stirring scenes, a great crowd besieged the doors of the Fifth Regiment Armory long before the opening. As noon approached the delegations arrived and took seats, Texas marching in with a banner bearing the inscription, "Forty Delegates for Wilson," which the bearers waved frantically. Many Clark and Underwood banners were also in evidence and presidential badges and buttons were everywhere. Connecticut delegates carried a big blue-and-gold banner inscribed, "Our Choice for President, Simeon E. Baldwin"; the California delegation had a picture of Clark on its banner with the inscription, "Special Privileges to None; Equal Rights to All."

Much time was consumed in seating the delegates and disposing of the enormous crowds. It was impossible to fully clear the aisles. There was a good-sized attendance of ladies among the audience and altogether the scene presented by the convention, in spite of the standing crowds, was inspiring and picturesque.

At 12.16 P.M. Chairman Mack called the convention to order. Delegates were still arriving in throngs. Tammany had a large representation on the floor; Cardinal Gibbons, the Roman Catholic prelate, made the opening invocation and was applauded. There were cries of "Bryan" all over the hall. Chairman Mack formally presented the name of Judge A. B. Parker for temporary chairman and about half the delegates rose to their feet and cheered.

Mr. Bryan, who had entered almost unnoticed, now came to the front of the platform, and then began the first real demonstration of the convention. A thousand men were on their feet, waving arms and shouting wildly, the galleries, however, remaining quiet. When the tumult had died down somewhat, Mr. Bryan named Senator John W. Kern for temporary chairman. He then began his address, slowly at first, but becoming more and more earnest as he proceeded. He was pale and his features were set and rigid. He claimed the right, as the champion of Democratic principles in three presidential campaigns, to speak freely to the Democracy of the nation. Pointing to the motto on the wall, he read, "He never sold the truth to serve the hour." This, he said, "was the language of the hero of Monticello. I would not be worthy of the support I have received, if I were willing to do less." He continued, pointing to the fact that there had been a lack of harmony even in the National Committee on the question of temporary chairman. The Clark and Wilson forces could not agree. He therefore presented the qualifications of one fitted for the occasion. All the influences of combined wealth had been brought to bear on the control of this convention; this was what the people needed to fight. There could be no better man than Senator Kern for the purpose. "Judge Parker," Mr. Bryan said, "was not a man who could sound the keynote of the progressive campaign. Democrats must not be frightened by your Ryans or bought by your Belmonts." There was a wild outburst of cheering by the delegates and audience at this part of his address. Mr. Bryan went on to denounce the Wall Street influence in national politics. "Any man who is backed by these interests," he said, "should not be forced upon this convention." He closed with an eloquent plea in behalf of progressive Democracy, and stated that the people should not be robbed of the right to have it "as a pillar of cloud to lead them by day."

Senator Kern was recognized as the next speaker, but did not desire to enter the contest for temporary chairman. He offered to withdraw, if Judge Parker would do the same, and thus restore harmony to the party.

This set the convention in an uproar. Judge Parker sat still in his chair and made no movement toward the platform. Senator Kern resumed his address after the excitement had abated and furnished another dramatic episode when he said: "If this fight is to go on, there is only one man who can lead. I withdraw in behalf of that great American, William Jennings Bryan. I tried to get harmony, but seem to have failed."

Mr. Bryan then rose and briefly said that he had asked both Senator-elect Ollie James and Senator O'Gorman to accept the responsibility, but both had declined. If none would assume it, he himself stood ready to accept.

Several others attempted to speak, but so tremendous was the uproar that they could not be heard. The rival delegates were shouting "Bryan!" and "Parker!" There was disorder both on the floor and in the galleries, which the sergeant-at-arms was unable to stop. A speaker on the platform was shouting, the chairman was pounding, the sergeant gesticulating, and there were several groups of screaming delegates who seemed to be on the verge of a fight.

Chairman Mack threatened to clear the galleries unless the speakers were accorded a hearing. Squads of police were brought in and the aisles were cleared at last. Theodore A. Bell, of California, here took the platform to second the nomination of Parker, and his words were followed by shouts of "Vote! Vote!" The convention was growing impatient of oratory and it wanted to get to business. As the din again threatened to break loose, Senator Luke Lea of Tennessee, from his place on the platform, demanded order and in a loud voice declared, "We are not going to have a mob like Chicago." A final outburst occurred when delegate Cone Johnson of Texas, in the voice of a Stentor, called out: "The fight is now on. Bryan on one side and Wall Street on the other."

Then the roll-call on temporary chairman began. It occupied nearly an hour and resulted as follows: Parker 579, Bryan 506, O'Gorman 4. On motion of Senator Luke Lea, Judge Parker's election was made unanimous. He was then conducted to the chair and prepared to deliver his address; but as many were leaving the galleries it was decided to postpone the speech until the evening session. He spoke at 8.30 P.M., reviewing the political situation and criticizing the Chicago convention as a "disgraceful brawl." While his speech was able it was not an effort calculated to fire the enthusiasm of its hearers. It was a review of present party conditions and an arraignment of the methods of the party in power, especially with regard to the protective tariff, the cost of living, the rule of trusts and corporations, and the failure to protect the people from graft-seekers and hunters of special privilege. Roosevelt's third-term ambition was severely criticized. The speaker declared that relief for existing conditions could only be hoped for by a return to Democratic principles and the triumph of the Democratic Party. At the conclusion of his address, the usual committees were appointed and the convention adjourned until Wednesday.

Regarded as a whole, the result of the day's work was a setback to the ambitions of Mr. Bryan. In his address, Chairman Parker suggested that Mr. Bryan should be placed at the head of the Platform Committee, and in this way held out the olive branch, averting what might otherwise have been a serious break. But the lesson was clear to all who had watched the course of events on that first day, that the distinguished Nebraskan had, to a considerable extent, lost his grip on the national Democracy, and that the delegates were not likely to be stampeded by any movement in his behalf. His every action during the day had been calculated with the purpose of producing dramatic effect. His advocacy of Senator Kern and, later, his offer to join with Judge Parker in mutual withdrawal "for harmony's sake," all went for nothing, although they were designed to make a popular impression. He spoke well, but failed to sway the delegates with his old-time power, and interruptions were so frequent that it was evident to all that the convention was not with him, as he had hoped it might be.

When the convention reassembled on Wednesday, Bryan was tendered the chairmanship of the Committee on Resolutions, but declined the honor on the ground that it was useless to write a progressive platform if the conservative element controlled the choice of the candidate. He feared that the committee had been packed against him. Senator Kern was then chosen as chairman of the Platform Committee and Bryan became a member. A meeting of the Committee was held during the forenoon, at which Mr. Bryan moved that the presentation of the platform be deferred until after the nomination for President. It was seconded and carried by 41 to 11. This was an innovation in convention methods. The platform prepared by Senator LaFollette, which was rejected by the Chicago Convention, was handed to Mr. Bryan with the request that the best of its planks be incorporated in the Democratic platform.

Wednesday was a day of rumors. Booms were being industriously groomed. There was talk of compromise candidates in the event of a deadlock between Wilson and Clark, and the names of Gaynor of New York, Marshall of Indiana, Harmon and Underwood were talked of in this connection, but with no very decided preference. Bryan's followers still held to the hope that the convention would ultimately nominate a Progressive candidate and predicted that a number of ballots would be necessary to decide. As far as the Indiana statesman's own chances were concerned, they were not discussed very hopefully. The "Old Guard" held confidently to the expectation of an easy victory for Clark, while the Wilson boomers were equally firm in their expectation that, with the co-operation of the Bryan following, the New Jersey governor would come to the front in the final running.

When the convention met at noon, the committees not being ready for report, the session was devoted to stirring oratory and inspiring music. Shortly after two o'clock, an adjournment was taken until 8 P.M.

At the evening session the convention voted to abrogate the unit rule as to all State delegations, except those where the State laws are mandatory on the subject. This point was forced by the Wilson men, after a short and sharp struggle. The committee on rules had formally recognized the authority of State conventions to instruct delegates to national conventions concerning the unit rule, but there had been a minority report in favor of discarding the rule. This minority report was adopted by the convention by a vote of 555½ to 495 2-5, with 43 absentees. [The fractions are explained by the fact that in some delegations the number of delegates exceeds the votes allotted to the delegation.] The announcement of the vote was followed by a great demonstration by the Wilson men—the most significant thus far in the convention. Cheering lasted fully half an hour. As a result of the rejection of the unit rule, delegates in the various State delegations are left free to vote according to their convictions. As an illustration of the effect of the vote, the Louisiana delegation, instead of casting 20 votes solid for Clark, may cast eight for Wilson and 12 for Clark. Wilson would also gain 18 votes in Ohio, and would make similar gains in several other delegations hitherto bound under the old unit rule. The vote was regarded as a decided triumph for the Bryan and Progressive element in the convention, which was believed to be focusing on Wilson as the candidate. When the Wilson demonstration had quieted down, there was some further oratory and it was nearly midnight when the convention adjourned until Thursday.

NOMINATING THE CANDIDATES

BRYAN MAKING HIS FAMOUS "PILLAR OF CLOUD" SPEECH AT THE BALTIMORE CONVENTION

In the Credentials Committee, the Clark delegates won two important contests, those from South Dakota and the District of Columbia. All the committees completed their work on Thursday.

Senator-elect Ollie James of Kentucky was chosen as permanent chairman of the convention. While in the Lower House several years ago, he was the champion who successfully led the movement, inaugurated by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in behalf of restoring the motto, "In God We Trust," on the gold coinage of the country. He is an able speaker and a practiced parliamentarian.

Like its predecessor, the day session of Thursday was largely devoted to speech-making, and it was not until evening, when the convention reassembled, that it began to make history. Mr. Bryan introduced a resolution declaring the convention opposed to the nomination of any candidate for President who was under obligation to J. Pierpont Morgan, Thomas F. Ryan, August Belmont or any "privilege-seeking class," and demanding "the withdrawal from the convention of any delegates representing the above-named interests."

This resolution, which was totally unexpected, excited a tremendous sensation. There were shouts of approval and disapproval all over the hall. Mr. Ryan and Mr. Belmont were both on the floor as delegates, one sitting with the Virginia delegation, the other with New York. Their friends bitterly denounced Mr. Bryan, and there were shouts demanding that he withdraw the personal allusions, and cries of "Get out of the party!" "He's crazy again!" "Put him out!" But the Nebraskan stood like a rock amid the pandemonium, and when it had somewhat subsided he spoke in support of his resolution, insisting that it was good Bible doctrine to cut off political offenders, and quoted: "If thy right hand offend thee cut it off." He would cut off these men to save the Democratic Party. This raised a new uproar, but finally the references to the men by name were stricken out and the resolution then passed by a vote of 889 to 196. There were many who regarded the whole episode as extreme and ridiculous, and who held that the Nebraska leader had not only lost his old-time oratorical power, but in the present case had clearly lost his head as well.

This lively episode had delayed the nominations, and the convention was now eager to ballot. The night session was devoted to nominating speeches. At 12.25 A.M. on Friday, Senator Reed nominated Champ Clark, and there was an ovation lasting fully an hour. Judge John W. Westcott of New Jersey presented the name of Woodrow Wilson; Senator Shiveley nominated Governor Marshall; and Professor H. W. Rogers of Yale nominated Governor Baldwin. Harmon and Underwood were also nominated in brief addresses. Balloting for President continued during Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Monday. Clark led at the outset, but Wilson overtook him on the thirtieth ballot. After that came the break, State after State going over to Wilson, who was nominated on the forty-sixth ballot, amid great enthusiasm. He received 909 votes.

Roosevelt Convention in Chicago

AT THE Progressive Convention held in Orchestra Hall, Saturday, June 22, resolutions were adopted offering the presidential nomination to Theodore Roosevelt

In his address accepting the nomination, Mr. Roosevelt made a strong presentation of the political conditions which had resulted in this division of the Republican Party. He said in part:

I feel that the time has come when not only all men who believe in progressive principles, but all men who believe in those elementary maxims of public and private morality which must underlie every form of successful free government, should join in one movement. Therefore, I ask you to go to your several homes to find out the sentiment of the people at home, and then again to come together, I suggest by mass convention, to nominate for the presidency a progressive candidate on a progressive platform, a candidate and a platform that will enable us to appeal to Northerner and Southerner, Easterner and Westerner, Republican and Democrat alike, in the name of our common American citizenship. If you wish me to make the fight I will make it even if only one State should support me.

The only condition I impose is that you shall feel entirely free when you come together to substitute any other man in my place if you deem it better for the movement, and in such case I will give him my heartiest support.

The bosses, he declared, had stolen enough delegates to carry through their nominations and their whole course had been in direct antagonism to that liberty and justice which were the characteristics of true Republicanism. The Progressive cause appealed equally to North and South. The law against stealing dated back to Sinai, and to steal a nomination was as bad as any other kind of theft. Primaries and elections are useless, if unscrupulous politicians can defeat the will of the people at their pleasure. He had fairly won the nomination and had been cheated out of it by the men who fear to see the principles of the Progressive party reduced to action. Closing, he said:

I hold that we are performing a high duty in inaugurating this movement, for the permanent success of practices such as have obtained in the fraudulent convention that has just closed its sittings would mean the downfall of this republic; and we are performing the most patriotic of duties when we set our faces like flint against such wrong.

The Progressive National Convention will be held in August, and meanwhile a strong organization will be effected covering all the States. Governor Johnson of California, James R. Garfield, Hugh T. Halbert of St. Paul, Controller Prendergast of New York, William Halpin of New York, and others, are among the leaders in the new party. They hope that the radical members of both the Republican and Democratic organizations will be induced to unite with the Progressives. The Progressive National Convention will probably be held in Chicago. Besides dealing with the Presidency, the movement contemplates the nomination of Progressive candidates for State officials in those States where the Republican Party is now the strongest.

THE SEED AND THE SOIL

A SERMON

BY

Rev. C. L. Goodell, D.D.*

TEXT: "And he said, Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." Mark 4: 9 (R. V.)

THESE words were spoken from the prow of a fishing boat. They are part of the first parable Jesus used. There is the breath of plowed ground in them, the aroma and vision of springtime, the strength and vigor of God's out-of-doors. The Preacher was an out-of-doors Man. He loved the open air and the green fields and the blue sea. He spent his time along the shore, in the mountains, and roaming the fields. He changed the figures of speech of the world and made it necessary for every lover of the good to be a lover of nature, and no man can write a good commentary upon his words or truly understand them who has not taken the first lessons of a farmer, a shepherd or a vine dresser. Both the Old Testament and the New were lived, and written for the most part, out of doors. The men who made the history of the Old Testament were nurtured in the open. Moses was cradled in a basket on the Nile, and when he was old enough to do as he would, he climbed up into the mountains. With forty years of that kind of life to his credit, he came back to smite Egypt and to drive the first nail in its coffin. Afterward he took forty years of open air and endless plains and went up to meet God from the crest of a mountain, and God hollowed a grave for him on the mountainside.

The Book that opens with God at work in nature ends with the last of the apostles singing of heaven by the rolling sea. Go out of doors all you can, but go as they went—to look through Nature up to Nature's God. You may stand as stolid and dull as Millet's "Man with the Hoe," which made Markham ask:

> Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
> Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
> Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?

But if you go with honest and holy purpose, it will be true for you, as for Bryant:

> To him who in the love of Nature holds
> Communion with her visible forms, she speaks
> A various language.

Sowing the Seed

I see again the white sands where His boat gently rocked and where I knelt to pray. I see the green carpeted Gennesaret stretching its plains to Hattin and to Safed, and the flowers abloom as I saw them last.

> That lily which He loved
> And praised for splendor passing Solomon's,
> The scarlet martagon decks herself still,
> Mindful of His high words, in red and gold,
> To meet the step of Summer. Cyclamens
> Lift their pale heads to see if He will pass,
> And amaryllis and white hyacinths
> Pour from their pearly vases spikenard forth,
> Lest He should come unhonored. In His path,
> Still, as of old, the lowly crocus spreads
> A golden carpet for Him; and the birds—
> Small almoners of Heaven, as once he said,
> Who fall not unregarded—trill their hymns
> Of lively love and thanks in every thorn.

The greatest Teacher of the ages opens his mouth upon the greatest theme. He speaks of the kingdom of heaven and shows it is not a structure to be reared: it is a life to be developed.

"A sower went forth to sow." A stupendous fact is in that figure. Seed—seed! Something with life in it; something that will give account of itself and bring harvests after its kind. It has to be put into the soil. It was not there by nature. It cannot be produced in any way. It is the product of life alone, and life of the same kind. Here is a fundamental distinction. There must be life before there can be growth. The difference between culture and Christianity is to be found in this: "Culture aims to make the most of what a man is by nature: Christianity aims to endow him with possibilities that are not in him by nature, and so to make of him a different thing from what he is by nature, and a better."

Many of our fruits and vegetables and grains were not native here. How come they to fill our barns and cellars and granaries? They were brought here from other shores, planted and nourished, till they have made us the richest land of fruit products in the world.

I affirm that the fruits of the Spirit do not grow by nature in these rocky hearts of ours. You will not find them in any natural heart, no matter how great its culture. Grace is an exotic. It must be brought from a heavenly shore and it will flourish here only with the utmost care. This is the truth that is vital; that does not hide in books, but in character; that comes into the world not by the fortuitous concourse of atoms; that is not thrust out as a spark by impinging worlds; but which was made manifest at Bethlehem and Nazareth and Jerusalem, by One who is himself the Way, the Truth and the Life. So far as truth is related to a formal life, the world had it before Jesus came. There is hardly anything relating to habit and daily affairs that was not wisely said by Solomon. But the age to which he spoke swept on to destruction and bore the speaker upon the crest of the ruinous wave. There was wisdom on his lips, but folly in his heart. He sang the praises of humility and self-restraint and unselfishness and poverty, but was himself proud and headstrong, a slave to ambition and to lust.

The Christianity of Christ

Truth is the cheapest thing in the market. He is a poor essayist or philosopher or poet who does not show it on every page. It is only the truth as Christ taught it in his life which is quick and powerful. His is God's truth, with the Almighty for its Author and all eternity for its field and background. Solomon is a warning: Jesus is a guide. With Solomon, life is "vanity and vexation of spirit"; with Christ, life is a glorious thing mounting to eternal blessedness. Life moves to a certain and glorious end. He holds the Ariadne clue that will lead every heart out of the maze and speaks with an authority which was the marvel of his time and all ages since. Solomon was a critic picking blossoms to pieces; Jesus was a husbandman sowing seed and reaping harvests. Solomon was a commentator on life; Jesus was making the history of godly living for all ages to admire. Now this is the Man who speaks.

But notice that the matter before us to-day is not so much the truth which he offers, as the way the truth should be received. No truth is good for anything unless it be rightly received. Before a scholar can study language or science or mathematics, he must learn how to study. Before one can profit by the teaching of Christ, he must learn how to receive that teaching. This is fundamental. "Is Christianity a failure?" asked a critic. A wise man answered: "It has never been tried." If one does not put himself in the proper attitude toward Christ, the Master had better not speak. It is but casting pearls before swine to speak to a deaf ear or a careless heart. Therefore the supreme importance of Christ's warning: "Take heed how ye hear."

In telling us how to hear, Christ gives us some examples of the way different men receive the truth and the varied results attending the several hearings. Some one has said that the next best thing to a good speaker is a good listener. And really, so far as getting good is concerned, the hearing is quite as important as the speaking. I mean by that, if the soul is alert it will find some good in the most ordinary proclamation of the Gospel; but if the soul is dead, not even a voice from heaven can bear truth in upon its consciousness. The truth which Jesus personified has been left to the propaganda of human lips. How shall men believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher? Christ's commission to his disciples was to preach the Gospel throughout the world, and by the foolishness of preaching the great work for which the heavens were made is to be accomplished.

Three Classes of Hearers

Jesus has named for us several classes of hearers of the truth thus proclaimed, and we cannot do better than to examine them in order and see, if we may, to which class we belong, that we may give better heed how we hear.

1. As there are some preachers who preach for pleasure of literary production and to gain a personal reputation for sermonic adroitness or sparkle, so there are some who hear sermons as they would hear any essay and criticize it. From the same standpoint, I confess that it strikes me with a sad sense of incongruity when I see a preacher more interested to have his name in capitals than to have his theme prominent. I cannot believe that that is the mind of the Master. But that class of hearers Christ calls wayside hearers and likens the truth which they have to seed scattered in a path. The truth does not find a lodgment at all. It lies on the surface. They are sermon-tasters. Very likely they can tell you how many divisions the sermon had—that is, if the sermon had an orthodox skeleton where each rib was plainly marked. They have a clear notion of the literary excellence of the composition, and will pass judgment on the value of the argument, but in all this the sermon has not entered at all into their life. The seed lies there upon the surface just as it fell. The feet of the passing events tread the life out of it. We walk home talking of other things; we catch up a trifle of business or gossip. The truth has had no chance to demonstrate its vitality, for it has not reached the condition which it is necessary for any seed to reach before it can germinate.

2. The second class goes one step further than the first—they give the seed a lodgment, but a shallow one. The seed falls on stony ground. That is, not on soil where stones are mingled with it, for there might be plenty of earth and the possibilities of a great harvest, but upon soil which lies as a thin covering over a ledge. If there is no room for a deep root, there will be no chance for a lofty growth. How many there are who only allow their Christianity to affect the surface of things! They never give it a chance at the deep things which move their whole life. Business and pleasure are the bed-rock, and religion is little more than a veneer. Some of these hearers are shallow in everything, but more are simply hearers without a purpose, satisfied when the least indication of religious growth appears. They are of two kinds—one has a quick growth and soon withers with the scorching sun. I had a spot on my lawn. I soaked it with water, but in a few days the grass was brown. I tried with an iron rod, and found the ledge a few inches under the soil. The other is the kind that produces only a meager growth and brings nothing to maturity.

3. The third class is the kind that have good possibilities—soil deep and rich and mellow—but they have too many crops. What would give one crop would only make a failure of two. Weeds grow better than grain and hence the grain has no chance. People are astounded at the growth of fruit trees in California—where the soil is better or at least less worn than ours. If you will duplicate their methods here you can come near to duplicating their results. The careful farmer keeps his grove plowed and all the weeds down. Our farmers plant an apple orchard and then let it grow up to grass. The question is, will this growth of amusement or business choke the word and make it unfruitful?

The Soil That Is Good

4. The fourth class is the kind that gladdens any true preacher's heart and is the hope of the church. The kindling eye, the rapt and earnest demeanor, all this sends by a wireless telegraphy a message to the preacher's heart that is a benediction. Some will hear and shortly forget. Some will hear a little for a little while, and some will become unfruitful to God because of their fruitfulness unto the world. Longfellow's experience is that of many a preacher:

> Long, long afterward in an oak
> I found the arrow still unbroke;
> And the song from beginning to end
> I found again in the heart of a friend.

This is the man who hears for himself, who is not angered when the preacher assails his easily besetting sin, but rather feels like thanking him for showing him his own heart. He will be more interested in the spirit of the message than in the form, and his life will bear glorious fruit. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Calvary M. E. Church, New York City.

I WILL

I WILL start anew this morning with a higher, fairer creed;
I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;
I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;
I will waste no moment whining and my heart shall know no fear.

I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;
I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze;
I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread;
I will cease to have resentment when another moves ahead.

I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;
I will not deny his merit, but I'll strive to prove my own;
I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;
I will cease to preach your duty and be more concerned with mine.

—British Weekly.

The Seed and the Soil

Continued from preceding page

Give the seed a chance. It has a charmed and mighty life. I have picked beautiful Alpine flowers out of the snow and I have found the pink arbutus nurtured by a melting snowdrift, but this seed will grow where nothing else can grow if only it has care and nurture. Give henceforth a new reception to the Gospel. Give it a chance to do its work. Are the weeds choking the word? Martineau was right when he said: "The weeds are not painfully plucked out by the cautious hand of tillage reckoning on its fruits, but burnt out by the blaze of a divine shame and love." And that must be philosophical, for Lord Bacon has said that "a man reforms his habits either all together, or not at all." If a man hears this Gospel carelessly he condemns and despises the Lord who offered it and the judgment which saw its necessity. Hear for eternity, for it is the message that eternity was made to hear. Unless you accept it, what answer will you make when the Sower asks of the soil for the seed and the harvest? "Take heed in what manner ye hear!"

A Year of Christian Endeavor

REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, DD., LL.D., the president and founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, whose interesting series of articles, "In the Footsteps of St. Paul," is now appearing in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has prepared a little book entitled "Thirty Years of Christian Endeavor Briefly Retold and the Story of the Year." This little book outlines briefly the inception of the Christian Endeavor movement and sketches its history up to the beginning of 1911. Then follows the story of the year. The society's work in the United States of America, in Canada, Mexico, Great Britain, the various countries of Europe, India, and the Far East, the island realm of Australia and the South Seas, and wherever else in the world the Christian Endeavor has founded branch societies, is fully reviewed and interestingly illustrated. Dr. Clark says: "If it is true of the domains of King George that 'the sun never sets' upon them, it is doubly true of Christian Endeavor. In the Occident and the Orient they are equally at home." The little book, which is packed full of interesting information, is published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston and Chicago, and may be obtained by addressing either office.

Anvil Sparks

..OF TWO evils choose the lesser and turn it into a blessing.

..WE BORROW most of our happiness from those to whom we give it.

..ONE good habit brings on another.

..THE man who walks with God partakes of exercise that is good for the soul.

The Man With a Grouch

WHERE in all the world did such a word come from—such a very expressive word? Dickens? Oh, no; he exploited the type but did not originate the name. Yet when you read the first few pages of A Christmas Carol you almost expect, every minute, to run against the word "grouch." Poor old Scrooge certainly carried a well-developed grouch around with him until that night when the ghosts took it away and he woke up in the surprising character of Sunny Jim.

The word sprang up from the fertile hotbed of American patois—it was the spontaneous coinage of the streets. Like Topsy, it "just growed." It has no etymology. "Let's make one, and say that it is a contraction and combination of the words 'growl' and 'speech'—the first sound of the one joined to the latter sound of the other." That really fits the case. The man with a grouch begins almost every speech with a growl.

"What a beautiful day this is!" exclaims the optimist. "Well, it will rain before night," replies the man with a grouch.

"That was a splendid sermon this morning, wasn't it?" says Brother Jones, coming out of church. "Fair; he could preach well enough if he wasn't too lazy to study," grunts Brother Cross in reply.

So it goes; in church, in business, even in sport, the man with a grouch opposes every joy with gloom. Unwilling to concede that anything is pure, unadulterated good, he is busy always hunting out the evil and grumbling over his real or fancied wrongs. He is sometimes called a "knocker," another expressive word with an origin similar to that of "grouch." To such a man nothing seems to be right, nothing is free from his ill-natured criticism. He is always

> Knocking the man that he sees on the street,
> Knocking his neighbor whenever they meet,
> Knocking at business, knocking at play,
> Knocking because he can't have his own way,
> Knocking the preacher and knocking the pew,
> Knocking the man who dares differ in view,
> Knocking his enemy, knocking his friend,
> Until we all wish that his knocking would end.

Some happy spirits are like the birds in the tree tops greeting the sunshine with songs of joy, but the man with a grouch is like the frog croaking at night from a slimy swamp.

* * *

EVERY man, it is assumed, wants to succeed in his business or his profession. What a pity that some are destroying their own prospects of success and rapidly traveling toward failure by hugging a grouch to their bosoms to eat out their hearts! A mean, bitter, gloomy habit of thought and speech incapacitates a man for good work as surely as a spell of sickness. It is a disease. It weakens his powers, destroys his initiative, paralyzes his efforts, blinds his vision, and drives away his friends.

Such an ailment afflicts all who must spend any time in the company of the unpleasant victim. Friends try for a while to tolerate or to cure him; then they give up in disgust and avoid him. His employees or business associates are not so easily rid of his growls and snarls. Trifling mistakes and mishaps that might easily be overlooked are seized upon as excuse for fault-finding and unjust criticism. The interest of employees treated in such manner is soon destroyed. They have no enthusiasm for their work, no loyalty to their employer. They begin to suspect that things are not in prosperous shape and they join, unconsciously, with the "head gloom" of the concern in clogging the wheels of progress. A chronic grouch can knock out a good business as effectively as "hard times" or tightness of the money market.

It is often asserted and never denied that panics in the business world come more often from mental conditions than from actual material conditions. Lack of confidence, uneasiness, pessimism, fear, complaining—in a single word, the grouch, this baneful and contagious disease which spreads so easily, is the thing which undermines business stability and causes the senseless panic.

Extensive campaigns are being pushed aggressively to stamp out the "great white plague." States and cities are declaring war upon the mosquito and the house-fly. Let's get busy with a vigorous crusade to knock out the grouch.

* * *

TREATMENT of the grouch must be based upon an understanding of its nature. Get first of all a correct diagnosis, and then apply the right kind of cure. Perhaps the ailment may be compared with that brought on by poison ivy, except that its poison strikes in deeper. Gentle handling is necessary for any case of severe irritation or inflammation. Soothing ointments and antiseptics are required.

Scolding will not cure the grouch. Rather it will make it worse. Apply the oil of gladness so far as possible. Expose the victim to the sunshine of cheerful smiles. Inject into the veins frequent doses of hearty mirth, knowing that "a merry heart doeth good like a medicine." Subject the patient to a constant process of mental suggestion, introducing kindly, helpful, and sympathetic thoughts. There may be prolonged resistance for a while, and it will seem as if the treatment is unavailing, but just as truly as the grouch is stubborn and contagious, so is love and good cheer. It becomes merely a question of which force shall weaken first and give up the struggle. A chronic grouch is not an easy thing to conquer, but the treatment indicated will win if persistently followed.

If the sufferer can be aroused to a realization of his own condition, and to a real desire to cure himself, the result can be gained more quickly. The practice of thinking well of others, of putting the best possible interpretation upon their acts, of crediting them with good motives even when they make mistakes, of rejoicing when they do well instead of seeking some selfish reason behind the act—this practice will create a state of mind in which the grouch poison will soon die out.

A dear old lady used to travel always with a bag of flower seeds, and wherever she went she would throw handfuls of the seeds out of the car windows, and flowers sprang up along the railroads as her contribution of love and beauty to the world. There are happy spirits going through life scattering the flowers of kind words, smiles, laughter, helpfulness and love. Look out for the man with his bag of nettles. Waylay him, take away his sharp stuff, and give him, instead, a bag of flower seeds to beautify his path. If he knows no sound but the croaking of the frog, try and teach him the song of the lark. He will enjoy it much better when he learns it, and he will be transformed from a nuisance to a maker of joy.

Poems Everyone Should Know

SINNE

LORD, with what care hast thou begirt us round?
Parents first season us: then schoolmasters
Deliver us to laws; they send us bound
To rules of reason, holy messengers,

Pulpits and Sundayes, sorrow dogging sinne,
Afflictions sorted, anguish of all sizes,
Fine nets and stratagems to catch us in,
Bibles laid open, millions of surprises,

Blessings beforehand, tyes of gratefulnesse,
The sound of glorie ringing in our eares;
Without, our shame; within, our consciences;
Angels and grace, eternal hopes and fears.

Yet all these fences and their whole aray
One cunning bosome-sinne blows quite away.

GEORGE HERBERT.

"The Church that Is in Troy"

THE Men and Religion Forward Movement in Troy, N. Y., has left some permanent results for good. For three months, beginning with the first of last January, there was unusual activity in church life. The large committee of ministers and laymen mapped out the work last fall, and there were over thirty churches of different denominations which enlisted in the campaign. Ever since last November, when the campaign was first inaugurated, there has been seen an increasing interest for the religious forces of the city "to get together." One wealthy man, at the very inception of the campaign, offered to give $1,000 toward the expenses of the movement.

The attempt was made to bring about a deep, quiet, united, and permanent quickening of the spiritual life of professing Christians, to arouse the lax and indifferent, to increase the attendance of all classes, especially men, upon church services, and to commend the Christian faith to those who have not accepted Christ. The church members were urged to depend much upon prayer, to place very little reliance upon machinery, and to exercise breadth and warmth of Christian fellowship. The Central Committee requested the ministers, during the Sundays of January, to preach on the general theme, "The Cross of Christ—the Central and Commanding Feature of the Gospel." The month of February witnessed a concerted movement for the increase of church attendance. The month of March was devoted to the winning of men to Christ. During the last of March there was held an eight-day series of institutes and conferences, under a "team" of experts and specialists. Some churches were inspired to have a "follow-up" work, and endeavored to enlarge the attendance of their Sunday schools; some churches even attempting to double the attendance. Some pastors at once began to organize boys' work, and started boys' clubs. Many Sunday schools began to organize their Sunday school classes and to increase their efficiency. Some churches undertook more evangelistic work; and more church meetings were held during the three or four months of the campaign than had been held in Troy for many years during the same length of time. Ministers and laymen held many Gospel meetings in the shops and factories at the noon hour.

The Railroad Young Men's Christian Association and the Central Young Men's Christian Association did excellent work in these evangelistic meetings in the shops and factories. The good results are seen to-day in several aggressive movements among the churches and church people. The churches of the East End have made arrangements to hold open-air Gospel meetings in our beautiful Prospect Park every Sunday afternoon during July and August. In different sections of the city open-air Gospel meetings will be held. There has recently been some good work done by the Law and Order Alliance in suppressing gambling and working for civic righteousness.

WARREN G. PARTRIDGE, D.D.

The Parthenon, Antiquity's Most Magnificent Temple

The Acropolis, as Seen by One Coming from the Piraeus

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF ST. PAUL

ONE OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST SPEECHES

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

ST. PAUL came to Athens by sea from some point on the Macedonian coast, whither he had escaped when driven out of Berœa by the opposition of the Jews, who pursued him with malicious vindictiveness everywhere. The journey was and is a most interesting one. Splendid mountains rise from the western shore. Charming islands dot the coast along which the little vessel on which St. Paul was embarked threaded its way; and every mile is alive with memories of the glorious victories or the terrible disasters of the Greeks.

Did Paul, as he sailed past Eubœa, remember Thermopylæ, where a few Greeks won imperishable renown by defending their country in the narrow pass, and preventing the devastating influx of Asiatic hordes? Did he recall the glories of Marathon and the defeat of the Persians as he sailed near that historic spot? It is not unlikely, for Paul was a scholar as well as a Christian, and such heroic deeds of genuine patriotism would appeal to his martial spirit. But I think that chiefly his mind was on the celebrated but superstitious and frivolous city which he was about to see for the first time—a city of song and story, the city of marble temples and palaces, of sculpture and painting and of gods innumerable. He was doubtless considering his message, and how he should deliver it so that it might make some impression on the minds of the fickle sensation-mongers of Athens. As he strains his eyes to catch the first glimpse from the ship's deck of the world-famous city, a flash of sunlight strikes his eye. It is the gleam that flamed from the armor of the mighty statue of Minerva, which stood, as the ancient coins of Athens show us, on the very summit of the Acropolis.

Thus it is very likely that the earliest warning which Paul had of his approach to the city came from one of the heathen divinities which it was his mission to overthrow. Soon after that he landed at the Piræus—then, as now, the harbor of Athens—a town which still retains many of the characteristics of the seaport which St. Paul saw. To-day huge steamers, with their black hulls and belching smoke-stacks, from Brindisi, Trieste, Constantinople, and Smyrna, and even from far-away London, Hamburg and New York, take the place of the great corn-ships from Alexandria, and the many coasting vessels from Greek and Macedonian ports of the olden time. But the everyday life of a great seaport is much the same in every age. To-day one sees swarthy sailors, with their rolling gait, wandering on the docks of the Piræus, venders of cakes, sweetmeats, oranges and dates trying to tempt them to buy. Slatternly women stand at dirty doorways gossiping with their neighbors. These sights, doubtless, are little changed by the centuries.

The Approach to Athens by the Sea

But Paul probably did not tarry long at the Piræus, nor need we. We will follow him up that long straight road, then lined with fragments of the great wall which once connected Athens with her seaport, until, after a four-mile walk, we come to the far-famed Agora, or market-place of Athens. Before Paul had come as far as this he had seen many signs of the idolatrous city. He had passed beautiful marble statues of Minerva, Apollo, Mercury, Jupiter, and other gods and goddesses. Shrines and temples were everywhere, before and behind, to the right and the left. There were also statues of the great statesmen, warriors and law-givers of Greece, like Solon and Demosthenes, as well as of her mythological heroes, Hercules, Theseus and many others; but the great majority of the statues were of her innumerable gods. "The religiousness of the Athenians went even further," as has been said. "Every public place and building was likewise a sanctuary. The Record House was a temple of the Mother of the Gods. The Council House held statues of Apollo and Jupiter, with an altar of Vesta. . . . And as if the imagination of the Attic mind knew no bounds in this direction, abstractions were deified and publicly honored. Altars were erected to Fame, to Modesty, to Energy, to Persuasion, and to Pity."

Crossing the market-place, Paul would have upon his left a rough and ragged rocky hill, surmounted by a temple to the God of War. This was the Areopagus, or Mars Hill, where afterwards he made his memorable speech. On his left was the still more famous hill, the Pnyx, on whose partially leveled top Demosthenes and other great Athenian orators had held their audiences spellbound. Before him, as he passed on toward the east, was the Acropolis or citadel of Athens, a hill of solid rock far higher than either of the others we have described, and covered on every projecting ledge and cranny, as well as on its broad, level top, with the most magnificent temples, shrines and statues of antiquity, as the ruins one sees to-day mutely testify.

Paul Preaching on Mars Hill, from a Modern Painting

Her three statues on the Acropolis were perhaps the chief objects of Athenian worship. One was of ivory and gold, the greatest work of the world's greatest sculptor, Phidias. Another was made of the brass and copper captured in the battle of Marathon, and was the gigantic statue whose gleam could be seen far out at sea; while the third was the most sacred of all, for it was said to have fallen down from heaven, like Diana of the Ephesians, like the pedestal of the Virgin in the Church of the Holy Pillar in Saragossa in Spain, and like other statues and relics deemed holy for the same reason by the Roman Catholics of our day. Volumes and libraries of volumes have been written about these temples and statues and their worship, and the people who gathered about them, for there are none other so famous, even in their ruins, in all the wide world. But what do we see to-day standing where Paul stood? Mars Hill is still there, for nature's monuments are not easily removed or defaced; but the Temple of Mars has left no trace behind. Tourists wander over the hill, and find nothing but the bare, rough foundation rock. Children play hide-and-seek around it, and goats nibble the grass and moss that spring in its crevices. The Pnyx, too, can be easily recognized, but no vestige of a ruin of temple or shrine can be seen; only the outlines of the rocky forum on which the greatest orators stood.

Continued on next page

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF ST. PAUL

Continued from preceding page

With the Acropolis it is different. It is crowded with ruins to-day. The Parthenon, the temple of Minerva, the magnificent gateway with its massive marble columns, the beautiful little temple of the Wingless Victory, and the larger temple of the Erechtheion, all stand magnificent in their ruins. The ground is strewn with marble columns, capitals and cornices, and to walk over it is like picking one's way over a marble quarry. But the images of the gods and goddesses have vanished, like the religion for which they stood. They are either utterly demolished or have been removed to some museum in Athens, in England, or on the Continent of Europe. The guns of Turk and Venetian, the violent hands of Goth and Vandal, Slav and Norwegian have done their worst; but so immense and massive were these temples of the Acropolis that they stand, almost like the foundation rock itself. They are battered, broken, weather-stained, with the beating rain and bleaching sunshine of two thousand five hundred years, but splendid even in their ruins. Here we can see the actual works of man on which St. Paul looked — the very fluted pillars of the temples on which he gazed when "his spirit was stirred within him, as he saw the city crowded with idols."

Famous schools of philosophy, as well as religion, schools which have affected the thought of mankind in all the ages since, had their origin and home in Athens. Though they were decadent in the time of St. Paul, yet they had their adherents, and they molded the thought and speech of the apostle if only to refute their errors. As he looked from the Acropolis he could see the "Painted Cloister" of the Stoics, where Zeno their founder had taught his pupils. The Stoics, though stern and ascetic in their morality, and though they opposed the worship of images, were pantheists, and their god was the Spirit of the Universe. There was no room in their faith for a personal God. The other dominant school of philosophy which Paul encountered in Athens was the Epicurean; and the "Garden" of Epicurus, where his disciples still gathered though their master was long since dead, was a noted spot in Athens, and could doubtless be seen by St. Paul as he gazed from Mars Hill over the beautiful but wicked city.

Here was a city having more gods than in all the rest of Greece; where "it was easier to find a god than a man"; where the cultured people who rejected the ancient gods and laughed at the priests and their incantations were either pantheists or atheists. Here, too, was a city in many respects the brightest and most glorious in the world, with more treasures of art heaped together within its small compass than anywhere on the planet; a city that was always gay with processions and festivals, celebrating the rites of some deity. So fearful were the Athenians, with all their innumerable deities, that they might miss some god, and so fail to propitiate him, that they had set up in several places altars "to the Unknown God."

Into this welter of superstition and idolatry, this strange mixture of culture and frivolity, of reason and bigotry, came a man who, according to tradition, which ancient artists have followed, was small of stature, his body distorted by lameness, his beard long and thin, his head bald, with a bright gray eye under thickly overhanging evebrows. Such a man was not one, it would seem, to challenge the learning, the cynicism, the atheism of a gay, frivolous, self-sufficient city, the center of the world's art and philosophy. But God had chosen the "weak things of this world to confound the things which were mighty," for "the weakness of God is stronger than men." Every day Paul talked with the Jews in their synagogue and with the idle crowd in the market-place, as Luke tells us in the Acts. There were various opinions as to his doctrines. Some called him a "babbler"—literally, a bird that picks up seeds from the ground, and hence one who chirps and twitters like a bird; a merely contemptuous expression. Others thought he was telling of new and strange gods, and many Athenians who would not object to a few new gods were willing to hear more.

Mars Hill, Where Paul Delivered His Famous Sermon

So they took hold of him and brought him to Mars Hill, the rocky eminence that lay just to the right of the market-place, as you look from the Acropolis. On the top was a rocky platform, and on seats hollowed out of the rock sat the judges to try the most desperate criminals, and to decide questions of religious controversy. Here on the hill, too, was a temple to Mars, and the hideous Furies had their shrine and their statues in a cleft of the rock just below. Here, then, Paul stood at last in the midst of enemies and idlers, philosophers and poets, Stoics and Epicureans, and a great company of those who only wished to see or hear some new thing. Here he stood to make his defense of his faith which should echo through all the ages to come. And yet it was a very brief and broken speech. It would scarcely take three minutes to deliver. It contains less than three hundred words; yet it contains truths that shook the world.

It is too familiar to require extended remark. The apostle begins by recalling the altar he had just seen "to the Unknown God," and, in conciliatory mood, tells his motley audience that he has come to set forth unto them this, the true God, though unknown to them. He quotes one of their own poets, Cleanthes, who sang:

Hail, O Zeus! for to thee should each mortal voice be uplifted;
Offspring are we too of thine, we and all that is mortal around us.

Paul quotes this, for it is a Christian sentiment though uttered by a heathen writer concerning one of his own deities. But this is only the prelude to Paul's speech. In the last forty words was his whole message embraced. For in them he told of Christ the Judge, ordained of God, and of his resurrection from the dead. That was too much for this frivolous, mocking, unbelieving crowd, the most decent of whom would only say, as they went their way, that they would hear him again about that matter.

His speech seemed to be the driest failure, broken off almost before it was begun, ending in the jeers of an idle, insulting throng. In reality it was a glorious success, not chiefly because in consequence of it one of the judges of Mars Hill (Dionysius the Areopagite), Damaris and some others seem to have believed on Paul's Saviour, but because it was the challenge of the new religion to the whole world. It is not too much to say, with an author of distinction: "That speech on the Areopagus is an imperishable monument of the first victory of Christianity over paganism."

KENTUCKY'S "MOONLIGHT SCHOOLS"

THE summer of 1912 is epoch-making in Rowan County, Ky. The county will never forget the installation of Moonlight Schools. Carefully planned to meet the demands of communities of mountaineers, the Moonlight Schools hold session on moonlight nights. This is in order that the bright light of the moon may entice the adult learner from his cabin over even roughest roads to the schoolhouse, where earnest volunteer "helpers" wait to instruct and help him become a more useful, cheerful and contented member of the community.

"Aunt Dicie" Carter
An Eighty-six-Year-Old Pupil

When Mrs. Cora Stewart, president of the Educational Association of Kentucky, suggested the plan of moonlight schooling to the teachers of the day schools, they entered heartily into the enterprise, and volunteered their services to teach. They campaigned the mountains and the woods prior to the opening of the schools, in order to explain their purpose and to enlist students. Classes in the elementary studies, reading, writing, geography and history, were instituted, and the story of the success of it all reads like fiction. Classes of two or three in each of the first ten schools to be opened would have been gratifying and fully worth the effort. But instead of twos and threes, they came in crowds, and in forty-five schools that were subsequently opened within two weeks, there was no class smaller than ten and some were as large as fifty-eight. The exercises are as interesting to hear as the classes are impressive to see. A grandmother of eighty-six side by side with a rosy-cheeked lass of twenty; a grandfather in the same class with his grandson, each trying to surpass the other; lumbermen and farmers, brides and grooms, mothers and sons, all join in a whole-hearted, good-natured rivalry in their efforts to learn.

To save the embarrassment of using primers, current events and news items were correlated with reading, the reading text being a little newspaper prepared especially for beginners. Bible study is especially popular with the pupils, many of whom learned to read in two weeks' time, which is conclusive evidence that grown-ups learn with astonishing rapidity. Mrs. Cora Stewart, at the beginning of the first session, offered a Bible to each pupil who would learn to read and write. The results were nothing short of amazing.

Next year, not only will the ignorant be allowed the privilege of moonlight schools, but school trustees, magistrates, country merchants and preachers with their wives and relatives have pleaded for admission to the classes. These schools might serve as an example to other rural communities whose people are remote from learning.

The effect of the Rowan night schools on the social life of the county is admirable. The uncommon school associations seem to develop a spirit of good fellowship before unknown, welding whole communities in sympathy and real neighborliness. The demand for books has also greatly increased in the "Moonlight School" districts and the circulation of periodicals is far greater.

"Aunt Dicie" Carter is the eldest pupil at this unique school, and is without doubt the oldest public school pupil in the United States. She is eighty-six years old and her countenance, seen in the photograph accompanying this article, gives evidence of really awakened hope and a growing mind. There are twenty-five schoolboys and girls in her reading class, not a single member of which is under seventy-five.

Many additional counties in Kentucky are establishing schools and especially adapting them to the particular needs and problems of the people within their boundaries. Other States are sure to follow the example set by Kentucky. Some will meet with less success and some will fail; successes and failures both are very sure to lead into the pioneer paths that must be trod in any radical onward and upward movement for the welfare of the people. Very certain it is that the broad safe highway leading out of ignorance and superstition to useful and enlightened lives is sure to be built, and within the next ten years will be laid the foundation of a complete system of public education adjusted to the needs of rural America.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Chicago and Baltimore

HOWEVER the political wiseacres may regard the outcome at Chicago, they will make a profound mistake if they fail to recognize the importance of the principles for which Theodore Roosevelt fought. His weak point was his personal ambition, which has experienced a setback. Had he been content to be a savior of his party for reform's sake alone, he might have won the fight, and united Progressive Republicanism could have looked forward to a triumphant issue in November. It was his third-term candidacy and his personality, not his principles, that split the party. But the reforms he championed, and which have been approved by an indisputable majority of the Republican voters at the primaries, will go on to final triumph. There was both force and dignity in Mr. Roosevelt's appeal for nation-wide support for a movement, the main object of which is to reassert the popular will and restore the right of self-government to the hands of the people by taking it away from unscrupulous bosses and political machines. He raised an issue which, although thrust aside for the moment by the sheer power of a superior organization, will yet have to be faced and wisely and patriotically decided at whatever cost.

Now, the turmoil of Chicago is reproduced in Baltimore. What a picture of social and political unrest, the tossings and distractions of the people bound hand and foot by precedents that are designed to deprive them of their share in the government, do these conventions present! At Chicago, Roosevelt pointed out the danger of tolerating longer the corrupt rule of united capitalism and bossism, and especially its control of the machinery of nominating conventions and the making of Presidents. At Baltimore, Bryan has sounded a similar note of warning to the Democrats. Both protests are a loud call to arouse patriotic citizens to a true sense of the situation.

History repeats itself. Our modern reformers, fighting a seemingly hopeless battle against entrenched power and overwhelming numbers, have their prototypes in the lives of many who have been sacrificed on the altar of reform in the past. Solon found the Athenian commonwealth degraded by injustice in the courts, a corrupt administration, a general lowering of moral, political and economic standards. They called him mad when he attempted to stir the people to action; but his message reached the mark and redeemed them from the tyranny and oppression of the rich, redistributed taxation, relieved industry of its onerous burdens, freed the land from a load of debt, repealed oppressive laws, gave to the commonwealth a new constitution and rebuilt it upon the broad basis of equality and justice. Political parties and their corrupt allies had been its ruin. The machine controlled everything in sight, and was in turn controlled by the wealthy classes who usurped the people's rights, fostered unworthy ambitions and reveled in lawless power. Solon warned them that a time would come "when a man would be ashamed to say, 'I am a citizen of Athens,' for it would be a confession that he was one of those who had let their liberties go."

We need men like Roosevelt and Bryan. Although they may be tumult-makers, their mission is to keep in constant view the danger that threatens the most sacred rights of citizenship, "lest we forget." They may not have the courage to put aside, with firmness and decision, as Solon did, the allurement of personal advancement; but they accomplish their mission nevertheless when they hold up the vision of clean, honest government before the nation. They stand to us as prophets, calling us to a higher citizenship, and to the exercise of those qualities that go toward better manhood and a nobler nation.

The Spirit of the Work

AFTER all, questions of method and material are outer things, and important as they are, essential even as they are, and conformed though they may be to the plan of the Great Architect of the Kingdom, yet when he looks upon them there will be no smile on his face, no light of hope in his eye, no sweet thrilling of his heart, unless within the true form he sees the true life. The instrument may be all right, but the instrument is not the music. The most precious Stradivarius violin in existence is nothing but dead wood. As it lies in its case, or as it is held in the cunning, caressing hands of a master, it is nothing but dead wood. The music—who shall say what that is? It is not the wood of the violin, it is not the strings, it is not the bow. What is it? Who knows? Who has ever been able to tell us what the witchery is in the "concord of sweet sounds"? Something invisible, intangible, imponderable; something that no microscope has discovered, no scales have weighed. And yet a real thing; the thing without which the instrument, whatever it be, is a foolish mockery. Christ listens for the music of the instrument—the hidden spirit in the heart of the work. If that is right, the form will be sure to please him. And remember, that the spirit of any work of church or Sunday school, of society or board, is only the spirit of the individuals who do the work. The individual spirit of the worker—that is what is all important.

The Suffrage Martyrs

MRS. EMMELINE PANKHURST, the militant suffragist leader, who on May 22 was convicted of conspiracy in inciting the recent window-smashing crusade and sentenced at the Old Bailey in London to nine months' imprisonment, and Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, joint editor with her husband of a suffrage newspaper, and under the same sentence with Mrs. Pankhurst, have been released on the plea of ill health. Miss Emily Davison, serving a six months' sentence for setting fire to a postal letter-box, and eight others convicted of various misdemeanors have also been liberated. By instituting "hunger strikes" in prison, these militant ladies resorted to a dramatic appeal for pity and leniency, which was successful. The picture is a sad one. These high-spirited women appealed in a spectacular way to public sympathy, but their violent methods produced a revulsion, to the great disadvantage of the cause they represented. Their excesses were repudiated by the conservative women suffragists. Whatever there is in the principles of woman suffrage that will make for the permanent good and welfare of a nation is very sure to make its way, not by means of violence but through the gallantry and the sense of justice of the other sex. And this applies equally to the suffrage situation on both continents.

A Conscience Void of Offense

IN THESE days, when so much is being said about dishonor in private and public life, it is stimulating to note the claim of a brave and busy man of nearly twenty centuries ago who hastened from province to province of Asia Minor and Eastern Europe, planting the seeds of modern civilization. Paul, citizen of the Roman town of Tarsus, well-born, well-bred, well-schooled, well-seasoned, declared that he exercised himself "to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man." Fine exercise, that; and told of in a way that implies success. "I make it my business," he declared, "to keep my conscience clear."

To succeed in that business is to succeed in life; to fail there is to fail everywhere. And the idea that it is hard to do right is absolutely false. It is hard to do right when one is undecided whether to do right or to do wrong; but once the decision is made to do right as a regular business, the rest is easy.

"Those men never waste any time making up their minds whether or not they are going to do right," said an enthusiastic and earnest pastor in speaking of his church officers. "All they want is to know what is right. When they see it they'll do it fast enough." A successful lawyer expressed the same idea in conversation with a confidential friend. There is no struggle, he agreed, about doing right if one made the great, fundamental resolution at the beginning to do right all the time.

That is the sort of men America needs now, in church, in state, in court, in trade—everywhere, men who make it their fundamental business to keep their conscience void of offense. Nothing is more disastrous, in personal or national life, than to allow the conscience to become soiled and dull and dumb. Conscience, abused, neglected, disobeyed, may cease to assert itself. Then comes the appalling horror of a man who does wrong, making himself believe that it is right. Conscienceless men will make a conscienceless nation. And the conscienceless nation is doomed. It is incalculably important for the Christian to keep his conscience keen and vigorous. He must not trifle with it. He must give it right of way. If he does not, his eye will lose its sharpness, his tongue will stammer, his hand will falter. The only way to live in God's presence is to live with clean hands and a pure heart. The only way to do God's work among men is to do it with a conscience that is clear.

No other consideration can possibly count in the scale against this. No matter what it costs a man or those who are dependent on him, he must be true. To be otherwise is to welcome to his soul defeat and doom and to spread disaster among those whom he desires to help. A man's first duty to himself, his family, his friends, his nation, his God, is to make an eternal covenant with himself to do right at any cost.

This is an alluring call—the call to right living. It is a plain call. God and the world are waiting for men who, echoing the assertion of the dauntless Paul, can cry with Galahad:

"My strength is as the strength of ten Because my heart is pure."

A Summer Day

(See Cover Page)

A SUMMER DAY," from a painting by Corneille Max, is an excellent example of German impressionistic art. In the shortness and sharpness of the shadows, in the limpid, cleanwashed atmosphere and the heavy clouds full of light and color reflecting picture shadows in the quiet stream and on the purple hills beyond, the story is easily read. Clearly it is high noon; a restoring rain has passed over the valley, and the little family has come into the open.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, July 10, 1912

	PAGE
A Summer Day	Cover
From a painting by Corneille Max
China, the Youngest Republic (Illustrated)	687
Democrats Meet in Baltimore (Portraits)	688, 689
Roosevelt's Address of Acceptance	689
The Seed and the Soil. Sermon	690, 691
By Rev. C. L. Goodell, D.D.
The Man With a Grouch	691
"The Church That Is in Troy"	691
In the Footsteps of St. Paul (Illustrated)	692, 693
By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.
Kentucky's "Moonlight Schools" (Portrait)	693
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	694
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	699
The New Children's Bureau (Illustrated)	700
The Pointer Puppy (Illustrated)	701
Story by Edwin Balmer
Sunday School Lesson	703, 704
By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Happy Cozy Corner Days (Illustrated)	705
Our Mail-Bag	706
Largest Flag in the World (Illustrated)	706
What Others Say	707

WANTED—A NEW LUTHER

Editor The Christian Herald:

When Luther drove the last nail into his thesis on the door at Wittenberg, he struck a blow for religious freedom that sounded through the world. We need another Luther—a strong, able, fearless leader of men, to fling out a challenge to that power which is plotting day and night, and employing all the agencies within human reach, to effect the religious conquest of this continent. We need a Luther to show Rome in her true colors as the maligner of men, the obstructor of divine truth, the falsifier of history, the enemy of every form of education, religious and secular, the arch-plotter of the ages. We need a Luther who will carry through this country, in the press and the pulpit, the might and power of a divine mission to apprize men of the menace of Catholicism, which would take from them their birthright, supplant their independence with servitude to an alien power, proselytize their children, anathematize their marriage laws and render illegitimate the progeny of every Protestant domestic union. It will be strange if, in the whole array of Protestant churchmen, there should not be found one man equal to the occasion and prepared for the emergency.

New York City. J. B. D.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Woman's College in India

THE Sylvanus Stall Woman's College in Guntur India, was dedicated recently. Guntur, the scene of this school's dedication, has about twenty thousand population, and is ated in the Madras Presidency, which has a er native Christian population per capita than other section of India. The school was built by Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society e General Synod of the Lutheran Church, aided overnmental and personal help. The various en's societies of the church contributed $12,000, English Government in India $10,000, and Dr. anus Stall gave $13,000. This building, like in India, is all on one floor. Many weary, steps will thus be saved, particularly in this country, where every effort means enervation. building is 280 feet long and 112 feet deep. It uilt of light gray stone, it is built to last many uries, the walls being e to four feet thick. steel girders, which e made in England, are longest and largest ever ped to that part of In- The commodious main and drill room are 40 0 feet, the various class ns are also 40 by 70 In addition to the ns for the study of Eng- and the Telegu lan- ge, there are the kin- arten, play rooms, the nt room, the science n, the art room, the li- y and the offices. The ding, which cost $35,000, dedicated wholly free of

r. Stall is well known in a, and in the course of work he has been instru- tal in bringing many and women to Christ. appeal of the Christian ion is to the heart, but heart is to be reached ugh an enlightened in- ct. No language can nor arithmetic compute nfluence of education in establishment of the dom of God in the hearts and institutions of kind. This college will help to verify the pic- of the Psalmist:

t our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after e militude of a palace. (Ps. 144: 12.)

Sylvanus Stall Woman's College, Guntur, India

Drowned by Falling Pier

VO hundred excursionists from Buffalo were ropped into the Niagara River at Eagle Park, nd Island, the other night. A steamboat col- ed and a score and a half were drowned. The ms were members of Amherst Lodge, Order of sters. Five hundred of them had gone to Eagle k for the day. Half of the party had been safely rned to Buffalo, and as the boat landed to take remainder home, the excursionists crowded the and it gave way, leaving at least one hundred fifty in water twelve feet deep, struggling in ny darkness to save themselves. The Niagara r has a current there of ten miles on hour. s believed that nearly thirty perished. That e were not lost was due to the prompt, wise and re efforts of men with boats, and expert swim- s. This fatality happened on a Sunday excur- , but similar accidents have occurred in the ng of floors and platforms at the dedication of rches, teaching the lesson of earthly insecurity calling to mind the Scriptural passage:

ere is but a step between me and death. (I. Sam. 20: 3.)

Bible to President Madero

EV. DR. JOHN W. BUTLER, in the name of the Christian Workers' Association of Mexico, pre- ed to President Madero a beautifully bound copy he Bible in Spanish. Dr. Butler in his address, h was in Spanish, said: "From these sacred pages ope the Mexican people are going to learn true ocracy, for which you have labored and sacri- so much in these last years. So we are sure will hear with pleasure that up to the present almost a million copies of the Bible, complete portions of it, have been distributed throughout ico. We engage in the distribution of the Bible, knowing that, now as ever, 'The entrance of His Word giveth light,' and that the study of the same by the people will help wonderfully in the formation of the ideal type of citizenship. Daniel Webster, the famous orator of the neighboring northern republic, said with reason: 'The best Christian will be always the best citizen.' For this reason the thousand Protestant congregations scattered throughout the republic are heartily co-operating with the Bible Society in increasing the circulation of the sacred Book, and we are sincerely anxious for the happy day to come when, whatever the creed of the people, a copy of the holy Bible will be found in every Mexican home. Mr. President, we are truly grateful to you for the amiability with which you have received us on this occasion, and we have the honor to place in your hands this testimonial of our admiration and highest respect and to express the wish, before leaving, that you and your worthy family may enjoy the best of success and health, and for your government the blessing of heaven, which will result in the broadest prosperity and happiness of the Mexican nation." President Madero replied as follows: "I am exceedingly grateful for this gift you make me. You may rest assured that I appreciate it to its utmost worth. I hold the same belief as you concerning the value of its principles for the elevation of the people, inasmuch as I am sure that only through Christian morality are the nations uplifted. I heartily congratulate you on the good work you are doing in co-operating for the moral uplifting of the Mexican people. The Mexicans are of noble sentiments; they are good and heroic; they have only lacked enlightenment, and it will be one of my greatest efforts to work for their enlightenment, so that they may be able to understand the high principles of this Book. Continue your good work and you will thus co-operate with me in the uplifting of the Mexican people." Could anybody have dreamed thirty years ago that such religious progress could have been made in Mexico? It is only another evidence of the swiftness with which the Book and the Christ of the Book are moving to the conquest of the world. Under the Mosaic dispensation it was made obligatory on the ruler of the nation to take a copy of the law in a book, to study it and teach it to the people as the source of enlightenment, virtue and prosperity.

And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life; that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them. (Deut. 17: 19.)

Lived Under Twenty-four Presidents

NEARLY about the same time two men in different parts of the country died recently who had lived under twenty-four Presidents of the United States, and had voted for nineteen of them. These men were the Rev. William Thorp of Middletown, Ky., said to have been the oldest Christian Church minister in the world. He was ninety-six years old, and had been pastor of the Christian Church of Middletown for fifty-five years. The other man was Hugh McDowell, who was a delegate to the first National Convention of the Republican Party, held in Pittsburg in 1856, and was ninety-seven years old when he was gathered to his fathers. What marvels those eyes saw in the advance of methods of locomotion, of transportation, of communication, of illumination, of agriculture, of manufacture, of surgery, of medicine, of education, of benevolence, of moral reform, and of religious activity! How firmly the church and state have rested on them and those like them as foundation stones! In these men the prophecy of old was fulfilled:

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. (Job 5: 26.)

Heroism in Hell Gate

MISS MARGARET HUGHES, twenty years old, and her best friend, Miss Ella O'Rourke, twenty-five years old, nurses in the Manhattan State Hospital on Ward's Island, went down to death the other day while five of the other nurses looked on powerless to help them. Miss Hughes, who was an expert swimmer, plunged into the water at the bathing pavilion and swam about for quite a while. Suddenly she threw up her hands in distress, and in answer to a call from shore she coolly said she had a cramp. Miss O'Rourke threw off a white sweater and swam out to her relief, saying, "Keep up, Margaret, till I get to you." Miss Hughes said, "Ella, don't come near me; we shall both drown. You go back and save yourself." Miss Hughes kept on, and seizing her, held her up till she could get her breath, and then started to bring her to the shore. When she had almost reached the dock they both sank in the very treacherous river current before any help could be given them. There cannot be found in any literature or time a more beautiful example of heroism than in these two nurses in a charity hospital, one going to the rescue of her friend though it cost her her life, the other desiring that her rescuer save herself and let her die. The longest life of wealth, or highest summit of fame, are not half so great as these lives of sacrifice. The life of the trained nurse is one of perpetual danger and sacrifice for the good of others. And the beautiful heroism of these young women was as natural as it was divine, and was a reflection of the true spirit of Christianity:

Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. (I. John 3: 16.)

Earnings of College Men

STATISTICS published in the Decennial Record of the class of 1901 at Princeton University show that the average income of the members of this class ten years after graduation amounts to nearly $4,000. This sum includes only a man's individual earnings and is exclusive of allowances or legacies. The lawyers lead the list with an average for the tenth year of $4,994.88, and the business men, including bankers, insurance men and publishers, a close second with an average of $4,684.69. Other statistics compiled by the 1901 men show the comparative number of marriages of Princeton, Yale and Harvard graduates and the number of their children. The class of 1901 from Princeton shows that of 268 men, 175, or a percentage of 65.2, are married. They have a total number of 219 children, or a percentage of 1.25 to a marriage. The class of 1901 of Harvard has 720 members, 398 of whom are married, a percentage of 55.2. They have a total of 413 children, or a percentage of 1.03 to a marriage. At Yale, from a class of 236 graduating in 1901, 128, or a percentage of 57.6, are married. They have 99 children, or a percentage of only 0.77 to a marriage. A college education is valuable first in the development of the mental, moral and spiritual faculties, and in widening the sphere of activity and enjoyment. It has a money value also which is not to be overlooked. The Princeton statistics of incomes emphasize this fact and call to mind the words of the wise man:

For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it. (Prov. 8: 11.)

THE NEW CHILDREN'S BUREAU

WHEN, in years to come, the record of the present Congress of the United States is scanned for noteworthy achievements, results of permanent value, a prominent place in the roster will unhesitatingly be given to the creation of the Children's Bureau. The Children's Bureau is not only the newest branch of the United States Government, but it is a thoroughly unique institution. Like many another step toward enlightenment its inception has been the subject of agitation on the part of humanitarian workers and public-spirited citizens for years past, but only this spring was the bill authorizing Uncle Sam to provide an "annex" of the Department of Commerce and Labor for the benefit of our juvenile population finally passed both the Senate and House of Representatives and signed by the President.

There were some rather remarkable circumstances in connection with the passage of the bill creating the new bureau. For instance, when the measure was under consideration in the House of Representatives, Congressman Mann, the Republican leader in this branch of the national legislature, took the floor and stated that, though his individual judgment did not prompt him to support the bill, he had laid aside all personal objections in the matter upon learning that Jane Addams was strongly in favor of the measure, and that she insisted that the creation of such a bureau would elevate child life in the United States. Incidentally, Representative Mann paid a glowing tribute to Miss Addams for her work at Hull House and elsewhere. This new Federal agency for the common good will, after all, cost Uncle Sam less than $30,000 a year, which is a very modest appropriation compared to the widespread improvement of conditions which it is expected to bring about. In addition to the director or chief of the bureau, provision is made for an assistant chief and a private secretary. When the new institution is fully established, which may be within a few weeks after this reaches our readers, the executive heads will have the aid of a statistical expert, two special agents and a clerical force of about a dozen persons. It is planned that the new bureau will, if possible, find permanent quarters in the main building of the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington, D. C., where it will be under the direct supervision of Secretary Nagel, who has taken so keen an interest in this newest branch of our newest executive department. In view of the extent to which Miss Jane Addams was instrumental in securing the establishment of the Children's Bureau and the interest she has all along manifested in the plan, it is but fitting that the position of chief of the new bureau should be given to her long-time friend and co-worker, Miss Julia C. Lathrop, of whom a short sketch has already appeared in these columns. As the first head of the Children's Bureau Miss Lathrop occupies the most prominent and possibly the most important position held by any woman in connection with the government. Moreover, her salary of $5,000 a year places her in a unique position among the members of the fair sex whose names appear on Uncle Sam's pay-roll. Many persons throughout the country have not, judging from the inquiries which have been received in Washington, formed a very clear idea of the scope and purposes of the Children's Bureau. The new institution is neither designed to exercise authority of any kind over the children of the country nor upon parents. It is to serve as a great national intelligence office or bureau of information which will continually engage in investigation and research work bearing in any and all ways upon the interests of those children who are in need of some body's solicitude and watchful care. The accompanying photographs are, in themselves, evidence that great abuses exist in the employment and management of child labor in our great industries. Surrounded by conditions which, from their very nature cannot but retard physical development, these children are deprived of all chances of even the most elementary school training. Such conditions as those shown here are those which will call forth the activities of the new bureau. The information it will gather will, of course, be authoritative, because it will have all the resources and prestige of the United States Government behind it. Such information as this is certain to prove of immense value not only to the Federal Government but to State and county and municipal governments throughout the land, and to church and charitable organizations. The well-fed, well-clothed children of prosperous parents in a position to properly educate themselves will be given little heed by the officials of the Children's Bureau, except in the preparation of general statistics covering our whole juvenile population. The new Federal "clearing house of information" will concern itself specially with the less fortunate of our junior residents. Indeed, there are four classes of minors upon whose condition of life the governmental searchlight will be turned in most energetic fashion by the newly empowered officials. These classes comprise afflicted children, dependent children, delinquents and children at work—that is, the child laborers of our mills and mines and factories, the growing shame of prosperous and supposedly enlightened America. Just to convey a hint as to the wide scope of the investigation already planned, it may be noted that the Children's Bureau is empowered to secure information and report upon the questions of infant mortality, orphanage, juvenile courts, accidents and diseases of children, the conditions of the employment of children in all the industries, legislation affecting children in the several States of the Union, the desertion of children by parents, the birth-rate, dangerous occupations of children, and many more. As a result of comprehensive investigations on these subjects, the public guardians and the law-makers in every State and municipality between the Atlantic and the Pacific will constantly have the benefit of the latest and most improved ideas which may be developed in connection with child welfare. It is predicted that the inevitable result of this method of keeping the whole country in step with the march of progress will be not only more modern laws and regulations affecting children, but also more uniform laws. Furthermore, the Federal Government will be in a position, through this new information exchange, to save money for local governments and for charitable and other helpful organizations. No longer need any local body waste money "trying out" some new plan or conducting an experiment whose value, if they had only known it, had long since been demonstrated at some other point in the country.

W. F.

Washington, D. C.

Breaker Boys at Work Sorting Coal

These boys work in cramped positions where much of the time the air is black with dust

Miss J. C. Lathrop

A Girl at Her Machine in a Hosiery Mill

Breaker Boys from a Pennsylvania Coal Mine

A Twelve-Year-Old "Doffer Boy" in a Cotton Mill

THE POINTER PUPPY

BY EDWIN BALMER

TWO similar cartoons, in opposing newspapers that morning, pictured Harvey Lennon. Both presented him as Horatius at the Bridge, behind him the Rome which he guarded. In both newspapers that Rome was, of course, the great "trust" under attack, the American Commodities Company. The character and feeling of this Rome differed in the two cartoons, however, one emblazoning it as the noble and imperial capital of American industry, the other showing it a citadel of predatory privilege—a robbers' retreat.

The bridge in both pictures was the law by which the American Commodities Company was being assailed. The assailants in the first cartoon were an ignorant rabble and run of vandals clamoring only to destroy; in the other cartoon they were the forces of law and prosperity. But not even this latter cartoon dared picture its attacking forces as making way against the lawyer Horatius baffling the attack at the end of the final bridge. For every reader of every newspaper, not only in that great city where the trial was on, but throughout the nation, knew that the government forces had not yet gained from Harvey Lennon a foothold upon that bridge.

It was the steady increase in the realization of this which, each morning, enraged anew the readers of the second part of newspaper throughout the country; it was Lennon's own unruffled certainty of it which, at each session, infuriated those who thronged the court-room that, upon the morning that the cartoons appeared, a man followed the chief counsel for the defense from the courtroom at the noon recess and struck him in the face.

Lennon did not stop to arraign the man. He knew better. He passed it off as nothing. In its physical effect, the blow was nothing. There was no sign of it upon his face when he reached his office at twenty minutes to one, precisely his usual time when court arose at twelve-thirty. He entered his private room and shut the door firmly. Alone, he picked up from his desk the heavy crystal sphere which he always kept upon it, a polished piece of quartz a little larger than a golf ball. He lay down upon his leather lounge, extended his right hand, clasping the crystal, and closed his eyes.

As soon as he should fall asleep, his hand would relax; the ball would drop upon the floor and wake him. He would sleep for barely an instant; but it would refresh him; it would take "the edge off." Till the thud of the ball upon the floor came to his secretary upon the other side of his door, no one would dare to disturb him.

But the tension upon his nerves would not slacken. Other things combined to keep him conscious of himself. Another of the yellow papers attacking him had discovered and printed an account of how he rested with the crystal in hand at noon. The article had been illustrated by a severely penciled photograph of him, with heavy lines drawn in his face and his dozen gray hairs exaggerated to great, disfiguring blotches. It was so untrue that he had laughed at it upon the train that morning; but now it angered him.

It stirred him, too, to recollect that a picture of his wife had been dragged into the columns, though she was made to appear as young for her thirty-five years as he was made to seem old for his forty. Also they had drawn his little boy into their current of abuse, his eleven-year-old boy whom they had photographed galloping free with head thrown back upon his little pony.

The lawyer's hand tightened on the crystal ball. He jumped up. He stood at his window, high up in a great building. Before him and all about rose other buildings as great. With each, as he gazed about, he identified a man or a group of men with whom those for whom he fought stood allied. To him they constituted his city, those groups of men so few that their names automatically went through his mind as he glanced from building to building. To him the city rose as witness for any one to see that the men for whom he fought were right. They were—they made the city! They, and their associates in other cities, made the nation. Laws passed at the clamor of those crawling specks in the streets below who had nothing and who, left to themselves, could accomplish nothing, must not be allowed to operate. Anything to prevent their operating was right!

Drawn by H. Stockton Mulford

"I thought he said he'd done it. Father, you see, don't you?"

Yet as Lennon threw himself again on the lounge and extended his hand with the crystal, the fingers would not of themselves let go. He waited another instant, fuming.

Unwilling to let those in the outer office know that he could not sleep as usual, he let the ball thud upon the floor. As his secretary opened the door with papers which he must look over, Lennon passed his hand over his eyes and stood up.

But, left alone again, he could not take up the papers. He was nervous; he could not go out to lunch. It was the first moment in the long tension of the trial, which already had run from June through the five weeks of heat into the last of July, that he felt distinctly unfit. And the afternoon session with Reardon, the American Commodities' president, upon the stand was sure to demand the lawyer's utmost.

He swept the papers impatiently aside. A cheap, printed card slipped to the surface among them. The loosening of the tension all through him let him know that he had read the name upon the card and sensed it.

THE McCARTHY KENNELS
INGUARD
POINTERS AND SETTERS A SPECIALTY

On the back, scrawled in pencil over the list of blooded blue-ribbon winners bred at the McCarthy Kennels, Lennon read:

"DEAR SIR: In reply yours of yesterday, have brought in my best pointer puppy. He is positively best puppy I have, besides having one eye with brown spot around it, as required.

"Respectfully,
"J. McCARTHY."

Lennon rang for the man; and, ten minutes later, left the office smiling and at peace.

A few minutes before six, as the train slowed for the suburban station far north of the city, Lennon with the puppy in his arms stood on the platform looking toward the station. His little boy ran to him, flushed and panting.

"Papa! You got me the puppy!" and the son took it and hugged it to him.

Lennon stood on the platform, smiling.

"Oh, papa, he's got brown around one eye! He's just what I wanted!"

Lennon, observing that his son had come on his pony, stepped into his waiting motor-car and delayed to see how the boy would manage.

"Want to give me the puppy, Georgie, or come in with me and let Ted follow?" Ted was the pony.

Georgie mounted, still holding the puppy. "Papa, I think I can ride with him!"

Lennon motioned to the chauffeur to keep the car so that the pony could trot beside it; and all the way home father and son chatted together, first about the dog and then about the many other intimate things which a father and son have to talk about together. But, of course, as they reached home, they spoke of the puppy again; and the father gave his only warning.

"Remember, boy, a pointer's a kennel dog. You can play with him outside all you want; but you mustn't have him in the house."

Georgie meant to obey. So far he had, indeed, never disobeyed seriously. When he was a very little boy, he found out that his father was a lawyer. A lawyer, they told him, was one who knew better than any one else what was right and wrong. His father knew these things so well that people of all sorts came to ask him about the right thing to do; and, for telling them, they paid his father money which bought things to eat, and paid the servants and bought Georgie's clothes and everything else. Later the boy understood that Mr. Reardon and a few of his friends paid his father for all his days, from the time he left home in the morning till he got on the train at night, to tell them how to do everything according to law; and the boy knew that they obeyed his father. So what his father ordered at home was certainly to be obeyed absolutely, particularly now that Georgie knew that people who did not understand what was right were accusing Mr. Reardon and his friends of doing wrong.

The boy therefore intended to leave the puppy with Ted in the stables when he was called in to go to bed after dinner. He left him there, in fact, and came in and went to bed at nine o'clock as usual, but later he stole out the side way in the dark to the stables and ran back with the little puppy in his arms, and had almost reached his room when the little dog slipped from him and scrambled away down the long, low front stairs and into the front hall and tumbled across it into the study with Georgie, forgetful of everything else, after him.

Continued on next page

THE POINTER PUPPY

Continued from preceding page

No one saw them or heard them in the hall; there was no one in the study. The lights were lit; but Georgie's father had gone out in front as an automobile came up to the house. Georgie looked under table and chairs for the puppy; and he found him at last under the lounge—so far under that, to get him out, the boy had to crawl under after him. So Georgie went under, and had the dog just as he heard his father's voice and Mr. Reardon's and they both came in and shut the door.

The puppy, next to the wall, did not move. After its adventure it seemed to be going to sleep. Georgie was entirely out of sight under the big lounge. He lay very still as he heard his father's voice speak very sternly.

"Reardon, I would never have let you go on the stand if I had known this."

There was a silence; then Mr. Reardon's voice.

"This was the exact way it was. Gairing asked me to meet him at—"

Mr. Reardon's answer was slow and careful, so clearly and slowly given, for the lawyer was making notes of part of it, that even the little boy under the lounge could comprehend most of it.

At least it told him, beyond chance of misunderstanding, that Mr. Reardon had had a strange secret meeting with a Mr. Gairing and had agreed to many different things, and that, afterwards, a great deal of money was paid over to Mr. Gairing in some strange way. And the boy already knew that one of the most important things which his father's opponents were trying to prove at the trial was that Mr. Reardon had met secretly with a Mr. Gairing and paid him much money afterwards.

So the boy lay very still while his father made Mr. Reardon tell it all very carefully again. Then his father was satisfied. He got up. Georgie did not understand what his father said now. He knew only that he had disobeyed his father, while his father, finding Mr. Reardon had done wrong and broken the law, was making him admit it. His father had brought Mr. Reardon there, the great Mr. Reardon whom every one else seemed afraid of, and had made him say over and over again that he had broken the law, and had written down what Mr. Reardon had said so he could bring it to court with him, as Georgie knew his father once before had brought in a confession.

The boy crawled with the dog out from under the lounge and returned the puppy to the stables. He crept back to his room and, as again he thought of himself and his father, he lay with his face in the pillow and sobbed. Outside his door he heard first his mother and then his father stop for a moment before going on to their rooms to bed. The boy slipped to his knees beside his bed in his sense of guilt. Only after that was he able to go to sleep.

He slept so late in the morning, therefore, that his father was gone before Georgie got up. He found the newspaper which came to the house and read the headlines with more than the usual thrill of excitement.

"State will Attempt to Show Agreement with Gairing. Nothing Else Left in Case Against American Commodities."

The boy flushed again as he reread it. Court opened, he knew, at ten o'clock. It was past that now. So his father was standing straight and speaking to the judge and the jury directly and earnestly as Georgie had often heard him speak. He would be telling them now that he had found out the truth at last, that Mr. Reardon had made the agreement with Gairing and that the money had been paid over and he had forced Mr. Reardon to say so.

The thought excited him, not only then, but almost all day as he played with Ted and the puppy, whom he named Spot. It made him ride to the station to meet his father long before the time he ever came home. But, if his father was late, the afternoon papers would come in ahead of him and there Georgie could read what his father had done.

Very proudly he took the first paper off the heap.

"State Unable to Shake Reardon's Testimony. Lennon, in His Re-Direct Examination, Brings Out Beyond Doubt That No Agreement Could Have Been Made with Gairing."

It stared Georgie in the face. It struck him trembling with disappointment. Disappointment—that was all. For he had thought he understood before; and now he knew that he could not have understood. So he rode with the paper a little way off from the station and sat down under a tree and read the whole account through carefully.

It was very easy to read. What his father had said, what Mr. Reardon had said, what Mr. Hadley, the attorney for the other side, had said, was all perfectly clear, with the name before each sentence. And what Mr. Hadley asked was almost exactly what Georgie had heard his father ask the night before; but what Mr. Reardon answered now was entirely different; and what his father asked and what he said was different. Georgie knew it was different only because he could not make out the real meaning; but still—still he didn't want to wait for his father's train so much. He didn't understand it; but—he rode slowly home.

It was the second morning after this that Georgie came to consult his mother after his father had again gone to town early.

"Mamma, the paper says papa makes his speech this afternoon."

His mother put her arms about the little boy, for he had not been quite himself that morning and the day before.

"Yes, dear."

"Then to-day papa doesn't just have to ask questions and try to make other people tell things. I mean, mamma, he can tell everything himself just the way he knows it is, can't he?"

"Yes, dear."

"Then will you take me in town to hear it?"

His father's speech was plain and clear. He spoke earnestly, as he had heard him before, and directly to the judge and to the jury, sometimes rapidly, sometimes slowly, but always clearly and simply. There was barely a word, there was no sentence which even a boy could not understand. And as Georgie heard him, his heart beat with pride and his fingers tingled. For now that he heard his father's voice, he knew everything was right as his father said it. It could be no other way.

For an hour and then for another his father spoke, and carried not only Georgie and his mother, but every one else about them, with him. Then his father stopped for a moment.

"And now, gentlemen of the jury, and your honor, we come to the accusation of an agreement with Gairing and the charge that, in one form or another, seven hundred thousand dollars was paid over within the year."

Again, for less than a moment, his father stopped and straightened his shoulders. Georgie, his heart-beats pounding in his ears, leaned forward in a hot perspiration of excitement. For he saw his father glance once at Mr. Reardon and then face the judge and jury again earnestly. And the boy knew that his father, able to speak now for himself and tell the truth of things as he knew them, was to tell every one that he knew the agreement had been made with Mr. Gairing and the money had been paid over.

Then he heard his father's voice again.

"There was no agreement; there was no transaction between them. The two men, I tell you, never met except on a train as neighbors, or as fellow members of their golf club. I tell you there was no agreement, there was no transaction involving any amount of money in any way. . . . I tell you they never met. . . ."

The other words which went with them were lost somehow in the whirl in Georgie's brain. Only as his father repeated those sentences again and then, looking straight at the judge and the jury and, still speaking earnestly, repeated them again, did Georgie catch anything. After that he may have heard, but he sensed no more of what followed till he was roused when his mother got up and he realized that his father had stopped speaking and that the people were leaving the courtroom.

Lennon reached his home that evening much later than his wife and son—so much later, indeed, that before leaving the city he questioned whether he would go home at all that night. But he decided he would sleep better at home. He had not finished his address to the jury; he was to conclude in the morning. Therefore he needed to give himself every advantage.

His wife was waiting for him when he reached home; but Georgie was long in bed. Lennon stopped outside the boy's door on the way to his own. His wife touched his arm.

"Go in and look at him, dear. He's been worried about something. He took his puppy into the house the other night, he confessed to me. He—he feels things so."

Lennon opened the door.

Georgie was not asleep. He sat upright in bed as the door opened and his father came in. For some reason, Lennon did not know exactly why, he closed the door behind him and left his wife out. He came to the side of the bed.

"Father, I couldn't sleep. I was hoping you'd come in."

"Boysie, what's the matter?"

"Papa, I brought Spot into the house the night I got him."

Lennon patted the troubled head.

"I know. You told your mother, didn't you? She told me. That's all right now."

"No, papa. I didn't tell mamma everything. I didn't tell her Spot ran away."

"Ran away?"

"Papa, he ran into your study. I chased him. He went under the lounge. I heard you and Mr. Reardon coming in. I was afraid; so—so, papa, I hid!"

"Hid?" Lennon was still wondering. "What do you mean, boy? Hid? Where?"

Then his son told him everything.

The father's hand dropped from the boy's shoulder. Georgie grabbed it and hugged it to him.

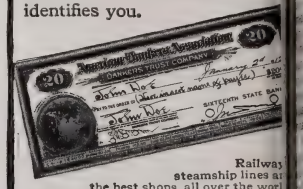
"Papa, wait! I've been bad. I know I've been bad. You see—you see, papa, I thought Mr. Reardon said he had been meeting Mr. Gairing. I thought he said he had done it. Father, you see, don't you? Oh, father!" He was clinging to the hand which his father was trying to draw away. "He said it so many times. So you see I thought—I thought—" he stopped and sobbed. His father broke from him and went to the other end of the room and stood with his back turned to his son and left him alone. So in a moment the boy controlled himself and came to his father and clung again to his hand.

"Papa. I'd understand if I was bigger, wouldn't I? It's just that I'm not big enough, isn't it, papa?"

Continued on next page

AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION TRAVELERS' CHEQUES

Pay Traveling Bills with "A.B.A." Cheques. Hotel men of all countries like to accept them from guests. Your signature on the cheque identifies you.



Railway steamship lines and the best shops, all over the world know that "A.B.A." Cheques are as good as gold.

Foreign money is simplified for the traveler who has a wallet of "A.B.A." Cheques. The exact value of each $10, $20, $50 and $100 Cheque is stated in the money of the principal nation.

Wm. J. Burns National Detective Agency protects holders of "A.B.A." Cheques from forgery. Their engraving and the special paper on which they are printed make them almost impossible to counterfeit.

"A.B.A." Cheques are the only traveler's cheques acceptable under the law for United States customs duties.

Write to Bankers Trust Company, Wall St., New York, for information as to where the Cheques may be obtained in your vicinity and explanatory booklet "The Safest Cheque."

BUY THEM FROM YOUR OWN BANK OR IF HE CANNOT SUPPLY THEM APPLY TO BANKERS TRUST COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

5% On Your SAVINGS

IN 19 years the INDUSTRIAL has never paid less than Five Per Cent on money entrusted to its care. Money can be deposited and withdrawn at any time without loss of earnings. During each year the INDUSTRIAL has increased in strength to such an extent that it is today one of the largest and strongest of Savings Institutions, with

Assets Over $2,500,000

Under the supervision of New York Banking Department. All funds safeguarded by mortgages on best New York and suburban real estate.

WRITE FOR BOOKLET

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS and LOAN CO. NEW YORK CITY

Industrial Savings & Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., B'way & 42d St., New York

MONUMENTS

Over $190,000 worth of White Bronze Memorials sold through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Moss-growth, chipping, cracking and crumbling, common to marble and granite, are impossible with White Bronze. It will outlast the pyramids. More artistic, less expensive. Investigate. Write NOW for free illustrations and prices. State approximate cost desired. We deliver everywhere. Good Agents Wanted.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
355-G Howard Ave.,
Bridgeport, - - Conn.

LADIES EASE YOUR FEET

A customer writes, "You could not have fitted me better. For the first time in years my feet are comfortable. The soft glove-like feel of

PILLOW SHOES

is simply charming."

$3.00 Postpaid in U. S. A.

Soft, easy, durable, neat, stylish; genuine hand-turned shoes of Vici kid. Nothing to wrinkle and chafe; no breaking in necessary. Absolute comfort and fit guaranteed or money refunded. Price includes O'SULLIVAN RUBBER HEELS, the shock absorbers of new live rubber. Write for free catalog and self-measure blank. All styles. Customers everywhere.

PILLOW SHOE COMPANY
184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

LADIES Make $3 to $5 Daily

Selling Dress Goods, Skirts and Handkerchiefs. Free Outfit. No capital required. Mutual Fabric Co., Dept. 405, Binghamton, N.Y.

WINNING THE WORLD*

...day School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

EVERY alert mind that is familiar with biography and history must see in the twin parables of Jesus about the leaven in the three measures of meal till the whole was leavened, and the mustard seed that from a tiny seed grew to a size that the birds might rest in, the accurate prophecies of the ...sible and visible growth of Chris...ity in individual and social life. ...he personal message of these para... which is the best lesson for boys ...d girls, we shall speak later, but ... let us bring out the missionary ...on for adult classes.

...he newest and most wonderful ...f of the leavening power of Chris...ity in social life is China, trans...hed from a backward pagan mon...y into a republic of avowedly ...istian ideals by a century of mis...ary influences, supplemented by a ...al crusade against opium, of Chris... origin, that is fusing China's in...dualism and provincialism into a ...nationalism and a new patriotism.

...was only a few years ago that ...ecuted Christians, during the ...er outbreak, were crying, "How ..., O Lord, how long?" It seemed as ...hina, except a few thousand con..., was all unmoved by a century of ...istian missionary effort. Pagan... and opium seemed to hold both ...ernment and people in their deadly ...p. But the leaven was working ...ntily down in the minds of the ...ers and the masses. The mustard ... of visible Christianity, seemingly ...gnificant, was gathering strength ...a great and sudden growth. Many ... were to be influential officials had ... educated in Christian schools in ...a and the United States; and the ...ldren of many more were bringing ... from missionary schools to their ...nts, almost unconsciously, the ideals of Christ, including civil liberty. Christianity made many realize that every human being is a brother or sister of Christ, a son or daughter of God, and so has sacred rights of individuality, including a right to share in government.

Then came the Christian liberator, Sun Yat Sen, who said, in receiving the present of a Bible: "We are trying to build up a new republic on the principles of this book." And his successor, Yuan Shi Kai, in a message to a missionary service of thanksgiving for the establishment of the republic, said that so far as he understood the principles of Christianity they were what he was striving for in the new government.

Let us thank God for this proof that the leaven is really "hid" in the most numerous race in the world, but let the parable prepare us to exercise further patience till it is all leavened, which will probably be a long time yet. A Manchu soldier on the wall of Peking, asked how he liked the republic, replied that he "did not understand the business." A farmer replied to the same question that it was only a quarrel between Yuan and other leaders, and did not concern him. A majority of the Chinese people neither know nor care for either Christianity or republicanism. Let us hope that the mistaken efforts of the past to hasten the Christianizing of a people by the political adoption of Christianity, which fills the churches with "baptized heathenism," will not be repeated. The spiritual and educational work of Christian missions must slowly change individual character and the social conscience.

Home and City Missions Also

The parable of the leaven is also timely because of our new home and city missionary problem: Will American Christianity be able to leaven a million immigrants a year, coming to us from southern Europe chiefly; or

Continued on next page

*HE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON ...uly 21, 1912. "The Growth of the King..." Mark 4: 26-32; Matt. 13:33. GOLDEN ...: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, ... heaven, so on earth." Matt. 6: 10.

THE POINTER PUPPY

Continued from preceding page

...nd his father for refuge said: ...s; yes. That's all." And escaped ...caped from his son's room and ... his wife's and into his own and ...ed the door behind him. But there ...did not sleep. He did not move ...t lest his wife hear him, though ...lid not undress. Instead he lay on ...back in bed staring up at nothing ...one hour and then for another. So ...ay till he was very sure that his ...e must be asleep and his little boy ...must have fallen asleep from mere ...austion. Then in his stocking feet ... chief counsel for the American ...modities Company crept down the ..., silent hall to his son's room and ...t in.

...he wide opened windows let enough ...w into the room from the bright, ...nlit lawn to show the chief counsel ... son lying asleep with one arm ...own up above his head and the other ...n beside him. Both hands, evi...tly, had been clenched; but now ...y were relaxed; and the boy's lips ... were relaxed, so the chief counsel ...w that faith in his father had won ...h the boy. But he knew too that it ..., as his son himself had said, only ...ause he was not big enough that he ... not understand; and that very soon ... boy must know.

...o he stood there moment after mo...t looking down in the dim light at ... son.

...he fairy tales of beasts and birds ... other creatures endowed with vir... and powers for good, or for evil—...se fairy tales which psychologists ...y are telling us we should never ...e read because they merely muddle the mind—are they not, after all, true? If two or three thousand years from now the story of the struggle of the people of the United States against the great American Commodities Company were saved only in folklore, as we have preserved the similarly important struggles of our fathers two or three thousand years ago; and if that folk story told of how the great, cruel giant was routed and brought to ruin by a little pointer puppy, with a brown spot about one eye, would it not be true?

Truer at least than any account in the newspapers the next day accounting for the collapse of the chief counsel for the defense when he attempted to continue his argument before the judge and the jury—a collapse which, all agreed, lost the case.

The city newspapers explained the sudden change in the chief counsel in many ways; the cartoonists of all the papers also tried to account for it. But none of them came near the truth.

Two brief items in the little suburban weekly sheet, which concerned itself chiefly in the simple home events of the people of the village, approximated the truth far better.

One related that Master George Lennon had received from the famous McCarthy Kennels, Inguard, a blooded pointer puppy.

The other item read:

"It is understood that Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Lennon and son are to leave for an extended trip in Europe. The Chicago papers report that Mr. Lennon has resigned his place as chief counsel for the American Commodities Company and will return to general law practice."

Why Everyone Should Drink Grape Juice

DO you know that grapes have wonderful tonic qualities—that they build up the blood, yield energy and vitality, aid digestion, increase appetite?

That pure rich grape juice, adopted as a beverage, gives you the benefit of these priceless health qualities?

And that the purest, richest grape juice that can be produced is

Armour's Grape Juice

The Family Drink

Bottled Where the Best Grapes Grow

Drink ARMOUR'S GRAPE JUICE with meals and between meals and both work and play will become joyous propositions.

Give the children all they want. It helps assimilation, keeps them from begging for sweets.

Only the finest Concord Grapes, grown in the famous vineyards of New York and Michigan, are used for ARMOUR'S GRAPE JUICE.

They go to the press the day they are gathered. None are held over to spoil and wither.

No sweetening or diluting of any sort. ARMOUR'S GRAPE JUICE is just the pure, rich, naturally sweet juice of the finest quality grapes, preserved from fermentation by sterilization and airtight bottling.

As a hot weather drink, ARMOUR'S GRAPE JUICE is not only delightfully refreshing, it is an aid in resisting the debilitating effect of hot weather.

For sale at all grocery and drug stores, fountains, buffets and clubs.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will send you a trial dozen pints for $3, express prepaid. Address Armour and Co., Dept. 168, Chicago.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Everywhere, the same report

"I believe it saved our baby's life." Dr. ——, Harmony, Maine.

"I put the baby on Ridge's Food and said if it lives a week it will get well. The baby got well." Dr. ——, Chicago, Ill.

"It transformed my baby into a healthy child." Dr. ——, Bloomington, Ill.

"It saved my baby's life." Dr. ——, Philadelphia, Pa.

"It is the first food from my baby was born that agreed with her." Dr. ——, Denver, Col.

Names on request.

Ridge's Food
THE CORRECT MILK MODIFIER

Your druggist has Ridge's Food in four sizes, .25, .50, $1.00, $1.50.

RIDGE'S FOOD CO., 250 Dover Street, Boston, Mass.

Save ⅓ to ½ on Fuel Bills

Our Payment Plan Makes it Easy for You to Purchase a

JAHANT DOWN DRAFT FURNACE

Have plenty of heat wherever it is needed. We issue a 360 day Guaranty Bond that guarantees satisfaction. We sell direct paying freight and saving you dealer's profits. Install the Jahant yourself. We send complete outfit—furnace, pipes, registers, etc., with special plans, detailed instructions and necessary tools.

Send for free furnace book.
THE JAHANT HEATING CO.
35 Mill Street Akron, Ohio

BUY YOUR FURNACE $10 DOWN $10 A MONTH

Boss Oven

The Oven with the Window

Pays for itself in bakings saved

Put the Boss Oven on top of your oil, gasoline or gas stove. Put in your biscuits, bread, roasts, and watch them through the glass without opening the door—without even stooping. You can't realize how convenient the Boss Oven is until you use it.

The baking is never chilled or jarred. There is no more burning or "falling." The glass is guaranteed not to break from heat or to steam up. Be sure you see the name "Boss" on the front. 260,000 now in use.

Write today for free Boss Catalog and Recipe Book, which shows all the new styles and gives 16 pages of new recipes. Address
The Herschell Co., 2400 Straight Street, Cincinnati.

For sale by all good dealers

Write for free Recipe book

CORNS

Risky to cut corns—may cause blood poisoning. Makes them grow faster, too. A-Corn Salve takes them out by the roots. 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.
GIANT CHEMICAL CO., Philadelphia.

The Boys' Magazine

is unquestionably the finest magazine in the world for boys. Each issue is filled with clean, fascinating stories and instructive articles, all of intense interest to every live boy. Also, each issue contains departments devoted to the Boy Scouts of America, Electricity, Mechanics, Photography, Carpentry, Stamps and Coins. A big Athletic Department edited by

WALTER CAMP

is a regular feature. This department is of great value to every boy who wishes to excel in athletic sports.

A new handsome cover in colors each month. Beautifully illustrated throughout.

Special Offer: For only 50c. we will send you THE BOYS' MAGAZINE for six months and a copy of the most practical book you ever read, "Fifty Ways for Boys to Earn Money," and this splendid baseball fielder's glove. This glove is made of finest tan leather, felt padded and Leather Lined, web thumb and deep pocket.

Your money will be promptly refunded if you are not more than pleased with your investment. Address:

The Scott F. Redfield Co.
869 Main St., Smethport, Pa.

(The Boys' Magazine at all news-stands, 10 cents a copy.)

GOOD NIGHT'S SLEEP

No Medicine so Beneficial to Brain and Nerves.

Lying awake nights makes it hard to keep awake and do things in day time. To take "tonics and stimulants" under such circumstances is like setting the house on fire to see if you can put it out.

The right kind of food promotes refreshing sleep at night and a wide awake individual during the day.

A lady changed from her old way of eating, to Grape-Nuts, and says:

"For about three years I had been a great sufferer from indigestion. After trying several kinds of medicine, the doctor would ask me to drop off potatoes, then meat, and so on, but in a few days that craving, gnawing feeling would start up, and I would vomit everything I ate and drank.

"When I started on Grape-Nuts, vomiting stopped, and the bloated feeling which was so distressing disappeared entirely.

"My mother was very much bothered with diarrhea before commencing the Grape-Nuts, because her stomach was so weak she could not digest her food. Since using Grape-Nuts food she is well, and says she don't think she could do without it.

"It is a great brain restorer and nerve builder, for I can sleep as sound and undisturbed after a supper of Grape-Nuts as in the old days when I could not realize what they meant by a "bad stomach." There is no medicine so beneficial to nerves and brain as a good night's sleep, such as you can enjoy after eating Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

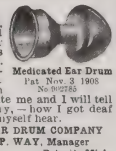
Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

I Was Deaf 25 Years

I CAN NOW HEAR

with these soft, pliable, artificial ear drums. I wear them in my ears night and day. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them in my ears. Write me and I will tell you the true story,—how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.



Medicated Ear Drum
Pat. Nov. 3 1908
No. 905783

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
G. P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

Feet Hurt?

Is it worth while to have comfortable feet? To forget stinging, throbbing aches? You can remove shoe troubles forever with

The FAMILY SHOE STRETCHER
For Men and Women.

The Greatest Device of the age for the feet. Prevents hard corns, bunions and tender spots without medicines or messy applications. Makes your shoes fit perfectly. Produces absolute ease and comfort. Last forever. Endorsed by physicians. Send for full particulars with list of the best things for foot comfort Free. The Pedicure Co., Dept. VT, Buffalo, N.Y.

TYPEWRITERS
FACTORY REBUILT

Save $25 to $50 on manufacturers' prices. Buy our Factory Rebuilt Typewriters. Nearest-to-new on the market. Have trademark and guarantee like new machines. Are thoroughly rebuilt, highly polished, and perfect in appearance. Satisfaction guaranteed. We are the largest rebuilt typewriter concern in the world. Branch stores in leading cities. Write for catalog of standard makes.
American Writing Machine Co., Inc., 345 Broadway, N.Y.

The Patient's Recovery

may depend upon an accurate record of his temperature. Help the doctor work—keep a "Tycos" Fever Thermometer in the house. A separate one for every member of the family—that's the sanitary way. If your druggist hasn't it, send us $1.50 for a 1-minute "Tycos" Fever Thermometer.

TAYLOR INSTRUMENT COMPANIES
606 West Avenue Rochester, N. Y.
"Where Tycos Thermometers Come From."

AMAZING PROFITS

IN MUSHROOMS. Anybody can add $5 to $10 per week to their income, in spare time, entire year growing mushrooms in cellars, sheds, barns, boxes, etc. I tell you where to sell at highest prices. Free Illustrated Instruction Booklet.
HIRAM BARTON, 326 W. 48th St., New York

Typewriters Slightly used machines $10.00 up. Ten Days' FREE TRIAL. Express prepaid. Price List Free.
FRANK C PAYNE CO., Rosedale Station, Kansas City, Kan

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

will these immigrants, mostly Roman Catholics, mostly in sympathy with the holiday Sunday and the saloon, become the leaven, and Americans the loaf? Will they be Americanized or we foreignized?

We do not forget that the seed of Americanism itself is that original immigration for which, it has been truly said, "God sifted three continents." It would be absurd for any one to expect that European immigration to-day, when the voyage is cheap and pleasurable, would average as high in quality as when it required a long and dangerous voyage to reach this country, where the forest and the savage were to be encountered, so that few except the strong-hearted came—many of them seeking chiefly "freedom to worship God." To-day it is but truth to say that many immigrants come for "freedom to serve the devil," though there is a strong minority of solid worth. As patriots and as Christians we need to consider chiefly, first and most of all, how we can leaven those who are already in this country with Christian and patriotic sentiments—not only the new immigrants but those native Americans who are both un-American and un-Christian. Second, we should consider whether, if foreigners are coming faster than we can assimilate them—so fast that they are endangering the very institutions that have made this country an attractive place to emigrate to; is it not the kindest thing to do, for the world's sake as well as our own, to prevent the dough from coming any faster than we can furnish the needed leaven?

Whatever we may do as citizens to check the flood of immigration, we must as Christians awake to greater home missionary and city missionary efforts to leaven those already here, not only to save them but to save ourselves.

The most effective agencies are the public schools and the Sunday schools, for all children of foreigners are ambitious to be true Americans at least, and we must aim to make them true Christians also, and use them as the lad with the loaves (John 6) and Naaman's little maid (II. Kings 5) to carry spiritual food and healing to their own people. Why not organize the Sunday schools, especially the men's classes, for a door-to-door distribution of illustrated leaflets about Sunday rest and other appropriate subjects on Sunday afternoons or week-day twilight hours, when families are sitting on their porches with leisure to read whatever may interest them? This would open the way to alert minds in many cases for personal evangelism.

As Catholics are accused of making religion too much a mere going to mass, Protestants in many cases are making religion too exclusively a matter of meetings, which to-day reach not more than half the population. The literature distribution should start a new harvest of hand-picked fruit, and while native Americans need it, it is especially desirable that new immigrants shall receive timely messages in their own tongue by word and printed page at their own doors.

"Stepping Heavenward" Individually

There is a personal message in these parables of Christian growth, which is compared to leaven in its hidden work in the soul; to the mustard tree in its outward progress.

These parables of growth are especially adapted to teach us patience with ourselves when we are growing sincerely though slowly toward the likeness of Christ. The doctrine of "instantaneous conversion" has often been misunderstood, as if conversion took the place of growth, education, development of character. Conversion is only the act of putting the leaven into our "three measures," body, soul and spirit, and we are to pray and work and wait "till it is all leavened." Conversion is but planting the divine seed in the heart, which even in the boy Jesus grew daily stronger, physically, mentally, spiritually. The error of those who expect to develop Christian character without conversion, by mere education and improved environment, is like that of one who should expect to raise a loaf by putting it in a warm place while forgetting to put in the yeast; or one who should expect to raise mustard by plowing the ground, removing the weeds, building the fences, while forgetting to put in the seed.

When we have started well and done our best, we shall still find human nature is not transformed into the divine nature in a day or a week. How many times those who seemed perfect saints in the church have discovered to themselves and others unexpected meanness when a fancied slight or a church quarrel or a chance for profit or promotion has upset "the even tenor of their way"! Mrs. Prentiss's story, Stepping Heavenward, shows in a lifelike way how one who is faced heavenward often stumbles along rather than walking or running or mounting up on wings as eagles. If only the purpose is sincere let us be patient with ourselves and others, remembering the deep encouragement in God's record of the first Christian church, as given in the Revision, "There were added to the church daily such as were being saved." They were "being" leavened and were received into the church to help the leavening along by vows and sacraments and instruction and good company, till body, soul and spirit should be "all leavened."

IN A MISSISSIPPI HOUSEHOLD

I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twenty years or more, and I feel now that it has become necessary to my happiness. I can truthfully say, I have learned more of God's holy Word from its columns than from the Bible itself. THE MAIL-BAG explains so many things an ordinary Bible reader would never understand if left to his own interpretation. The household looks forward to its coming each week with pleasant expectations. Your paper has done a world of good in many ways. Long may it survive. JOHN KENNY.
Selma, Miss.

MENNEN'S

Borated Talcum
FOR MINE

For Prickly Heat and Sunburn
Relieves all Skin Irritations

Sample Box for 4c stamp

GERHARD MENNEN CO.
Newark, N. J.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. "How?" Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

made low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia

Shoo-Fly THE ANIMALS FRIEND

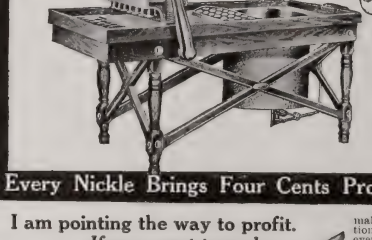
Keeps flies and other insect pests of animals—in barn or pasture—longer than any imitation. Used and endorsed since 1885 by leading dairymen and farmers.

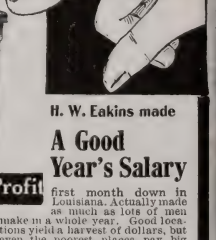
$1 worth saves $20.00 in milk and flesh on each cow in a single season. Heals sores, stops itching and prevents infection. Nothing better for galls. Kills lice and mites in poultry houses.

SEND $1, if your dealer can't supply you, for 200 cows, and our 3-tube gravity sprayer without extra charge. Money back if not satisfactory. Write for booklet, FREE. Special terms to agents.

Shoo-Fly Mfg. Co., Dept. 34, 1310 N. 10th St., Phila.

This Machine Makes Men Money





Every Nickle Brings Four Cents Profit

H. W. Eakins made A Good Year's Salary

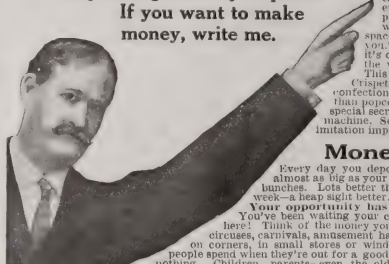
first month down in Louisiana. Actually made as much as lots of men make in a whole year. Good locations yield a harvest of dollars, but even the poorest places pay big profits. You can make money anywhere you can get 8 square feet of space. How much you make is up to you. The money is in the machine—it's one of the biggest money makers the world has ever seen—absolutely. This machine makes delicious popcorn Crispettes—the new delicious appetizing confection. Everybody likes them. Better than popcorn balls or cracker jack. Made by special secret process known only to users of machine. Sets competition crazy. Successful imitation impossible.

I am pointing the way to profit. If you want to make money, write me.



Money in Bunches

Every day you deposit a bag of money in the bank, almost as big as your head—nickels—dimes—quarters in bunches. Lots better than drawing $10—$15—$20 or $25 a week—a heap sight better.

Your opportunity has arrived—Don't let it get away. You've been waiting your chance to make a "clean up." It's here! Think of the money you can make at resorts, parks, fairs, circuses, carnivals, amusement halls, in corridors or picture shows, on corners, in small stores or windows, etc. Think how liberally people spend when they're out for a good time. A nickel for Crispettes is nothing. Children, parents—even the old folks like Crispettes. You can make them at home if you wish, then job them to confectioners, grocers, depot stands, etc. Field is big—profits immense. Each nickel shows almost four cents profits. Machine simple—easy to operate. Full directions with each machine. Remember—many a fortune was made in 5 cent pieces. Crispettes sell for 5 cents. Get the big, easy money. Anyhow, write me for particulars. Look over the proposition—see what there is in it for you.

Address W. Z. LONG, 582 High Street, Springfield, Ohio

Happy Cozy Corner Days

You Can Build This Canoe

ANY boy of average intelligence can build this canvas canoe, and the boy who builds a boat and paints, names, and navigates it himself is far and away ahead of the boy who doesn't.

The very first requisite of a boat ny kind is safety; never venture to t to luck; be sure your boat will sink, then go ahead.

efore you begin operations gather ther a saw, a chisel, a hammer, a let and a screw-driver, then oth a board three and a quarter es thick, two inches wide by ve feet for the keel, two half-inch os one and a quarter inches wide hirteen and a half feet for side os, eighteen barrel hoops, a large e of heavy canvas, some galvan- nails, brass screws, large carpet s and two elm or ash boards two es thick and fifteen inches n for the stem and stern s.

ow you are ready to begin k on your canoe, which, if are careful and do not der, will almost build lf. Cut out the stem and stern s (see Fig. 1) and mortise them position on the keel. Be sure to out the rabbet in both pieces ex- y deep enough to allow the side p to lie flush when it is bent around "mold." The mold is a flat rough board about thirty inches long by en inches wide to be fitted in tem- arily like a crosswise partition in the boat to mold the framework over. Now nail the barrel hoops eight inches apart along the upper side of the keel, which will be the inside of the canoe, and fasten the mold in place in the middle, nailing it lightly to the keel.

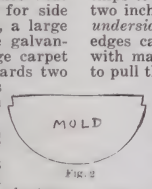


Fig. 2

Fasten the two side strips to the post at one end, and bend them past the mold to the part at the opposite end of the keel and fasten them permanently into place. Now nail the barrel staves firmly to the inside surfaces of the side boards. Always bore holes with your gimlet before putting in the screws. Clinch all nails and bore holes before driving them in.

You have only to take the dimensions of the framework of your boat now and tack on the canvas. Measure it carefully, allowing three inches all around for turning in. Begin amidships to tack it on and drive the tacks two inches apart and along the inside underside of the side strips, turning the edges carefully and tacking it firmly with many tacks. Always be careful to pull the canvas very tight. Set in a three-inch board for the floor, nail in a couple of cross-pieces against which to lean as you paddle, and before you start out for even a trial trip fasten down the lids of four or five empty cigar boxes, cover with canvas and a coat of paint to make them watertight; fasten them in the stem and stern in a fifteen-inch space decked over with canvas, where they will serve as perfect airtight chambers and render the boat practically unsinkable. One coat of linseed oil, two coats of paint and a safety rope securely fastened in shallow loops around the canoe just in case of an upset, and your home-made boat is ready to name and launch.

Next week we will tell boys and girls some nice ways to make pin-money.

Best Maple Fudge

USE one cupful of maple sugar, two cupfuls of light brown sugar and add one-half pint of thickest cream. Cook about five minutes, or until a soft ball can be made of the mixture when dropped into cold water. Remove the candy from the fire and beat it until it begins to thicken, then add about a cupful of walnut meats, broken, not chopped, and before turning it into the buttered tins to cool and "set," stir in a dozen or more quartered marshmallows.

Special July Prize Contest

TO ENCOURAGE our boys and girls to observe and identify birds and wild animals, we offer this month a first prize of a gunmetal watch and three prizes of one dollar each for the best out-of-door photograph, any size, mounted or unmounted, of a wild animal or bird taken in its natural surroundings.

There will be best prize books and beautiful pictures as supplementary prizes in the competition, and the prize-winning photographs will be promptly published in the Cozy Corner.

Put your name, age, and address clearly on all work, and send it in before the 21st of July.

GOOD-NIGHT VERSE

As for God, his way is perfect: he is a shield unto all them that trust him. . . . And thy gentleness hath made me great. Ps. 18.

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

ailored Wash Suits

For Girls and Boys

Ford's Suits wash and ar. Generous—easy fit- and finely made—give ividuality. Dutch mpers—Play Suits, Rus- n and Afternoon Suits of acter, made in light, airy, tary workrooms. Large selec- of materials.

Remarkably well made Romp- in Gingham at 60c to better and distinctive suits of finer material at $5.00.

They are not sold by stores— sold direct to you—delivered FREE to all parts of the world.

Free Catalog illustrates the many clever styles—select in the comfort of your home—solve the problem of having your child comfortably, distinctively and economically dressed.

Send Postal for Free Catalog Today.

RD & ALLEN, Inc., 184 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

ow Factory Price On Empire Fence

ld direct to you. The fence that has stood e hardest test of service on some of the ggest farms in the country.

e Empire is made of

ALL BIG WIRES

Basic Open Hearth Steel with special Stay Tie—the strongest made. Heavily galvanized against rust.

Write for Free Book

full of profit-making facts for you. A postal brings it. Also free sample and direct-from-factory prices. Write

BOND STEEL POST CO. 52 Mannee St., Adrian, Mich.

Cornish Sent To You For A Year's Free Trial

Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

More than 250,000 people have saved from $25 to $125 in purchasing a high grade organ or piano by the Cornish Plan,—why shouldn't you? Here Is Our Offer. You select any of the latest, choicest Cornish styles of instruments,—we place it in your home for a year's free use before you need make up your mind to keep it. If it is not sweeter and richer in tone and better made than any you can buy at one-third more than we ask you, send it back at our expense.

You Choose Your Own Terms

Take Three Years to Pay If Needed. The Cornish Plan, in brief, makes the maker prove his instrument and saves you one-third what other manufacturers of high grade instruments must charge you because they protect their dealers.

Let Us Send to You Free the New Cornish Book

It is the most beautiful piano or organ catalog ever published. It shows our latest styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other high grade organ or piano anywhere on earth as low as the Cornish. You should have this beautiful book before buying any piano or organ anywhere. Write for it today and please mention this paper. Cornish Co., Washington, N. J. Established Over 50 Years do not come from wealth or large income. They come from having the home evenly, cleanly and economically heated. The proper kind of a furnace costs less than stoves or grates.

Home Comforts and Home Delights

XXth Century Furnaces

are used and praised universally by many thousand home owners everywhere—in every climate. They are made right, and have the only sensible and Economic Fire Pot ever made. They burn all kinds of fuel—even cheap grades of soft coal, slack, etc., with perfect combustion and yield one-third more heat at one-third less cost than any other Furnace made.

The Cheapest Heat for Any Home—Country or City

and yet clean, healthful. No work, no repairs; sanitary, ideal. Write us, giving a sketch or plan of your house, indicating the number of rooms to be heated, and let us tell you how you can get a XXth Century Furnace, and try it on our Common-Sense Guarantee Plan. Ask for our little booklet on the Homes, No. 30.

The XXth Century Heating & Ventilating Co.
AKRON, OHIO

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
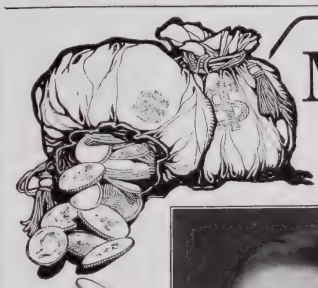
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

PATENT ABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted; prizes, etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities; RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.



MONEY FOR A Boy's Vacation

CAREY GOTTSCHALK
Our Wideawake Boy from Pennsylvania

This boy is earning Vacation Money as well as Prizes.

Carey writes:

"I received the watch and it is a little beauty. It works well. I received the roller skates and they are fine. Thank you for the watch and roller skates.

Yours truly,
W. Carey Gottschalk."

YOU can earn Vacation Money as easily as Carey Gottschalk. Any boy who would like to try should fill out this coupon and mail it.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a Free start in business and tell me all about how I may earn Vacation Money if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

Mrs. F. E. E., Walter Valley, Ky. What (in miles) is the probable distance traveled by Joseph and Mary in their flight into Egypt? (Matt. 2: 13.)

Egypt was not far off. It was then a Roman province, independent of Herod, and it had many Jewish residents and was a safe refuge. There were caravan routes accessible, and from Bethlehem to the boundary was probably something between 100 and 125 miles.

G. L. A., San Pablo, P. I. Our government stands pledged to help the Filipinos to reach the point in political and social development where they will be capable of self-government. This we are trying to accomplish, although it may be a work of years. The duty of the American churches has not necessarily anything to do with the independence of the Filipinos. They are endeavoring to Christianize the natives who, under the long continued influence of Romanism, had remained in ignorance and semi-heathenism. It is probable that when the country is ripe for independence, the people will take a tolerant and enlightened view of the religious situation and choose for themselves the church and form of religion which appeals to them as being most conducive to their spiritual and material progress. Knowing how they fared under Romanism, they will be able to contrast the result of its teachings, social and spiritual, with those of the evangelical Protestant churches, which have always contributed to the advancement of any country in which they have found a foothold.

Reader, Parsons, Pa. In case one or both the witnesses to a will are dead, would that affect the validity of the will?

No, the death of one or both witnesses does not affect the validity of a will.

B. W., Pittsburg, Pa. How do the big ocean-going vessels of our day compare with the dimensions of the Ark?

Some modern vessels are a good deal larger. Commodore W. H. Beehler, U.S.N., retired, in an article in the Century discusses this subject. The Great Eastern was the first wooden vessel which exceeded the dimensions of the Ark, but she proved to be architecturally weak. The Ark, counting a cubit at 21 inches, was about 525 feet long, 87½ feet wide and 52½ deep. The Great Eastern was 680 feet long, 83 beam and 58 deep. A number of the larger modern ocean-going craft greatly exceed these measurements.

H. B. J., Anamosa, Ia. Do you think it possible for one to enjoy himself in heaven when he knows that some of his friends and relatives are in torment?

This question has often been asked and gives rise to painful suggestions. Some of the old Calvinistic leaders stoutly held to the affirmative; but if the angels rejoice over the repentance and reclamation of a single sinner, we may assume that the redeemed could not regard wholly unmoved the loss of those they held dear while on earth. Paul wrote of the "cloud of witnesses" who watch from above the spiritual battle on earth, and John tells of the plaint of the souls under the altar (Rev. 6: 9) as indicative of the solicitude of those who have gone before for those that remain. Besides, there is the parable of Dives and Lazarus. But the heavenly inhabitant will not know sorrow, as we know it. We have this assurance that there will be neither sorrow nor sighing, and that all tears will be wiped away.

F. R. C., Charlotte, N. C. In Luke 2: 40 we read "the grace of God was upon Him" and in Luke 2: 52 "and in favor with God and man." How can it be that Jesus at this or other times, any more so than at other periods of his life, was "in favor with God"? At what age or time did he have a full recognition of his divinity? Would it be reasonable to assume that Jesus did the same kind of teaching, healing, preaching, etc., previous to the descent of the Holy Spirit?

The passage in Luke simply records the development of the boy Jesus; his intellectual growth kept pace with his bodily; his mind was "filled with wisdom" and constantly increasing in capacity to receive it. His whole temper, disposition and actions were so markedly different from those of other youths of his age that "the grace of God"—the special favor of the Almighty—was manifestly and increasingly resting upon him. Indeed, in a sense, his whole life up to his baptism by John, was a gradual unfolding or development of mental and spiritual power and grace. That his was a nature divinely nourished and reinforced is made evident by many circumstances. Even the few incidents of his childhood that are recorded by the evangelists are marked by the assertion of divine power (see Luke, 2d chapter). It cannot be said, therefore, that he did not have a definite recognition of his divinity even in those early years, for he "spoke with authority," with a sense of power and perception that was utterly beyond human explanation. That his youthful years were marked by many wonderful developments is doubtless true, but Mary "kept these things in her heart." See also the significant passage in John 2: 5, which gives a hint that his parents had had earlier experiences of his miraculous powers. Though these are not recorded in the Gospels, there are many traditions preserved concerning them.

Reader. Is there anything known in modern times of Dodona, the ancient Grecian city which was famous for being the site of a heathen oracle?

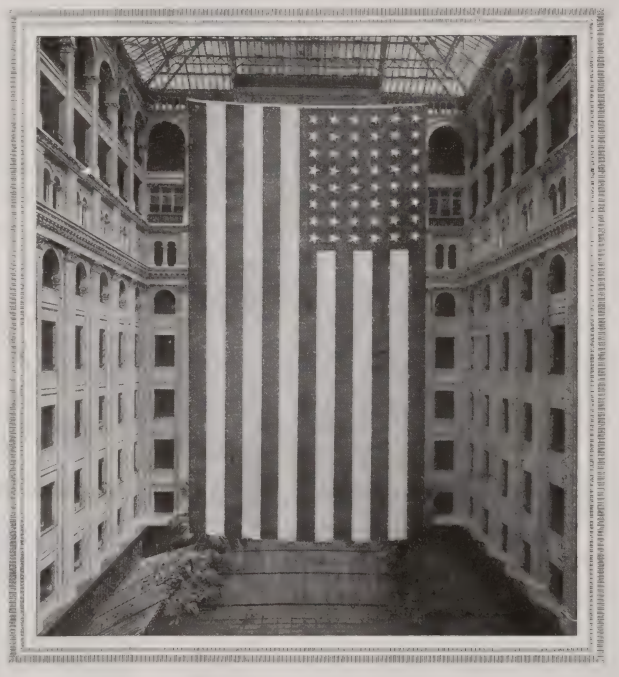
Dodona was a name given to the most famous oracle in Greece, which held sway in Epirus. It was dedicated to Zeus and its priests were called Selli. The oracle gave its answers to inquiries from great trees. The god's will was expressed by the sound of rushing wind through the branches and the clanging of metal vessels which hung by chains from the limbs of the trees. There was a temple of Dodona at the foot of Mount Tomarus, which was destroyed in 219 B.C. Its ruins were excavated by Carapanos in 1875-1878. There was no city called Dodona—only a village.

We wish to correct two errors occurring in OUR MAIL-BAG of June 12, in answer to questions from B. L., New Salem, Ind. Jesus was forty days old when presented at the temple. And his circumcision, in all probability, took place at Bethlehem, this, of course, eight days after his birth, according to the law of Moses, and as clearly stated in Luke 2: 21. The inference of Luke 2: 22 is that this was their first visit to Jerusalem, and the reference to the Mosaic ceremony of purification fixes the presentation in the temple at forty days after the birth of Jesus. The visit of the Magi and the flight into Egypt must have occurred after the return from Jerusalem to Bethlehem.

K. B. W., Fort Lincoln, Neb. Will you please state if you do not think the world should cease honoring the ancient heathen deity Janus, after whom the first month is called?

Not only the first month, but the third and fifth as well, are named after pagan deities, March for Mars, and May from Maia. All the days of the week except Sunday and Monday are also named for heathen deities. It would have been a happy thing if the days and months could have been given names with Christian significance or at least been kept free of references to pagan worship. But those gods now are forgotten, except as historic and literary curiosities. No one thinks of their having reality or power. Christians and non-Christians alike agree now with Paul: "An idol is nothing." So it is hard to see that any harm can possibly come from continuing the use of the ancient names whose meaning is either never thought of or only thought of with contemptuous pity for the superstitions of other days.

M. McK., California. 1. A real Christian is not afraid to show his colors. He will associate with God's people, and will not miss the privilege of worship in his sanctuary; nor will he omit to confess Christ as Saviour before men. One may be a Christian and omit these things, but he would be a very rare exception and would miss much joy and blessing besides. 2. The acceptability of the saloonkeeper's money has been much discussed. Not long ago, it was a subject of consideration in a very extensive circle, and it was decided that such gifts to God's treasury, being possibly gifts of re science and repentance for sin, might be cepted and devoted to charity. Your last qu tion is a controversial one and cannot be sol by any discussion in THE MAIL-BAG. We app ciate your good wishes.



The Largest Flag in the World

THIS flag, seventy feet long, is the largest American flag yet made, and is said to be the largest flag in the world. It was unfurled, with appropriate ceremonies, in the center of the court of the United States Post Office Building at Washington, D. C., on Flag Day, June 14.

R. W. S., Sandusky, O. Can you give me t poem in which the following lines occ and who was the author?

"Never yet was a springtime
When the buds forgot to blow."

The poem was written by the late M Sangster, and is here given in full:

Never yet was a springtime,
Late though lingered the snow,
That the sap stirred not at the whisper
Of the south wind sweet and low;
Never yet was a springtime
When the buds forgot to blow.

Ever the wings of the summer
Are folded under the mold;
Life that has known no dying
Is Love's, to have and to hold,
Till sudden the burgeoning Easter!
The song, the green and the gold!

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under t notice, a subscription blank and notice of piration for our subscribers whose CHRIST HERALD subscriptions expired at any time d ing the past month. If your copy has subscription blank attached, please use it renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR NEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THR WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION THE BLANK.

When renewing, indicate on the blank w your remittance whether you are subscrib for any of our premium books, Women of Bible, $2; Samantha at Coney Island, $2; Mother, $2, with your subscription, or a strai year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OW RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCR TION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEW AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR It is understood that the old subscriber must the full subscription price of $1.50 from new subscriber and must not in any way sh the special price with the new subscriber.

Send money by postal or express mon orders. Address,

CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York

Miscellaneous

Any reader of this journal knowing of t whereabouts of Thomas McAchaney (last hea from in British Columbia) will confer a fav by communicating with his sister, Mrs. Kat Murray, at Enterprise, Ore.

Subscriber, Newell, N. C. The statement th a larger percentage of preachers than of chur members make shipwreck of life is an old a familiar libel, utterly unfounded and long a exploded. There is a certain class of peop who, when they have exhausted legitimate arg ment, resort to fabrication, and this is a proof of that class. You may depend upon it that t person who repeats such a slander is utter ignorant of the facts and statistics.

G. M. T., Edgewater, Col. You have asked question which many others are asking at th time. The churches need a new enduement the spirit of the old apostles and evangelist with power to move the hearts of the multitudes. There are many churches in which t Gospel is preached with power and earnestne but there are others in which a dry and le potent formalism has usurped the place of t living Word.

S. J. A., Cottonwood, Minn. Paul's attitud toward marriage has been voluminously di cussed and is a puzzle to many people. H seems to tolerate it, although he does not ap prove of it, and he tells his friends that h would rather see them as he himself was (s I. Cor. 7: 7), implying that he had remaine single that he might devote his time and en ergies exclusively to the work of the Gospe It is not known that he was ever married; in deed, all the evidence points to a contrary con clusion. Why he should have advised as he di if he meant the advice to be taken generally, i a mystery. The probability is, however, that h designed such advice for a limited proportion o his hearers, probably those who were in train ing to serve as preachers or teachers. Cer tainly, he could not have meant it for genera application.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

Raise Alfalfa

MANY city men now own nearby acreage which they cultivate. The staggering price of a ton of hay, this winter, $34, has caused many a saddle horse, children's pony and private coach team to be sold. Why do not "country gentlemen" raise alfalfa? They can do it just as well as not. Just now is the time for its spring sowing. It can also be sowed in August and early September. A good stand of alfalfa will last for years. It is, beyond all question, the best food for horses and cows now known.

A farmer or other land-owner can cut and feed, by the wheelbarrow load, alfalfa to his winter-worn horses as early as the middle of May. The animals will turn away from their oats to eat it every time. The ration of oats can be safely reduced one-half. The effect of the fodder is promptly visible in hair shedding and early smoothness of the new coat. It is a flesh builder. It calms the nervous system; fretful horses, overstimulated by a winter of oats till they are weary and irascible, at once show their old-time good nature.—New York Evening Mail.

. . .

Greed of the War Demon

THERE is no end to the greed of the war demon in times of peace. The German Reichstag has been driven to provide for the addition of a new naval squadron for which three battleships and two cruisers are to be built before 1920 at a cost of from $24,250,000 to $31,750,000 yearly, with a corresponding increase in the army. The Reichstag did, however, muster up courage to insist that the additional cost should be provided for by taxes on wealth, not on the poor people who are now taxed to the limit. And now Admiral Mahan tells us that we must build two battleships every year, or the Germans will break down the Monroe Doctrine. Thus Germany and Japan alternate as bugaboos.—The Independent.

. . .

A New Inquisition

IN a letter from a correspondent in Rome of the Western Churchman (a Catholic weekly of St. Louis, Mo.) the writer discusses the attitude of the papacy towards the government of Portugal, which recently expelled the Catholic religious orders from its territory. The letter says:

"As yet it is not known what attitude the Holy See will adopt toward the Republic seeing the treatment meted out to the religious of both sexes. The Italian Government has issued an order prohibiting the religious expelled from Portugal to enter Italy. Scarcely had the decree of expulsion from Portugal been known in Rome than the anti-clerical party began an agitation to prevent religious from coming to this country."

The same correspondent tells of a meeting of the Vigilance Committee which is held every month by order of the Vatican. The members are expected to report on various matters, including prohibition against reading anti-Catholic periodicals, violation of their religious oaths of office, etc. An enlightening sentence in this connection is the following: "Not only those who violate the oath, but those who refuse to take it, are to be denounced to the Holy Office." This is a species of twentieth century inquisition. The same writer tells of the formation of a Catholic Defense Society among the nations, and especially of the need of combating the Free Masons, which the Pontiff regards as "the living and organized heresy of to-day, and the advice to the faithful is to make use of everything to bring about its downfall, and to lose no occasion of crushing it."

. . .

The Pope and the Flag

IN a special cable despatch from Rome to the New York Sun, dated June 4, it is related that the Paulist choristers of St. Mary's Church of Chicago sang before the Pope in Consistorial Hall, Rome, to his great delight. The despatch continues: "He said he hoped they would continue to sing the praises of the Virgin and the Holy Trinity all their lives, as they had to-day, thus emulating the angels." The Pope was deeply moved at the work of the choir, and was gratified to hear the plain-song melodies so marvelously rendered by the Chicagonns. He said he hoped their example would be imitated throughout America. He gave a medal to each member of the choir and repeatedly blessed the choristers as a body. He had his photograph taken with them standing under the Stars and Stripes [!]

. . .

Catholics Losing Hold in Mexico

A PASTORAL letter written by the Archbishop of Morelia, in Mexico, commanding his flock to remain out of "politics" altogether at present, convinces the Catholic Universe (Cleveland) of this prelate's feeling "that neither from Madero nor from Orozco can there come any good to the church." This opinion is shared by the editor of the Universe, who sees only continued humiliation for the Catholic Church in the triumph of any of the present leaders, regrets the passing of Diaz, and hopes for the re-establishment of order and the church's consequent gain in influence and power in a permanent government under some such statesman as de la Barra. "From the hour that Diaz fell," we are reminded, "there has been constant unrest in Mexico; and there will be, until a government is established which has regard for order." And that government, this writer predicts, "will be one that will mark a return to power of Catholic influences." The only hope for the Catholic Church in Mexico, continues the Universe, lies in Francisco de la Barra, who is now representing his government at the Vatican, or in a man like him.—Literary Digest.

. . .

Official Sectarian Favoritism

PROTESTS are reaching us against the participation of the military forces of the United States, in uniform and under orders, in sectarian religious services, especially on Memorial Day. It is clear that a religious service the nature of which forbids participation by more than one religious body, and much more leadership by the ministers of any but one such religious body, is something in which the Federal authorities can take no part.—Congregationalist and Christian World.

. . .

"The Foe of Human Liberty"

THE United Presbyterian General Assembly at Seattle, in its report on reform, presented the religious situation in the nation in the following paragraph, headed "Romanism":

"That ancient foe of human liberty, the papacy, as it gains in numbers in the nation, is becoming bolder and more menacing by means of its alliance with corrupt politics and scheming politicians. With a secret military organization numbering hundreds of thousands, its priestly dictation over two million voters, its jesuitical influence over the nation's President, it demands of American Protestantism a sleepless vigilance and the most earnest, prayerful and persistent effort to give its blinded millions the true Gospel of Christ."

No More Paring on 50,000,000 Corns

Some time ago a chemist discovered how to completely end a corn.

He made a wax—the B & B wax—which forms the heart of a Blue-jay plaster.

This little plaster has since then removed fifty million corns.

It is applied in a jiffy, and the corn pain ends at once. Then the B & B wax gently loosens the corn. In 48 hours the whole corn comes out, root and all.

No soreness, no discomfort. You feel nothing at all.

People who pare corns get just a few days' relief. To get it they run the constant risk of infection.

The millions who use Blue-jay never suffer or wait. They get rid of the corn in two days.

Get Blue-jay and prove it, as they did.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

Blue-jay Corn Plasters

Sold by Druggists—15c and 25c per package

Sample Mailed Free. Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters (154)

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York, Makers of B & B Handy Package Absorbent Cotton, etc.

A ROUGH SKIN

depends upon an improperly working stomach. Gas, fermentation, acids, are neutralized for Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), which regulate digestion and so insure a rosy, clear complexion and a smooth, flawless skin. For once only, a full size 25 cent box will be sent for 10 cents in stamps, enough to prove these claims beyond the shadow of a doubt. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

We ship on approval without a cent deposit, freight prepaid. DON'T PAY A CENT if you are not satisfied after using the bicycle 10 days.

DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our latest art catalogs illustrating every kind of bicycle, and have learned our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers.

ONE CENT is all it will cost you to write a postal and everything will be sent you free postpaid by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do not wait, write it now has Ninety-three Million acres of land; present population less than four hundred thousand.

TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries at half usual prices.

Mead Cycle Co. Dept. F 71 Chicago

MONTANA

¶Scientific farming in the big "Treasure State"—in the center of the Great Prosperity Belt of the Northwest—is showing what marvelous resources have long been trodden under hoofs.

¶The Yellowstone Valley with the Tongue, Rosebud, Bighorn, Clark's Fork, Shield's Rivers and Big Timber Creek, has available for irrigation alone more than 2,000,000 acres, much of it for sale at low prices. The Huntley and Lower Yellowstone Government Reclamation projects will reclaim about 90,000 acres altogether, in this valley. The Clark's Fork of the Yellowstone is rapidly developing into a first class fruit district and the Shield's River Valley is a rich section, particularly attractive.

¶The Gallatin Valley, the "granary" of Montana, with the adjacent Madison and Jefferson Valleys, form a great grain and livestock producing area from which Europe derives food.

¶The Bitter Root Valley is famous the world over for its luscious fruit and the fertile Flathead country is a garden spot.

¶The Northern Pacific Railway has 1,431 miles of main and branch lines in Montana, to which will be added some new mileage this year.

¶OPPORTUNITIES are on every hand in Montana—not only to acquire valuable and productive farming lands, but also in the many growing cities and towns along the Northern Pacific Railway.

¶Ask for our "Opportunities" book which lists Montana's "Opportunity" points, along the Northern Pacific.

¶The Northern Pacific Railway Company has lands for sale in the various states along its lines. Printed price lists and descriptions will be furnished on application to Thomas Cooper, Land Commissioner, Northern Pacific Railway, St. Paul, Minn.

¶In the way of educational advantages, Montana has the State University at Missoula, the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, the School of Mines at Butte, with numerous educational institutions at other points.

¶Montana's increase in population in the last Census decade was 55%—and there is plenty of room for more.

¶Write today for literature and particulars about low fares for Homeseekers and Sightseers. Address

L. J. BRICKER, Gen'l Immigration Agent or A. M. CLELAND, Gen'l Pass'r Agent Northern Pacific Ry., ST. PAUL, MINN.

NORTHERN PACIFIC
YELLOWSTONE PARK LINE

Northern Pacific Railway

NOTE. Please mention title of this announcement and publication in which you saw it.

Avoid Milk Worries

How we made the quality of

CARNATION MILK

From Contented Cows

Here are just a few of the things our managers and experts think about, every day, in order to produce and keep up its superior quality:

We employ experts in every department of every Carnation Condensery. The process, though very simple, is conducted with utmost care. We take out nothing but water and we do not add anything; but every temperature and test is observed with the utmost care every day. Nothing but the purest of healthy milk could stand the severe tests it gets in the Carnation process.

We have to exercise the greatest care, that we may give to the public an article we can guarantee unconditionally as superior in quality and flavor.

First we insist upon good milk. To produce that, we must have good cows, living in a good country, feeding upon sweet grass, drinking pure waters and breathing fresh air. We locate our Condenseries where the best natural dairying conditions are to be had.

We often send buyers to other States, to buy high-grade cattle for farmers who supply our Condenseries with milk.

We pay a premium for good, rich, sweet, milk. We educate farmers how to take care of their cows and how to handle the milk, to preserve its purity.

We insist upon the farmers having the right kind of cans and coolers—we even wash the cans for the farmers, every day, sterilizing them with a powerful steam jet.

Our experts and veterinarians inspect the herds constantly, to be sure the cows are healthy and free from fever and disease.

Our Positive Guaranty to Every Housewife

We know so well that Carnation Milk will meet your every requirement that we make the following positive guaranty:

Order a 10c can of Carnation Milk from your grocer, and if you find that Carnation Milk does not please you better in every way than fresh, raw milk or any other evaporated milk or condensed milk, write us and we will cheerfully refund your money and postage.

PACIFIC COAST CONDENSED MILK CO.
SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Every morning's supply of milk is tested for richness in butter fat and in strength-building solids. The farmers are paid in proportion to the richness of the milk. They vie with each other in keeping healthy cows, rightly cared for; they know this means increased profits—and we know it means superior milk for Carnation purchasers.

Carnation Milk is nothing but pure, wholesome milk, less the water removed in evaporation. It comes to the consumer absolutely pure. Open it in your own kitchen—pure, delicious, rich. Use it for everything—in all cooking—for seasoning, shortening and for whipping. Use it in coffee, upon cereals, in custards and all desserts. Give it to the children to drink.

Bring up the baby on Carnation Milk. It contains no cane sugar—nothing but good, pure milk from contented cows, sterilized to make it safe. Ask your doctor. Take advantage of our guaranty to give Carnation Milk a trial. Count the cost and enjoy the benefit of using Carnation Milk all the time, in place of the uncertain raw kind.

Telephone or tell your grocer to send you a can, use Carnation Milk according to the brief instructions on the label, and remember our positive guaranty as shown above goes with every can. You take no risk.

We have prepared an unusual booklet, covering a large number of points of interest to everyone who prepares food. It contains recipes, suggestions for economical cooking and the story of Carnation Milk. It tells you how to make more delicious every dish in which milk is used.

Write for your copy today.

Tall can, 10 cents. Baby size, 5 cents. At your Grocer's

Carnation Milk—the Modern Milkman

"Flavor superior to all others or your money back"

PACIFIC COAST CONDENSED MILK COMPANY

General Offices, SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Fourteen condenseries in the States of Washington, Oregon, Wisconsin and Illinois

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JULY 17, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 29. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE ARTIST'S DAUGHTER

From the Painting by von Kaulbach

In the 10-Year Race for Favor
Here's the Tire That Won

In the first ten years of this 20th century came a race for supremacy in pneumatic tires.

All the leading makers were in it.

And all of us knew that the tire which won must excel all others in the test of use.

In the past three years came the verdict, in vivid, unmistakable terms.

In 1909 No-Rim-Cut tires began to be preferre In 1910 the sale doubled. In 1911 it doubl again. So far this year it has trebled over last.

Now the most popular tire that the world ev knew is the Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tire.

And now an ouput of nearly 100,000 tir monthly fails to keep pace with the call.

Voices the Verdict of Over 200,000

Over a million and a quarter of these premier tires have now gone into use.

They have been tested out on some 200,000 cars.

So the status today of No-Rim-Cut tires voices the verdict of 200,000 who have tried them out.

A verdict like that is too overwhelming for any tire user to question.

Six Times Larger Than in 1909

In the year 1909—our tenth year of tire making—we sold 105,127 Goodyear tires.

In the past twelve months our output has been 649,147 pneumatic automobile tires.

So the demand for these tires, since 1909, has more than multiplied six times over. It doubles now every few months.

These figures tell, in a vivid way, how users regard No-Rim-Cut tires.

How Goodyear Won

We brought to our factory years ago the best rubber experts we knew. And every year we've added to the corps.

To compare their ideas we built a tire testing machine. There four tires at a time are constantly worn out under all sorts of road conditions.

Every new idea in formula or fabric, material or method, was put to the mileage test. And those which won were adopted.

Thus we compared 240 formulas and fabrics. Thus we compared every factory method. Thus we compared rival tires with our own.

As the years went by, in this ceaseless selection, Goodyear tires became better and better. At the end of ten years we had come close to finality in wear-resisting tires.

Rim-Cutting Ended

During this time we brought out our patent type of tire.

This type—the No-Rim-Cut type—makes rim-cutting forever impossible.

Statistics show that 23 per cent of all ruined old-type tires are rim-cut. And rim-cut ruin cannot be repaired.

This new-type tire saves that 23 per cent.

We control by patents the only way to make a practical tire of this type. So the multiplying demand for tires that can't rim-cut has centered Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires.

10% Oversize

Then we made these tires 10 per ce over the rated size. That meant 10 p cent more air—10 per cent great carrying capacity. It saved the blo outs due to overloading.

This 10 per cent oversize, und average conditions, adds 25 per cent the tire mileage.

By these two features—No-Rim-Cu and oversize—we cut the average ti bills in two.

Profit Reduced to 8½ Per Cent

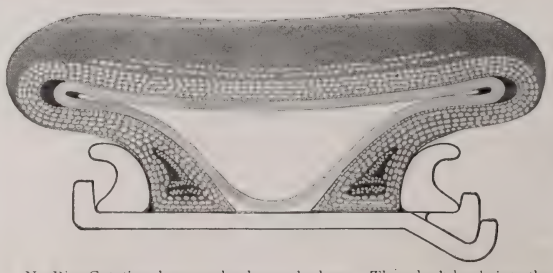
These new-type tires, made oversiz cost more to build than old-type tir of just rated size. And Goodyear the costliest quality that goes int tires.

Yet Goodyear prices have kept clos to other standard tires.

As a result, our profit last year ave aged 8½ per cent.

By giving most we have gotte most. Those are the only reasons wh No-Rim-Cut tires now dominate i Tiredom.

And those are the reasons why yo will employ them when you once fin them out.



No-Rim-Cut tires have no hooks on the base. They don't hook into the rim flange. So your removable flanges are set to curve outward when you adopt this tire. Just move them to the opposite sides.

Through the base of this tire run six flat bands of 126 braided wires. These make the tire base unstretchable, so nothing can force it off the rim. But unlock a flange and the tire slips off like any quick-detachable.

GOODYEAR
AKRON, OHIO

With or without Non-Skid Treads

No-Rim-Cut Tires—10% Oversize

Our 1912 Tire Book—based on 1 years of tire making—is filled with fact you should know. Ask us to mail i to you.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, Akron, Ohio

Branches and Agencies in 103 Principal Cities
More Service Stations Than Any Other Tire

We Make All Kinds of Rubber Tires, Tire Accessories and Repair Outfit
Main Canadian Office, Toronto, Ont.—Canadian Factory, Bowmanville, Ont.

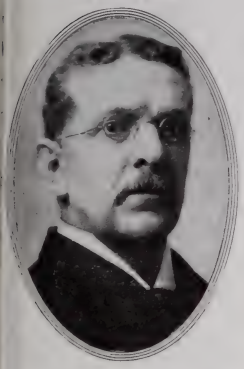
(694)

NEW YORK, JULY 17, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Bishop Luther B. Wilson
Camp Meeting Leader



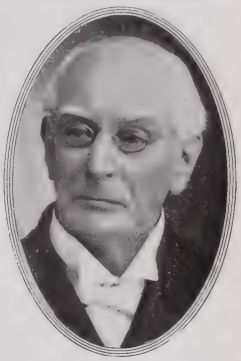
Mrs. Henry Wheeler

Miss Helen G. Rumsey

Mr. Clarence Reynolds

Dr. Henry Wheeler

Rev. A. E. Ballard, D.D.
President of Ocean Grove Ass'n



SUMMER DAYS AT OCEAN GROVE

THE season at Ocean Grove this year promises to be even more successful than any in its history. The opening Sunday, June 16, was a most encouraging harbinger of future success and blessing. The venerable Dr. A. E. Ballard, now over ninety years of age, the president of the Ocean Grove Association, was the presiding officer at these exercises. Bishop Berry of Buffalo preached the sermon, taking for his text John 6:67, "Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?" The bishop declared the perils of the church to be attacks on the personal deity of Jesus Christ, and asked the question of the congregation: "To whom will ye go for eternal life if not to Christ?" He claimed for Christ the most dominant personality in all literature, and declared the Bible to be different from all human creations because it alone speaks the language of the skies. The evening services consisted of short addresses from different speakers.

It is expected that Bishop Luther B. Wilson will again be at Ocean Grove during August and have charge of the services, especially the Camp Meeting, which begins August 23. Tali Esen Morgan is director of all the music as usual. Temple University, Philadelphia, has conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Music. The presentation was made in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, quite recently. Dr. Morgan is assisted in the singing at the Auditorium by Donald Chalmers, soloist, and a voluntary choir, also the Aida Trumpeters, four beautiful young ladies who add much as accompanists to the organ, which is in the care of Clarence Reynolds, a most able organist. He gives daily an organ concert, followed by "The Storm," which is played on the great Hope Jones organ, the largest in the world. Mr. Morgan gives the story of the storm, which is most realistic. It is night in the camp; dawn breaks; the organ sounds the reveille. The organ gradually swells to its full power, suggesting the glory of the day. More bugle calls, and the army is on the march. As the regiments pass through the city "America" is rung on the church bells. The band again plays and the sound is lost in the distance. The army is again encamped in the country, "God's Green Inn." And the glory of nature, and the greatness of God find expression in the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's "Messiah." It is afternoon, and you hear the merry-making in the camp. A storm is approaching. The bells in the church on the hillside strike five. You hear the singing in the church. The bells play:

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens, Lord, with me abide.

Then you hear the sad strains of a funeral march as one of the boys is borne to his last resting-place. The storm has been gradually drawing nearer, and soon it breaks in fury. The wind howls and moans; the rain comes down in torrents; the thunder crashes; and the lightning falls. The storm passes. You hear the old strains of the hymn:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly.

The skies are clearing. Darkness spreads over the valley. The bugle sounds "Taps" (lights out), and the soldiers' dream, "Home, Sweet Home," ends the composition. It is indescribably thrilling, and thousands come to hear it every season.

The Summer Sunday School was organized on June 23. Joseph A. Hudson of Philadelphia is superintendent of the intermediate department, which meets in the Temple. Mrs. Hudson and daughter assist him. Mrs. W. H. Skirm of Trenton has charge of the primary department, which is held in the Tabernacle. One hundred sweet rosebuds of children greet her sight as she leads them to Jesus. The singing is delightful in its freshness and purity. The Bible class meets in the Auditorium. Rev. Dr. Marshall Owen of St. Paul's Church, Ocean Grove, was the leader on June 23.

The Holiness Meeting held at nine o'clock every morning in the Tabernacle is this year in the care of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Henry Wheeler. She is "Mary Sparks Wheeler," and a celebrated writer. One of her books most highly commended by the clergy and press is called, As It Is in Heaven. She has also written The First Decade of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, with sketches of the missionaries. A pamphlet called A Temperance Bible Reading has been scattered broadcast by the thousand. Miss Marsh assists at the piano. The young people's meeting, held at the same hour in the Temple, is already well filled, though the season has scarcely begun. Mrs. Ballard Lewis is one of the soloists, with Donald Chalmers, baritone. The Aida Quartette is always present, and renders good service. Rev. Dr. C. L. Mead is the efficient leader and well qualified, as he gives the keynote, "Religion the Whole of Life." Miss Helen Gertrude Rumsey, with Dr. Ballard, and Miss Harris, soloist, Miss Bailey, pianist, are in charge of the twilight service at 6:30 o'clock P.M. It is an evangelistic service for young people. Their hymn, written by Eva Mehling, called "The Old Camp Ground," is very inspiring.

We are praying to-night on the old camp ground,
That the Spirit may draw near
To strengthen every faltering heart,
And banish every fear.

CHORUS

Many are the lives that are weary to-night,
Burdened with sin and care.
O trembling soul, draw near to God
And leave your burden there.
Praying to-night, praying to-night,
Praying on the old camp ground.

On Sunday evening Dr. Ballard leads the Beach service at six o'clock.

Rev. Dr. W. R. Wedderspoon, of Washington, D. C., pastor of Foundry Church, delivered the Fourth of July oration in the Ocean Grove Auditorium. Dr. Wedderspoon is a splendid orator, and an immense crowd was present to hear him. The Declaration of Independence was read by Hon. Charles Henderson of Red Bank, N. J.

Continued on next page

Auditorium, the "Heart of Ocean Grove"

The Wonderful Temples of Kyoto

BY MATTHIAS KLEIN

GOING to Kyoto? Oh, the brown, smoky old idols, upon whose surface the sighing breath of countless millions has been wasted!

Buddhism seems to be woven into the very warp and woof of Japanese history. At one time it had captured nearly every dwelling on these islands, appropriated every hill and conspicuous green grove, and to-day still the temples occupy the most prominent sites of towns and cities. In former days the country must have actually run mad. The gods were as easy to obtain as their worshipers, and to suspect humbug in the priest was far beyond the simple devotion of the people.

Viewing the fanatical zeal of prelate and people at festivals to-day suggests the query, "To what heights of frenzy must their enthusiasm have led them five hundred years ago, or when they dedicated their once magnificent temples and pagodas? But Kyoto in particular is the hotbed of Buddhism and the terminal of pilgrims. Here priests and priestesses, with shining scalps, are in their element. At least forty or fifty sects and sub-sects vie with each other. Here are erected images and statues of all gods, from the highest divinities down to the lowest demons. These statues are made of bronze, wood or stone, and in size from a dwarf to a colossus. Ancient traditions covered by a filmy glamour, hoary legends enshrouded in a sort of diabolical halo, all create in the worshipers, except for the supernatural power of God, an armor-plated resistance to Christianity.

A Buddhist Procession in Kyoto

That the noblest and most refined in human nature finds its highest expression in religion is as true here as in the West. As cathedrals and mosques are embellished and their coffers filled with priceless works of art and many ancient treasures, so also many of these Oriental temples are the museums of this land, and for their up-keep large sums of money have been appropriated by the government and also collected from private sources. The lover of the esthetic and the student of art and history will naturally invade the temples; the connoisseurs, though they have almost denuded the country of curios during the last fifty years, will still be repaid for a visit. The well-wisher and soul-lover also come here with a feeling of pity, and to learn of the needs of a race. True, dilapidated towers and shrines, held erect by wooden supports, are still regarded as monumental objects by the nation, where in the West they would be considered unsafe and condemned as wreckage. One such ramshackle hull in Kyoto, dedicated to the goddess of Mercy, containing 33,333 dirty-looking images, is a dark, weird and neglected abode. Along its passages a priest solicits the visitors for money to repair the place—and the necessity of a house-cleaning was, in more than one sense, in great evidence.

But temple architecture in Japan is unique and impressive; those tip-tilted turret roofs, those gigantic wooden doors swinging raspingly under the gate towers, the massive stone or wooden "torii," leading to all temples; the larger and smaller red-painted torii, the property of the fox god, at whose original shrine in Kyoto six hundred or more in two colonnades decorate the entrance; the stone-pedestaled lanterns and carved lions, dogs and foxes; the fantastically arranged furniture, the gaudy array of priests, the carving of birds, fishes and fabulous beasts; the magnificent gilt baldachin adorned with glittering pendants; the many-lighted tapers and candles and incense sticks; gigantic circular hardwood pillars, richly lacquered or gilded or else unfinished; or, again, rough hewn pillars forming immense colonnades from one structure to another, many though old and decaying still calling forth admiration because of their height and circumference.

Here one may find handsome gold "fusuma" (paper doors); costly screens; rooms containing funeral tablets of great men, princes and even emperors; countless brass lanterns, drums and bells in the belfries; prodigies in lotus and dragon fountains in the courts; cherry blossoms, wistaria arbors and autumnal maple tints, scientific landscaping amid rippling streams and plunging cataracts; tombs, monuments and mausoleums beneath the shady domes of century-old trees. Added to all this, these heights on which the temples are frequently located command a beautiful view of seacoast, mountain and valley, with their teeming millions.

However, on account of the rapid strides Japan has made toward Western civilization, to the foreigner first, then to many of the more enlightened Japanese as well, the fact that the grandeur of art and beauty of nature are so closely interwoven with ugly idols and base superstitions, stands out in bold and rather unpleasant relief.

So much for Buddhism, though the writer has by no means forgotten the great work accomplished by the Christian missions, the influence of Christianity and Western civilization; and, by the way, one more fact may as well be stated here. It is that here and there erstwhile useless temples are now transformed into schools, police stations or government offices.

SUMMER DAYS AT OCEAN GROVE

Continued from preceding page

Among the striking attractions for the present season are the W. C. T. U. Convention, July 16, Mrs. Beauchamp of Lexington, Ky., lecturer; Children's Day, July 21; Woman's Home Missionary Society, July 23-24; International Sunshine Society, Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, president, July 30; Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, August 2-3; United States Marine Band, August 5; Organists' Convention, August 5-10; Oratorio of Elijah, August 10; Children's Festival, August 17. The celebrated preachers for the season are Rev. Dr. F. W. Hannan of Brooklyn; Bishop F. J. McConnell, late president of DePauw University; Rev. Dr. O. H. Bartholow of New York, and Rev. Dr. W. R. Wedderspoon, Bishop Spreng of the Evangelistic Society; Bishop Wilson, Rev. Dr. George Peck of New York, and Rev. Dr. G. P. Eckman.

The great camp-meeting begins on August 23. This is the climax of the season's activities, and in it are to be found the true meaning and mission of Ocean Grove. It stands, as the founders of Ocean Grove stood at the beginning, for "Holiness unto the Lord." It stands for Christian unity, the evangelization of the whole world in the twentieth century, the personal work of saving men through the power of the Holy Ghost.

Visitors and residents at Ocean Grove are missing this year the inspiring presence of Dr. John H. Alday, who has died since the last encampment. At the opening service Dr. Thomas O'Hanlon referred in prayer to the loss of Dr. Alday and of a noble layman, Mr. Alexander De Haven, a devoted supporter of Ocean Grove. Dr. O'Hanlon prayed that the venerable president, Dr. Ballard, might still be spared to the church militant for many years.

The president and the Ocean Grove Association are seeking to carry out the design of the originators, "Holiness to the Lord." The gates are still shut on Sundays to vehicles of every kind, and a stillness of heaven reigns. No liquor is sold on the ground except by a physician's prescription, no moving picture shows will be given this year, and no photographs allowed to be taken on the Lord's Day. A magnificent hotel, costing one million dollars, was finished last year. It is called "The North End." A new broad plank walk has been laid this year beside the sea, where every one can walk and breathe healthful air. Wesley Lake is much improved by an esplanade with high white poles for electric lights, which make the night almost as bright as day. The North End Pavilion is now used on Sunday afternoon for a religious service at four o'clock. A high white pulpit with place for piano and orchestra has been erected for speakers and musicians. Many chairs are provided for the audience, which is large. The services consist of singing, music, and addresses. Dr. Ballard was leader until July, when Rev. Dr. C. L. Mead is in charge.

The Aida Trumpet Quartet

In August Rev. Dr. Morgan, of Newark, will be the leader. It was a singularly fortunate choice that made the New Jersey coast the site of what has proved to be the most important religious gathering in America. A few consecrated ministers and laymen were intent on finding a quiet place where they, with their families, and friends of Jesus, could worship God without the intrusion of conventional society. They had no special plans, and certainly no conception of what the future would bring forth. "Holiness to the Lord" was written upon the tents, for there were no houses in those days. God was here to work out his purpose, and a marvel of Christianity before an unbelieving world. The sandheaps were so high that to the natural eye there was nothing promising but the broad Atlantic Ocean rolling upon the shore, and the balmy sea breezes fanning the brow. With the eye of faith, these men of courage and conviction met in prayer, committing themselves and every interest into God's hands, being fully persuaded that he was able to give them their desire, a camp ground for holiness. Their horizon was limited, but God's horizon infinite and quite beyond their most sanguine expectations. The history of his wonders is written upon every inch of ground at Ocean Grove.

MARY BARTON COOKMAN.

Frightful Wreck at Corning, N. Y.

THE worst wreck in the history of the Lackawanna Railroad occurred near Corning, N. Y., on the morning of July 4. An express, which had pulled out of Elmira fifteen minutes before the accident with a fresh engineer at the throttle, after making the ten miles of straight track east of Gibson's Narrows at high speed to gain a few lost minutes, crashed into a passenger train which had been stalled by a disabled freight train ahead. Forty-one persons were either killed outright or died from their injuries within a few hours. Early accounts of the wreck attributed it to a mist which prevented Engineer Schroeder of the express from seeing the block signals and a warning flag.

MORE AVIATION TRAGEDIES

Mr. Melvin Vaniman

Mr. Vaniman's Dirigible Balloon, "Akron"

Miss Harriet Quimby

JULY 2, 1912, will be remembered in the history of aviation. On this day the world received the news that seven victims had been added to the long list of those who have given their lives in the fight to make the air a safe medium for human transportation. At sunset on July 1, Miss Harriet Quimby, the first woman in the world to receive an aviator's license, plunged to her death from the height of one thousand feet, and with her fell her passenger, Mr. W. A. P. Willard, who was manager of the Boston Aviation Meet, under the auspices of which the fatal flight had been undertaken. A few hours after this, in the early morning of July 2, Melvin Vaniman and his crew of four men fell to death off the beach at Atlantic City, after the great dirigible balloon Akron, which had been built at the cost of half a million dollars and was being tested for a trans-Atlantic trip, exploded in midair. The other victims of this second tragedy were Mr. Vaniman's younger brother, Calvin Vaniman, Walter Guest, Frederick Elmer and George Bourtillion.

Both of the tragedies were spectacular in the extreme. Miss Quimby and Mr. Willard were returning to the aviation grounds at Dorchester Bay from a flight over Boston Harbor to Boston. They were using a Blériot monoplane, and had made the journey in twenty minutes. The wind was blowing gustily, and from the height of one thousand feet Miss Quimby started to volplane to the ground. Her first angle was too sharp, and a gust of wind caught the tail of the aeroplane, throwing it to a perpendicular position. Mr. Willard was thrown first, followed instantly by Miss Quimby. The horrified spectators, looking up into the sky, saw against the red glow of the sunset the bodies falling toward the beach. They struck the water not far from shore; the tide was low and the terrific momentum carried both bodies deep into the mud beneath the water. The machine itself had been righted after being freed of its passengers, and descended gracefully into the bay.

The Atlantic City accident also was witnessed by a large crowd of sight-seers. Mr. Vaniman and his company made their ascent soon after six o'clock in the morning. After the balloon had been in the air about twenty minutes it suddenly burst into flame. After the first brilliance had subsided the great cigar-shaped gas-bag was seen to double up, forming a perfect "U." For some seconds it appeared to hang motionless. Then it crumpled and began to fall, leaving in its wake a stream of fire. As it fell the heavy under-structure was torn loose. Calvin Vaniman was seen to fall from the car. The other four men were penned in by a meshwork which had recently been placed around the cage. Following Calvin Vaniman's body the heavy car and its four passengers plunged into the water, followed by the wrecked gas-bag still in flames.

Mr. Melvin Vaniman came into prominence in the field of aviation when he accompanied Walter Wellman as engineer on his ill-fated expedition in 1907. Mr. Vaniman had built the first Antoinette aeroplane, but later came to believe that the dirigible balloon was the final answer to the problem of aviation. He built the machine whose wreck caused his death, and was soon to try to cross the Atlantic, hoping to make the first trans-ocean airship voyage. Miss Quimby, besides being the first licensed woman aviator, was also the first woman to sail through the air across the English Channel. She was a California girl, and besides the fame she had won from her flights was also known as a writer and dramatic critic. Mr. Willard was an enthusiastic promoter of aviation, and his son, Mr. C. F. Willard, was one of the first airmen trained in the Curtiss school.

BALLOTING AT BALTIMORE

NOT since 1860, when fifty-nine ballots were taken in the Democratic National Convention before a nominee was chosen, has there been such a protracted deadlock in any presidential struggle as that which took place recently at Baltimore. So evenly matched in strength were the two leading candidates, Clark and Wilson, that it seemed as though a compromise on some other nominee must inevitably result.

Balloting began on June 27 and lasted continuously until July 2, with the exception of Sunday. On the first ballot, Clark led with 440½ votes to 324 for Wilson, with Underwood, Foss, Harmon, Kern and Bryan in the field. For the first twenty-nine ballots, Clark held his lead with slight variations in the vote, Wilson receiving some accessions from other candidates, while Underwood's vote held solidly together, the others scattering. On the thirtieth ballot, Wilson took lead with 460, against 455 for Clark. After this it was a slow, arduous battle, with the Wilson strength steadily rising. On the thirty-ninth ballot he polled 501½ against 422 for Clark, 106 for Underwood, 29 for Harmon, and 28 for Foss, the remainder scattering.

The forty-second ballot, the last taken on July 1 at the night session, saw Wilson well in the lead. When the convention reassembled on July 2, there were ominous indications of the coming break. On the forty-third ballot, Illinois swung over to the Wilson column, with West Virginia following. The ballot gave Wilson 602, or within 124 of the nomination. On the forty-fourth ballot, Colorado, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Utah and Wisconsin swelled Wilson's total to 629, Clark having 306, Underwood 99, Harmon 27, Foss 27. The next ballot, the forty-fifth, gave Wilson 633 votes, Clark 306.

The battle was practically over. Every one saw that the landslide was setting towards the New Jersey candidate, and the rush of the delegations to "get on the band wagon" became fast and furious. All the warring factions of the Democracy vied with each other in being foremost to acclaim him as the candidate. When the forty-sixth ballot began, Senator J. H. Bankhead of Alabama, a grizzled veteran, took the platform, and after paying a tribute to his candidate, Underwood, withdrew him from the race and released the Alabama delegation from their pledges. Alabama's twenty-four votes were accordingly cast for Wilson amid tremendous cheering. Senator W. J. Stone, of Missouri, next came to the front for Clark, and after a brief complimentary address, announced that the Clark delegates were free to vote for whom they pleased. This was the signal for another hysterical outbreak. Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston withdrew the name of Governor Foss. Next, Congressman Fitzgerald of New York fought his way to the platform, and speaking for New York and Kings County, he moved that the nomination of Wilson be made unanimous. There were both cheers and hisses at this episode, but the roll-call proceeded. Missouri cast 36 votes for Clark. When New York was called, Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany leader, arose and announced that the 90 votes of the Empire State would be cast for Governor Wilson. This was greeted with shouts of approval.

Hon. Woodrow Wilson, Nominated at Baltimore

When Texas was called, a little girl, Mary Frances Hall, aged thirteen, the daughter of a delegate, was held up by her proud father and, in a clear, childish voice that was distinctly heard, said, "Texas casts her 40 votes for Wilson." The whole convention, delegates and audience, shouted itself hoarse. When the roll-call was finished on this final ballot, it was found that Wilson had 990 votes, Clark 84, Underwood 12. The Clark votes came from California, Florida, Louisiana, Missouri, Nevada, New Jersey and the District of Columbia.

Chairman Ollie M. James, making himself heard with difficulty in the tumult, proposed that "the convention speak as with a single tongue," and his suggestion was adopted with a shout, and Governor Wilson was made the unanimous nominee.

For vice-president there were four candidates placed in nomination. Bryan was suggested by a District of Columbia delegate, but declined, declaring that he believed he could render better service to his country in private life. The five nominees were Governor Marshall of Indiana, Governor Burke of North Dakota, Judge Chamberlain of Oregon, Elmore Hurst of Illinois, and Mayor Preston of Baltimore. The second ballot gave Governor Marshall 619½ votes as against 366 for Burke. At the conclusion of this ballot, Governor Marshall was nominated by acclamation.

RESTORING THE LOST YEARS

A SERMON

BY

Rev. Courtlandt P. Butler, D.D.*

TEXT: "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten." Joel 2: 25

OUR Scriptures lead us to look upon this world as a place from which sin has stolen much beauty and much joy. It is a world which for ages has been groaning and travailing as it waits for redemption. That He might restore to the earth its "ancient comeliness" Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea. We call him the Redeemer, the One who is to buy all things back from the power of evil. He is the Restorer of all things, whose fingers can touch and glorify that which has been marred and broken. In order to see something of what such restoration is to mean I ask you to go back with me to the prophecies of Joel. Joel had a great deal to say about restoration. In glowing language he told of the day of the Lord, when Israel was to be free from her enemies, and when in perfect freedom she was to enjoy great prosperity; when Jehovah at last was to bestow the best of all gifts, even to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, so that their sons and their daughters might prophesy, their old men see visions and their young men dream dreams; "and," said he, "whosoever shall call upon the name of Jehovah shall be saved." In the midst of his glad song of the future the prophet broke forth into this cry: "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten."

The Desolation of the Locusts

The occasion of Joel's prophecy seems to have been a visitation of locusts which had come upon the country. The descriptions of such visitations as we have them from travelers to the East would be incredible except for their many corroborations. The locusts come like an army, millions upon millions strong. While they are young, before their wings are grown, they march relentlessly across the land. Men go forth to fight them. They dig trenches and kindle fires and beat them down with clubs, but on they come, the ranks of the dead being quickly filled from the ranks of the living. They cover the ground so that it looks as though the earth were moving. For several days they pass and when they are gone little has escaped them. The land before them may be like the Garden of Eden, as Joel says, but behind them it is utter desolation. They eat every blade of grass, they devour all vegetables and leaves, they cut the tender bark from the branches and even the harder bark from the trunks of the trees. It is said that no scene gives such an impression of an infinite multitude, and that their work is almost unparalleled in the completeness of its destruction. And so in imagination we look upon the fields over which the locusts have gone; we see the bare earth where there ought to be a harvest; we think of the owner of the field and of the poverty which is likely to come upon him and upon his children; and we say, Who can ever make good to him this vast, irreparable loss? And then we listen with new interest to the Word of the Lord according to Joel, "I will restore unto you the years that the locust hath eaten."

Looking Back Over Lost Years

I suppose that we often think of God as the one who is to change our conditions, to surround us with good instead of evil, to take the locusts forever from our fields. But in this text the prophet goes farther than this: God will restore, he will give back to us the things which we have lost. Not only will he make it impossible that evil shall distress us any more, but the past shall be made up, the grain which the locusts destroyed shall overflow in our garner, and we shall find that in all things we have experienced perfect gain. And I am glad that the prophet in giving us this promise used the word he did use when he said that Jehovah would restore the years that the locust hath eaten. To the people of Joel's day this meant that in some way the loss of the year in which the locust had come would be made up to them, but I am sure that there are some of us who as we look back over our lives, or as we look at the days through which we are passing just now, feel that there is a sense in which some of the years, or part of some of the years of our lives have been consumed; they have been left bare and desolate, joyless as the fields upon which the locusts have marched; perhaps, oh, perhaps they have been left as useless as the fields upon which the locusts have marched. As we look at them it seems as though there were nothing in them to nourish our souls or the souls of others. These eaten years, who shall ever make them up to us? Are they not lost and gone forever? Ah, no; "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten." Does that mean that he will give back the years, and that they shall be clothed with beauty and filled with fruitfulness? I think that it means just that. A part of the power of Christ's resurrection is this power to give back the years which we have lost just as he gave back the lives which we had lost.

Human Helplessness

And now let us look to see what the locusts are that have been eating our years. There are some of us who have had our years marred by sickness. It has come, destroying our vitality, consuming away our opportunity of doing that work in the world which we would like to have done, and robbing us of much of life's joy. Who can fail to pity the man who is laid aside, particularly if he has the ambition to do and to enjoy? There he is, limited as to his modes of activity, cut off, it may be, from every form of activity. The world is full of the need of work; he feels that his own life is full of the need of work, but the locust is eating his years and he is helpless to prevent him. He digs his ditches and he builds his fires and he tries to beat off the intruder, but on he comes, and lo! the years are eaten. Perhaps these years are years of the past for some of you. You once were ill and now are well, but you have never caught up with the loss of the years. The locust took them right out of your life, and you have never hoped to get them back. But hope now, for he has said, "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten." Or if we are not ill; if we have not been ill; we certainly know of some one who is ill, some dear friend of ours perhaps, or some neighbor who is discouraged. Cannot we go to him with this word of the Lord, and tell him to look up and to take courage, to fix his faith upon the One who can restore the years or the months or the days of weakness and weariness and pain and loss? I am sure that already such years in a measure have been restored to some of you. I do not mean merely that the locust is gone and that your years now are the years of activity and gladness, but that God has given you back the years that are gone. They stand out before you, poor in all material things, but rich in the experience of his goodness, rich in the knowledge of his power and of his grace, and you know that you are a better man because of them. You would not have missed them for anything in the world. And you say, "Yes, truly, he hath restored to me the years that the locust hath eaten, and by this token I know that he will restore in fuller, richer measure by and by. That field, bare of its harvest, shall toss and wave like a yellow sea.

Or the locust may be Grief. Sometimes he has come leaving the more essential things of life, but stealing its earthly happiness. He has left the fruits in our garden, but has eaten the flowers, and full though life may have been in many ways, full of work and full of accomplishment, still we have longed for that which is gone; the touch of a vanished hand, or the return of old conditions, or the possession of a sense of the Lord's nearness which has been denied. Our years are not altogether a loss, but the locust has robbed them of their brightness and bereft them of their bloom. And it truly seems to us as though these are things which never can come back. But when we think thus we forget the open grave near Jerusalem; we forget the Saviour who goes on high to complete his work of redemption, of restoration; to get back from the hands of his Father the years that the locust hath eaten, that the dark losses of his people may be restored. And one of the greatest joys which the Christian can know is to stand with one who has gone out into his garden of roses, and found nothing left but the thorns, and to tell him that the roses shall be given back, that the fair flowers shall bloom again, and that he even shall be glad that the locust came in the day when his years are restored. No joy is lost, lost and forever gone, to the man of faith, to the woman who believes.

But if anything can test this promise, that thing is the years which have been destroyed by the locust called Sin. He destroys root and branch, the flower as well as the fruit. Before he comes life may be sweet and fair, filled with promise and radiant with hope. When he has passed over, death strides behind him. He eats the years away so that there is nothing left to them. Let lust feed on a man's years. See that man's body, weak and trembling, his hands unfit for work, his feet unfit for walking. Behold his mind, blind and bewildered, his soul black with famine. Let the love of the world feed upon a man's years, and strong though his body may be and active his mind, his soul has felt the locust's touch and has shriveled beneath it. Where are his opportunities to bless a sin-burdened world? Where are his hopes of life and immortality? His years have fed the locusts. Sin and selfishness have grown fat in his garden of herbs and of roses, that garden which once lay smiling in the sun. And very often as we look upon such a one we say, "He has lost that which never can be found." Now there is a sense in which the word is true. No one can repent of his sins and look back with anything but regret upon the long years in which God was forgotten, and men felt the influence of unholiness. And yet if any man has sinned and has repented of his sin, has turned away from it with grief and hatred, "with full purpose of and endeavor after new obedience," I think that he too has a right to lay claim to this promise, "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten."

The Marvel of Restoration

I remember some in whose lives the promise has found a partial fulfilment. I see a young man going forth in pride of person and nation and religion to persecute the saints of the Most High. He holds the garments of them who stone the martyr Stephen; he becomes exceedingly mad against all who believe in Stephen's Lord. He goes from city to city; he shuts men up in prison; he stands by at their trial, and when they are condemned it is found that he has given his vote against them. He is no common sinner, this young man. He dreams that he is doing God service. He is not a thief, nor a murderer in the ordinary sense of the word, nor a drunkard, nor an adulterer. He is a man who boasts of his freedom from all these sins. But he has surrendered himself to the sin of pride, and pride is a locust which eats his years, destroys his real opportunity to bless men and to honor God. But at last a light from heaven burns his pride away, and he turns in full humility to be a disciple of Christ. As you witness the ministry of St. Paul can you doubt that there is a sense in which the years that were eaten by the locust were given back to him, so that out of them—even out of them—there came power? Or, take the more modern case of John Newton, many of whose hymns we constantly sing. This is his epitaph: "John Newton, clerk, once an infidel and libertine, a servant of slaves in Africa, was, by the rich mercy of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, preserved, restored, pardoned, and appointed to preach the faith he had long labored to destroy." Are not we who sing his hymns and feel the influence of them willing to give our testimony that in this latter day some of those dark, locust-eaten years of the far past have been given to John Newton again?

The Years That Were Wasted

Or, once more look at one who but a short time ago found his way to the city whose gates are never shut. Samuel Hadley was a bad man with a bad influence. He was a drunkard and a thief. The locust had eaten his years until there was nothing left of them which was useful or beautiful. But by the grace of God there was a night when he sat in the old Water Street Mission, clothed and in his right mind, and he began that marvelous work of his which resulted in the salvation of a multitude of drunkards and crooks and women of the street. Now Paul and John Newton and Samuel H. Hadley looked back upon their wasted years with shame and regret. They were not proud of those years. That man's piety is not very deep who is proud of his past sins. The aim of every true Christian is to be like Christ, and Christ never went astray. There is no inherent advantage in having gone astray. A visitation of locusts is a pitiful thing at the best. But * Pastor First Presbyterian Church of Newton, N. J.

Continued on next page

CALL BACK

IF YOU have gone a little way ahead of me,
call back—
'Twill cheer my heart and help my feet along
the stony track;
And if, perchance, Faith's light is dim, because the oil is low,
Your call will guide my lagging course as wearily I go.

Call back, and tell me that He went with you into the storm;
Call back, and say He kept you when the forest's roots were torn;
That, when the heavens thundered and the earthquake shook the hill,
He bore you up and held you where the very air was still.

Oh, friend, call back, and tell me, for I cannot see your face;
They say it glows with triumph, and your feet
bound in the race;
But there are mists between us and my spirit eyes are dim,
And I cannot see the glory, though I long for word of Him.

But if you'll say He heard you when your prayer was but a cry,
And if you'll say He saw you through the night's sin-darkened sky—
If you have gone a little way ahead, oh, friend,
call back—
'Twill cheer my heart and help my feet along
the stony track.

—Selected.

Restoring the Lost Years

Continued from preceding page

if a man has gone astray, he may take infinite comfort out of the thought that God can give him back his wasted, lost years. I do not know when he will do it. I cannot tell what ineffaceable marks the locusts may have made upon the restored years. But I feel assured that to the man of faith there is some glorious restoration of the sin-cursed years, just as there is of the sickness-fraught and sorrow-burdened years. And if a man were dying, a man who was weak and weary through sin, a man who had seen the locusts destroying his bright years, and had not until now turned to the God of his salvation, I think I could go to him and say, Your life is not passing out in darkness; the Redeemer of your soul is the Restorer of all things; this last faint breath of yours taken in faith makes all the difference between gain and loss.

This then is a word of comfort for all who are the children of God. It is a word of vast comfort. One scarcely allows himself to dream all that the promise might mean. There is in it no comfort for him who lives without the grace of the Lord Jesus. That man cannot escape the locust. Sin eats away his years. He faces famine. Man with a lost life, would you like to have your life back? Christ can give life back. He can restore the years that the locust hath eaten.

Anvil Sparks

..IT IS always a compromise to argue with temptation.

..THE cup of joy which is not overflowing evaporates.

..THE resolutions of some folks are so soft that they can get no grip on them.

..THE sweetest music of life is not brought out by playing only the major chords.

..THE devil would be a poor trader if he paid very much for the souls that are brought to his market.

..LOVE believeth all things that are promised to it in God's word. The doubter does not love.

..NO ONE has to pay for a license to peddle gossip; he just takes it; the community pays for it, and it often costs a pretty penny, too.

..WHEN a man sins he has made a mistake. Some men make small mistakes, and some large ones. God will not overlook our mistakes, but he will forgive them.

Get the Bible Into the Boy

BY PRESIDENT WILBERT W. WHITE

Bible Teachers' Training School, New York

HAVE noticed your article on "Religious Training for Children," in the number of May 8, by Walter Koenig, of Paterson, N. J. You will be interested, it seems to me, in learning about the experience of the North Avenue Presbyterian Church Day School in Atlanta, Ga. I am acquainted with that congregation, having visited it several times, and also with this experiment, having seen it recently and had it described to me on the spot. In short it is as follows:

They have grades first to eighth, and also high school students. They began, using the Primary Department rooms in the Sunday school, three years ago. The first year they had twenty pupils, and were limited to one teacher. They cleared $150. They charged $50 apiece tuition in the grades below the high school. They had only the third and fifth grades the first year. The second year they had 53 pupils, with the grades first third, fifth and seventh. They had three teachers and a physical instructor, and cleared $250. The third year, which is the present year, they have 135 pupils. Six are in the high school at $100 apiece, and they have 129 at $50 each. They have six regular teachers, a physical director, and a French teacher. The whole school converses in French. They have paid $2,000 on a $4,000 house which they bought next to the church, in which they have put the school. They expect to pay the other $2,000 soon.

. . .

THEY have no relation whatever to city schools, except that they seek to put up as good work as or better than the city schools do. They use the same curriculum as the city schools and same text-books, because this is an experiment and they want to make it possible for the children to go back to the city schools, providing the parents are not willing they should continue with them. They are now, however, beginning to cut away from the curriculum and text-books of the city schools, because they feel that their experiment justifies the same and the parents are willing. They use different text-books to some extent and do not adhere strictly to the grading of the city schools. They are introducing more limits in the matter of the amount of work done, and are individualizing more than the city schools do. They are cutting out non-essentials, and putting in what they consider essentials. The one great essential not in the city schools is considered to be the Bible. Everything is arranged with reference to meeting the fourteen-unit plan of the Carnegie Foundation in reference to college degrees.

The management is from the Session of the Church, a committee of five men, being the board of trustees—three elders and two deacons, these five men being especially interested in the development of the school and agreed to assume the financing of the same. The outstanding distinguishing features, as stated by one of the trustees to me as we inspected the school during May, 1912, are as follows: First, symmetrical development—physical, mental, moral, spiritual and social. They have playgrounds, and the children are interested in working up with the teachers entertainments of various sorts, etc. All of this is in the atmosphere of the church, and yet most healthy and full of the spirit of the normal child. They are proceeding on the basis of the increasing of Jesus "in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

. . .

THE second characteristic is the presence of small classes. Individual attention is given to students and individual instruction is given if necessary. They are allowed to advance as rapidly as possible. The bright ones are encouraged. Sloth is avoided.

The third characteristic is Bible study. This is very prominent and is given six days in the week. Much attention is given to the memorizing of Scripture. The ease with which children memorize is taken advantage of. Every teacher is an earnest Christian, and team work is studied.

Following the conversation about the social work and the naturalness of the Bible work, my informant told me that in a camp where the boys were out together for several days, when prayer-meeting time came some one suggested that they were having prayer-meeting at home and that it would be the proper thing to have a meeting in camp. This they did, and each of the boys, from twelve to fifteen, quoted a passage of Scripture, and then they had a season of prayer. This came in a perfectly natural way.

The leaders are seeking to develop a normal Christian career, the normal Christian life in everyday affairs. There was large and very decided opposition to this move on the part of many at the start; but the leaders were not discouraged but ready for even violent opposition. Those who wanted to do the thing undertook to do it without involving expense to others, and they were permitted to do so. The way this came about was that one man was brought face to face with what his boy was not doing in the public school. He said: "I have a boy to raise, and I must get the Bible into him." He spoke especially of the capitalists, or the well-to-do men who had grown up from poverty themselves, and, through either professional or business lines, had secured a reasonably good living. Their own children are in great danger. After a while these children are to come into possession of accumulations of wealth, which their fathers never had until they had themselves earned the same. The school should train the boy particularly as well as the girl, to be qualified for such responsibility, and in order to do so must get at it early. The boys and girls are being secularized in the common schools. It is necessary to keep in touch with religious work more than once a week in a normal life.

. . .

IT IS interesting to know that both Catholics and Jews are sending their children to this Presbyterian school. They have a waiting list.

May I say that I was very much interested in the following experience: I preached in this North Avenue Presbyterian Church one Sunday morning in May, and I was told afterward that some of the children who attend this school were present. I referred to certain passages of Scripture, one portion being the first Psalm, part of which I quoted. These children remarked that they knew where some of the passages were which I quoted.

JUST COMMON THINGS

"JUST common things," with scorn you say,
And crush beneath your feet the things
God meant to brighten all your way,
The gifts that sweetest gladness brings.
You seek amid the worlds afar
For priceless treasures rich and rare,
While shining, like a fadeless star,
Lie all about you, here and there,
Rich gifts no wealth of earth could buy;
Yes, treasures sweet of price untold,
While for the lesser things you sigh,
And lightly life's true riches hold.

"Just common things!" ah, what would be
The world without their glory bright?
The beauty of the earth, the sea,
The common sun, the star's clear light?
The common dew, and mist, and rain,
The pure refreshing perfumed air,
The common flowers o'er mead and plain,
The common bird-notes flutelike clear?
The common light of love that wears
Through all things deathless, pure and sweet,
The common hopes and aims and prayers
That ever upward guide our feet?

Beyond all price are "common things";
Scorn not their beauty, strength, and grace;
Safe is the soul that ever clings
To these, whate'er its "bounds or place."

IDA L. REED.

Mrs. Sangster Remembered

Oh, Could We Know!

In Memoriam Margaret E. Sangster

OH, COULD we know what heavenly voices gladden,
Whene'er a pilgrim leaves this mortal shore,
The partings here would not so deeply sadden,
Could we but listen at that glorious door!

Could we but hear the gladness of those greetings
That meet our loved ones as they enter there,
Then would we too rejoice in those sweet meetings
And banish from our hearts the grief and care.

Oh, may we, by our hope's exalted vision,
See with our eyes of faith that heavenly band,
And joy with them in that dear land Elysian,
While yet we stay upon this earthly strand.

Stay, toil, and hearken for those gladsome voices,
That only can be heard on that blest shore;
Where life, with knowledge, peace, and love, rejoices
In God our Father's care forevermore.

M. D. TOLMAN.

Margaret E. Sangster

A Bit of Appreciation

THIS morning the telegraph has sent over all the land the news which will bring deep and lasting sorrow and regret to thousands of hearts: Margaret E. Sangster is dead. To these thousands, though they may have never seen her, she was a personal friend.

I was to-day watching a beautiful full-blown white rose swaying in the June wind between me and the brilliant blue of the sky. Instantly the thought of Mrs. Sangster came to my mind. How like they were! And how like the message of each to the world!

A rose is ever the embodiment of grace and loveliness and peace. So Mrs. Sangster's name, in connection with her writings, has ever stood for sweetness, gentleness and goodness.

The telegram did not read true. Margaret E. Sangster is not dead. Such as she cannot die. She has just gone to bloom perennial in her Father's garden.

Her memory will ever linger with us like wooing, sweet, persuasive music, or the benediction of a summer dawn. MARY E. SAWYER.

Poems Everyone Should Know

ON HIS BLINDNESS

WHEN I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent, which is death to hide,
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
To serve therewith my Maker, and present
My true account, lest he, returning, chide,
"Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"
I fondly ask. But Patience, to prevent
That murmur, soon replies: "God doth not need
Either man's work or his own gifts. Who best
Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
Is kingly. Thousands, at his bidding, speed
And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
They also serve who only stand and wait.

JOHN MILTON.

THE SHRINE OF JUGGERNAUT

BY ALBERT L. KUEGLE

The Juggernaut on the Temple Wall

WHO has not heard of the Car of Juggernaut, and pictured it on its rolling death-dealing journey in religious India, or of the almost equally famous temple, the dwelling-place of the god? This most popular of all Hindu shrines is situated in the city of Puri, three hundred miles south of Calcutta, on the Bay of Bengal. In Calcutta, early in the morning, a long train, consisting largely of third-class carriages, is made up, amid the din and clamor of many disputes, invariably incident to any purchase in the Orient. My fellow passengers, pilgrims on their way to the holy city, are buying from venders greasy sweets or tough round dough cakes indigestible to any but an Oriental stomach. These venders are invariably of high caste according to the Hindu system of social position, for no Hindu will buy food or drink from one of a lower caste than himself.

The great civilizer in India, however, as elsewhere, is the railway, which has made it necessary for the Brahman to sit next to the despised Sudra if he would travel. On all ordinary occasions, should the passengers of one compartment all be of one caste, they put their feet out of the window—for want of space—and sleep in peace and security. Should they be of different castes, however, all but the lowest, the Sudra, sit rigidly erect, guarding against defilement of their caste by a touch of their more unfortunate fellow travelers.

During the short hour's run from Kurdah Road to the sea, a glance along the train revealed no protruding feet, but every window was crowded with heads, for the passengers are watching eagerly for the first glimpse of the lofty temple of the god, where they confidently expect relief from the thousands of maladies to which they are heir, and complete absolution and sure transmigration into the form of the sacred cow, the loftiest pinnacle to which the Hindu religion aspires. As we near the sea we pass through a beautiful tropical country, where graceful, swaying palms meet over shady bayous covered with magnificent white lilies and other varieties of tropical water plants, whose blossoms perfume the clear, warm morning air. Monkeys clamber through the trees and a flash of black and a splash in the water show where alligators flee at our approach.

A few miles from our destination the character of the country suddenly changes. Nothing but sand and cactus can be seen as far as the eye can reach.

Ah, there at last over the white drifted sand is the great sugarloaf-like tower of the temple of Juggernaut, and I am sure many a Hindu heart beat quicker at the sight, for here at last was the end of a pilgrimage begun perhaps two thousand miles away and which cost the savings of a lifetime. What sweet gratification to the traveler it will be to sit awhile at the feet of the god, perhaps to sleep and dream of hoped-for existences in other forms, and in his dotage, when time has dimmed the eyes which to-day gaze hopefully upon these scenes, to sit before his humble hut in his native village and tell the wonder-stricken, open-mouthed crowd of, the most cherished event of his otherwise drab and uninteresting life.

A few minutes later we stop at a station entirely out of keeping with the size of the city, but necessary to accommodate the immense crowds of pilgrims who at all times of the year visit Puri. On one side sparkles the Bay of Bengal, splendid in the morning light and of that beautiful deep indigo blue of the tropical seas. On the other hand is the city of Juggernaut, throbbing and buzzing with excitement as it awakens to another day. An excellent road leads from the station past the bungalows of the few government officials stationed here, and the solid walls against which the sand has drifted recall the haciendas of Mexico; but here the angelus at evening never calls the faithful to prayer. Instead, the deaening din of drum and clashing cymbal fills the air with an unceasing clamor to awaken the god to the offerings of the pilgrims.

The Lion's Gate and the Monolith of the Servant

Writing Their Sins in the Sand to Be Obliterated by the Sea

We pass on to the crowded native bazaars which surround the temple. Looming large and imposing, one sees it through the narrow streets as through a crystal, clear-cut and distinct in the brilliant morning light. Distance lends enchantment to the view and softens the esthetic errors and the ravages which time has wrought. We hasten on, keeping pace with the throng of pilgrims who salaam humbly as they approach. In their simple childlike hearts must vibrate such feelings of devotion and piety as the more sophisticated dweller of the Occident can hardly appreciate. A massive wall twenty feet high soon bars our progress, none but Hindus being permitted to enter the sacred enclosure. The interior is six hundred and fifty feet square and contains about one hundred shrines and temples. No pilgrim comes empty-handed, all having some offering of rice or fruit to offer to the god, which is afterwards disposed of by the priests. Within the temple wall all castes are forgotten, the only shrine in India where this is the case, and the Sudra and Brahman eat together without defilement of caste.

Before the Lion's Gate, the principal entrance to the shrine, stands a great monolith, thirty feet high, on the top of which, facing the temple, is the seated figure of a man. This is the servant of the god, but being unworthy to be with his great master, he is kept outside, and raised so that his head comes to the level of the feet of the god inside. Around the base of the monolith ebbs and flows the tide of battle for a few coppers with which to buy a bit of fruit or rice to offer the god. My appearance was hailed with delight, a "sahib" being an unlimited supplier of bakshish, and I was soon surrounded by many nearly naked Indians of all ages and conditions, their outstretched hands like a circle of bayonets around me. My offer to finance the enterprise on condition that I be allowed to enter also was refused, the only occasion in my Oriental experiences when money failed to influence the decision. From the top of a nearby building I obtained a better view of the interior of the compound and the struggling crowd before the gates.

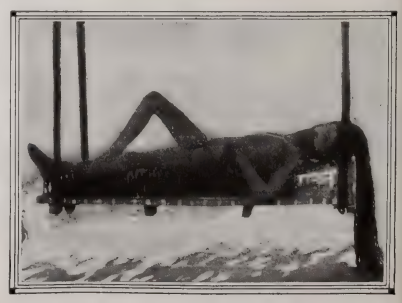
The other shrines which cluster around the central pagoda dwarf its one hundred and ninety feet of height. Carved and fluted its entire length, it stands proud and supreme in the dazzling light. From its peak the Hindu circle of life and bright colored pennants fly, giving it a holiday-like appearance. The year 1198 A.D. is said to have witnessed its completion, hence it was already three hundred years old when Columbus turned the prows of his ships westward to find a new land, unhampered by caste or creed or superstition. But still older is the idol itself, it having first come into history in 318 A.D., sixteen hundred years ago, when the Roman Empire was still flourishing and the early Britons still danced around their sacrificial fires. At one place by the walls is a great figure of Juggernaut, carved in relief, and standing eighteen feet high. An almost horrible object it is, glossy black except for its ape-like face, which is brilliant red. Devout pilgrims place fruit or rice before it, press their foreheads to its feet and pass on, confident that they have appeased this god on their long journey to the Hindu's paradise.

As I stood and watched the silent worship before this hideous object, an incident which I had never hoped to witness came to my view. I had often heard of a form of penance known as "measuring your length to Puri," but gave it little credence until here before my eyes it appeared, the most soul-and-body-racking, the severest, the most trying of all forms of religious worship I have ever seen. It consists of standing erect, stretching the arms over the head, then lying face downward in the dirt, reaching forward as far as possible with the hands and making a mark in the dust. Then rising, stepping forward to the line, and repeating the process, and in this slow, laborious and exhausting manner traveling great distances. These journeys sometimes begin as far away as Benares, five hundred miles, and continue through the blazing tropical heat or blinding monsoon storms, until the weary pilgrim reaches his destination or dies on the way. How infinitely welcome must be the first sight of the streaming pennants which float from the apex of the temple of Juggernaut after the weary pilgrimage! Surely the gods demand a heavy price for promised bliss!

Outside the walls lie remnants of this year's great car-wheels, eight feet in diameter and a foot thick, mounted on axles twenty-two feet long and fourteen inches in diameter. How different is the real story of the car from what is generally supposed! One pictures it as carved from

Continued on next page

Pilgrims Praying in the Surf at Puri



A "Holy Man" on His Bed of Trident Spikes

THE ALASKAN VOLCANO

IN a letter from Seward, Alaska, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Dr. J. H. Romig gives the following additional details of the recent eruption of Mt. Katmai, the great Alaskan volcano:

"On the 10th inst. I wired you a brief statement about the eruption of Katmai. On June 6 at about 4 P.M. an immense funnel of smoke was seen rising over Katmai Mountain, which terminated in a mushroom top and rapidly began to spread, extending with the brisk wind towards Kodiak and Afognak Islands. Terrific lightning and thunder rent the sky, and with a whirling, rolling, seething, infuriated roar, it settled down on the islands about sixty miles away, excluding from view its appalling work near the mountain. Coarse sand rained, drove and blew into everything, and came down with a thunder-like roar as of a snowslide; drifts buried fences and some houses; weak roofing collapsed from the pressure, and for seventy-two hours there was inky night.

"Members of relief parties standing twenty-five feet apart could scarcely see the next man with a lantern, as the weeping, terrified natives were rescued from the houses and taken to boats and lighters at the dock. Dust filled the eyes. Acid fumes cut the nose and breathing was difficult from the accumulation of ash in the nostrils. Frequent trips to the boats were necessary that the eyes might be washed out with some solution to cleanse the cutting pumice from the lids. Brave men struggled for the lives of the women and children, while overhead the ragged flashes of lightning rent the sky, and roaring as of a thousand cannon horrified the workers. Wild birds came screaming through the air and perched on anything they could find, entered buildings or fluttered to the ground and perished. Desperation and mere self-preservation seemed the only hold left on life, and withal an intense headache told of the presence of gases.

"When the tempest abated, red, green and yellow lights appeared shining through the depths of the ash. Drops of mist from occasional clouds would fall, withering plant life as soon as absorption could follow and, where striking on the face or the eye, causing a sharp pain. Iron rusted and copper corroded and engines in boats ran hot from the fine emery-like ash getting into the bearings or from the acid.

"On the islands sixty to eighty miles away the grass is killed; cattle and live stock perished and gardens withered. Streams are buried and will require much water to reach the surface. On the mainland and near the mountain an effort is in progress to rescue the people. The photograph I send you is of the steamship Dora as she appeared after running through the second fall of ash."

S. S. "Dora" After Her Escape from the Volcanic Ashes

The Shrine of Juggernaut

Continued from preceding page

costly wood, black with age, ornamented with gold and set with precious stones. But, in reality, a new car is built every year, in which the god journeys the two miles for a fortnight's rest at his garden or country house. Vast numbers of pilgrims grasp the ropes and the car moves slowly forward to the cheers of thousands of spectators. But the heavy wheels cut deep into the sand and it slows down and stops. Interest lags, the priests now accepting a mere touching of the ropes as sufficient service, and hired coolies complete the journey, two weeks being sometimes necessary to traverse the two miles, and an even greater time to return. The British Government now prevents the sacrifice of life under the car, which probably accounts for the decline of the festival.

At the shark-infested waters of the Indian Ocean which wash these tropic shores, and where that oddest of all sea-going craft, the grass-sewed catamaran, or surf-boat, is used, we come to the last scene of this great tragedy of Juggernaut. Men and women, young and old, in the prime of life and wrinkled and withered as seems possible only with Oriental people, with their fingers draw squares and circles and crosses on the sands of the beach to represent their sins, watch anxiously for the waves to obliterate and wash them away, and turn homeward to make room for the generations who, seeking peace and happiness at the feet of Juggernaut, will follow them blindly upon their hopeless quest.

Additional Contributions to the Louisiana Flood Fund:

Mrs. E. J. Brink	1.00
Mrs. A. R. Peach	2.00
An Old Sub'r, Seattle, Wash.	2.00
A. E. Cook	1.00
Mrs. J. N. Goozen	2.00
Mrs. M. J. Waterman	2.00
F. E. Chapman	1.00
E. Gilbert	1.00
Mrs. J. A. James	1.00
Mrs. Geo. S. Sanford	2.00
Friends, Payne's Depot, Ky.	2.00
Chas. G. Matthes	1.00
Chas. Breid	1.00
W. H. Snell	2.00
James Ferguson	2.00
Mrs. Bettie A. Outhouse & Daughter	2.00
E. C. Jamison	2.00
——, Shelby, O.	2.00
A Friend, Manchester, Mich.	3.00
I. H. N., Beverly, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. P. L. Nelson	1.00
Mrs. H. E. Pope	1.00
A Mother, Lake Mills, Wis.	1.00
John Ball	2.00
Mrs. A. L. Bedell	1.50
S. M. Brilliant, Ohio	1.00
Mrs. F. Elliott	1.00
Mrs. S Lovejoy & Friends	2.55
A. C. Lawton	1.00
Mrs. Martha Miller	2.00
C. S. Robbins	1.00
Mrs. J. L. Whiting	2.00
Ida Smith	1.00
J. M. Glass	3.00
Mrs. M. E. Imbler	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. Hansen	1.00
Three Friends, Deep Valley, W. Va.	3.00
Mrs. S. E. Walker	1.00
Mrs. S. L. Mercer	1.00
M. M. Perkasie, Pa.	1.00
W. A. B., Miami, Mo.	1.00
Mabel M. Hutchinson	1.00
——, Wellsville, O.	2.00
——, Bucklin, Mo.	1.00
A Friend, Ontario, N Y	1.00
A Friend, Dover, Tenn.	3.00
A Friend, Sand Creek, Okla.	2.00
Henry Sargent	2.00
W. R. Young	1.00
A Friend, Forsyth, Mont	1.00
——, Chillicothe, Mo.	2.00
——, Prescott, Wash.	1.00
T. Wright	1.00
Mary J. Jones	2.00
——, Mankato, Minn.	1.00
A Friend, Garret, Ind.	2.00
Mrs. Isabella Halliday	1.00
Mrs. E. A. Allbee	1.00
F. W. Baker	2.00
Mrs. Ellen Stewart	2.00
Mrs. C. A. Smith	1.00
Mrs. Bickford	1.00
G. T. Jones	2.00
C. T. Babb	2.00
"Bethlehem," Pa.	2.00
A Friend, Elgin, Neb.	2.00
A Reader, Dysart, Ia.	1.00
Mr. S. W. Heasly	1.00
John E. Ballard	2.00
Clara Marshall	1.00
Alonzo Ramsey	1.25
W. H. Slabaugh	3.00
A Sub'r, to C. H., Wolcott, N. Y.	1.00
C. Rieben & Family	20.00
Mrs. Julia Rathburn	5.00
E. Zobel	5.00
John Stefan	5.00
L. Vanderbilt	5.00
Mrs. A. R. S. Clapp	5.00
M. E. Cowles	5.00
Mrs. R. C. Hunt	5.00
M. E., Oswego, Kan.	6.00
Sympathizer, Brookland, D. C.	5.00
I. S. W., Dingman's Ferry, Pa.	15.00
Roy Cassin	5.00
A Friend, Wisconsin	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. F. McClellan	10.00
W. E. Griffin	5.00
Mary E. Dick	10.00
J. Warrenfelt	5.00
——, Morrison, Ill.	5.00
Northern Westbrok Ladies' Aid Society, Minn.	5.00
Frank E. & L. Mather	5.00
Sympathizer, Williston, S. C.	12.00
Isaac Ludwig	5.00
A Friend, Goodes, Va.	5.00
E. L. Ellis	5.00
Harry Clowes	5.00
Mrs. W. H. Booth	10.00
Mrs. E. C. Matthews	5.00
Wm. Hunter	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. L. S. Castor	10.00
Mr & Mrs H S Moseley	15.00
J. H. Frazell	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. Waldo, Bedfield, S. D.	10.00
A. J. Vaughn	5.00
Mrs. Wm. Scott	5.00
Frank T. Russell	5.00
Joe Sampson	5.00
A Michigan C. H. member	5.00
Mrs. E. M. Woodward	5.00
W. I. C., Red Bluff, Calif	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. Post L. Mix	5.00
J. D. Blydenburgh	5.00
A. J. S., Hope, Kan.	5.00
Mrs. S. C. Chester	5.00
W. M. E Tharp	1.00
S. E. Varner, M. Glenn, Mrs. C. Varner, W. M. Mitton	3.75
Spiketon S. S., Wash.	1.00
Mrs. C. V. McVair	3.00
S. E. C., Hartford, Conn	1.00
J. W. Jones	1.00
Mrs. Mary Garner	1.00
Mrs. W. F. Hilderbrand	2.50
Casper K. Conger	1.00
John B. McMeachan	5.00
G. W. R., Independent Hill, Va.	1.00
E. A. S., Provincetown, Mass.	2.00
In His Name, Bridgeport, Conn.	2.00
Jas. Rumney	2.00
Mrs. L. A. Leiean	3.00
Sara B. Lawrenee	3.00
P. J. Trushel	1.00
Mrs. W. W. Young	1.50
Mrs. R. L. Talbot & daughter	3.00
Read P. Black	3.00
Ray E. Dorney	1.00
Mrs. Sarah M. Boothby	2.00
——, Methuen, Mass.	1.00
M. P., N. Andover, Mass.	1.00
Mrs. Geo. Stenenwald	3.00
Miss Kate Harman	1.00
G. W. Mowry	2.00
J. L. Harper	2.00
O. W. Grim	1.00
Emma L. Reynolds	2.00
Anna Myers	1.00
Thos. Hick	1.00
A Shut-in, Salem, Mass.	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. Griggs.	7.00
L. A. Hall	5.00
F. G. Findley	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. Chas. Lewis	1.00
May F. Fowler	2.00
Mrs. F. W. Rhode	1.00
Oscar Myers	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. R. W. Wylie	10.00
Mrs. S. A. Kykendall	2.00
Ellen W. Rouillard	1.00
Mrs. R. A. Divine	5.00
Mrs. P. McKnight	2.00
C. H. Gilmore	5.00
S. A. Russell	1.00
Susan C. Clarke	10.00
Mrs. J. A. Dodds	2.00
Mrs. C. L. Smith	1.00
Mrs. Rhoda Weaver	1.00
Mrs. James Quirk	5.00
Opportunity Circle of King's Daughters, Richmond, Mass.	5.00
Caleb Wright	1.00
Mrs. C. G. Sybrandt	1.00
H. B., Potsdam, N. Y.	1.00
Mary A. Stewart	5.00
Mrs. A. M. Hazlett	1.00
Susan J. Baker	1.00
——, Chadbourn, N. C.	2.00
Friends, Grafton, Vt.	2.50
"A Friend," Berrien Center, Mich.	2.00
"A Friend," Georgetown, Ky.	2.00
"A Friend"	2.00
"Two friends & readers of The Herald"	2.00
A sister, Perry, Okla.	1.00
Mrs. S. B. Fahnestock	2.00
J. E. McGuire	10.00
J. H. Beck	5.00
Roderick E. Richardes & Family	2.00
Mary Crawford	5.00
C. A. Harnan	2.00
C. C. Lambert	2.00
Mrs. A. E. Lassing	2.00
J. W. Rockwell	10.00
L. Fairchild	1.00
"Sub'r," Newton, N. H.	2.00
——, Ripon, Wis.	2.00
Mrs. A. U., Stein	3.00
A Friend, Maynard, Mass.	10.00
Friend, Wilmington, O.	10.00
A Friend, Martinsburg, W. Va.	1.00
Friend, N. Y. City, N. Y.	2.10
W. H. Honaker	5.00
Friend "K," Kingston, Wis.	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. D. Heimlich	1.00
A Sub'r., Walden, Colo.	1.00
A Friend, Sully, Ia.	1.00
Miss Jane Harris	1.00
Mary Phillips	1.00
John D. Rose	1.00
William Walker	1.50
Christian Church at Mutual	3.65
S. S. Children & Friends of Tar Heel, N. C.	11.50
Mrs. Mary E. Miller	1.00
Elizabeth P. Stubbs	1.00
H. M. F., Wyndmoor, N. Y.	2.00
Miss L. A. Reese	2.00
Leila Smith	2.00
Mrs. A. Briggs	2.00
Mrs. M. E. Gatchell	1.00
Maria S. Butts	1.00
Mrs. A. E. McGrew	2.50
Mr. & Mrs. C. R. Hartman	1.75
A Friend, Chateaugay, N. Y.	2.00
Mrs. Geo. Prior	1.00
Mrs. R. A. K., Buffalo, Kans.	2.00
Franeis F. Parker	3.00
Miss J. M. Newland	1.00
Miss L. W. Couse	2.00
J. L., Mount Vernon, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Easton	1.00
——, Rochester, N. Y.	2.00
Mary A. & Eliz. M. Best	2.00
S. B. Campbell	2.00
Mrs. E. G. Lantman	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. S., New Haven, Vt.	2.00
Friends, Albany, N. Y.	1.00
A Reader of C. H., Providence, R. I.	2.00
Mrs. E. De Baugh	2.00
A. S. F., Beverly, Mass.	1.00
A Friend, Chambersburg, Pa.	1.00
Mrs. G. W. Rayton	3.00
A Friend, Fleming, N Y	1.00
——, Gardiner, Ore.	2.50
Mrs. S. J. Carr	5.00
Kings' Daughters, Mont Clare, S. C.	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. S. George	5.00
James Mackey	20.00
A Friend, Easton, Pa.	5.00
H. Wade	5.00
R. E. Pomeroy	5.00
W. vd S., Manhattan, Mont.	10.00
Richmond Home Miss. Soc.	5.00
Jer. W. Kleppinger	5.00
A Lover of the South, Syracuse, N. Y.	5.00
Mrs. I. Spessard	5.00
Francis Osborne	10.00
A Friend, Milton, Del.	10.00
Mrs. Alex. Clark	1.00
Smith & Brown	1.00
Keith Row	1.00
Friends, Dayton, N. J.	2.00
S. J. & M. R. J., Gallipolis, O.	2.00
Mrs. J. Sywassink	1.00
——, New Richmond, O.	1.00
Mrs. Eevrett Pinullin	1.00
S. C. Creamer	3.00
W. D. Douglas	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. E. Asheraft	1.00
S. Birdsall	1.00
G. A. Baker	1.00
H. S. C., E. Orange, N J	1.00
The Simon Family, Laotto, Ind.	2.10
Eli S. Mann	2.00
Mr. Geo. B. Tucker	1.00
Mr. Jacob C. Wilheim	2.00
Mary J. Roy	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. M. Lewis	1.00
A Sub'r., Atlantic, Ia.	1.00
A Friend, Westboro, Wis	1.00
A Sympathizer, Mechanicsville, N. Y.	1.00
A Friend, Cheektowaga, N. Y.	1.00
An Old Sub'r., Montague, Mass.	2.00
F. C. Clayton	2.00
Mrs. S. A. Winter	2.00
Mrs. Ellen Brenton	1.00
Mrs. L. D. Andrews	1.00
Mrs. Elizabeth Davis	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. H. Tienan	2.00
M. A. Moremen	2.00
E. J. Hines	1.00
J. B. Gould	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. Lawrence Smith & Family	2.00
Mrs. Rose Snyder	1.00
Frederick Layer	1.00
A Mother & Son, Farmington, Mont.	2.00
——, Greenwich, N. J.	1.00
M. Holdredge	2.06
Fanny M. Green	2.00
Elizabeth Burgener	3.00
Mrs. A. Hunsinger	1.00
Mrs. C. M. Heath	1.00
Mrs. J. F. Eberle	3.00
Mrs. J. Wesley Walker	1.00
Winnie Johnson	1.00
Rev. Geo. Perkins	1.00
Mrs. Lou Woodworth	1.00
In His Name, Red Oak, Ia.	1.00
Mr. J. D. Boylan	2.00
A Friend, Peoria, Ill.	1.00
Addie Marsh	2.00
R. L. Gerow	5.00
Miss M. G. Parker	7.50
Mr. C. Chas. Garber	10.00
Mrs. N. J. M., San José, Calif.	10.00
Mr. & Mrs. H. A. Frost	5.00
Jessie E Barber	5.00
Mrs. Hannah L. & Jane A. Weldon	10.00
S. M. Hupman	5.00
Friends, Armington, Ill.	10.00
Harriet E. Strong	10.00
Miss Lena F. Wilson	20.00
John Miller	5.00
Mrs. Catharine Wirth & daughter	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. D.J . Price	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. B F Gregory	5.00
Mr. & Mrs. Smoots	5.00
Mrs. Joseph Thomas	5.00
First Presby. Church of Gloversville, N. Y.	50.00
Tappe Bros.	10.00
An Old Subscriber, Emporia, Kan.	2.00
Mrs. J. E. Anderson	1.00
Mrs. O. J. Scott and daughter	1.25
Ella W. Davis	1.50
Paralle Presby. Church	19.00
Mrs. E. M. G., Wykoff, Minn.	5.00
M. C. Robinson	2.00
H. E. & E. F. Barry	1.00
Luther Shearer	1.00
A L L, Claremont, N H	1.00
Mrs. E. C. McAuley	2.00
George Beswick	2.00
F. W. & G. Brown	1.00
Mrs. C. A. Marks	2.00
Mrs. E. D. Hamilton	1.00
Mrs M. Linder	2.00
Mrs. Emma Wasson	1.00
Mrs. C. A. Taylor	1.00
Mrs. M. A. Taylor	10.00
——, Muskegon, Mich.	1.00
M. H. Boyer	12.00
C. P. Sage	1.00
H. G. Smith	5.00
Nettie Swartz	1.00
J A C. Manhattan, Kan.	1.00
L. S. Whitmoyer	2.00
"One in Sympathy," New Church, Va.	1.00
Mrs. H. A. & S. Wallingsford, Vt.	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. Cutnan	3.50
Mrs. V. L. Graham	2.00
W. H. Day	1.00
Mrs. F. O. Hellyer	1.00
B. F. Brown	1.00
Chas. H. Thurston	1.00

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y.City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Hot Weather and Religion

RELIGION and warm weather have long been considered as somewhat hostile friends, if not, indeed, out-and-out enemies. People do not like to go to church on hot days. The old excuse is heard that they can find God as well in the open fields or on the open road. The mornings are hot; the evenings are hotter. City churches are almost deserted because their members have gone to the country. Country churches are poorly attended because people have gone to another part of the country, or to the seaside, or because they stay at home to provide for the city boarders. It is noteworthy that the city church people do not fill up the country churches to any great extent; and that the country people who exchange residences during the hot months do not take one another's places at church.

Let us be frank with ourselves and truthful with God. The church slumps unreasonably and unpardonably in summer time. The world does precisely the other thing. Summer sports and follies are substituted for winter follies and sports, and pleasure seekers find allurements every hour. The church should be at least equally alert.

Of course wearied, faithful church toilers are entitled to a few weeks of freedom from routine duties, but every church should plan out a definite summer program, getting its members to confer about the vacation absences and seeing to it that a sufficient corps is at hand every week to push the battle of the Lord. Open-air services should be held, some near the church door, some out among the crowds of pleasure-seekers. The children's meetings and young people's meetings can be successfully strengthened because the school people are released from their studies. Music is an easy and important part of summer worship. Prayer and testimony, personal work and Gospel preaching must go on unabated even when the thermometer rises high.

Especially careful must summer visitors be not to break into the Sabbath habits of the Christian households where they are stopping. The old excuse about finding God in the fields is usually an excuse for an indifferent heart. The church is the place to find God on the Sabbath day unless you go out into the open air to work for him. Householders and visitors, young and old, layman and preacher, should put forth unwonted efforts to make the summer time a season of spiritual advance and victory, not of retrogression and defeat.

Aerial Tragedies

IN THE long list of 158 victims of aeronautics since 1908, nothing has come with so sudden a shock to the public mind as the death of Melvin Vaniman and his crew, following within a few hours after the tragic fate of Harriet Quimby and her passenger, A. P. Willard. In a science which is yet in its infancy, such disasters seem to be inevitable. So much must depend upon the reliability of machinery, the expertness of the operator and atmospheric conditions, besides the constant liability to accident through fire and explosion, that the life of no aeroplanist or balloonist can be regarded as safe. We are still a long way off from the conquest of the air. Aeroplanes and dirigibles are equally at the mercy of the elements, and skill and caution afford no guarantee of safety. Spurred on by ambition, men and women will continue to take desperate chances among the clouds. Miss Quimby, who is the fifth woman victim in aeronautics, was brave as well as skilful. She was believed to be one of the most careful of aeroplanists. She was the first woman to cross the English Channel and also the first to be licensed as an aeronaut in this country. But it is not a vocation fit for women, since strength may be as necessary in an emergency as skill and coolness. Vaniman, the young engineer, had set his heart upon attempting to cross the Atlantic, and, with his whole crew, lost his life in trying to succeed where Wellman failed. If this double tragedy, which claimed seven human lives, carries any lesson, it must be that inventors should turn their attention to life-saving appliances which would at least minimize the dangers of aerial flight. Meanwhile, one can but feel sincere sorrow over the untimely fate of these brave souls who gave up their lives as pioneers in this perilous field.

After the Conventions

NOW that the political struggle which has distracted the country for many weeks past has reached a temporary resting-point, and that the presidential candidates of the great political parties are in the field awaiting the suffrages of the people in November, the whole country can afford to breathe easier. People are glad of the respite from turmoil. Business can get back into its normal grooves and everybody will welcome the coming of a season of comparative quietude. It is gratifying to note that, amid all the excitement and struggle, there is discernible in the work of the conventions a very clear recognition of the demand for a higher standard in the administration of public affairs. In the platforms there is promise of tariff revision, of trust regulation, of better recognition of the rights of labor, and of legislative action looking to relief from the high cost of living. The time is opportune for a general uplift in American politics; in other words, for progressivism in every branch of the public service. If the pledges in the platforms are respected, we may look forward hopefully to the day when the power of "bosses" and "machines" will decline, when the evils in our present political system which they have fostered will be regulated, and when the will of the sovereign American people will be consulted and carried out in all that relates to the nation's welfare. In the whole world there is no post of greater dignity and responsibility than that of executive of this republic. If the people choose wisely, and the man of their choice prove loyal and true, then we shall not regret the turmoil and tumult, "the thunder of the captains and the shouting," that make the midsummer of each political quadrennium a season to be dreaded.

Suffering the Gateway of Glory

THERE is no other entrance into glory, the glory of any victory—victory over the low, the false and the evil, over selfhood or Satanhood, but the gateway of suffering. The history of our country from Valley Forge and the Brandywine to the Rappahannock and the deathbed of martyred Presidents proclaims this truth. Even the flag of the country, which is loved and reverenced through all the world as the bringer of free communion between nation and nation, the bringer of order and equal justice and holy freedom and the divine majesty of law and the light of the blessed Gospel wherever it goes—is not that flag a beautiful and deep sign to us, almost an ordinance of God to us, that, whether for nations or for men, stripes are first, blood-red perchance, and only afterward and through them the stars of peace and glory?

He who will not suffer for principle has no principle. He who will not suffer for love—love of man, love of country, love of God—does not know what love is. To sink self, to bury self—that is greatness, that is glory. When the monitor Tecumseh, on that August morning in Mobile Bay, was running the Confederate forts, she was rent by a torpedo and went down in a few minutes. It was then, says the historian, that her commander, Craven, did one of those deeds that should always be linked with the doer's name, as Sydney's is with the cup of cold water. The pilot and he at the same instant instinctively made for the narrow opening leading to the turret. Craven drew back. "After you, pilot," he said. There was no afterward for him; the pilot was saved, but the commander went down with his ship. There was a lineal descendant of the knighthood of old, and the true type of the hero for all time to come.

Not Far Away

THE day after James Russell Lowell's wife was buried, sitting in his desolate home, he wrote these words:

> There's a narrow ridge in the graveyard,
> 'Twould scarce stay a child in his race,
> But to me and my thought it is wider
> Than the star-sown vague of space.

Lowell was not an unbeliever, but grief had spread a thick mist over his sight. In truth, the hope which we have from Him who is the resurrection and the life, assures us that there is no wideness like "the star-sown vague of space" between us, if we are Christ's, and the objects of our love have gone to be forever with the Lord. We speak of "the world beyond" as if it were a country across an ocean. But beyond what is that world? Only a veil, the thinnest of all partitions, and that transparent to those who are on the other side.

Charles Reade, in his most famous novel, The Cloister and the Hearth, has put beautiful words in the mouth of Gerard: "Christians live forever and love forever, but they never part forever. You and I part here for life; and what is our life? One line in the great story of the church, one handful in the sand of time, one drop in the ocean of Forever. Adieu—for a little moment called a life! We part in trouble, we shall meet in peace; we part creatures of clay, we shall meet immortal spirits; we part in a world of sin and sorrow, we shall meet where all is purity and love divine, where no ill passions are, but Christ is, and his saints around him clad in white. There, in the turning of an hour-glass, in the breaking of a bubble, in the passing of a cloud, she and thou and I shall meet again, and sit at the feet of angels and archangels, apostles and saints, and beam like them with joy unspeakable, in the light of God upon his throne, forever, and ever, and ever."

No! No! Our King in his beauty is not in "a land that is very far off; and the words so often thus understood bear no such meaning. When he ascended he merely "passed within the veil." He has only to lift the veil, and whisper, "Come in, my child," and instantly you will be in the midst of the blessed ones whom you have "loved and lost awhile."

On the High Cost of Living

—DURING THE LAST twelve months, according to figures by Bradstreet, the cost of living has still further advanced ten per cent. It has now reached the highest point ever known in this country. It constitutes the biggest of all national problems, having an immediate relation to the largest number of people. Farmers' markets have sprung up in many places since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD began its agitation of this subject, most of them on the lines laid down by the mayors of our leading cities, whose letters were published in these columns, and they have been remarkably successful in lowering prices to a multitude of consumers. Co-operative societies are also multiplying, to the great advantage of their members, as affording a convenient means of economic buying.

How our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn celebrated the Fourth will be told in next week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, July 17, 1912

	PAGE
The Artist's Daughter From a painting by Von Kaulbach	Cover
Summer Days at Ocean Grove (Illustrated) By Mary Barton Cookman	711, 712
The Wonderful Temples of Kyoto (Illustrated) By Matthias Klein	712
More Aviation Tragedies (Illustrated)	713
Balloting at Baltimore (Portraits)	713
Restoring the Lost Years. Sermon By Rev. Courtlandt P. Butler, D D.	714, 715
Get the Bible into the Boy By Prof. Wilbert W. White	715
The Shrine of Juggernaut (Illustrated) By Albert L. Kuegle	716, 717
The Alaskan Volcano (Illustrated)	717
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	718
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	719
Our Mail Bag	720
Open Air Mission Service (Illustrated)	720
The Optimists (Illustrated) Story by Mary Lavinia Bray	721
Sense and Nonsense	723
Receivers' Certificates	724
Our Younger Readers (Illustrated)	725
What Others Say	725
Sunday School Lesson By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	726, 727

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Cold Water Fountains

OF NEW YORK'S various charities probably none is more appreciated at this season of the year than that of the organization known as "The Cold-Water Fountain Society," which supplies free iced water to the thirsty thousands in the densely crowded districts of the city. This noble and beautiful work, which has been a great boon to the tenement dwellers and has visibly lessened the sale of intoxicating liquors, was started some years ago by a group of philanthropists under the direction of the late General Ferdinand P. Earle, H. K. Thurber and Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby. Last season the work was reorganized and incorporated under the laws of the State of New York with the following officers: Mr. A. A. Robbins, president; Mr. W. F. Austin, treasurer; Rev. J. H. Young, secretary and superintendent, and Mr. George J. Medole, chairman of the board of trustees. The society maintains a number of fountains in the city, which are supported by voluntary contributors, but there is need for many more during the summer. Everywhere in the Scripture water, the fountain of vegetable and animal life, is used as a symbol of the divine streams so necessary to spiritual life. And the fountains to which the thirsty poor are invited for refreshment remind us of the call the prophet gave to those who were spiritually famishing and destitute to come to the spiritual fountain to receive refreshment and life.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy. (Isa. 55: 1.)

Tallest Building on Earth

THE last steel girder of the tallest business structure in the world was riveted on July 1 at the top of the Woolworth Building in New York. The Colossus of Rhodes was one of the seven wonders of the world because it was 105 feet high. Seven of such statues could be placed one on top of another and the last could not look over the giant new building. When completed the structure will weigh 250,000 tons, and will have cost $13,000,000. It is sixty-three stories high, and will have a population of 10,000 people, and yield an annual income of about $2,500,000. The following are the thirteen tallest buildings ever erected in the world: Colossus of Rhodes, 105 feet; Pantheon, Rome, 150 feet; St. Isaacs, St. Petersburg, 365 feet; Statue of Liberty, the highest statue, 305 feet; Great Pyramid of Cheops, 450 feet; St. Peters, Rome, 400 feet; Rouen Cathedral, 490 feet; Cologne Cathedral, 516 feet; Washington Monument, 555 feet 5⅛ inches; Singer Building, 612 feet 1 inch; Metropolitan Tower, 700 feet 3 inches; Woolworth Building, 750 feet; Eiffel Tower, a steel skeleton, 984 feet. There must be a limit to the height of the skyscrapers. The fabulous price of ground by the front foot or inch in the great cities is the excuse for the skyscrapers, but it is not certain that it is a valid reason. Most of the cities have plenty of ground room in their limits, and it seems hardly the thing to be so stingy with the land and so generous with the air above it in the construction of business houses. One borough in New York City, over ten miles long and several miles wide, has only 75,000 inhabitants, every man, woman and child of whom could be gotten into eight of such sixty-three-story buildings. We believe that the best health and civilization will be promoted by more ground in the cities for homes and business purposes, and by putting a safe limit on the height of the structures. An earthquake or the enemy's warship might make the tragedy of the century. The men of olden time did not have as good fortune in the construction of lofty buildings as those in our time. Their ambition to construct a skyscraper ended in Babel.

And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. (Gen. 11: 4.)

Rare Art Sale

THE late John Edward Taylor, who was proprietor of the Manchester Guardian, possessed one of the choicest art collections in Great Britain. In his will he had left the treasures to the government, but his opposition to the Boer War made a break between him and the administration, and he revoked that clause in the will, and the collection was sold in London the other day. A pair of candlesticks, ten inches high, by Sansovino, Venetian, sixteenth century, formed of boys supporting bases, brought $46,825. A statue of David, ten inches high, by Bartolomeo Bellano, fifteenth century, was bought for $9,710. Seven thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars was paid for a candlestick, school of Donatello, designed as a youth supporting on his hand a circular tray. A triangular inkstand, ten inches high, by Riccio, 1500, was sold for $16,275. The three faces of the inkstand are formed of plaquettes by Moderno, depicting Hercules capturing the oxen of Geryones in Erythia, Hercules fighting the centaurs and Hercules and Cacus. "Virtue Overcoming Vice," by Benvenuto Cellini, an allegorical group represented by a figure of a woman holding a club and standing upon the prostrate figure of a winged demon, was bought for $16,275. A pair of large andirons, Venetian, sixteenth century, were sold for $48,300. The andirons are surmounted by statuettes of Apollo and Mercury. An equestrian group, seven and one-half inches high, from a design by Leonardo da Vinci for the proposed Francesco Strozzi monument, Milanese, sixteenth century, sold for

The Drinking Fountain in Tompkins Park

$17,345. "Mercury and Prometheus" and "Apollo and Marsyas," a pair of groups, by Bernini, sold for $9,450. "The Spinaro," a copy of the antique in Rome, representing a boy picking a thorn from his foot, sold for $7,875. A volute of a crozier, five and one-half inches high, of ivory, with two groups, one representing the Virgin and Child attended by angels, and the other Christ crucified, with the Virgin and St. John at the foot of the cross, sold for $5,575. A ciborium of silver gilt and translucent enamel, on the base of which are silver plaques engraved with scenes from the life of Christ, sold for $7,085. The soul hungers for beauty, and nature and art feed it. The products for food and fabrics for clothing are not more necessary than the works of art with their beauty and truth to feed the soul. All beauty and truth are the reflection of the Absolute. Christ refers to the necessity of food for the soul.

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (Matt. 4: 4.)

Fanaticism Causes Murder

RELIGIOUS fanaticism and bitter animosity expressed by one Mohammedan against another of the same faith who had embraced Christianity were responsible for a murder the other day at Philadelphia. When the tank line ship India left Calcutta, Ismail, the ship's cook, who had renounced Mohammedanism for Christianity, undertook to convert the crew of East Indian Moslems to his new faith. They resented his attempts with much ill-feeling. On landing at Philadelphia, the members of the crew said Ismail should leave the ship's employment for good. He refused and said he would bring the matter to the attention of the government officers, and Lascar Abram, in his fanaticism, proceeded to inject some of his Mohammedan religion into the newly made Christian with a knife, which he did, stabbing his victim to death. And the Mohammedan crew fell on their knees on the deck, beseeching Allah to pardon the crime that had been committed, not of murder, but of renouncing the Prophet for Christianity. What a part in the history of the world has been played by the Moslem's sword, and what a diabolical mockery its crimes have been! Murder from religious fanaticism is not an unusual thing in secular or sacred history. The first deacon fell a victim of this hellish hate which was mistaken for loyalty to God.

And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. (Acts 7: 59.)

Tornado Devastates Regina

REGINA, now the capital of the province of Saskatchewan, in a rich wheat belt, a city of 8,000, was visited the other night by a terrible tornado, which destroyed three hundred houses, six grain elevators, fifty buildings in the wholesale and business districts, involving a loss of several million dollars, and fifty precious lives. The roof of a factory was blown three blocks away and driven through a handsome new residence. Four livery stables were demolished and every horse killed. Railroad cars in the yard were most of them smashed, and some were carried bodily several blocks away. The cupola of the Baptist church was dropped in the middle of the street three blocks away. Many who had gone out on Lake Wascana to avoid the heat were drowned, and sailing craft were lifted out of the water into the southern part of the city. A canoe was carried a mile inland. Seventy-five telephone girls, supposed to have been crushed in the wrecked building, slid from the second floor to the basement, carried down by a fifteen-ton switchboard. The building of the Young Women's Christian Association was wrecked, and it is little less than a miracle that sixty girls who were in it escaped without a single serious injury. Premier Scott wired Mayor McAra that the provincial government had placed $25,000 at his disposal for relief, and that more would be granted if necessary. The tragedy brought its lessons of heroism and benevolence. The prophet, in searching for a symbol of destruction, uses

The tempest in the day of the whirlwind. (Amos 1: 14.)

Shall Weak Babies Die?

A HYGIENE expert at a convention in the interest of baby-saving held in Philadelphia recently insisted that children who were weak in body, or tainted with criminal blood, should be allowed to die, as their existence would be a curse to the community. He is reported to have said: "Certain strains are of such low mentality that it would have been better had they never been born, but having come into the world that is no reason why they should be allowed to exist. If this country enjoyed proper laws for the regulation of marriage such conditions would never occur. The present methods of reducing infant mortality are all wrong. To save babies of this class and raise them into adults is only to continue to breed disease. By keeping them alive we are increasing the race of thieves, paupers and the like, and it would be far better if they were allowed to die in infancy, that the whole human race may be saved from the consequences of contamination with the offspring of such parents." This cold-blooded proposition is as unscientific as it is inhuman and unchristian. Heredity is one half of life, environment is the other half. To furnish a healthful environment is the duty of science, of good men and women, and of the church. The laws of natural generation are to be considered, but the law of spiritual regeneration must not be forgotten. One of the best things about our present civilization is its care for the weak and helpless, and it rises nearest God's throne when it stoops lowest to care for the weak little babe, or the offspring of wicked parents. This is in imitation of Christ.

Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me. (Matt. 18: 5.)

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

J. H. K., Fayetteville, Ark. 1. Should not Luke 15 be studied as a whole in order to understand its meaning? 2. Should not "this parable" be regarded as one parable, or a threefold rather than three parables—one parable with a threefold setting? 3. Why did Jesus speak the parable, or what was the occasion of its utterance? 4. Whom does the returning prodigal son represent? also the angry elder brother?

In this chapter, Jesus was setting forth the great truth that God cared for the sinner and welcomed his repentance and return. To explain this, he employed three parables: the publican, the lost sheep and the prodigal, all three being designed to send home with conviction the same truth. They must therefore be accepted as parts of one lesson. The Pharisees had been murmuring against Jesus, because he received persons who were known to be sinners, and this was his justification. In chapter 14 we learn that this took place as he was traveling on his final journey to Jerusalem, and that "great multitudes" listened—doubtless people going to the Passover. It was probably about the first quarter of the year A.D. 29. In the parable of the prodigal, we see the younger son, thoughtless, weary of restraint, eager for independence, restive of paternal rebuke—just the position of thousands of youths to-day who want to see the world and who have probably got in touch with bad company. His experience and the degradation to which he was subjected illustrate the nature and consequences of sin. In the elder son we have an example of how seriously envy, jealousy and selfishness may mar an otherwise meritorious character. The lesson is that the deeper the degradation and the longer the estrangement through sin, the greater is the joy of forgiveness and reconciliation, and that those who have spent their lives loyally in the Father's service, and who have been kept from backsliding into open sin, should not begrudge the welcome that is given to the long-lost, returning sinner but should help him to find salvation.

Reader, Pa. The book of Proverbs is probably of composite origin, and was a collection of the world's wisdom, expressed in proverbial form, compiled under the auspices of Solomon, who is believed to have been the originator of the peculiar literary style in which they are expressed. They are the sum of the practical human philosophy of that early age. They deal with almost every phase of human life and character, its trials and temptations, follies, wickedness, pitfalls and dangers. Taken as a whole, they cover a much wider range and are expressed with greater force and dignity than anything of the kind in later literature. This is the opinion of the best scholars. Senator Beveridge is right in giving them the palm as superior to all other collections. Wisdom, godliness, obedience, purity and all the moral virtues are set in vivid contrast against the vices of men. The book contains a thousand phrases and observations that can be studied by readers of all ages to advantage. There is not a chapter in the Proverbs that does not contain excellent mottoes for the guidance of men and the development of character. Business men might surround their offices with framed sentences from Proverbs that no modern mottoes could equal. Here are ten that will be helpful to young folks starting out in life: Chapter 1: 10; 3: 6; 3: 27; 4: 24; 6: 6; 9: 6; 10: 4; 11: 16; 11: 25; 12: 22; 20: 1. From the last chapter you may compile all the virtues of a good woman, enumerated in their order.

I. T. K., Lincoln, Neb. What have you to say of vivisection? Has it benefited mankind?

Though much has been said and written against vivisection in that it inflicts pain and torture on the lower animals, still vivisection by wise and humane investigators who invariably use anesthetics where possible has materially advanced the progress of medical and surgical science. Much of our knowledge of physiology, of the effect of medicines, and of bacteriology has been obtained by experimentation on animals. Many diseases, such as diphtheria, cerebro-spinal meningitis, tetanus, malaria, diabetes and tuberculosis, have been rendered amenable to treatment or prevented altogether by the knowledge gained in vivisection. The pain formerly inflicted on animals has been eliminated or made negligible by the use of anesthetics. At any rate the results obtained in the alleviation of human pain and prevention of sickness counterbalance any suffering that may be involved on the part of the subjects, but the work should be restricted to experts.

C. B., Dayton, O. The "bridge" habit has a great vogue here and is even finding its way among church people. Do you consider it a proper way of passing time?

There are many pleasures that are innocent and legitimate, but card-playing — especially where it is associated with gambling—is certainly one of the least desirable of all social amusements, and is very properly regarded as a positive evil. When people with too much leisure resort to bridge or any other form of cards, the "habit" soon becomes a vice. The New York Medical Journal calls it "mental dissipation to the eventual exclusion of logical and close thinking." It is a very serious question how far a man or woman may claim the right to waste precious time, even if there was no gambling connected with their pleasures. Besides, in the case of professing Christians, such indulgences should be avoided if for no other reason than on the ground of setting a bad example.

L. C., Boston. What is the meaning of Ense petit placidem sub libertate quietem?

The words are Latin for "With the sword she seeks a quiet pence under liberty." This is the motto of Massachusetts.

Miss R. B., Beeville, Texas. Is there a passage in the New Testament which refers to a book of the Bible which has been left out?

Jude 14, 15 refers to the book of Enoch. It was, apparently, widely known, but was never considered to be a part of the canonical Scriptures. In Col. 4: 16 Paul refers to a letter which he had written to the Laodiceans. He asks that when his letter to the Colossians has been read they would forward it to be read by the Laodiceans, and that they would get his letter to Laodicea and have this read in the church at Colosse. Ussher believed this letter to be the one sent to the Ephesians. No separate letter to Laodicea was ever found, though a clumsy forgery was later attempted, and this manuscript is included in the collection of the New Testament apocrypha. The New Testament writers must have written other letters and memoranda besides those which are included in the canon of the New Testament, but none of them have been preserved and discovered.

R. S. W., Dodgeville, Wis. 1. Calvin died on May 27, 1564, aged 55, after a period of illness in which he became very much emaciated. On his death-bed he took God to witness that he had preached the Gospel purely and he called on all about him to live so that they would be worthy of the divine goodness. He was one of the most eminent of the reformers, but not a martyr, as your letter implies. 2. Moses slew the Egyptian in a moment of sudden indignation, when he had seen the man shamefully abuse an Israelite. It was the first blow in the battle for Hebrew release from Egyptian oppression. One tradition, which has long been preserved, and which is mentioned in the writings of Clement of Alexandria, states that Moses slew him "with the word of his mouth." Moses had had military training, and at that time of his life he was high-spirited and impetuous, not meek and sufficiently obedient to be an instrument of the divine purpose. This came afterward as the result of long development.

A. J. McC., Philadelphia, Pa. What foundation is there for a belief in the Trinity? The Revised Version does not seem to contain the language made use of in the King James Version, I. John 5: 7, 8, and in this appears to sustain Dr. Smith's Dictionary that it is not genuine. The Berean Scripture Study Manual includes it under the head of "Spurious Passages of the New Testament" and Benjamin Wilson's Emphatic Diaglott asserts that it is "spurious."

1. See Matt. 3: 16, 17; 28: 19; Rom. 8: 9; I. Cor. 12: 3-6; II. Cor. 13: 14; Eph. 4: 4-6; I. Pet. 1: 2; Jude 20: 21; Rev. 1: 4, 5 and many other passages. The passage in I. John 5: 7, 8, is found in the Latin Vulgate, the Complutensian Polyglot, the Revianus, and the MS. of Ottobonianus (fifteenth century). Nor of the older versions contain the words in ful but all the Greek MSS. have "there are thre that bear record." Cyprian wrote explainin "Of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, it is writ ten: 'and these three are one.'" It was there fore a natural inference that the Trinity wa meant, not simply the trinity of the spirit, wate and blood, but the higher Trinity. It is eviden that the additional clause was originally inter polated as a marginal reference in the text o the Latin Vulgate, probably about the eight century.

Kansas Reader, Iola, Kan. Remembering th injunction of Jesus, "Inasmuch as ye hav done it unto the least of these, ye hav done it unto me," has a Christian the righ to enjoy luxuries while thousands of th "least" are naked and hungry?

All of God's gifts to us are intended to b used, not selfishly, but for his glory, and that through them we may be the means of blessing to others. The greater the gifts we enjoy, th greater our responsibilities are. We should recognize this in a practical way, and not simply theoretically. Were a tree to refuse to expand its branches and spread its foliage so that it might give shade and comfort, and to decide instead to hug them to itself, it would soon wither and perish. So, when we keep to ourselves selfishly the blessings God has given us, we limit our usefulness, destroy the purpose of the gift and deny spiritual joy and refreshment to our own souls. The question in Kansas Reader's letter carries an obvious answer, i. e., no real follower of Christ would close his heart to sympathy and compassion, or deny help if it lay within his power to render it. Read the story of the rich young man, whose wealth stood between him and the great happiness. One of the highest joys we can ever know is that which comes from service done to others "in his name."

Reader, Greenup, Ill. 1. What is your opinion of one keeping a great many magazines, etc.? I have several hundred on hand. 2. Where can I get maps and articles relating to the reclaimed area of the Colorado Desert? 3. How is "Gifford Pinchot" pronounced?

1. Send them to the nearest hospital, almshouse or prison. 2. Write to Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. 3. The final "t" is silent.

Open-Air Preaching on New York Streets

OUR readers are already familiar with the splendid work being done at the Eighth Avenue Mission, New York, under the leadership of Miss Sara Wray. This picture shows an open-air service conducted for the mission by Miss Wray at Madison Square on a recent Sunday afternoon. These are each year the earliest open-air meetings in the city, and continue after the other open-air campaigns have been closed. From the first Sunday in April to the Sunday before Christmas this noble young woman and her assistants tell the story of Jesus to the people passing through the park. The picture shows how men and women are attracted by the open-air Gospel and how they will stop to hear it. Besides the Sunday afternoon meeting, an open-air service is held every night at half past seven on the corner of Eighth Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street. The Mission itself is at 290 Eighth Avenue, and night after night throughout the year men and women in the depths of sin hear the glad news of Calvary and are redeemed. Every Wednesday night a "Converts' Meeting" is held at the close of the regular mission service, at which the recent converts are instructed in the deeper things of the spiritual life.

Miscellaneous

Reader, Chelan, Wash. Question too indefinite. Unfortunately the divorce laws in some States at least are not in accord with Christian principles.

Turbotville, Pa. Write to the Secretary, Carnegie Fund, 1 Madison Avenue, New York City, for all information.

C. E. B., Stanton, Ia. Margaret E. Sangster was a Miss Munson before her marriage in 1858. She began her literary career in the late sixties.

B. D. G., Tyrone, Pa. It is very hard to get a copy of the works of Judge Hopkinson now. They were published in Philadelphia in 1792 under the title of The Miscellaneous Essays and Occasional Writings of Francis Hopkinson. The Battle of the Kegs was a lampoon. You may possibly get it in some public library.

L. P. C., Jamestown, N. Y., writes: "I was pleased to read the article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of recent date concerning the English sparrow. They are an awful nuisance in this city. We have very few home birds now, and besides being so noisy, they spoil the looks of church steeples, etc. One can hardly sleep mornings with their racket, and they have killed and driven out the robins, which we regret. There was a time when the State of Ohio paid the boys a bounty for their destruction."

THE OPTIMISTS

BY MARY LAVINIA BRAY

Illustration by Robert W. Amick

T WAS the first of the month. At her desk Mrs. Whitney sat, pencil in hand, a frown above her brows, beneath them a pair of vaguely troubled eyes. Nestling at her feet, a tiny boy ietly, intently, was pulling to pieces the delicate e flouncing of her negligee. Now and then he ked up with mischievous eyes, and being unper-ed, proceeded with his little work of destruction. Now the negligee, though it had been mended and leansed to a state of fragility, was still wearable, d the repairing or replacing of the damaged ance would make one of those very items, grouped ler "Miscellaneous," which every month added mselves into the most in-dible total among all of Mrs. hitney's vexatious household counts. There were always ex-s to the tune of many dollars spiring to prevent her house-ping allowance from covering monthly bills.

"If I could only put my finger on something to be cut down," was thinking. "It seems to everything and nothing. roceries have gone up—no nder; we're feeding twice as ny. And meat, of course, and lk." She ran her eyes over a allenging array of figures. "I ought I'd surely have eighty llars left this month for the al bill. I forgot the insurance ning—and we had to have the ole linen—"

Suddenly she beheld the occu-tion of her eldest. With a othered cry she caught him , and his outburst of gleeful uckles did not save him. The anks were gentle, but Robert's sponse so noisy that the nurse me running.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, stopping ort.

Robert, appreciative of the ef-ct of his yells, redoubled them, aking frantic efforts to escape s mother's arms.

"Take him, Mrs. Keegan," said e, handing him over. "Robert s been very naughty."

Whereupon he cried anew and ade equally frantic resistance ainst being carried away.

The noise of Robert diminish-g up the stairs was reinforced sympathetic clamor of the by, and for some minutes up-ar reigned. Mrs. Whitney did t stir. When peace ensued, e sighed. "Capable woman, rs. Keegan — expensive, but hat a help, what a comfort!"

"Let me see," she began, turn-g again to her accounts; "the al bill—"

There was a sound of foot-eps approaching from a remote rner of the house, gathering eight and determination as ey came, each step smiting pon the hardwood floors.

"Alma in a tantrum," she ought, glancing up calmly to eet the flushed indignant young oman who with arms akimbo onfronted her and without arley hurled challenge: "You'll ave to get some one in my place, Mrs. Whitney!"

The shade of surprise passing over Mrs. Whit-ey's face was too nearly imperceptible to betray er. "What is the matter, Alma?" she asked evenly.

Alma, having worked up considerable feeling and eing taken aback by the absence of emotional re-ponsiveness, answered stammering: "I can't do the ork."

"You have been doing it all along, Alma, and airly well, too. What is the trouble now?"

"Oh, it used to be all right. There wasn't so much ork. I used to could get done. Now it's all day, ll day, morning to night. I don't get a chance to it down. You better get a stronger girl than me. can't keep it up. I ain't strong enough." The irl began to sob hysterically. "I thought all along 'll do my best and maybe things get better. But it on't. The family's bigger and always extra peo-le, and now Mrs. Keegan—"

"Ah!" thought Mrs. Whitney.

"She makes double my work at meal-times!" the girl cried, her eyes flashing with comical pathos about her reddened nose. "Second table now! And catch her helping! She wouldn't even bring out her own dishes. I never get through in the evenings any more. And the washings! Four days this week I've been washing and ironing—"

"Yes, Alma," her mistress interrupted, "and an expert laundress would have done it in a day and a half. That is your one shortcoming—you are very slow with the laundry work."

The girl's face stiffened, sullen and red. "You better get another girl quicker than I am."

"At her desk Mrs. Whitney sat, pencil in hand"

Mrs. Whitney took up her pencil. "When do you wish to leave, Alma?"

The girl started. "When my month is up," she retorted.

"Very well, Alma."

Mrs. Whitney was apparently engrossed with her papers. Alma stood hesitating. No upbraidings? No pleadings? Then with a toss of the head, she marched from the room. When the undue rattle of pans indicated that Alma was vengefully circulating in the kitchen, her mistress dropped pencil and paper and leaned her chin upon her hand.

That evening, when Mr. Whitney and his wife were comfortably toasting before the blazing open fire which was one of the recompenses of suburban living, a pensive recurrent smile upon her face provoked his curiosity.

"My dear?"

She looked at him comprehendingly. They had reached that stage of sympathetic matrimony in which ordinary thoughts and shades of feeling are mutually understood without definite speech, and the man and woman have become so satisfactorily adjusted to each other as seldom to strike a spark out of the ordinary.

"My dear?" said Mr. Whitney.

"Yes." She smiled. "I am amused at our ménage. It isn't amusing, but—" She shrugged her shoulders. "We came out of town to live because we wanted a baby, and the country is good for babies; so good that now we have two. There were only you and I when we came. Now there are you and I and Robert and baby Adelaide and Alma and Mrs. Keegan and Johnson—"

"I hope you are not counting them all as our family," her husband interposed tranquilly.

"Not as the family, exactly," she replied. "I said it was our ménage that amused me. It was you and I. Then you and I and Robert. So we needed Alma. That made our expenses heavier, and you had to devote more time to your work, consequently less to the place. So we added Johnson to look after the grounds and develop the garden to the extent of supplying the family and raising enough surplus to make a profit on his wages and decrease our cost of living and so forth. It hasn't done anything of the kind, but no doubt it eventually will. And then it was you and I and Robert and Adelaide—with Alma and Johnson—and every one working harder; so we added Mrs. Keegan to lighten our burdens. That is, I thought she would—that Alma would never have to be called upon to bother with the children, and I should have time for other things. However, it seems—" She paused to poke a smoldering log into active flames. "It seems that I continue to be very busy in my little household, because as my manual toil decreases, my responsibility of superintendence increases; and the more that increases, the harder you have to work to make more money; and Alma isn't pleased, because if she has less to do for the children, she has more to do for Mrs. Keegan and—"

"For mercy's sake!" Mr. Whitney exclaimed, bewildered. "Mary! What are you getting at?"

She leaned back, laughing. "Nothing—only Alma gave notice to-day."

There was a moment of dead silence.

Then, "After what you've done for that girl!" Mr. Whitney remarked. "The incompetent piece of baggage that she was when she came to you! Some woman offered her more money, eh? I'm sorry you'll have the struggle all over again."

"Green girl or none for the suburbs," his wife commented cheerily. "But I'm not going to struggle. I shan't let her go."

"No? What have you promised her?"

"Nothing, as yet—not while she's on her high horse, you know. But she has reason for complaint. The work is much heavier than when it was you and I and Robert. I'm going to give her three dollars a month more, and get a laundress in twice a month."

A line or two about the man's mouth deepened. He looked into the fire, saying nothing.

"Yes, dear," she said, as though he had spoken. "It is quite a ménage that we are developing. Now it will be you and I and Robert and Adelaide—and Alma and Mrs. Keegan and Johnson and—Mrs. McVay twice a month. Yes, I think I'll have Mrs. McVay to do the washing."

Their talk subsided. He was revolving the situation in his mind, and he might as well have done so aloud, for she knew of what he was thinking. He lifted his head with a sigh that became a laugh. "We go deeper all the time," he said, "and yet our income seems to gallop along and keep pace. I declare, sometimes I don't know how we do it."

Continued on next page

THE OPTIMISTS

Continued from preceding page

"Are we—do you suppose we can keep it up?" There was a hint of anxiety in her tone. "Our income doesn't come out of a miraculous pitcher, you know. Are you sure we'll come out all right?"

"Oh, yes," he answered easily. "Trust to luck; We'll come out all right, Mary."

They sat idly watching the fire, lulled by its savage fascination. Presently she asked, "Shall I get the coat, Mortimer?"

"H'm? Yes. I want you to have that. I've been promising you a fur coat ever since we've lived out here."

"No fault of yours, dear," she responded. "There's always been some costly thing needed for the house or the babies."

"This time it is your turn," he said. "What do you want? Persian lamb?"

"No. Every woman in this select suburb gets, or isn't happy until she gets, a Persian lamb. I want something different, perhaps moleskin."

"Very well. Get something different," said Mr. Whitney gallantly. "Get a moleskin."

"And how many nights will you have to work to pay for it?"

"Oh, three or four. I'm a high-priced man, you know. How much is moleskin?"

"You're a dear," said his wife, kissing him. "I'm tired out and I'm going to bed."

"I'll wait here a while," he said.

She left him, and with the rhythm of her departing footsteps a refrain formed itself in his mind. "More work, to make more money, to spend more money, to need more money. More work, to make more money," and so on.

It was near the first of the next month that Mortimer Whitney began to wear an air of concern. One day he asked his wife if the coat had been ordered, nodding carelessly when she said it had. Another time, he inquired whether certain bills had been paid. It was not until he ventured a jesting suggestion that she might have saved up a secret reserve fund from her housekeeping allowance that she scented alarm.

"Why, Mortimer!" she exclaimed. "I've never been able to put a dollar aside. No matter how I calculate, I never come out with quite money enough to pay everything."

"Of course not," he said. He had heard of wives who had surprised their husbands by such achievement and had wondered if by any possible chance she might.

She faced him soberly. "Tell me," she said. "Are we short of funds?"

It was a relief to unburden his mind. They were short, alarmingly short. A fee of nearly one thousand dollars that he had counted upon to square up all of the extras and meet the interest on the mortgage was not going to be paid, because the debtor had suddenly declared himself insolvent. He had counted upon it, and they were in a predicament.

"Why, Mortimer!" she gasped. "To think of such a thing happening! Who could have expected it? How I wish," she cried, acutely miserable—"How I wish I had never ordered that coat!"

"How much for the moleskin?" he asked.

"Chinchilla! I didn't get moleskin. Two hundred and eighty dollars."

"Buy it from Roberts?"

"Yes. I might have saved a little at a regular fur shop, but our account there— Besides, they're reliable, and that's most important in buying fur."

"How much do you suppose the rest of our account with them will amount to this month?"

"Not more than forty dollars."

"That's three hundred and twenty, four hundred interest due, and eighty for coal, our annual fifty to the church, seventy-five club dues, seventy dollars taxes nearly past due. There's a thousand dollars, just as I figured. I've been depending upon that payment."

"And what are you going to do now?" she asked.

His eyes met hers desperately. "I don't know."

Far into the night they figured, though in the first five minutes results were clear. They owed every one. They could keep abreast of current living expense, but they could not pay off the accumulated "extras," or the interest. They had sufficient income to look forward to, but after paying housekeeping bills about due and the help, they would have less than one hundred dollars in cash and pressing indebtedness of twelve times that sum.

"Mortimer," she said, aghast, glancing about their surroundings, "who would think, to look at this house and its furnishings and you and me, that we haven't a dollar to our name!"

"I shouldn't be surprised if a good many suspected," he said gloomily.

"If I could stave it off for a few more months," he went on. "I can get thirty to sixty days, but we can't save a thousand in that time. It all comes, Mary, from living up our income. We have never denied ourselves, to get money ahead."

"We haven't indulged ourselves particularly," she answered with a touch of resentment. "The coat is the only real luxury I've had. You've refused to get a little runabout, although nearly every one we know has one—people no better off than we."

"I mean denying ourselves what we think necessities," he replied quietly. "That is the way to get rich. Our scale of living really is not commensurate with our pocketbook. It would be justified if we had any reserve for emergencies. But we've spent as we've made, with immense faith in the future—and here we are."

For a moment she said nothing. Then, "If we could only start over." And presently, "They say that most successful men have been through the bankruptcy court once in their time."

"That is not true. And what truth it contains refers to their business. Decent men don't go into bankruptcy because of dressmakers' and grocers' bills."

She shrank a little. "We might be worse off, I suppose. I've heard Mr. Elroy say that when he was forty he was ruined; hadn't carfare. Now look at him."

He drew a long breath. "Mary," he said solemnly, "I believe it would be easier to be without carfare—'busted,' no job, no debts, a clean start to-morrow, than to disentangle ourselves from the mess of obligations we're in."

"If we could start all over," she repeated. "If we could live in a little flat where I could do the work, with a laundress in once a week, no servants, no debts, no ménage—think of the money we could save! Think of it! And then when we had a fat little bank account—"

"No use thinking of it. It seems we aren't that kind. In fact, we've always despised thrift, Mary; considered it mean. I'll borrow some money."

"On your life insurance?"

He laughed. "That would bring about ninety dollars. No. Somewhere else."

"You mustn't," she said in a subdued voice.

"I must," he replied.

He arranged the loan at outrageous interest, exchanging an army of small annoying debts for one debt large and oppressive.

"We will economize and pay this off at the earliest moment," his wife said enthusiastically. "Let's not run a penny behind, but pay cash for everything, and without old accounts to pay up—why, we're sure to save!"

Paying cash meant keeping no cash in hand. At the next accounting they had nothing ahead, and drew on the small bank balance in order to pay Alma. The experience was disconcerting. Before long, in spite of zealous efforts toward economy, they were again in arrears. Interest—or usury—was a devouring monster. They began to feel that they ran a losing race.

"My luck seems to have turned," said he. "I can't make an extra hundred anywhere."

She concluded to let Mrs. Keegan go. But Mrs. Keegan's dismissal was only a sop to Cerberus.

"It's our scale," they told each other. "We'll have to alter our scale of living until the tide turns." The scale, however, was obstinate while conditions remained as they were. They felt enmeshed, and when they thought about it, frantic. Mrs. Whitney was pathetically debating whether it would be more profitable for her to seek some kind of employment or to keep a pair of "paying guests," and which might be managed with less odium, when from the most unexpected quarter deliverance appeared in the form of a legacy from an almost forgotten aunt who had cherished a fond memory of Mrs. Whitney's girlhood.

A little notice of the bequest found its way into the local newspapers, and Mr. and Mrs. Whitney became at once and thereafter recipients of suggestions for disposing of it. Everything was suggested, more or less forcefully—benevolences, personal and public, safety vaults, trust companies, various extravagances baited with flattery, reputable and disreputable investments. After a while they decided for themselves by promising five hundred dollars to the Associated Charities, preparing for a European tour, and ordering a modest motor-car.

On the day when the car was brought out for a trial spin, with Mr. Bailey, the manufacturer's agent and their friend, acting as chauffeur, at the hour in which they returned from the spin, refreshed and pleased as children with a new toy, they received sudden advice that, to the surprise of the executors, payment of the legacy must be deferred, as certain unconsidered persons who thought themselves entitled to benefit were preparing to contest the will.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitney read the message together, looked at each other with frightened eyes, and burst into laughter.

"That's a good little machine, Bailey," he cried excitedly. "I like it. Let's take her out for another run."

When they reached home, Mrs. Whitney threw herself upon a couch, exhausted. Her new motor-bonnet crumpled under her head. Her husband collapsed into a padded chair, and they sat regarding each other abjectly.

After a long while, he said: "You know there is something the matter with us, Mary—or with me. People who are absolutely unable to learn a lesson have a screw loose. Perhaps we'll learn now."

She wept. "What is to become of us? I don't know how much we owe now. Shall we go to jail?"

"No such luck. We shall be driven to haunt the streets, our little ones howling hand in hand, shelterless."

"How can you jest at such a time?"

"I'm not jesting."

"You are. You ought to be ashamed. Now is the time for action. What are we going to do?"

They eyed each other gravely.

"We'll cancel the passage, of course."

That was one clear step. They began to be rational.

"Next?"

"Try to sell the house. It may take some time."

Her lip quivered. "I hate to lose our home—don't you?"

"It is my disgrace, Mary, to have brought you to this."

"It is my fault that we began such extravagance. Oh, dear! We'd have paid off the mortgage some time, wouldn't we?"

"I doubt it," he replied. "At the

Continued on next page

You have tried and enjoyed

Dole's Hawaiian Pineapple Juice

You must have liked it as a beverage and noticed its beneficial action.

You appreciate now why physicians and nurses so readily give it preference in cases of poor digestion, lack of appetite and where there is need of a tonic and blood builder.

Its digestive powers and strengthening action gives it an unique place among all beverages.

Dole's Hawaiian Pineapple Juice

is simply the pure juice of golden-ripe pineapples, carefully bottled and sterilized at Honolulu.

The Real Health Drink

Sold by your druggist, grocer or fountain.

"Cooling Drinks and Desserts" telling all about it, and how to make many delectable dainties. Mailed free on request.

Hawaiian Pineapple Products Co., Ltd.
112 MARKET ST.
San Francisco, California

Chiclets

REALLY DELIGHTFUL

The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

Look for the Bird Cards in the packets. You can secure a beautiful Bird Album FREE.

Half a million folks of all kinds—including grown-ups, children, teachers, etc., are collecting our wonderful Bird Studies—faithful reproductions of American birds in full colors, with description of the birds' plumage, habits, and how to know them on sight. You will find one beautiful bird picture in each packet of Chiclets. Send us any fifty of these pictures with ten cents in stamps and we will send you—free—our splendid Bird Album.

The refinement of Chewing gum for people of refinement. It's the peppermint—the true mint.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores 5c. the Ounce and in 5c., 10c. and 25c. Packets

SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY
Metropolitan Tower
New York

COMFORT and EASE FOR TENDER FEET

For every woman who will wear WHITCOMB'S "FLEXSOLE" SHOES. The most comfortable shoe for women ever made. Soft, flexible, perfect-fitting and handsome. Very durable. No tacks. No Lining to wrinkle and hold moisture. No seams.

An Iowa woman writes: "First leather shoe I have been able to wear in 20 years."

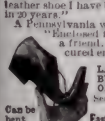
A Pennsylvania woman writes: "Enclosed find order for a friend. My feet are curel entirely."

Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded.

Prices: We refer to any bank anywhere.

LACE, $3.00 } Prepaid.
BUTTON, $3.25 }
OXFORDS, $2.50 }

Send outline of foot and give size usually worn.



Can be bent double.

Eastern Shoe Co., 55 Broadway, Beverly, Mass.
Agents Wanted Everywhere.
Special Inducements.

WHEEL CHAIRS A wheel Chair is often an invalid's greatest comfort. We offer easy 75 styles of these easy self-propelling and Invalids' Rolling Chairs with latest improvements. Ship direct from factory to you, freight prepaid, and sell on

THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL

Liberal discounts to all sending for free catalogue NOW.

GORDON MFG. CO.
384 Madison Ave., TOLEDO, O.

10 ₵ Stamps or Coin brings you a tin of GOLDEN WEST SALAD DRESSING POWDER Makes a pint of delicious Salad Dressing Address Claret & Devers, Portland, Ore

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Sense and Nonsense

Conducted by JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

"The time has come," the walrus said,
"To talk of many things;
Of shoes and ships and sealing wax,
And cabbages and kings."

JOSIAH told Samantha he had composed an obituary which he intended to have published, if she was ever took from him. He said, looked up to and admired as he wuz in the community, he knew it would be expected of him, and he dassent trust anybody else to write it, knowin' well they couldn't do justice to her many virtues, and describe her merits as he could who knew her best, and loved her so devotedly. He said it would be a heart breakin' job; but he felt that duty to the public and love for the deceased would nerve him up for the effort.

Samantha was touched to the heart by his devotion, and in a tearful voice asked him to read it to her, which he did, as follows:

"Here lies Samantha, wife of Mr. Josiah Allen Esquire of Jonesville, Deacon in the Meetin' House, Salesman in the Cheese Factory, Doorkeeper in the Grange, Pathmaster and Collector in the School Deestrict. Beautiful and Amiable, with a brilliant intellect, he is a young man respected and beloved by all who knew him but to love him, and name him but to praise."

Samantha, after a few minutes of silent thought, said she too had thought of what she would write upon his taking away if she lived through it:

"Here lies Josiah, husband of—"

Josiah sprung to his feet and says sternly, "Stop, Samantha! stop right where you are! Dead or alive, I never will be depictered in that humiliatin' way. Don't you see how demeanin' it is to a man to be called husband of—a female? I won't stand for it, it is too lowerin!"

"But you call me 'Wife of'—"

"That is altogether different. I don't want to be harsh, Samantha," sez he, settin' down and speakin' in a milder and less scareful voice. "I will try to explain it so even a female can understand it. You know men and wimmen are divided into two separate classes by law; wimmen are put into a humbler, low-downer class, hence their inability to vote, or meddle with the laws that govern 'em. Men are put into a higher, uplifteder class, hence their powerful statesmanship and their fur-seein' eyes; for instance, they can set wimmen, criminals, lunaticks and idiots on the same bench side by side, and look up to and admire and worship the wimmen, as we male statesmen all do, and at the same time, and with the same pair of eyes, look way down with contempt on the other three setters we have placed on the same bench. It takes keen eyes and great minds to do that, Samantha; hence as I said, it is upliftin' and honorin' to a female, and dead or alive, she ort to be thankful for it, to be writ down wife of a man. Do you understand it, Samantha? Have I brought it down to your comprehension and made it plain to you?"

Samantha gin a deep sithe and told him she couldn't "see the sense or justice of it yet."

"No," sez Josiah, "I spoze not. We male statesmen cannot explain these deep political matters so a female can understand 'em, their brains are too shaller."

MARIETTA HOLLEY.

THE OPTIMIST

Continued from preceding page

rate we were going, perhaps in forty years." He reflected. "I must try to get rid of the place before they foreclose."

"Are they likely to do that?"

"Extremely."

She shivered. "Mortimer, how much do we owe?"

He groaned. "Oh, spare the calculation."

"I must know."

"Eight thousand on the mortgage, fifteen hundred that I borrowed, a hundred and fifty dollars interest on that, twenty-five hundred for the car—they may take that back—five hundred you promised the Charities, a couple of hundred to Roberts, about four hundred household accounts—"

With a shriek she clapped her hands over her ears. "Never mind about any more." She buried her face in her arms.

At the sight of her dejection his fighting spirit rose. He came to her and gathered her into his arms.

"Don't cry, Mary," he said. "We do seem to be snowed under, but we'll tunnel out. I've been an incompetent, easy-going, bedazzled idiot. I don't blame you for being discouraged. But don't cry. We're so poor now that we have to turn over a new leaf. It's the best thing for us. We're young. We'll pull through."

At his words she cried harder and he strove to comfort her. When she raised her head, she answered tremulously that they had a whole book full of leaves to turn over, and where were they to begin?

"On an entirely new basis. We'll sell our house and pay our debts and live as poor people should. No more pretensions, no more gambling with fortune. It won't be easy at first, dear," he said, kissing her. "We'll not have—so many good times."

"Perhaps we'll have better times," she said. Then with hands upon his shoulders she told of the idea that had come to her.

"We've said how differently we would do if we could start over. Here is our opportunity. We'll pretend nothing has happened. We'll pretend to be going away as we planned. We'll close the house, and I'll tell the servants that our absence will be indefinite, so they'd better look for new places. And what we'll really do is this: Find that little flat we've spoken of, the cheapest, nicest little flat in some respectable suburb, and we'll live on a third of your income. We won't have to sell our house. By and by we'll rent it. None of the people here will know where we are—"

"Are you planning to disappear from our friends?"

"Not from our friends. They won't care where we live. As a matter of fact, there are not many of them. But from society and the Country Club set—you know. And by and by"—she grew enthusiastic—"the rent of the house will be paying off the mortgage! We'll be saving nearly all that you make! We'll make thousands!"

"Mary! Mary!"

"I know I'm exaggerating—a little, not much. We can pay all our debts but the mortgage within two years."

"I'm afraid you'll hate those two years, Mary."

"No, indeed. We shall keep it up two years longer, until we have a balance. I shall be a miser. I am perishing for a savings bank account. I could sell my clothes—"

To stop her excited talk he kissed her again.

"And by and by," he said, "shall we come back?"

"Yes. When we really own something, we'll take possession. And have it for the children, too."

"Rather upsetting, isn't it, to think of owning everything that we call ours?"

Her eyes shone. "It will be more than things, dear. We shall be owning our own souls."

KINGSFORD'S CORN STARCH

Standard since 1848

DELICIOUS ice cream made at home—a real treat for all and a pleasing satisfaction to the housewife who serves it. To make sure of the smooth grained and firm ice cream that moulds so nicely and dishes well follow this recipe:

Kingsford's Ice Cream—Sift together one-half cup sugar, one-half teaspoonful salt, one level tablespoonful Kingsford's Corn Starch. Add one pint milk and stir over hot water till it thickens. Cover and cook twelve minutes, stirring occasionally. Into one half cup sugar, gradually beat the yolks of three eggs already beaten. Stir into the hot mixture and keep on stirring till it thickens. Pour into freezer when cold, flavor to taste and add one pint cream, and freeze as usual.

To guard against disappointment, use Kingsford's wherever corn starch is required—in Blanc Mange, Pastries, etc. Ordinary corn starch will not give the results you desire.

Send your name on a post card for Cook Book O 168 of the best recipes free.

T. KINGSFORD & SON
National Starch Co., Suc'rs. Oswego, N. Y.

Clothes pure white and crisp—lingerie waists dainty and light—fine undergarments satin-finished and pliable—these are the results you get with

KINGSFORD'S SILVER GLOSS STARCH

Good washing alone won't produce them. Cheap bulk starches will stiffen a fabric but they often leave tell-tale spots and stains. Kingsford's, the pure natural lump starch, is perfectly clean—used by careful housewives for three generations. Insist that the dealer send it. Direct the laundress to use it.

Sold in 1 lb., 3 lb. and 6 lb. boxes.

T. Kingsford & Son
National Starch Co., Suc'rs
OSWEGO, N. Y.

5%

Write to-day for the Calvert Book—it is a book that everyone who is saving money or has money to invest ought to have.

It is full of interesting information for investors, and tells in detail of this Company and its 17 years of successful experience.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Company pays 5 Per Cent interest on all money entrusted to its care.

Money begins to draw interest the day it is received, and it may be withdrawn at any time without notice.

In the entire history of the Company there has never been a day's delay in the mailing of interest checks or in the repayment of principal when demanded.

It is an ideal savings or investment plan. Don't fail to write for the book.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Highest Interest Best Security

Amounts of any size ($25, $50, $100, $200 or multiples) can be invested, temporarily or permanently. Your money available when wanted. Endorsed by highest financial authorities everywhere.

6% NET INTEREST

Principal and interest secured by select Mortgages on Preferred Real Estate

If your savings or any other money is drawing less than 6% net, or is not as secure as Old Mother Earth herself can make it—send postcard for our Booklet. Read it.

A. C. LESLIE CO.
Suite 117, Bakewell Law Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.

The Teachers College of Indianapolis

Accredited by the State Board of Education

Professional Training for all grades of teaching Two, Three and Four Year Courses.

Special Classes in Public School Drawing and Music, Domestic Science and Art, and Manual Work Kindergarten—Established in 1882.

This College Specializes in training of Kindergartners, Primary and Intermediate Grade Teachers.

Spring Classes open in March, April, May. Summer term begins June 4th.

Send for Catalog

MRS. ELIZA A. BLAKER, Pres,
The William N. Jackson Memorial Building,
23rd and Alabama Streets, Indianapolis, Ind.

INVISIBLE PICTURE ANCHORS

HOLD YOUR PICTURES STRAIGHT

Mar no walls. Secure artistic finish and always keep your pictures straight. Pictures unhook from Anchors instantly. Are leveled when hung. No ladder. No annoyance. Simple. Can be used over and over. Why not BUY INVISIBLE PICTURE ANCHORS and Always Keep Your Pictures Straight. A box of 5 complete sets sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. Send now. Discard inefficient wire and tacks.

BUFFALO-DEHN CO., 711 White Bldg., BUFFALO, N.Y.

AGENTS!

Become partners in our business through our profit-sharing plan. Sell "Brandt's Automatic Stropper." It hones and sharpens razors better than an expert barber. Works automatically for all style razors and safety blades. Assures an edge. Guaranteed for life. Our profit-sharing plan and our premiums make this the greatest agency proposition. Write quick for prices and territory.

C. Brandt Mfg. Co., 42 Hudson St., N. Y.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

Typewriters Slightly used machines $10.00 up. Ten Days' FREE TRIAL. Express prepaid. Price List Free.
FRANK C. PAYNE CO., Rosedale Station, Kansas City, Kan.

Receivers' Certificates

THE power of Courts of Equity to preserve property during litigation, so that as little loss as possible may result from the intervention of the courts in the ordinary business affairs of corporations, is a great boon to those whose money is invested in bonds or other obligations of companies which are compelled to liquidate and reorganize. The exercise of this power generally takes the form of the appointment of receivers. The receiver is an officer of the court appointing him, and his duties are principally and generally to preserve all the assets of the company for the benefit of creditors.

In order to fulfil these duties, he often must have immediate cash for the up-keep of the property under his care greater than the earnings of the property afford. The raising of this cash is effectuated generally by receivers' certificates. They are a well recognized element in the present financial world, and many millions of dollars are invested in them. This is the only class of securities created directly by the courts for the carrying out of its decrees. As is most fitting, the courts authorize the issue of these certificates only in the most pressing cases, and limit their use with the greatest strictness.

Importance of Certificates

Let us suppose that a railroad company has defaulted in payment of interest on its obligations; that the property of the railroad is a large and valuable one, that the railroad owns favorable franchises and serves a rich territory, and that certain of the secured creditors of the company have started suit to enforce their bonds or other obligations, and have petitioned the court to appoint a receiver pending the reorganization or sale of the railroad.

Now, obviously, if the receiver simply closed down the road, ceased to run trains, and discharged the road's employees, he would decrease the expenses of the receivership, for the operating expenses of railroads are their heaviest charge; but in following out this policy he would lose for the railroad and for the holders of its securities the three great assets, that is, franchise, business, and good will. In other words, the road would lose its vitality, and become merely a financial corpse. All the physical elements of a railroad would be present, but the life of the railroad would have departed as the wheels ceased to turn. So then it becomes of the utmost importance that the receiver be empowered to continue the business of the company as nearly as possible along the old lines, and that in case of a sale to a new management, there be a live corporation to turn over to the purchasers.

A Benefit to Receivers

Considered also from the standpoint of the general public, continuance of the business of railroads and other corporations during reorganization is of immense importance. The railroad is a matter of public concern. The franchises and rights of the corporation which constructed it were not given merely for the private gain of the corporators, but to furnish a public highway. The court, while in charge of the property, owes a duty to keep the road safe and convenient to serve the public needs. It would be hard to estimate, for instance, the confusion and turmoil which would have existed in the City of New York if the street railroads should have ceased to operate during their long receiverships.

From every point of view, therefore, it is desirable that means be given the receiver to carry on the operations of the corporation in his charge. The railroad may be in need of funds to replace worn-out equipment or rolling stock, or to make repairs thereon. In such a case, the receiver applies to the court in which he received his appointment for an order permitting him to issue receivers' certificates to pay for such necessary expenses. If good cause appears therefor, after notice to all the bondholders, the court may order the issuance of certificates, even over the objection of the bondholders.

The order under which the certificates are issued limits the issue to immediate needs of the receiver, and provides for the rate of interest which shall be paid on these certificates, and also provides that the lien of the receivers' certificates on all property in the hands of the receiver shall be second to none, and that they shall be paid prior to first mortgages or any other security on the property of the railroad. Being limited, however, by the court to the immediate needs of the receiver, the amount of these certificates is very small when compared to the regular bond issues covering the same property. So beneficial, too, is their use when prudently issued, that bondholders usually consent to their issuance, despite the fact that they take precedence in lien over the bonds.

Although in this, as in other judicial functions, the courts are inclined to conservatism, yet in the 70's and 80's, when many of the railroads of the country were being operated by receivers, the authorization of receivers' certificates was sometimes unwisely made in certain of our courts, and as a result, on the foreclosure sales of certain of these properties, sufficient funds were not realized to pay the certificates in full, and the first mortgage bondholders received nothing for their holdings.

A Convenient Investment

This condition, however, was soon checked, and it is safe to say that receivers' certificates at the present time afford a conservative investment. Moreover, they generally carry the full legal rate of interest, and are sold by the banking houses which underwrite them, in denominations of from $100 to $1,000. They are payable upon the sale of the property which they cover, and consequently run for an indefinite and short term. Although they do not possess some of the desirable features of negotiable instruments, yet they are dealt in on many stock exchanges, and form a convenient and generally secure investment for those having funds to place at a high rate for a short term.

DAVID PAINE.

To Theodore Roosevelt

[This sonnet from the pen of William Watson, the great English poet, will interest many Americans as showing a British estimate of Roosevelt.]

I hear a mighty people asking now
Who next shall be their captain and their chief.
Amidst them towers a man, as Teneriffe
Towers from the ocean, and that man art thou—
Thou of the shaggy and the craggy brow.
The day of fate comes on; the time grows brief;
Round the great ship is many a lurking reef;
And would'st thou drive once more that giant prow?
Perhaps thou shalt and must! But if the choice Fall on a lesser voyager, thou shalt still
Be what thou art, thy nation's living voice,
Wherewith she speaks in thunder. Nay, thou art more;
Thou art her fiery pulse, her conquering will;
Thou art America, dauntless Theodore.

—From the London News and Leader.

The Fireless of the Future
1912 Caloric
Fireless Cook Stove

It is the most solidly built, most durable, best looking and best cooking Fireless; the only Fireless made with steam valve and porcelain lining.

We use the porcelain lining because it saves heat better than any metal. It is like the porcelain lining of a bath tub—permanently white, easily cleaned practically indestructible.

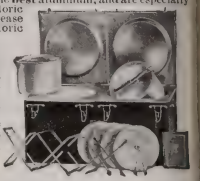
The Caloric Soapstone Radiators are the best absorbers and radiators of heat known to science. They heat the Caloric ovens to a temperature of 400°. Because of this degree of heat you can bake and roast as well as steam and stew and boil. You can cook everything without heating the stove first on an ordinary stove.

The Caloric Steam Valve is an exclusive patent. It permits the excess of steam to escape, while retaining all the heat—thus giving you the dry heat necessary to brown a roast or cake.

A 160-page, cloth-bound cook book is given you free with every Caloric. This book tells you how to Caloric-Cook over 300 dishes without wasting an ounce of food. No experiments, no uncertainty.

Aluminum Cooking Sets FREE with every Caloric

These are made of the best aluminum, and are especially designed for Caloric Cooking. They increase the utility of the Caloric many times.



Let us send you our illustrated Caloric books—free.

We have dealers in 6,000 cities. Where we have no dealers, we ship direct and pay the freight.

Investigate the Caloric now. Address

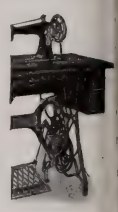
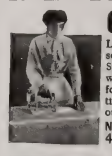
The Caloric Company
Dept. 14
Janesville, Wis.

½ A SEWING MACHINE

½ a Sewing Machine's labor is saved by oiling with "3-in-One." Every part runs like new—bearings—treadle—wheels. "3-in-One" oil doesn't dry out, collect dust, gum, or soil hands or fabric. Cleans and polishes the case, too—many other uses. Send 3 IN 1 OIL CO. 42CS Broadway, New York City, the name of your dealer who doesn't handle "3-in-One" and get generous sample and "3-in-One" Dictionary FREE OF COST. Do this right NOW.



GET YOUR SHARE



Large profits—easiest—fastest—biggest seller on the market today. National Self-Heating Gasoline Iron sells everywhere—town or country. Join our force of enthusiastic agents now. No time to lose. Complete demonstrating outfit $4.50. Write for the facts.

National Stamping & Electric Works
405 S. Clinton Street, Chicago, Illinois

Buy SILKS Direct From the Mill

Save store profits and get better quality of Dress Silks, Taffetas, Satins, etc., cut any length direct from our looms. Send 10 cents for samples.

New Wash Silks for Petticoats, Waists, Dresses, Negligees, Men's Shirts. Will wash and iron perfectly. Samples Free.

Experienced CANVASSING AGENTS Wanted. Please state if agency desired.

Auburn Silk Mill
Dept. C. - - - Auburn, N. Y.

TRY THIS WONDERFUL DISHWASHER FOR TWENTY DAYS FREE

This is the Kitchenette—a dishwasher that will wash, dry and sterilize all the dishes used by a large family in three minutes. No need to put your hands in water or perform any labor whatever, and the Kitchenette does it all and does it better. It is so easy and simple that a child can work it, and it is rigidly guaranteed.

Pay $1.00 a Month

Every housekeeper should have one at once. We don't ask you to buy it until you have tried it for 20 days and proved to your own satisfaction that it is worth its weight in gold. We don't ask you for a penny down. We ship you the Kitchenette FREE. Try it for 20 days; then if you like it, pay on our easy-as-rent payment plan—$1.00 a month for a few months. If you don't like it return it to us at our expense.

KITCHENETTE CO., 42 Pearl St.,
Buffalo, N. Y. Dept. C

Please send me a Kitchenette for 20 days' trial with the understanding that I can return it if not satisfactory.

This coupon is to be worth $1.00 if I keep the Kitchenette.

Name .....

Address .....

OUR YOUNGER READERS

"There is everything in pegging away," Mrs. Sangster says in one of her delightful "informal talks" to girls, the theme of which is the heroic petition, "Grant me the wages of going on."

Too Good to be True

YOU can teach yourself to swim and you can do it in an hour or less. I know plenty of boys and girls who have done it by following carefully these directions:

First and foremost, fix this thought clearly in your mind: The water will hold you up. It is fear and struggle that invariably send a person to the bottom. The best way to acquire confidence that makes for courage and fun is: Go squarely and reasonably at it. Begin in still water; the old swimming pool on the farm is just the place. Wade out until your shoulders are covered, float a little and trust yourself wet all over. Don't be the least atom afraid even if a little water does get into your nose and ears; wade out a little farther until you are up to your chin, and now your toes will begin to leave the bottom of the pool. Do not be alarmed. This shows you that you are a little lighter than the water. Now lift your chest and with the muscles of your stomach breathe deep, stretch your arms out to form the letter "T" of yourself, stiffen your backbone and follow your back as though suddenly you were a very important and dignified person. Your toes have come up to the surface now. Lean your head back freely as far as you can, keeping your mouth shut. Lie back with absolute confidence, and there you are floating. Keep your backbone stiff, gently paddle with your hands, and you are swimming. Make toward the shore, of course. Then try it all over again. This time kick with your feet very gently; strong strokes might turn you over and frighten you. Keep your balance and practice two or three times in straight succession. When you feel the least bit chilled come out of the water, and on your way up to the house you will feel as proud as a fighting cock. The next thing about swimming that you will have learning is the "V" stroke. Kick out until both legs are like the letter V, shut them together like the blades of a pair of scissors (which gives a strong drive ahead), then draw them up sidewise like a frog and kick persistently out again. Then try making your legs go as if you were climbing up stairs. Always remember the water will bear you up, and the great and only difficulty about swimming will be out of your way.

Summer Souvenirs and Gifts

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: While you are camping, picnicking and knocking about in the woods and country-side remember this: The season of gift-giving is coming, and such a nice part of a summer gift is the assurance that during your vacation outing you recalled your friends at home. The partridge vine with its bright scarlet berries is ripe in the woods in July. Try digging up the roots of a small, healthy plant, with the moss and loam that surrounds them, and place the little plant in a glass bowl, covered over with a smaller glass bowl that will fit inside very closely; stand it in the shade and water it now and again. You will be surprised at the way it will grow and delighted with the beautiful big ball of scarlet berries that you will have for a holiday giftie. A jar of dried field mushrooms is such a nice present for almost any one. Thread the mushrooms with a common needle and linen thread and hang them in the sun to dry. Label the bottle into which they are put, "Sun-dried mushrooms."

To make them exactly like mushrooms freshly gathered soak them in cold salt water until they swell.

A glass of fresh caraway seeds is a delightful souvenir of the country. Fill a half-pint glass jar with the dried seeds after the stems have been cut off and the seeds have been carefully examined to see that no insects are among them. Another practical and welcome gift for the friend with whom you enjoy an afternoon cup of tea or a cozy evening by the open fire is a basket of pine cones full of the sweet odor of the woods. Aftermath and everlasting dyed scarlet while they are still fresh will very well keep until Christmas time, and while you are gathering and coloring it and making it up into wreaths and balls remember how festive it will look among the holiday greens. Potted ferns, old-fashioned quill pens, balsam pillows made of the new tips of pitch pine and balsam are always sweet souvenirs of idle summer hours. I have seen exquisite hair ornaments made of tiny gilded oak and maple leaves. Several coats of gilding are necessary, but if you experiment long enough to become interested in the art, and sew the leaves to a piece of wired ribbon three-quarters of an inch wide and long enough for a bandeau, you will be delighted with the result.

"And thar' set Huldi all alone with no one nigh to hinder"
—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

These are suggestions enough. You have only to begin planning for little souvenirs and gifties for your friends, and many other delightful ones near at hand in the country will suggest themselves.

A Word to You

IN OUR May contest, a prize was awarded to a Cozy Corner girl who had not justly won it. The verses entitled "The Boy Who Ran Away" were not written by the child who sent them in. The mistake did not escape the bright eyes of our boy and girl readers.

Most magazines require a note from parents or teachers, saying that the work you send in is entirely your own. We have never required this. We want our boys and girls to maintain a high standard of honor which will make such precaution unnecessary.

In the Cozy Corner we want original work.

Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—THE RAPID SPREAD of picture theaters is reflected in news of legislation abroad to safeguard and restrict this business. Anything so distinctly demanded by the masses as that form of entertainment holds limitless possibilities of both blessing and harm.

—INTEREST IN THE notorious Camorra trial in Italy is renewed by the near approach of the end of this amazing proceeding. Great crowds are gathering near the scene to hear the verdict. The lowest element is astir with expectation of the release of the prisoners, who have been in custody six years.

—RACE SUICIDE received a decided check when, in 1896, the Province of Quebec passed a law granting a substantial premium to the head of every family that could boast of twelve or more children. Recent statistics tend to prove the excellent results of that means in peopling Canada with a hardy race.

—A NOTABLE DECISION has been rendered by a Canadian court in the suit brought by Mrs. Morin, wife of Professor Morin of McGill University, against the Canadian newspaper, Le Croiz, for libel. Mrs. Morin is a daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Charles Chiniquy, the well-known ex-priest, and Euphemie Allard, his wife. The journal published that Chiniquy, having once been a priest and bound by his solemn vows to be a celibate, was forever prevented from marrying, and that consequently his marriage was no marriage and his wife no wife. Mrs. Morin held that this reflected upon her mother and herself, and sued for $10,000 damages and by an award just rendered will receive $3,000. The court, in its decision rendered by Justice Greenshields on June 21, held that "No church, be it the great and powerful Roman Catholic Church, or the equally great and powerful Anglican Catholic Church, possesses any authority to overrule the civil law. Such authority as any church has is given it by the civil law and is subservient to the civil law." The court also added that the publication was a reflection on the validity of Dr. Chiniquy's marriage and the legitimacy of his children; that it was insulting and humiliating in the extreme, and they were consequently entitled to redress. The case has been before the Canadian courts for six months and has attracted general attention throughout the Dominion.

Get your free jar from the grocer

Why persist in using old-style, narrow-necked, tin-topped, screw-capped jars? That was the old way of "canning." The newer, easier, safer, better way is called "jarring," preserving in the all-glass

"E-Z SEAL" JARS

The sturdy, sanitary, green-tinted jars with the wide neck, the glass cap and the spring seal. Easy to fill, easy to close, easy to open and easy to clean—no twisting or turning.

Put up your vegetables and fruit in E-Z Seal jars. Save time and labor, too—your fruit will not spoil.

Free Jar—Free Book

Take this coupon to your grocer. He will give you a free jar. Write to us and we will send you a free book of recipes and canning instructions. Do this—to-day.

1-Qt. E-Z Seal Jar FREE

In order to secure free jar, present this coupon to your dealer before Sept. 1, 1912, properly filled out.

HAZEL-ATLAS GLASS CO.
Wheeling W. Va.

HAZEL-ATLAS GLASS CO.,
Wheeling, W. Va.

This is to certify that I have received one "Atlas" E-Z Seal Jar free of all cost or obligation. This is the first coupon presented by any member of my family.

Name.....

Address.....

TO THE DEALER:—Present this to jobber from whom you received E-Z Seal Jars. All coupons must be signed by you and returned before Nov. 1, 1912.

DEALER'S CERTIFICATE. This is to certify that I gave one "Atlas" E-Z Seal Jar to the person whose signature appears above.

Dealer's Name.....

Address.....

Hello, Polly!

Secure one of these entertaining companionable pets at lowest (summer) rates. Absolutely no risk. Guaranteed to talk or may be exchanged. Book on care of Parrots, shipping box and food for several weeks furnished FREE. Mexican Red Head Parrots $4.50 each, or $8.50 including cage. Mexican Double Yellow Head Parrots $8.50 each or $12 including cage. Order a "Live Talking Machine" now.

$4.50

The Bird House with a National Reputation

Bishop THE BIRD MAN

Established 1874
10 North Front Street
BALTIMORE, MD.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
½ to ⅓ MFR'S PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP

First Class Machines Fresh from the Mf'rs —Write for Illustrated Catalog 71
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

Wear Before You Buy PROCESSED HOSIERY

Pair sent you without charge to prove its Durability. Order any style from our Catalogue —"The Book of Stockings." Book describes wonderful "Dual Process"—just as soldiers' uniforms have been processed to stop bullets—so the "dual process" of stocking fabrics creates the unparalleled durability of "Processed Hosiery"—the New Stocking. Send for the Catalogue to-day and select your trial pair.

THE STOCKING STORE, - - 399 Broadway, New York

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.

$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair. Send a lock of your hair and we will mail a 22 inch short stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 6c postage.

Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A618 22 Quincy St., Chicago

THE WHEAT AND THE TARES

International Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IT IS said of Jesus' teaching, "Without a parable spake he not unto them." Wise teachers of our times follow his example. We do not, however, say that they speak in parables, but rather that they use "illustrations," stories and incidents from daily life, from school life, from history, the Bible, etc.

It has been said of the parables of Jesus that "they are always new, always as if just written, the ink never dry," that "he speaks to us in the words of our English Bible." We are even now among those who waited on the land that day as he taught them from the boat. In sight there is a field ready for the harvest. He directs our attention to the two kinds of plants growing in it, one good, the other bad; one wheat, the other tares. He tells us how they come to be growing side by side. The farmer sowed his wheat while it was day, and in the night his enemy came and sowed the tares (a plant so vicious that it poisoned those who ate bread in which it was carelessly mixed with the wheat flour). Jesus said the servants discovered that tares were growing in their Master's field, and they proposed to pull them up. "Not so," said the Master, "lest you also pull up the good wheat. Let them grow together until the harvest, then you can gather the wheat into sheaves to be put in the barn, and you can gather the tares in bundles to be burned."

We think Peter must have been in the boat with Jesus, for Jesus had asked him to push the boat out a little way, so that the throng of people could not press against him. But the other apostles were among the people. They heard the words of Jesus, and wanted to be quite sure that they rightly understood their meaning. And this is the way Jesus explained the parable to them afterward: The field is the world. The sower is Jesus himself. The enemy who sowed the tares, Satan. The good seed, the sons of the kingdom, those who love and obey God. The tares, the sons of evil, are those who would serve Satan. The harvest, the end of the world. The separation of the good and the bad, the judgment. The gathering of the sheaves into the barn, the bringing of the faithful to heaven. The burning of the tares, the punishment of those who belonged to Satan.

The First Enemy Who Sowed Tares

Let us glance back to the time when Satan sowed evil in the Garden of Eden, where the good seed, Adam and Eve, had been placed—so good that they were but "little lower than God" (Ps. 8: 5, Revised Version), or according to the Old Version, "a little lower than the angels." Satan persuaded Adam and Eve to eat of the forbidden fruit, and so the tares of disobedience to God sprang up in their hearts, and but for the mercy and loving kindness of God they would have perished from the earth. God not only let them live, but Adam lived to be nine hundred and thirty years old. The promise of a Saviour was given to them, and they were given another chance to acquit themselves as those of the kingdom—a true son and a true daughter of God. Here we see a fundamental difference between the tare growing in the field, whose identity can never be changed, but it must always be a tare, and the human tare, which may become as good wheat through the grace of God by his Son Jesus Christ our Saviour. From Adam and Eve until now Satan has been sowing the tares of sin in the human field, and so there have always been some bad men and women in the world.

Perhaps we have often heard the question asked, "Why does God allow the wicked to live?" It is very like the suggestion made by the servants to their master that they might pull up the tares. Dr. John Hall once answered this question very wisely as follows: "The tares are not bad doctrines, but bad people, and they are allowed to remain because of their nearness to the good. Here is a careless man, but wedded to a godly woman; his removal, his being summoned to judgment, would be a blow to her. Here are children learning to fear God, but the parents who are to care for them and give them a start in life are not Christians. Here is a strong money-making merchant who despises religion, deems it, perhaps, a superstition for women and children. Some religious members of his family will survive him and have funds through his secular success with which to glorify God. The wealth of such sinners, which they were spared to make, is sometimes laid up for the just." (A noted gambler in New York City won and laid by a large fortune. He died suddenly, and his wife and daughter inherited all of the money. Shortly after, they both died, but they had become Christians, and they left the gambler's fortune to benevolent institutions and the church.) Dr. Hall continues: "Had there been a dozen righteous in Sodom, the people of Sodom would have been spared, and probably not bated one whit their contempt for the righteous; but there was not "wheat" enough to make it worth while to tolerate the tares for its sake, so the wheat was taken out (Lot and his family) and the tares were destroyed. God in conscious almighty power; in considerate regard for the children of his love; in clear view of the time when his angels will make a final separation and his government will be cleared of all suspicion, lets the wicked alone because of their closeness to the righteous."

A Modern Example

No need to read in the Bible, "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust," for we see it all as we look out upon the book of nature; we see it in the streets of the town or the city where we live. As we look another reason appears before us why God tolerates the wicked: The tare in the wheat-field can never become a stalk of good wheat, but the human tare, the son of Satan, may become a son of the kingdom. What if God had not allowed such a tare as Jerry McAuley to live, but had cut him off in the days when he was a river thief, a prize-fighter, and almost everything but a murderer. Instead God let him live even in prison fifteen years after he had been convicted of highway robbery. And in the prison he was changed from a tare into wheat, being converted through the efforts of a reformed convict. After that he became so exemplary that he was pardoned out after having served only half of his term. Almost the first use he made of his liberty was to establish the "Helping Hand for Men," otherwise known as the "Jerry McAuley Mission." For many years he preached the Gospel there every night—so long as his health permitted, for he was stricken with tuberculosis and died at forty-five years of age. His last words were, as he pointed toward heaven, "It's all right up there!"

A newspaper reporter when visiting Jerry McAuley's Mission met a white-haired old man who said: "I always come to Jerry's Mission when I feel a little uncertain about my theology. There is no nonsense here about the disagreements between science and religion. These people know that heaven or hell awaits them, and they are earnest in proportion to their certainty."

Phillips Brooks has said, "Every man is good. Every man is bad. Nor is this all. Not only in the same man, but even in the same deed, the good and the evil are commingled. The act of benevolence flecked and stained with pride; the self-restraint which has some self-indulgence at its heart; truth told for false purposes, religion with some soul of selfishness." So each of us and all of us must constantly be on the watch for this arch-enemy of ours, lest he sow the vicious seeds of sin in our hearts. Each of us must try to keep his own field of life just as free as possible from tares; we must try to be as like good wheat as we can.

Many Grades of Wheat

As there are many grades of wheat, so there are degrees of goodness in human life. In the year 1848, when there was a riot in Paris, and the mob was sweeping through a street, killing the soldiers, spiking the guns, an old man suddenly appeared, unarmed, and signaled for silence. The leader of the mob recognized him, and called out to the rioters, "Citizens, it is De la

Continued on next page

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for July 28, 1912. "The wheat and the tares." Matt. 13: 24-30; 38-43. GOLDEN TEXT: "Gather up first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat into my barn." Matt. 13: 30.

"Linene"

RAPHAEL ANGELO RUBENS

Try One and you will say:

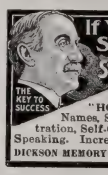
"That's the Most Comfortable Collar I Ever Had 'Round My Neck."

But that isn't all you can say, for it's the most economical collar you can buy. Just think, only 25 cents for a box of 10 at the stores. If you can't get them there we'll mail 10 for 30 cents or a single sample for 6 cents in U.S. stamps. Tell us what size you wear and whether you want the Raphael, Angelo or Rubens.

These collars are made of fine cloth, starch-finished—they look just like linen. You can reverse and wear the other side when soiled. For your own comfort and economy you should try them at once. Write us.

Beautiful Catalogue Free.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR COMPANY
Dept. T, Boston, Mass.



If YOU Would Be Successful Stop Forgetting

THE KEY TO SUCCESS

MEMORY the BASIS of all KNOWLEDGE

Send today for my FREE BOOK "HOW TO REMEMBER" — Faces, Names, Studies — Develops Will, Concentration, Self-Confidence, Conversation, Public Speaking. Increases income. Address

DICKSON MEMORY SCHOOL, 701 Auditorium Bldg., CHICAGO

25c—Coupons—25c

Do not forget the Coupons (worth 25 cents each) published in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD. The splendid premiums are, in most cases, worth at retail the full amount sent for the short-term subscriptions. Get your friends to subscribe—Four Months for 25 Cents!

Remember, August 1st is Last Mailing Date

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

LADY AGENTS make large profit selling Radium Elastic Supporters; sanitary, made of soft perforated web. By mail 25c. Catalog free. Other good selling articles.

Illinois Suspender Co., 416 So. 5th Ave., Chicago

YOU CAN AFFORD a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person; "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," Round or Shape Notes, for $3 for 100. Words and music, 88 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. HACKETT, 128 North Wayne Street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

$ $ $ $ $ $

Do You Want Money for Your Vacation?

You will receive from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a splendid start in business

FREE

And your name will be entered in our contests in which you can win

Crest Pins
Cameras
Name Stamps

Christian Herald Crest Pin

Pocket Knives
Roller Skates
Watches, Etc.

Any Boy who would like to try should fill out this Coupon and mail it at once.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. Date.....

Please send me a Free start in business and tell me all about how I may earn Vacation Money if I do good work.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

SALLOW FACES

Often Caused by Tea and Coffee Drinking.

How many persons realize that tea and coffee so disturb digestion that they produce a muddy, yellow complexion?

A ten days' trial of Postum has proven a means, in thousands of cases, of clearing up a bad complexion.

A Washn. young lady tells her experience:

"All of us — father, mother, sister and brother — had used tea and coffee for many years until finally we all had stomach troubles more or less.

"We all were sallow and troubled with pimples, breath bad, disagreeable taste in the mouth, and all of us simply so many bundles of nerves.

"We didn't realize that tea and coffee caused the trouble until one day we ran out of coffee and went to borrow some from a neighbor. She gave us some Postum and told us to try that.

"Although we started to make it, we all felt sure we would be sick if we missed our strong coffee, but we tried Postum and were surprised to find it delicious.

"We read the statements on the pkg., got more and in a month and a half you wouldn't have known us. We all were able to digest our food without any trouble, each one's skin became clear, tongues cleaned off, and nerves in fine condition. We never use anything now but Postum. There is nothing like it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL without a cent deposit, prepay the freight and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL. IT ONLY COSTS one cent to learn our unheard of prices and marvelous offers on highest grade 1912 model bicycles.

FACTORY PRICES Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you write for our large Art Catalog and learn our wonderful proposition on first sample bicycle going to your town.

RIDER AGENTS everywhere are making big money exhibiting and selling our bicycles. We Sell cheaper than any other factory. TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, repairs and all sundries at half usual prices.

Do Not Wait; write today for our special offer.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept P-71 CHICAGO

Alco Self Heating Curling Iron

AGENTS MEN & WOMEN WANTED

A Big Summer Money Maker.

Agents Making $5 to $10 a day. Every woman wants one. Write us at once and send for terms for agents and sample. Enclose 10c for same.

GOOD SIDELINE FOR SALESMEN

The Self-Heating Curling Iron Mfg. Co., Inc.

911 Masonic Bldg. CHICAGO, U. S. A.

Rent 10 Months— Then It's Yours!

This Great Visible Writer

The Famous Oliver Model No. 3

Send your name and we will tell you about the greatest typewriter proposition in the world.

Typewriters Distributing Syndicate, 166 R. L. N. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

Four Months' Coupon Offer

Have you selected your premium for sending in the 25 cent coupons printed in last week's issue? We give you a splendid present for one or more coupons sent us with 25 cents each. The 25 cents pays for a new four months' subscription to The Christian Herald.

Remember, August 1st is last mailing date

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N.Y.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

SOCIAL WORK AS A PROFESSION

Training with field work under Specialists in Civics, Charities, Child Helping, Settlements, Recreation, etc. Single Courses $12.50. 12 Courses (Diploma) $75. 16th year opens Oct. 1.

Graham Taylor, Pres. John C. Kolbly, Y. M. C. A. Bldg.

Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy. 31 W. Lake St., Chicago

YOU CAN WRITE A SHORT STORY

Remember—you can write short stories successfully. Learn the right method before spending time and money. We help those who want to, and show those who can't. Write today for free booklet.

School of Short-Story Writing Dept. 44 Page Bldg. Chicago

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

Eure. Sixty years of pure life is about to address you." And they stood still, and listened, and the mob was checked. We must compare such a man with the finest of wheat, and his example inspires us to be the best we can be. It has been said that "to be" is higher than "to do," because it embraces "to do" within it. To do deeds of mercy is only a part of the precept to be merciful; to do justice to others is only a part of the precept to be just, and the Gospel requires not merely that man's deeds should be in accordance with God's law, but that his spirit should also be penetrated with the spirit of that law, and that his deeds should be in harmony with his inner life, and with all that comes from that inner life.

Degenerate Wheat

The peasants in Palestine believe that in wet seasons the wheat turns into tares! But of course this is not so; the wheat, however, develops so poorly, its grains not filling out, that it does quite resemble the tares. Alas! one sees sometimes in Christians a state to be compared with this. They make a start as the followers of Jesus, but they do not follow closely; from what they say and do one would hardly know that they were followers at all. Such Christians are hardly above the grade of tares.

Let it be our purpose to be that sort of a Christian that may be compared with the soundest, fullest wheat, and we can be, God helping us, if we pray to him.

Rust on Wheat

Then there is another danger that sometimes takes hold of wheat in the field; it is called "wheat rust." In that condition the wheat is not worth harvesting. Something akin to this sometimes takes hold on the followers of Jesus, the sons of the kingdom. They used to attend church, but now they are seen there very seldom, the automobile ride, or the excursion down the river or on the railroad claims them. They tell those with whom they once tirelessly worked to relieve the sufferings of the sick and the poor that they are "now too busy for such matters." Dr. Joseph Parker in the People's Bible says: "It is easy to see whether a man is going up or going down—we feel it. It is a sight to cry over with rivers of tears to see the men we loved, and all but worshiped, grown all over with tares. They used to be so noble, kind, sympathetic, generous, helpful—the world could never be cold to us so long as they were in it. Day by day the tares grow in number and strength till we know not what the end will be."

Teaching the Lesson to Children

As this lesson occurs about harvest time, it will be an easy matter for teachers living in small towns or in the country to secure some bunches of wheat to use by way of illustration, and it should by all means be done. It will not be so easy to get tares, and some sort of noxious weed will have to be substituted, or a drawing made on the blackboard. Only one point should be made in teaching; being useless, even worse, bad like the tare, or good and helpful like the wheat. Give the children a chance to choose which they will be like, then warn them against certain bad deeds that are like tares, and get them to name good deeds that will be like wheat.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

Time for Public Interference

THE terrible catastrophe to the Vanman dirigible airship, almost immediately following the tragic deaths of Miss Quimby and her companion, emphasizes the danger of air navigation. Even the safest type of airship —for that is what the dirigible is thought to be—is far from safe. Count Zeppelin's own experiences with this type have been a long chapter of accidents, though without loss of life. In the present state of air navigation would not the public be justified in attempting such a degree of regulation as would put an end to the misuse of airships at public exhibitions and thereby keep down the rapidly increasing roll of fatalities? Fifteen aviators lost their lives in June, and seven have already been killed in July. Deaths are becoming almost a daily occurrence.

This shocking slaughter is not necessary to the development of aviation. It tends to make the public hold human life more and more cheap. As the use of aeroplanes increases and the number of persons eager to operate them grows larger, and as exhibitions become more numerous, fatal catastrophes will multiply unless the state interferes to prevent reckless performances under improper conditions.—New York Tribune.

. . .

Big Bible Demand in China

EAGER for Western intelligence, especially since the departure of the Manchu rulership, the people of China are demanding Bibles in excess of numbers which the American Bible Society finds itself financially able to supply. Dr. Hykes, the society's agent in China, reports that prejudice has disappeared with the Manchus and that China really wishes at last to find out what Christianity is. The Chinese and others buy Bibles, but they do not always pay all the cost. The society appropriates $52,500 this year for Bible work for the Chinese, but it will not, it is now stated, meet the demands of these wideawake, revolutionized peoples.

Owing to the disturbed conditions obtaining last year, the sales of some colporteurs fell off 6,000 to 12,000 copies. Yet in spite of drawbacks, the sales last year increased in the whole country 15,000 copies.

As never before, there are dialect Bibles to meet these new demands of this year. The question is solely the cost of manufacture and distribution beyond amounts paid by the purchasers. The Bible Society is now asking whether the churches will see to it that no one in China who desires a Bible shall be compelled to go without one.—New York Times.

. . .

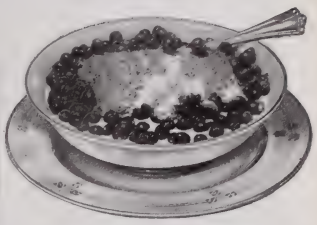
Big Business in a Big State

THE scale on which things are done in Texas is indicated by the demand for thirty thousand refrigerator-cars to ship the vegetables and fruits of the State this season. Four thousand cars are wanted for onions, four thousand for early potatoes, four thousand for peaches, six thousand for watermelons and cantaloups, sixteen hundred for tomatoes, and the rest for miscellaneous products.—Scientific American.

You Can Make One Child Happy

Mont-Lawn, the "Children's Paradise," is open. There are hundreds of little tenement children eagerly pleading for a holiday there. Any reader who contributes now can be the means of bringing joy and health to some poor little waif. Send your gift to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and help to make at least one child happy.

"The World Is Hers"



The sense of freedom that comes from a knowledge of food values makes the housewife equal to any emergency in household management. She is ready for the uninvited guest— for the disappointments of uncertain domestic service. "The world is hers" if she knows and the many wholesome, nourishing dishes that can be made with it. Shredded Wheat is ready-cooked and ready-to-serve. Nothing so wholesome and nourishing and nothing so easy to prepare as Shredded Wheat Biscuit with huckleberries or other fresh fruits.

Shredded Wheat

Heat one or more Biscuits in the oven to restore crispness and then cover with huckleberries or other berries. Serve with milk or cream and sweeten to suit the taste. A delicious, appetizing dish for the sultry August days.

For noon-day lunch nothing so delicious and nourishing as Triscuit, the Shredded Wheat wafer, eaten with butter, soft cheese or marmalade. Take it with you to the camp or the bungalow, on picnics or excursions on land or sea.

The Shredded Wheat Company

Niagara Falls, N.Y.

DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent prepaid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Makes and burns its own gas and produces a pure white, steady, safe, 100 candle power light. No wick, smoke, dirt, grease or odor.

THE BEST LIGHT

Lighted instantly. Over 200 styles. Agents wanted. Write for catalog

THE BEST LIGHT CO.

3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN FLAKES
THE ORIGINAL HAS THIS SIGNATURE
W.K. Kellogg
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO.
BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
The sweetheart of the corn
"Nothing to do
till Tomorrow"
LOOK FOR THIS SIGNATURE
W. K. Kellogg

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JULY 24, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 30. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

THE CATHEDRAL AT CHARTRES

From an Original Colored Etching by G. Marchelli

See description in this issue

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

P. R., Allentown, Pa. Please explain bimetallism.

Bimetallism is a term employed to describe a financial system wherein gold and silver are used as standard money and coined without limit at a fixed ratio. Bimetallism proper implies, first, that the money unit shall rest upon two metals; second, that these metals shall enjoy equal and unlimited coinage privileges; third, that they shall be connected by a fixed and definite legal ratio; and fourth, that the coins made from them shall be a full legal-tender.

M. R. G., Thompsonville, Ill. Who are the Scotch-Irish who have many societies throughout the country?

The Scotch-Irish are the descendants of the Scotch Presbyterians whom James I. sent over (1609-1612) to colonize Ulster, or the Northern province of Ireland.

M. B., Holland, Mich. None of the great political parties is based on religion, although an effort is now being made to control them in the interest of the Catholic Church. The American ideal, upon which our government was founded, is that church and state are forever separate and that absolute freedom of religion is guaranteed to all. Rome, however, wants to dominate the state (as she once did in almost all the European countries, but does no longer), and to attain this end, she takes every available means to win strength in the rank and file of the political parties, and among the leaders and high officials of State and nation. Every American, no matter to what religious faith he may belong, should oppose with all the forces at his command the attempt to Romanize this republic.

W. O. D., Athens, Ga. 1. What is the meaning of Matt. 5: 17? 2. Where do some get the idea that women are sometimes commanded to preach? Where in the Bible is a woman commanded to preach? 3. What is the meaning of Heb. 12: 14?

1. The Jews evidently had the impression that the new Gospel which Jesus taught was subversive of the religious teachings they had respected, especially the law of Moses and the prophecies. At the outset, he reassured them on this point. He had come to fulfil, not to uproot or destroy. 2. There is no such command in the Bible. In some of the Epistles we have references to godly women who did good service in connection with the early church; but theirs was a humble ministry and not one of either teaching or preaching. 3. Paul was here impressing upon the Hebrews the value of a pacific and amiable spirit, avoiding quarrels, objectionable exercise of authority and petty jealousy. They were to be helpful and considerate toward the "lame" (the weak in faith) and to guide them aright in love and kindness. The three verses 12-14 form an exhortation to holy, sanctified living.

T. G. M., Sandusky, O. What is German silver?

A composition consisting approximately of six parts copper, three zinc, and one nickel. These proportions form a tough white metal susceptible of fine polish and well adapted to the manufacture of spoons, forks and other domestic utensils.

Reader, Whitney, S. D. 1. Please explain Mark 9: 43-48. 2. Also Mark 13: 14-25. 3. Are evil thoughts Satan's messengers? How can we best combat them?

1. In the preceding verses Jesus had rebuked John for exclusiveness. Then, leaving that incidental topic, he returns to the theme he had begun when he took up the little child as an object-lesson. The point is that humility is the gateway to heaven, and that it is better to make any personal sacrifice than to lead another astray, or to indulge selfish and sinful propensities to our own eternal loss. 2. The "abomination of desolation" is interpreted as pointing to the Roman ensigns as the symbols of an idolatrous pagan power—the same power which profaned the Hebrew altar. The whole passage foreshadows the evils that were to accompany the destruction of Jerusalem. Then, from verse 21 to the close of the chapter, the prophetic theme is changed and deals with the further vision of the second coming and the last judgment. The first part of the prophecy is already fulfilled. 3. Evil thoughts may come even to the purest mind. If we ask divine help in ridding ourselves of them and at the same time set resolutely to thinking of other matters or doing such work as will get our mind healthfully occupied, we shall succeed in banishing them. Pray for strength, keep busy, read helpful books, choose as far as you can cheerful companions, and cultivate a habit of prompt resistance to any evil intruder which knocks at the gate, and remember that the sin lies not in the temptation or suggestion, but in the encouragement. Christ himself was tempted. Resist evil thoughts with all your strength, and if you ask for divine reinforcement you will assuredly receive it.

Reader, Unionville, Md. 1. Who started the first Sunday school? 2. How long after the death of Christ did Paul begin to preach?

1. The first Sunday school was established by Robert Raikes, an English philanthropist, about 1784. He found the poor children of Gloucester growing up without any knowledge of the Gospel. Many of them when they came to his little gathering on Sunday at 10 A.M. were ragged and shoeless. What was probably the first Sunday school in America was founded by Thomas Crenshaw, a Methodist, in Hanover County, Va., in 1786. 2. We first hear of Paul in connection with the martyrdom of Stephen (A.D. 29). His conversion occurred probably a year later, and he began his active Christian career almost immediately afterward. The crucifixion and resurrection, according to the best Biblical authority, both occurred between March 18 and 20, A.D. 29.

M. L. M., Letts, Ind. Kindly explain the seeming cruelty of the "wars of extermination" given in Joshua in the Bible. I get help by looking at those nations as a type of evil in our hearts that must be utterly destroyed.

The treatment of the Canaanites and other nations, as related in the book of Joshua, has been much discussed, and while some have condemned his severity, the fact is pointed out that the extensive conquests of Joshua did not result in the complete extermination of the Canaanites. Many of them continued to occupy isolated strongholds throughout the land and lived at peace with Israel. Principal Fairbairn, Dean Graves and other eminent commentators have contended that what seems to us to have been unnecessary cruelty was the natural interpretation, in a rude age, of the divine method of ruling the world and of meting out justice to the wicked.

W. J. K., Shepherdstown, W. Va. Why is the new year not commenced on December 25 instead of January 1?

The year can begin on any date, determined according to views, history, traditions, or other circumstances of the people adopting it. Our calendar as now constituted follows that of the Romans, who commenced their year in January in honor of the god Janus, who was supposed to preside at the beginning or opening of all things. It was not until 1752, however, that England and other European countries adopted this style, the legal New Year previously beginning on March 25. The length of the tropical year as measured by a revolution of the earth round the sun being the lapse of time from one vernal equinox to the next, the beginning of the year in the northern hemisphere should naturally occur in the latter part of March. It was in this month (Nisan) that the ancient Babylonians celebrated the first of their year in honor of the return of the sun, which they termed the sun-god Bel-Merodach.

K. T., Wichita, Kan. 1. Who discovered the process of photography and in what way? 2. Who invented the first typewriter?

1. Louis Daguerre, a Frenchman, in 1839 was the first to produce a direct photographic positive in the camera by means of a highly polished silver surfaced plate exposed to the vapors of iodine and subsequent development with mercury vapor. Fox Talbot, an Englishman, in the same year was the first to produce positive proofs from negatives. 2. It is hard to say when the first movable type machine was produced. We find the idea of a typewriter recorded in an English patent of 1714. From 1840 the inventive genius of America was busy upon the idea, but it was not until 1868 that Latham Sholes, a Milwaukee printer, constructed a machine that could really write. During the following five years he so improved on it that the great firm of Remington & Sons, gunmakers of Ilion, N. Y., became interested and brought to bear on Sholes's invention the skill of their gunmakers, with the result that the famous Remington typewriter was put on the market in 1874.

Mrs. J. N., Chicago, Ill. In I. Sam. 16: 18 it says David was a mighty, valiant man, and a man of war. Later, in I. Sam. 17: 33, Saul says: "Thou art but a youth." Also I. Sam. 16: 21, 22, compared with I. Sam. 17: 58.

It would appear that David's talents were already well known and this statement "by a servant" (tradition says it was Doeg) probably magnified his prowess intentionally, to make a good impression. Still, he was only a youth, though stout of limb and fearless of heart. In I. Sam. 17: 58, Saul's question to Abner was probably prompted by jealousy. A few years had passed since the shepherd minstrel was the king's harpist and these years may have produced such a change in his appearance—from the smooth-faced youth to the bronzed and bearded young soldier—that for the moment he was not recognized by Saul. Or the king might simply have pretended not to know him. In either case, it is not necessary to regard the statements in the Book as inconsistent, since they are clearly capable of reasonable explanation.

LAST CHANCE!

Four Months at Half Price

DEAR FRIEND: Our four months' coupon offer made in the July 10th issue of The Christian Herald has met with a hearty response from our subscribers. The opportunity to secure a trial subscription to The Christian Herald at half price, or only twenty-five cents for seventeen issues, is welcomed by thousands of Christian people who have not heretofore been regular readers of our paper.

Have you sent in your coupons and selected one of the valuable premiums given for one or more of these short-term subscriptions? Remember it is with your aid that we expect to reach the Million Mark. We count on you for your help. One coupon only is well worth while both to you and to us. Two or more coupons will bring you handsome rewards, both in immediate returns by a beautiful premium, and also because of the satisfaction you will have for good work well done.

Think over your list of friends, who among them would be benefited by reading The Christian Herald. Cut out the four coupons from the July 10th issue, and get as many new subscribers to sign them at once. Send them in to us with twenty-five cents each on or before August 1st, the LAST MAILING DATE. If you have not the July 10th issue at hand, send as many names as you can with twenty-five cents each for a four months' subscription, and we will send you a handsome premium of our own selection. This is the only short-term subscription offer we will make this year, so do not wait for another chance. This is positively the Last Call. Act at once and do your share!

Yours for the Million Mark!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. L. L. W., Ashland, Pa. Episcopalian.

D. M., Chicago. Some distinguished Hebrew preachers of liberal tendencies recognize Jesus as a great teacher and prophet, though not divine. This is probably what the rabbi had in mind.

L. M., Worthington, Ind. The monthly list of "Bible Questions" deals with topics which can be answered through either the Revised or Authorized Version. You should have a Concordance; and a Bible with a Word-Book would be very helpful.

Mrs. T. M., Alma, Ill. They are teachers of false doctrines, even although they do not hold to some of the views of the other wing of the same church. As you yourselves are people of influence and intelligence, why not try to gather around you the nucleus of a small congregation on the lines of your own denomination, or, possibly, a union church? Write to the American Sunday School Union, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Mrs. A. D., Conway, Mo. The passages on the subject are: Acts 1: 25; Luke 16: 23 and 23: 43; II. Cor. 12: 2-4; Heb. 12: 23; John 3: 13 and 20: 17; Acts 2: 34; Heb. 11: 39; I. Thess. 4: 15-17. The last is the clearest and most emphatic on the subject. To the disembodied spirit, freed from the relations of space and time, the interval will seem to pass as an instant and in this manner all will be equalized, as Paul implies.

E. P. E., Wausa, Neb. God's power is not shortened, but results are proportioned to our faith. There are many instances in the church to-day of wonderful answers to the prayer of faith. It is well to remember, however, that God has placed certain means within our reach and we should employ these means and ask his blessing upon them. Jesus himself never said anything in disparagement of the profession of Luke the "beloved physician."

A. N. H., Silver City, N. M. There is no foundation in Scripture for masses, the lighting of candles to show souls the way out of purgatory and the sprinkling of holy water. In the early Christian Church, Christians were told to confess their sins to one another and to God, but there is no warrant for auricular confession as practiced in the Roman Church. Idolatry in every form is condemned in the Bible, and Mariolatry, or the worship of Mary, is idolatry.

An Appreciative Subscriber

I cannot express my pleasure and my gratitude to you for all which came to me safely—the lovely book that I have enjoyed so much (Mother), the beautiful pictures, and the most valuable Almanac that I would not part with, and again the dearest magazine. May you live long and prosper, shall be my prayer for you.

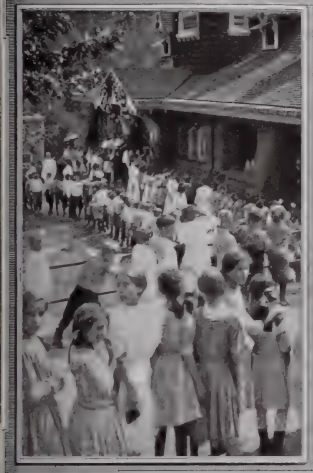
Amherst, Mass. MARION L. CLARKE.

NEW YORK, JULY 24, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

On the Way to the "Temple"

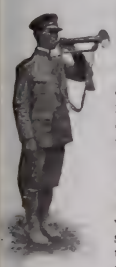


Dr. C. H. Mead Addressing the Children

Drinking in Eloquence

MONT-LAWN'S HAPPY "FOURTH"

Crowds of Delighted Visitors Join with the Tenement Waifs in Celebrating the Day



PERFECT weather, an unusually large attendance of visitors and a delightful program made the Fourth of July at Mont-Lawn this year an ideal holiday. Never did the "Children's Paradise" look more attractive. The great lawns in front of the cottages had been neatly trimmed, and all the buildings were prettily decorated with flags and bunting, while long lines of varicolored flags and streamers flew from tree to tree, giving added picturesqueness o the scene. The 312 fresh-air chilren, the little guests of the Home, vere awake betimes in eager anticiation of the celebration which marks he red-letter day of all the year for Mont-Lawn.

About ten o'clock, the first of the visitors began to arrive. Every train and ferry-boat from that time on added to the number. These arrivals ncluded many good friends who have ontributed to the support of the Home for years, some of them coming rom considerable distances. There vas also the usual crowd of visitors rom Nyack and the surrounding vilages, who come to the Home every ourth to enjoy the singing of the hildren and the patriotic oratory on he lawn.

It was a pretty and inspiring scene o watch—the coming of the guests. arge parties came from train and oat in the commodious CHRISTIAN ERALD Home stages, while hundreds nore rode in other kinds of conveyances. Each fresh group of arrivals vas enthusiastically greeted by the hildren who massed themselves in welcoming bands at the entrance odge and different points along the driveway, sending up volleys of cheers for the newcomers.

At noon, the Home settlement looked like a populous country village enjoying a festival. To the grown-up spectator at Mont-Lawn, remembering the heat and strain of the city and the hurly-burly of everyday life, a holiday at The Children's Paradise is ever a novel and refreshing experience. A safe and sane Fourth carefully planned and carried out as such a celebration should be, "with children everywhere," is an inspiring event not soon to be forgotten. It was worth while for the hundreds of guests to feel the charm of the place on the greatest of holidays. The Abigail Kindergarten Band played stirring airs, the children danced beneath the flag-pole with Old Glory fluttering gaily above them, and the whole scene was one of bustle and joyous excitement. At twelve o'clock, Matron Goering sounded the bell for the assembly for the children's dinner. From all parts of the grounds and even from the distant ball field came the happy little tenement folks, hurrying to take their places in the line for the march to Fort Plenty. The visitors crowded around to watch them as the boys, at a signal, opened ranks to permit the girls to pass between and after the last little miss had gone into the big open-air dining-hall, the ranks were closed and the boys resumed their march, entering the building in perfect order. When all the children were in their places at the tables, at a tap of the bell by one of the teachers, they sang their quaint old grace in unison, their voices swelling in perfect time and accord throughout the verse:

> God is great and God is good,
> And we thank him for our food;
> By his hand must all be fed.
> Give us, Lord, our daily bread. Amen.

Another stroke of the bell and all took their seats and did justice to the meal on the long tables. When the dinner was ended, they sang the blessing which has always been sung at Mont-Lawn during the eighteen years since the Home was first opened. Then they marched out of Fort Plenty, down the gravel path to the playgrounds.

At one o'clock the guests' luncheon was served, and at two P.M. the march was begun to the Children's Temple for the special song service, always a feature of the Fourth at Mont-Lawn. Troops of wee little lads and lasses, glad to be away from the huddled city slums, came running across stretches of velvety grass and beneath the grand old trees that surround the Home on every side. In the beautiful Temple they took their places, over three hundred strong. With prayer and song and blessing, that little army of glad-hearted boys and girls, of varying creeds and nationalities, sang the sweet songs of faith and patriotism and declared their allegiance to Old Glory. The familiar songs of the Children's Paradise were rendered with fine effect by the little singers under the leadership of Professor Henry Noll, their music-teacher. "Mont-Lawn Bells," "Can we Hear the Flowers Grow?" "Jesus Loves the Little Children," "It Never Pays to Be Bad," and the "Glory Song" were prime favorites, and won the hearty applause of the audience, which crowded every available part of the Temple, including the long ambulatory and the gallery above the platform.

Continued on next page

On the Lawn with Their Friends

MONT-LAWN'S HAPPY "FOURTH"

One of the annual features of Independence Day at Mont-Lawn is the patriotic hour, and the speakers never fail to have a good-sized audience. The children, smiling and eager, were banked on the long grassy slopes in a semi-circle, and behind them were hundreds of visitors, seated and standing, the whole forming a very picturesque setting for the open-air exercises. The president of the Home introduced the speakers to the audience. Rev. C. H. Mead, in a spirited address full of humor, drove home lessons of honor, manliness, courage and truth. Mr. Edward R. Johnstone delivered the patriotic address of the day and was listened to with close attention. He sketched, in language which children as well as adults could readily understand, the glorious story of the Flag, and the rise of the American Republic until it has become one of the great powers of the world, with an influence extending to the remotest parts of the globe. During his speech he introduced interesting reminiscences of distinguished Americans. Rev. Ferdinand C. Iglehart gave a very beautiful and inspiring talk on love and children. "Where love for God is," he said by way of text, "there will always be love for the little children." He paid a touching tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, whose love of children made him known throughout the world as "The Children's Friend." Dr. J. M. Farrar, of Brooklyn, the last speaker, made a brief, characteristic address which evoked roars of merriment from both children and grown-ups. All the speakers were rewarded with liberal applause.

During the afternoon the visitors inspected the dormitories, with their long rows of snowy white cots. They strolled through the grounds, went up to the stone tower of Fort Plenty to see the bells and hear the "Westminster chimes"; they looked over the new bathing pavilion now in process of erection, they viewed the big rainy-day playground and the spacious Home kitchen on the floor below, with its ample provision for turning out nearly a thousand meals daily for three hundred children and the working staff. They chatted with the little tenement waifs on the lawn and found among them children of many nationalities, American predominating. Some of the visitors sought out little beneficiaries who were at the Home enjoying a fresh-air outing through their generosity, and were delighted to find them well and happy. Still others went to the clothing room, and eyes opened wide in amazement to see the great presses, some full of blankets and sheeting, others piled up with hundreds of simple dresses for girls and suits for boys, all fresh and clean and ready for the use of the little guests.

A new feature of the celebration this year was the introduction of daylight fireworks, an exhibition of which took place during the afternoon. It has been found from experience during former years that regular fireworks keep the children up too late. The daylight show, therefore, was a welcome novelty. A number of pieces were sent up from the east field, and there were loud cheers as each piece disclosed itself to view in the upper air, many in fantastic forms, as animals, fishes, caps, cubes, American flags, etc. There was a great scramble among the little folks to secure the various trophies as they came to earth. After this diversion, the children, who had been active all day long, were seated in circles on the grass and served with cake and ice cream. The guests were served with a light refreshment immediately before their departure.

It was now nearly six o'clock and the stages and other vehicles were in readiness to carry the guests to the trains. This work occupied nearly an hour, and shortly after seven o'clock the last of the visitors had departed, and the children were in their dormitories, saying their evening prayers before retiring to their snowy cots for the night.

. . .

A Visitor's Impressions

THE country; the river; ice-cream; flags; games; full permission to shout and cheer; big firecrackers that turned into balloons, which, after they had been floating a while, were discovered to be birds and flying fish, and came sailing back to earth; songs in the chapel, and speeches on the lawn from men that made you laugh riotously—it's altogether too bad that Fourth of July comes only once a year, and that only about one-tenth of all the fresh-air children who come during the season can be at Mont-Lawn on that gala day.

An Audience That Can Appreciate a Good Story

But for three hundred children to go through one such day is a fairly big item in the sum total of the world's merriment and progress. In the first place, you could hardly have three hundred children looking at such a flag as rolls from the Mont-Lawn staff on Independence Day without putting something into their make-up which ought to count till they have cast their last vote or tended their last grandchild. There is really something remarkable about that biggest one of the Mont-Lawn flags. The pole is not so high but that the flag seems to be on rather intimate terms with the good green earth, and the children and their friends. It rolls sturdily, gently, leisurely, grandly, in incomparable beauty and with indescribable grace, and as a child watches it, even when he does not know he is watching it, the conviction will get down to the roots of his soul that a flag of such beauty as that, and such majesty, is bound to fly forever. And while he watches the flag, he sees the river gleaming beyond the trees at the foot of the hills, and the words of the old hymn he sings at school mean more than they could have meant if sung with only the picture of roofs and bricks and towers in his mind.

> I love thy rocks and rills,
> Thy woods and templed hills;
> My heart with rapture thrills
> Like that above.

Fort Plenty! What a name! Safety and satiety! It is truly pitiful to think of the meager meals eaten, one must fear, on so many of the three hundred and sixty-five other days. But for ten days really enough to eat—and on this great day enough and then ice cream! Sitting there with the breezes slipping in from the mountain's crest and laughing in among the trees, with the flag gleaming near, and the river gleaming below, who shall say what impressions may not be made which shall lead these "little citizens" to insist in later years, when they shall be no longer little, though citizens still, that the flag must float over a land in which plenty shall be more common, and where it will be a harder thing than now to find families who live in want!

And the guests! Some familiar, some strange, but all welcome, and all making Mont-Lawn and its work a part of the great world of grown-up folks and grown-up deeds. "I'll be grown-up, too, by and by," some of the children may be thinking "and I'll go on the Fourth of July to see boys and girls. It will be nice to hear them cheer for me when I drive in." And while they are thinking this, something within them may suggest that the way to bring the heartiest and most affectionate cheers will be to do kind and noble things.

Then the speeches! To sit right down on the grass instead of on hard chairs; to be allowed to laugh without restraint; to have the speakers ask questions that any one may feel free to try to answer; to hear such interesting things about America and the flag, to have such funny jokes cracked that were so easy to understand, and then to find that the joke was a lesson that would be hard to forget because it had started with such a big laugh—this is surely listening to speeches under extraordinary conditions.

And the songs in the chapel, with Mr. Noll to lead, and the teacher standing in the aisles to help hold together this magic organ made of three hundred little throats and tongues! The children do not seem to get unduly flattered when the guests praise the songs extravagantly. But they can hardly realize how surprising the results are which they produce. Mellow tones (except that sometimes it is such excessively good fun to sing that it is hard to keep from singing almost too vigorously), sweet melodies, rich harmonies, and words full of thrilling meaning—it is worth something either to hear or to help make the Mont-Lawn Fourth of July songs.

Year after year, three thousand little children are returned to the metropolis from their ten-day romp in the green fields with songs like this in brain, in heart and upon their lips:

> It never pays to be bad;
> No! It never pays to be bad;
> It makes one feel so mean inside
> It NEVER pays to be bad.

And this:

> G, double o, d—good;
> G, double o, d—good;
> We will try to be like Jesus—
> G, double o, d—good.

One of their recessionals lingers long in the memory of every one. It would, indeed, be hard to find a more touching thing to witness and hear. They march out of their chapel, each boy as he reaches the aisle meeting a little girl coming from the opposite seat. They raise the flags they are carrying and cross them above their heads. Then they join the procession of little couples marching ahead under the crossed flags, and the chorus floats back from the aisles and in from the lawn where the head of the procession is winding its way down "Sunshine Alley":

> Jesus loves the little children,
> All the children of the world—
> Red and yellow, black and white;
> They are precious in his sight.
> Jesus loves the little children of the world.

. . .

Subscriptions for the work of the Home during the present season are now coming in. Among the earliest contributors are the following:

Catherine F Abbott	3.00	Fannie W. Benedict	3.0
Jane E. Aber	1.00	Melissa P. Benedict	31.0
J. H. Abrams	10.00	Wm. H. Berger	20.0
I Achilli	10.00	Elizabeth D. Berrien	2.0
Miss C. E. Adams	5.00	Sarah W. Berry	10.0
Mrs. Wm. Alexander	1.00	Edw. S. Bice	6.0
Mrs. C. A. Anderson	1.00	Wm. C. Bidlack	5.0
Floyde W. Andrews	3.00	D. D. Bidwell	1.0
J. F. Andrews	1.00	Geo. Bigley	1.0
Lydia Arnold	1.00	Rev. John Binney	3.0
W. A. Arnold	1.00	Mrs. G. Birmingham	1.0
Mrs. Mary E. Ash	1.00	Mrs. T. Bishop	3.0
Miss Atterbury	12.00	Martha L. Bixby	21.0
Mrs. P. B. Atwater	3.00	Mrs. Chas. Bjorklund	1.0
J. A. Atwood	3.00	Emma L. Blauvelt	5.0
Mrs. S. F. Atwood	1.00	Ella E. Bliss	6.0
Frederick L. Averill	2.00	Ida Bogardus	1.5
Rev. T. J. Bach	21.00	Samson Borgnis	1.0
Mrs. Alice J. Bachtel	3.00	Miss Bownes	2.0
Joseph W. Bacon	2.00	M. H. Boyer	23.0
Mrs. Leonard W. Bacon	3.00	John J. Bradford	1.0
C. F. Bahret	3.00	Edward M. Bradley	10.0
Mrs. T. H. Bailey	2.00	Miss M. H. Bradley	1.0
J. C. Bain	1.00	Myrtle Braithwaite	21.0
Edgar N. Baker	1.00	S. Alfred Brandes	2.0
Alfred C. Baldwin	2.00	Herman Brandt	5.0
Mrs. M. T. Baldwin	3.00	Wm. H. Bray	2.0
Newt. G. Ball	2.00	Mary E. Breckenridge	2.0
J. W. Barnes	1.00	Mrs. Nelia Brelsford	1.0
Mrs. Eva Barrett	4.00	Mrs. Luther Brill	1.0
Fred. H. Barton	3.00	Mrs. C. A. Brinckerhoff	10.0
Mrs. J. A. Baxter	2.00	Mrs. F. B. Bristol	1.0
Gustav Becker	3.00	Fred J. Broadbent	2.0
Arthur I. Beil	5.00	Jessamine A. Brooks	2.0
Mrs. E. A. Belcher	5.00	Mrs. Matilda Brooks	3.0
Geo. H. Bell	10.00	William P. Brothers	6.0
Mrs. Lida Bell	1.00	Mrs. Allen Brown	2.0
John M. Bender	2.00	Mrs. Mary E. Brown	3.0

IN THE GRIP OF THE HOT WAVE

With Stones for Pillows

Better Than on the Fire-Escape

How the Children Fared

Because They Could Not Go to the Beach

A Sidewalk Dormitory

No Room Here for Bad Dreams

WIDESPREAD suffering was caused by the heat wave which visited eastern America during the early days of July. Reports of distress and death came from hicago, Montreal, Philadelphia, and Boston, while ew York sweltered in the intolerable temperature nd grieved at its own appalling death list.

Occasional showers brought only temporary re- ef. The barometer was phenomenally restless, aking sharp angles in the charts recording its osition. Often a lower thermometer would be ac- mpanied by a higher barometer, and the insuffer- ble humidity augmented the discomfort of the ty's inhabitants. Then, too, as the days and ights passed, vitality lessened, and there was less hysical power to resist the ravages of the heat.

The death list was by no means limited to the oor. Hon. Wm. F. Mackey, formerly State Sena- r, was among the victims. But in the tenement istricts the suffering was the keenest. The stuffy ooms were almost literally uninhabitable, yet some others preferred them to the scorching heat of the streets themselves. Night brought little relief. All over the city people slept out of doors, some finding their way to the parks, others sleeping on the pavements and steps before their homes. Some were able to get to the beaches and there found relief from the deadly heat.

Philadelphia reported thirty-seven deaths in three days. From Montreal came the pitiful tale of ninety-five funerals in one day, most of them due to the heat, and eighty of them being of babies. As early in the siege as July 9, Chicago recorded thirty-seven deaths from the heat. Up to July 10 Cleveland reported that the heat had killed forty babies there.

Side by side with the severe suffering there was, as always, the earnest effort to bring relief. Children were rushed into the country by the various fresh air agencies. The New York Tribune Fresh Air Fund, the New York World, the St. John's Guild, the International Sunshine Society, the Five Points Mission, and our own CHRISTIAN HERALD organization continued the work of rescue. The New York Herald conducted its campaign for free ice for the poor. Six hundred families were referred to the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, which, besides supporting the home at Sea Breeze, has made arrangements to take five hundred mothers and children for a day's outing at Coney Island three times a week. CHRISTIAN HERALD readers will be pleased to remind themselves that during these days and nights of distress in New York the home at Mont-Lawn was kept full of happy children who have romped and slept under the cool shadows of the mountain trees.

Terrible as the siege has been, it has not been without its humorous side. Dignity had to be forgotten. A judge held court in his shirt sleeves; men traveled coatless on the suburban trains and walked about the city with sleeves rolled up; youngsters got gleefully in the way of the streams turned from the fire hydrants upon the baking streets; the city fountains became swimming pools for happy boys; and the park policemen forgot all about the signs: "Keep Off the Grass."

THE THIRD PARTY CONVENTION

AS WAS foreshadowed some time ago, the formal convention call of the National Progressive Party was issued on July 8, announcing that the convention would be eld in Chicago on August 5. The call is issued by enator J. M. Dixon, chairman of the Provisional ommittee, and signed by sixty-three names, in- uding United States Senators, governors of tates, representatives, jurists, and the president f a college. Three of the signers are Democrats. Whatever may be one's personal attitude toward he new party, every citizen is interested in it as a striking event in our nation's history. Some of the phraseology of the "call" is more than ordinarily forceful. Continuing to name the classes of people who are invited to participate in the new movement, the message reads as follows:

Who believe in the right and capacity of the people to rule themselves, and effectively to control all the agencies of their government, and who hold that only through social and industrial justice, thus secured, can honest property find permanent protection;

Who believe that government by the few tends to become, and has in fact become, government by the sordid influences that control the few;

Who believe that only through the movement proposed can we obtain in the nation and the several States the legislation demanded by the modern industrial evolution; legislation that shall favor honest business and yet control the great agencies of modern business so as to ensure their being used in the interest of the whole people; legislation which shall promote prosperity and at the same time secure the better and more equitable diffusion of prosperity; legislation which shall promote the economic well-being of the honest farmer, wage-worker, professional man and business man alike, but which shall at the same time strike in efficient fashion—and not merely pretend to strike—at the roots of privilege in the world of industry no less than in the world of politics;

Who believe that only this type of wise industrial evolution will avert industrial revolution;

Who believe that wholesome party government can come only if there is wholesome party management in a spirit of service to the whole country, and who hold that the commandment delivered at Sinai, "Thou shalt not steal," applies to politics as well as to business.

HOSPITALITY IN GOD'S HOUSE

A SERMON

BY

Rev. David J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D.*

TEXT: "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." Ps. 84: 10

IT IS probable that David, in using the title "doorkeeper," had in mind the family of Shallum, to whom was assigned the duty of guarding the doors of the tabernacle, a position which was regarded with high honor in those days. It will be remembered that on the night of the Passover, when the angel of destruction smote the first-born of every Egyptian household, the first-born of the Israelites were spared; and, as a recognition of that fact, it was ordained that the eldest sons of Israel should thereafter be dedicated to the ministry. A year later, in the encampment at Sinai, when Moses came down out of the mountain and found the people worshiping the golden calf, he cried indignantly, "Who is on the Lord's side? Let him come unto me!" whereupon the whole tribe of Levi "gathered themselves together unto him." It was then ordained that the tribe of Levi should be set apart to the ministry, taking the place of the first-born of the nation. The tribe thus consecrated was assigned to duties of various kinds. One of its families, that of Aaron, was appointed to minister at the altar. The family of Asaph was detailed to the musical service. The family of Kohath was charged with the care of the tabernacle itself, particularly the Ark of the Covenant and the Book of the Law. To the family of Shallum were committed the entrances of the tabernacle and subsequently of the temple. These were the "doorkeepers," who were enjoined to see not only that the doors were suitably guarded but that the rites of hospitality were observed in the sacred place. In the early church this office was continued in an order of the minor clergy known as ostiarii. And this is precisely the position held by the ushers of these days.

It is obvious, therefore, that the position is one of high honor. It is really an order of the ministry. Our Lord himself said that he "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." No service is menial in the following of Christ. The motto of the Prince of Wales, Ich dien, that is, "I serve," has a royal ring to it. The man who serves most faithfully in his appointed place is the most loyal follower of the Prince of men.

The Value of Courtesy

It is also a position of grave responsibility. For in the ministry of the Gospel much depends on the attitude of those who attend to hear it. A man passing in the street on Sabbath morning hears the church bell calling, "Come! Come! Come and worship God!" The deepest longing in the soul of that man, whether he knows it or not, is to learn the way of everlasting life. He heeds the invitation of the church bell and enters. If he is welcomed at the threshold and made to feel that he is not an intruder but a welcome guest, his mind is open to the message awaiting him. But if he is repelled by indifference or discourtesy, he is in no mood to listen; and when the service is over he is likely to sympathize with Dr. Foster who "went to Gloster in a shower of rain" and resolved that he would never go there again. And the doorkeepers may have to shoulder the blame for it.

The position is one of difficulty also. The fault of a wrong adjustment in these premises is not always ours. There are many peculiar people in the world and some of them occasionally go to church. A guest is sometimes over-exacting in his demands; sometimes gruff and overbearing to the last degree. The good nature of the ushers is not infrequently tried beyond measure in this way. They have need constantly to remind themselves of Peter's injunction, "Be courteous!" And I have this to say to their credit, that I have almost never heard a complaint as to their courtesy in the years gone by.

Our Lord is not unmindful of such service. He promised a sure compensation for the mere giving of a cup of cold water to one of his little ones. "They also serve who only stand and wait." The roll of highest honor is not for dignitaries who occupy the most conspicuous positions in the church, but for those who are faithful in whatever place is divinely assigned to them.

On Sunday morning, forty years ago, my wife and I betook ourselves to a Fifth Avenue church, on entering which we were informed by a polite usher that if we would wait in the vestibule until the pew-holders were seated we would be provided for. We waited there twenty minutes, by the watch. It was long enough for me to relate to my companion the legend of St. Sebald, which runs on this wise: He came from his monastic retreat in the desert to visit an ancient city and while there entered a great cathedral to worship God. As he was clad in a garment of gray homespun he was asked to remain in the open portico while others more suitably garbed were ushered in. It happened to be a chilly day, and the Lord had compassion on him; so that he was enabled by a miracle to keep himself warm. He collected a heap of icicles which he fanned into a flame. I had just said with a shiver, "The Lord does not seem so gracious to us," when the usher returned and smilingly showed us to a comfortable seat in the half-filled church. The sermon did me little good that day. One thought kept pressing hard upon me, to-wit, that there was something wrong in the attitude of such a church toward the stranger within its gates. And I resolved then and there that if my lot should ever be cast in a metropolitan pastorate I would, by God's grace, find some better way.

The Gospel's Welcome

The second visit was twenty years ago, when I was summoned to look over the ground before answering a call to the ministry of this church. The pulpit had long been vacant and the congregation had drifted away. The neighborhood was changing. Homes were being broken up to make way for the encroachments of business life. But it seemed to me that here, at the geographical center of Manhattan Island, was a coign of vantage for a church of a different sort. It happened that Mr. Moody was holding meetings here at that time; and as I rode with him in a cab along the avenue he pointed out of the windows, saying, "Look at them! Look at the people! Multitudes of immortal souls! Men and women for whom Christ died! All waiting for the Gospel of salvation! You must come," he said earnestly; "you must come and lend a hand!" It seemed to me like a divine call. I felt sure there was room just here for a church in which the old-time religion should be preached with up-to-date methods for attracting people to hear it. And I have never repented the decision at which I arrived that day.

In my first sermon in this church I used these words: "Welcome is the shibboleth that will win the people. So long as there is a vacant seat in the sanctuary no person shall be kept waiting in the vestibule. Welcome to the lofty and the lowly. Welcome to capital and labor. Welcome to wise and unwise. Welcome to the stranger. Welcome to all."

A church for the people! That is the proposition which has been kept constantly and consistently before us. And, with that object in view, it would appear that three things are prerequisite to success, namely:

First, an Open Door: a door wide open to all sorts and conditions of men.

To the rich? Certainly. There is no class of people whose spiritual interests are more neglected than theirs. A good deal is said about "the lapsed masses," but consider the lapsed aristocracy. Shall the church do nothing for those whose privileges reduce the gate of heaven to the dimensions of a needle's eye?

Open Doors to All

To the laboring classes? As a matter of course. Was not Christ himself a carpenter? I see him coming up the middle aisle, just now: a man with calloused hands and clad in a peasant's garb. To your feet, pewholders every one; make way for the Workingman! In an address by John Burns, the representative of the labor unions in the English Parliament, he says, "The reason why the handicraftsman does not attend church is because he regards the church as the appanage of the rich." I do not believe that. No doubt there are churches, here and there, of which it may justly be said; but as a rule the churches are wide open to the men of the Third Estate: to the wage-earners who are so cially of closest kin to Him who, standing in the carpenter shop, with the implements of his trade about him, wiped the sweat of honest labor from his brow.

To the poor? Shall our doors be open to the friendless and homeless? To tramps and beggars? Surely. Did not our Lord say, "When thou makest a feast, call in the poor"? And when John the Baptist asked for a sign of his Messiahship did he not answer, "Go tell him that the poor have the Gospel preached to them?" The church is the only place under the blue sky where the rich and the poor can meet together and acknowledge that "the Lord is the Maker of them all."

Hospitality in the Pew

It is written of Christ that he was "no respecter of persons"; and therein we must needs follow him. The apostle James was moved to write to the members of the early church, "My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ with respect of persons. For if there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool; are ye not then partial in yourselves and are become judges of evil thoughts?"

And to strangers? Yes, particularly to them. New York is full of strangers. We wonder at the ever increasing number of our hotels; and they seem to be always full. This city is at the intersection of the caravan-routes of the world. And think of the boarding-houses, full of young men and young women who have come hither to make an honest living; the clerks, nurses, stenographers, many of them living in hall bedrooms; lonely, longing for friends, dreaming of the old home. The red lights along our thoroughfares are always beckoning to them. Shall not the door of the sanctuary be open?

But the open door is not enough. In order to have a People's Church there must also be a Hospitable Pew. I have nothing against the pew-rental. On the contrary, it would seem to be eminently wise that every household should have the same pew and occupy it Sunday after Sunday, with the home feeling that accompanies it. But it is imperative that the pew-rental should be subject to the conditions of Christian hospitality; since, when all has been said, the church is not the house of the pew-holder but the house of God.

One thing more is necessary to the keeping up of a People's Church; that is the Glad Hand. No apology is made for adopting a phrase out of the vernacular, since it expresses so precisely the business of the ushers.

I know of no better outline of a People's Church than that which is set forth in one of Sankey's hymns, which he used to sing at the Moody meetings many years ago:

Well, wife, I've found the model church,
And worshiped there to-day;
It made me think of good old times,
Before my hair was gray:
The meeting-house was finer built
Than they were years ago,
But then I found when I went in
It was not built for show.

The sexton did not set me down
Away back by the door;
He knew that I was old and deaf,
And saw that I was poor.
He must have been a Christian man,
He led me boldly through
The crowded aisle of that grand church
To find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd heard the singing, wife;
It had the old-time ring;
The preacher said with trumpet voice,
"Let all the people sing."
Old "Coronation" was the tune;
The music upward rolled
Until I thought the angel choir
Struck all their harps of gold.

Continued on next page

* Pastor, Marble Collegiate Church (Reformed), New York City.

AT NIGHTFALL

If I have planted hope to-day,
In any hopeless heart;
If some one's load has lighter grown,
Because I did my part;
If haply I have caused a laugh
That chased some tears away;
And if, to-night, my name be named
Where some one kneels to pray—
I claim my day has been well spent,
Not lived in vain, and am content.

If cup, or crust, or covering,
Has been dispensed by me;
If I have helped the weak to stand,
Or warmly clasped some hungry hand
In friendship, it may be;
Or if some lonely little child
Has known my comradeship and smiled—
Then, humble though I be, I know
I have been helping God, and so,
Serene, I claim my nightly rest,
Just glad that I have done my best.

WATSON SHEPHERD.

Hospitality in God's House

Continued from preceding page

My deafness seemed to melt away,
My spirit caught the fire;
I joined my feeble, trembling voice
With that melodious choir;
And sang as in my youthful days,
"Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

I tell you, wife, it did me good
To sing that hymn once more;
I felt like some wrecked mariner
Who gets a glimpse of shore;
I almost want to lay aside
This weather-beaten form,
And anchor in the blessed port,
Forever from the storm.

'Twas not a flowery sermon, wife,
But simple Gospel truth;
It fitted humble men like me;
It suited hopeful youth;
To win immortal souls to Christ,
The earnest preacher tried;
He talked not of himself, or creed,
But Jesus crucified.

But, after all, the welcome to the urch is of little or no value in itself. he throng is nothing. It is no diffi- lt matter to gather a crowd; but the estion is what to do with it. The urch is only an avenue to Christ. he preacher is merely a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord!" he welcome of the sanctuary has no lue except as it echoes the voice of im who said, "Come unto me, all ye at labor and are heavy laden, and I ill give you rest." His arms are ider than the widest door. His voice sweeter than the sweetest bells. Come! Come! Come!" The air is sonant with his invitation to the ace of God.

An Opportunity for Service

NY reader of this journal who is looking for an opportunity for un- tentatious Christian service without ublicity, by dropping a postal ad- essed "Opportunity," CHRISTIAN ERALD, Bible House, New York City, ill be put in possession of particulars ncerning the case of a very worthy mily which has been strongly recom- ended to us for assistance. We have vestigated the case and found it to in every way deserving, and we can erefore recommend it to the benevo- nce of our readers.

Anvil Sparks

...THE simple truth is too simple for any folks to respect.

...THE highway of holiness is no ace to put on high ways.

...NO GRIEF is great enough to kill ny one who takes it right.

...WHEN you can not go straight ead, investigate the path.

...YOU cannot hope to get much out the life that you put little into.

...WHO is always laying down the w for others is apt to lay it aside for mself.

...THE preacher who skins right and ft is always popular with the butch- s of character.

...The fellow who hunts for the soft- it pew isn't the one who covets the ghest good from the service.

...GENTLE breeding is not Christian- y, but Christianity creates gentle- ss, which is the essence of good eeding.

Enthusiasm for Work

VACATION rest and play and all the delights of country and seashore are calling to the toilers of the town. All who can are responding with alacrity. Slam down the desk; lock the house; pick up the golf clubs, or the tennis racket, and away to the green fields. Good-by, dull care, I'm off for a holiday! Rather an odd time to read serious talks on enthusiasm for work, when the all-impelling motive seems to be enthusiasm for play.

Very good and proper. Begone to your place of rest and fun! Enjoy your vacation to the fill, and know that it is a means and not an end. If rightly used for good, wholesome, natural sport and relaxing of the work-day strain, it will re-create body and mind and give you a fresh store of the thing that really counts—enthusiasm for your work.

"Take the old world by the hand and frolic with it," as Stevenson said. Laugh in the sunshine, sport in the winds and the waves, revel in close contact with the green earth, get the song of the birds, the roar of the surf, the whispering of the trees into your soul, until the clang and discord of the world let go their hold upon you and all things are in tune. Then go back refreshed and full of gladness to the earnest purposes of life which are expressed through your work. It is worth while to play that we may gain greater zest and greater power for that part of life which is the beginning of our eternity.

. . .

WORK is the greatest joy of the man or the woman with a true vision. It is the one thing that gives value to life, that makes every moment precious, that inspires youth, that enriches old age, and that holds the unanswerable proof of a larger life to come.

Nothing but beginnings and little journeys toward accomplishment are possible here. Life is spent in preparation. A little achievement, by way of practice and foretaste, sometimes rewards our efforts, but it only spurs us on. The stronger we grow, the more efficient, the better equipped we become, the clearer is our realization that all we are doing is but a preparation for greater things. The Creator of the universe does not build merely to throw down as a child tumbles the house of blocks, and laughs to see it fall. The master artist does not make a perfect likeness of full-grown manhood just to blot it out, as a child rubs a picture from the slate. The impulse and the privilege of growth in power, and gain in knowledge, and strengthening of purpose are proof that this equipment is meant to be used somewhere, sometime.

As the human soul takes in more and more of the wonderful plan of an Eternal Father, whose work for blessing the world is hardly touched on the outer surface as yet by his human agents, there is an ever larger conception of what man might do, and an ever increasing eagerness to share more fully in the work.

Whether the work be directly among the poor and suffering, or in the development of medical science, or in the building up of beneficent business enterprises, or in preaching, or writing, or in purifying public life, or in striving for world peace, or simply in creating the tender, holy influences of home life—whatever the particular work to which a life is devoted, there is always the looking forward to better results than this short day can hope to see. Just as the man who thinks a million dollars is the supreme fortune of his ambition, finds, when he gains it, that it is only a beginning, and that with the power one million gives him he will strive for a hundred million, so the man who accomplishes one day's triumphant work looks forward the more eagerly and confidently to the next day, the next year, the next life.

. . .

THIS short span of apprenticeship is given us only as a test to determine our fitness for promotion. Day by day we labor on with our small tasks, glad if they are growing bigger as time goes on. We are not frightened, we are stimulated and spurred on by the promise that "greater works than these" shall we do as the personal representatives of the Master. We do not look forward to hearing him say,

> Work, for the night is coming,
> When man works no more.
> . . . . . .
> Work while the night is darkening,
> When man's work is o'er.

No, we are striving for a different word; we sing it over in our hearts and try to think how it will sound in that glad day when our apprenticeship is over, when our test is completed, and promotion is in the hands of the Master, and he says, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And what is that "joy of thy Lord"? It is the greater, fuller, more effective work, the rulership over many things, the life of activity and service, with all the weariness and worry left out. No weak backs, nor heads that ache; no tired feet nor strained eyes; no turmoil nor anxiety; an endless life of rich and joyous work with a soul forever at peace.

As we go on, the vision brightens. As we go on, the enthusiasm for little things does not so often divert our progress. A higher enthusiasm begins to impel us onward and upward. Work takes on new and larger significance, and we "see in better perspective the things that need doing." It is a mistake to speak tolerantly of "the enthusiasm of youth," implying that when youth passes, enthusiasm must die out. Enthusiasm is the life of the heart and should be unquenchable. The possibilities that dazzle the eyes of youthhood may well feed the fires of enthusiasm within, as the mountain climber is ravished by the beauty of the view which he can see from the foothills; but only when the summit of life is reached is it possible to gain the full glory of the vision. Each day has its work, its joy, its enthusiasm. Each day, on and on through life, should bring a better understanding of work and a more joyous enthusiasm in the knowledge that our little labors of to-day are preparing us for the greater things beyond.

Poems Everyone Should Know

NOT THE STRUGGLE

SAY not the struggle naught availeth,
The labor and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been they remain.

If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars;
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fliers,
And, but for you, possess the field.

For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain,
Far back, through creeks and inlets making,
Comes silent, flooding in, the main.

And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light;
In front, the sun climbs slow, how slowly!
But westward, look, the land is bright.

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.

Mormonism in Hawaii

WHILE the growth of the Mormon Church in Hawaii has been noted with more or less misgivings on the part of the other churches, only recently have the facts and figures regarding the strength of the Latter Day Saints in these islands become known property. The Protestant churches have already formed a federation to work against them. In an incredibly short space of time Mormon doctrines have gained wonderful headway among the native Hawaiians and the Orientals, two classes which constitute more than four-fifths of the entire population. Not only have the Territorial officials been asked to make a careful report upon the situation, but seven officers of the secret service are detailed to make exact tabulations of the doings of the Latter Day Saints, the number and nativity of their converts, the amount of property in the possession of the elders and to what extent polygamy is practiced.

Bishop Willis of the Episcopal Church said yesterday to your correspondent: "Hawaii is credited with many menaces, industrial and martial, all the way from strikes among plantation laborers to war with Japan, but there has not occurred in the history of the islands a more terrible menace than this Mormon scourge which not only threatens but is actually festering in the moral and political body of the Territory. The cancer had its beginning a long time ago with the distribution broadcast of Mormon literature, but only within a few years have there been zealous elders among the people, sent here by the mother church of Utah. At first they worked secretly and did not call themselves Mormons; but within the past two or three years they have become so strong in those remoter regions where the white man is in a very small minority, that they have come out not only openly but aggressively for Mormonism and polygamy. From the natives it has spread to the Chinese, Japanese and even to some extent among the Russian and Portuguese plantation laborers, so that to-day it is a positive disease, eating into the vitals of the non-white races. I feel that all militant Christianity and particularly the churches of the United States, should take up this great matter without delay. Will the offenders be prosecuted in the courts? You may rest assured they will be."

"The Mormon Church authorities have seized upon these weaknesses of the easy-going natives of these islands," said a Territorial official, "and I believe it is their hope to found an island Utah in the Pacific. The great majority of the voters of Hawaii are full-blood natives and half-whites, and with Brigham Young's doctrines followed by the larger number of these it would be only a question of a few years when the civil government, including everything perhaps but the higher courts—the judges of which are appointed from Washington—would be in their hands." W. G. L.

Honolulu, Hawaii.

JERUSALEM, ROME, WASHINGTON

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

In St. Louis Theological Quarterly
By Permission

AN ITALIAN gentleman of pleasing address, his clean-shaven face beaming happiness and his piercing eyes kindling with the enthusiasm of hope and bright prospects, stood "before a highly distinguished audience" on the 30th of January, 1893. From the windows of the room in which he had come to speak the suave gentleman could have looked out, had he cared to do so, upon many an object dear to the hearts of citizens of the North American Republic. He might have been said to be standing in the shadow of the dome of the Capitol of the United States, and almost within harking distance of the presidential mansion. All around him could be observed the material evidences of the activities of a great government. The gentleman was fully conscious of his surroundings. He was pleased to know that he was exactly where he was. He loved and admired the beautiful American city on the Potomac. But his love was hardly that of the patriot, and his admiration differed from that of the tourist. He loved and admired the city, and the country which had made the city the seat of its government, not so much for what they were at the time of his address, but for what they would be, and what he ardently hoped to be instrumental in making them within a measurable space of time.

The gentleman was a person of authority, but he was not independent. At the moment of which we are speaking he was representing a higher authority far away, and his remarks were inspired by that higher authority. In fact, he had been careful to emphasize from the day that he set foot upon our hospitable shores that his master had sent him, and that those who heard him heard his master's voice and could know, from him, his master's mind. And Monsignor Francis Satolli's official character and mission were fully understood and heartily appreciated by his audiences, especially by the "highly distinguished audience" which had gathered at Carroll Institute, on the date above named, to honor the Pro-Delegate Apostolic with a formal reception.

A Memorable Address

The Italian gentleman said—or rather "the erudite rector" of the young Catholic University, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Keane, interpreted him to his American audience as having just said "in his beautiful Italian"—the following:

"The Papal Delegate began by saying that while he appreciates every mark of respect and esteem shown him as the legate of the Holy Father, he was particularly gratified at this reception tendered him by a society representing the Catholic gentlemen of this Capital City and bearing the name of one so distinguished in the history of the Church in America. This is an occasion, the memory of which will ever be dear to his heart, and will be a precious memory to the members and to their children, who will be the future members, and the coming generation, for it is an occasion linked with so many great events. It is a significant fact that the opening of a new chapter of the Institute should take place in the beginning of a year marked by so many great events, the sending of a Papal delegate to this country, the celebration of the quadrocentenary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, and the golden jubilee of Leo XIII.

"It is not strange that the Papal delegate should give his greeting in Italian, for that was the language which first sounded over the billows of the Atlantic and echoed on the shores of America, when the Italian Columbus bore across the sea the knowledge of Christ to the shores of this unknown continent. And *it is beautiful to trace the economy of divine Providence in the history of America. The Christian religion, which was founded by our divine Saviour at Jerusalem, was, by divine Providence, destined to become centered at Rome. Rome, the greatest city of the world, was going to destruction on account of the wickedness of its people, and it was to become the capital of the Christian world and send forth streams of light to all the nations of the world. Fittingly, then, Rome sent Christianity to America, just as she received it from Jerusalem, so that the world is encircled by the great chain connecting Jerusalem, Rome, and Washington.

"A study of the history of America, the constitutional organization of our government, and the sentiments of its founders, as expressed in the writings of Washington and our other great men, only confirm the impression that the life and essence of our institutions are in perfect harmony with the sentiments of our Holy Father Leo XIII. on the subject of human liberty.

"In the great event we are so soon to celebrate, three names will be linked together and cherished with love and veneration—the names of Columbus, Washington, and Leo XIII. The Papal delegate utters the prediction that as the years unfold and America continues on her great mission, the more closely men analyze the origin and development of her free institutions, the more clearly they will perceive that we are indebted to the teachings and inspirations of the Church of Christ for all of them.

"In conclusion he spoke to this effect: May your republic, built deep in its foundation of solid rock, raise its pinnacles to the clouds, and like the church, outlast the ages, and may they side by side, in perpetual good faith and love, teach all mankind true liberty, true brotherhood, and peace everlasting."

How the Peace Vessel Damaged the Battleship

COLLISIONS IN THE FOG

A SINGULAR accident occurred in the early morning of July 8 when a vessel built for peaceful traffic rather seriously damaged a United States battleship lying at anchor in Narragansett Bay. The Fall River liner Commonwealth, making her way slowly and carefully through a dense fog, rammed the stern of the big New Hampshire and, striking an unprotected section, cut a wedge-shaped figure in the warship's hull. No one was hurt on either vessel. The sleeping passengers of the Commonwealth hurried on deck, but kept their wits well collected, and there was no panic. But the calmness of these eleven hundred "land lubbers" was of course more than equaled by the alacrity and precision of the New Hampshire's bluejackets. Lieutenant Harry Campbell was on watch and when he saw that a collision was inevitable he ordered the alarms sounded, and almost before the blow was struck the sailors were in their places.

The account of this remarkable address which we have given is the official account, and it is complete. It has been published with the full approval of Cardinal Gibbons, who has prefaced the book in which it appeared.* The address is remarkable for a number of things. In the first place, there is, or seems to be, a cordial patriotic fervor pervading the address. Americans love to hear just such things as these: our great Washington, our free institutions, our greater destiny, etc. And when a foreigner tells them these things, they feel more than commonly flattered, and the speaker has won their affections completely. In the second place, the address is remarkable for its unheard-of collocation of persons, places, and events. "Columbus, Washington, and Leo XIII," "Jerusalem, Rome, and Washington," the Columbian Exposition and the papal jubilee—what is it that these matters have in common? Columbus was a mariner of the fifteenth, Washington a soldier of the eighteenth, Leo XIII a clergyman of the nineteenth century. Columbus' voyage was a commercial enterprise, Washington's campaign a patriotic undertaking, Leo XIII's business was to preach. Columbus' name can be intelligently connected with the American Continent, but not with the territory occupied by the North American Republic and her institutions.

What Columbus might have done—besides finding a shorter way to India—has been shown by the fate of those countries where the religion which he brought to the new continent became firmly established. On the subject of liberty, Columbus and Washington could not have agreed for a minute. Nor is there any evidence of agreement in sentiment upon this subject between the first President of the United States and the late Pope George Washington was, in the estimation of the affable gentleman from Rome, not only a miserable and damned heretic, like the rest of us, but also an anarchist, because he championed the separation of church and state. We are perfectly amazed to hear this stranger in our gates tell us that he is in possession of facts, from the writings of Washington, which "confirm the impression that the life and essence of our institutions are in perfect harmony with the sentiment of our Holy Father Leo XIII on the subject of human liberty." Most Americans are well acquainted with what Washington has said on that subject; quite a number of Americans know equally well what Leo XIII has said on the same subject. The claim of Monsignor Satolli, then, can be understood only when in the sentence last quoted we emphasize the word "the life and essence." And the question now arises: Did our Italian visitor studiously avoid saying simply "our institutions"? If the agreement between Washington and Leo XIII affect not our institutions, as they stand to-day and are accepted by Americans, but their life and essence, we require somebody to tell us what is that "life and essence."

The late Pope has delivered himself in unmistakable language on this very point. On November 1, 1885, he denounced the very principles on which our political organization rests.* On June 20, 1888, he denounced the chief American "liberties," liberty of worship, liberty of speech, liberty of the press, liberty of teaching, liberty of conscience.† On January 10, 1890, he felt it incumbent upon him to instruct Christians as to their duties as citizens and told them, amongst other things, to fight to fight vehemently, if in their particular country the Catholic Church were not allowed to "make laws and exercise every other kind of right."‡ The "essence and life" of American institutions, in the view of the late Pope, are these: The church exists as a distinct body so does the state. But the state must in all its activities become subservient to the interests of the church, meaning the Roman Church. When did Washington express sentiments like these

Why the Papal Legate Came Here

It was because Americans, who had read these papal dissertations, might draw from them certain conclusions unfavorable to the Popish Church in America, that the Pope sent his legate to this country. We were to be assured that the Pope is an ardent American patriot—the same Pope who had written the afore-mentioned encyclicals. And Monsignor Satolli had assumed the artful task of honeying the Pope's word and making American swallow the Pope's poison. Well did he accomplish his task! His diction is a masterpiece as regards concealment. He did not cancel one syllable of the subversive utterances of his master, but he did not touch a single one of the terrible issues which had been raised by those flaming, liberty destroying encyclicals. He smiled upon the Americans whom he met, and extolled the love of Leo XII for America.

Strange, too, ill-boding, portentous, is the geographical chain which the bland Italian gentleman forged, a chain encircling the world, to be closed and riveted at Washington. At Jerusalem our Lord preached and died, but he did not establish Jerusalem as the center of the church. His thoughts about Jerusalem are expressed John 4 21; Luke 19, 41 ff. It was a center when he began his career. At Jerusalem the Sanhedrin, the ancient hierarchy, had its seat. The Sanhedrin murdered Christ. "Christian Rome," i.e., the papacy cannot point to any connection with Jerusalem, except one that will make it the sequel, the successor, the heir, yea, the perfecter of that system over which Annas and Caiaphas were presiding in the days of the Lord. And to Washington this system is to be extended? Was the geographical triad which the Italian gentleman constructed the shadow that preceded the cablegram from Rome t

* Italics ours.

* Loyalty to Church and State. The Mind of His Eminence, Francis Cardinal Satolli, Pro-Delegate Apostolic. Second, enlarged edition, Baltimore. 1895. p. 216 ff.

* See Encyclical Immortale Dei in The Great Encyclical Letters of Pope Leo XIII. Translations from approved sources. With preface by Rev. John J. Wynne, S.J. New York, Cincinnati, Chicago: Benziger Brothers, printers to the Holy Apostolic See. 1903. pp. 107-134.

† See Encyclical Libertas Praestantissimum. l. c. pp. 135-161.

‡ See Encyclical Sapientiae Christianae. l. c. pp. 180-207.

Continued on next page

TAMING THE AMERICAN EAGLE

Representing New China

The First Americans

Welcoming the Dove of Peace

[T HAS been demonstrated that our great American eagle can sing as well as scream: even better, in fact.

The 136th Fourth of July was celebrated in "safe and sane" manner practically all over the nited States. This does not mean, unfortu- tely, that every city and town and cross-corners served the day that way, for seventeen persons d get killed. But three years ago 215 persons ed as a result of the Fourth, and a great many re injured.

Throwing sacrifices to the National idol once a ar is really not civilized, and now that we have oken away from the practice, the utter folly and ckedness of it is becoming more and more evi- nt. Our very big cities found this year that en the last person to be convinced, namely, the mall boy," enjoys the new day. Pageants, sing- g, games, evening displays of fireworks under ple safeguards proved entirely satisfactory to these eminent judges of what constitutes a good Fourth of July.

In New York large crowds gathered at different points to enjoy just such a program. The parade included such interesting features as fire-engines bearing the legend: "This Used to Be Our Busy Day; We're Not So Busy Now," a float bearing boys in baseball uniform—true insignia of peace; another showing girls playing May-pole; and similar homely subjects that appealed to the spectator.

The old-time fire company shared the interest with the veteran soldiers, and the Indian contingent with its characteristic actions en route had an interest all its own. Our foreign-born population was excellently represented, and scattered through the parade were such items as a group of little Chinese girls, a Scottish maiden in Highland garb, and others who sang and gave demonstrations of skill and grace before the reviewing stand.

Even the reading of the Declaration of Independence and the various orations held the crowd. And the evening displays of fireworks gave the day its fitting climax.

All this was under official auspices. In addition there were flag-raisings and suitable exercises by many societies. The city dwelt in safety and woke the following day with a great sense of satisfaction and of gratitude to the committee of eminent persons who had carried the burden of arrangements and supervision.

The "Peace Movement" was well emphasized. The absence of gunpowder symbolized the world-wide abolition of gunpowder. White-robed young ladies, representing the Young People's League for International Federation, displayed a banner with the legend, "To the Hague, 1915, for Peace and Justice."

If great cosmopolitan New York prefers such a Fourth, what has the small town to say against it? Happily, the small towns are loud in praise of the new Fourth. The eagle is indeed at his best singing the National Anthem. More power to his glorious lungs!

W. B. ASHLEY.

JERUSALEM, ROME, WASHINGTON

Continued from preceding page

er President elect on the morning of November fourth? Was the speech at the Carroll Insti- e to pave the way for the reception at Washing- n of the Papal Nuncio, who was to take his place ong the ambassadors of foreign countries to nerica, and represent his sovereign and his sov- ign's interests among us? Washington the se- el of Rome! The splendors of the White City on ke Michigan in 1893 represented to Americans the expression of the tion's gratitude to the pist Columbus who is id to have brought man Christianity to nerica! The Pope's niversary linked and nded with that of the nerican nation! Verily, s is brazen impudence. t it has all been said in h winning words, in h a devout spirit, with reverent appeal to the ine Providence, that cunning equivocations h which the address stles are overlooked. false setting which s been given to a mere comitant circumstance an historical event is discovered, the deft nipulation by which a bborn fact emerges ul- ately as in harmony h its exact logical con- ry is not recognized. y, the very things ich the Italian gentle- n thanks Providence having achieved, vidence, in the judg- nt of every historian the North American public, has most significantly averted. It is one of the great miracles of history that the American Colonies, at a time when every condition seemed favorable to Romish ascendency, did not come under the influence of Rome, as did Mexico, the Central American States, Peru, and all of South America. And it is a most significant ruling of Providence that, when in the course of human events the young republic declared its independence and uttered the constitutional principles on which it wished to start on its course as a nation, explicitly eliminated that principle for which every occupant of the papal throne, down to the present incumbent,* has stubbornly fought, the union of church and state. Monsignor Satolli merely beams upon you as you betray your inability to comprehend him, and says: Child, "analyze closely the origin and development" of your free institutions, and you will see that they were conceived in Rome and shapen in popery.

Concluded next week

A Regina Street After the Cyclone Had Passed

THE city of Regina, capital of the Province of Saskatchewan, Canada, was recently struck by a terrific cyclone, which destroyed three hundred houses, besides grain elevators and many large business buildings. Fifty lives were lost and the property damage ran up into the millions.

* See Encyclical of Pius X., Vehementer nos esse, on the Separation of Church and State in France. Authorized Latin and German text, published by Herdersche Buchhandlung, St. Louis, Mo. p. 7 ff.

A Letter to Dr. Sheldon

I have read many of your previous sermons in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and those of the other noted divines whose sermons appear regularly every week, all of which have been well worth reading, but the very honest, sincere and quiet manne in which you have placed the Bible above all other books ever written in the history of the world has appealed to me as being the very best sermon I ever read or listened to on the subject of the Bible. The knowledge that most people enjoy a feeling of satisfaction in knowing that others appreciate their efforts is my reason for sending you this letter, as your discourse has led me to the conviction that I should study all its precepts more carefully than I have in the past.

GEORGE W. HALL.

Denver, Col.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Bible Tinkering Again

AN ORGANIZATION known as the International Bible Students' Association, lately in session in Washington, D. C., is stated in a despatch to have adopted a resolution, repudiating as thoroughly unscriptural "the teaching of a place, state, or condition of hell-fire and brimstone for the torment of the wicked." This organization has also placed itself on record as holding to the belief that the majority of ministers throughout the country have privately repudiated the "hell-fire theory," but are either unwilling to announce such belief to their congregations, or regard it as impolitic to do so. We know nothing of the theological standing of this association, or whether its membership includes men of sufficient scholarship and familiarity with the Scripture to speak authoritatively. We are naturally skeptical of Bible tinkering. We have seen much of it that ended in sorrow and regret.

The whole question, whether we are to accept in a literal sense or as figurative the language of the Gospels in regard to the place of future punishment, is one which has been widely discussed. While some authorities hold that certain references to future rewards and punishments must be interpreted figuratively, all agree that the Scripture, in a majority of instances, is sufficiently clear to convince any one that for the unrepentant sinner there is a place of punishment. It is a fact too obvious to need comment that there are many evils committed in this life that cannot be redressed here, and in all ages the simple sense of justice, human or divine, has pointed to a state of retribution hereafter. As to the character of that state, however, we know little, and speculation does not help us. All the language of Scripture on this subject points to the punishment of those who persist in sin to the end of this life, and admonishes us to righteousness and to the acceptance of God's gift of pardon through Jesus Christ while we have the opportunity.

To make a pronouncement on hell-fire, such as this association has essayed to do, was superfluous and can hardly be expected to carry weight, except possibly among the thoughtless, or those who rarely if ever "search the Scriptures." God has wisely placed a veil over the future world, which no human eye can penetrate. Jesus, in bringing life and immortality to light, while he has revealed to man the future as a state of rewards and punishments, has also shown us the way of righteousness. If in his teachings he employed the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah as symbolic of the fate of the wicked; if he held up Gehenna, the refuse pit outside the walls of Jerusalem, as typical of the fate that awaited those who were to be cast away for their sins and moral worthlessness; if, in the parable of Dives and Lazarus, he showed us the rich sinner suffering from the consuming fires of remorse, and Lazarus resting peacefully on Abraham's bosom—these, whether we view them as figurative or literal, bring us inevitably to the same conclusion: that the sinner will be punished—the righteous rewarded hereafter. Conjecture and speculation, such as the Washington Association invites, will bring little comfort in the final hour of life. What we need then is the sure anchor of faith in God's Word and in His forgiveness and acceptance. With these, we need have no fear concerning the future.

The Presidential Term

ONE outcome of the present campaign which must be regarded as important is the movement looking to a change in the presidential term from four to six years, with the proviso that it shall be a single term. This can only be effected by constitutional amendment. From time to time the question of a single term has been discussed, and as long ago as the close of Grant's second incumbency it found many advocates. Now, however, the subject has been brought up in Congress and has found recognition in the platforms of national conventions. Its advocates hold that the single term would be attended with many advantages. It would render impossible the undignified spectacle of a President personally campaigning for re-election. Again it is urged, and with apparently good reason, that a single-term President would have the strongest inducement to faithful and disinterested public service, and a higher ambition to leave behind him a clean and honorable record than if he had a prospect of re-election and yielded to the temptation to place party interests and success above those of the nation.

It is worth noting that the new republic in China seems to have profited by its observation of American politics, since it has decided in favor of a six-year single term for its chief executive. Another consideration not to be overlooked is that the proposed innovation would be a blow to bosses and "machines." With an executive looking straight to the people for approval of his official course, "machines" would get little consideration and bosses would hardly be tolerated. In this sense, a single term would be distinctly progressive. No executive could then lay claim to re-election as a reward for services rendered to his party. At no time in our history has there been an emergency when the welfare of the country depended upon the selection of a single individual to the Presidency. There has always been, and always will be, enough good Presidential timber available to make a choice, and that choice should always be free and untrammeled. Moreover, it is a historical fact that the persistent pursuit of the Presidency by any one man, no matter how talented or popular he has been, invariably ended in failure. All of which goes to show that the sentiment of our people is that the office should seek the man, and not the man the office.

Small But Significant

PORTLAND, Oregon, had an election for superintendent of public schools in June last. Regarding the individual merits of the candidates no question seems to have been raised, and the local newspapers pronounced them men of capacity. There was, however, one incident in connection with this public school election which is of interest to all right-thinking Americans. On a Sunday morning previous to the voting, the Catholic churches of the city took a hand in the fight. It was announced from the altar that cards would be given out to voters at the close of the service, and the members were urged to "vote as conscience dictates." Every one who heard thoroughly understood that the Roman Church claims to be the interpreter of the conscience of the individual member. Those cards, it is hardly necessary to say, bore the name of the candidate for superintendent whom the church wanted to win. The church meant to have that office—to have an incumbent upon whom the church could depend. And the candidate favored by the Roman Church of Portland was duly elected. In that little local public school campaign the "steam roller" was applied as scientifically and efficiently as was ever done in a National Committee or Convention.

Our cities, towns and villages, where the independence of the public school is valued, should guard that independence jealously. Rome means to have the schools, if she can. Some years ago a distinguished Catholic prelate was quoted as making this confident declaration:

> "We can have the United States in ten years, and I want to give you three points for your consideration: the negroes, the Indians, and the public schools."

Secure in the possession of unlimited wealth, and with organized forces that are conducting shrewdly and silently a campaign of encroachment with the view of "making America Catholic," the Roman Church regards the public schools as of the first importance to her ambitious plan. If there should be in the mind of any one the last lingering doubt as to the actuality of her far-reaching schemes and purposes, we would recommend him to read the remarkable article by Professor Dau in this issue, entitled, "Jerusalem — Rome — Washington." Though the attempt to control the public schools may seem insignificant in itself, viewed in the light of the larger project for a nation's conquest, it assumes an importance that is not to be underestimated without serious danger.

The "Titanic" Inquiry

AFTER a thorough and searching investigation involving the testimony of several hundred witnesses, the British inquiry into the Titanic disaster has been finished and the draft of the report of Lord Mersey to the Board of Assessors sitting with him is published in the cable despatches. It exonerates Mr. Ismay on the charge of influencing the navigation of the ship, and attributes the disaster to excessive speed, but holds that Captain Smith simply followed precedent. It condemns the antiquated lifeboat rules of the British Board of Trade and recommends regular boat-crew drills. It urges the general adoption of the Marconi wireless system with day and night operators continuously on duty. Contrary to expectations, it regards searchlights as undesirable. In many respects, there is a striking similarity between the results of the English and American investigations. There is this difference, however, that the British inquest was a slow and deliberate affair, unmarked by any sensational features. Some of the far-reaching suggestions of Senator Smith and his associates might well have been followed by the British court, especially those that had reference to international action for the better safeguarding of life and comfort on the ocean.

The Southern Flood Sufferers

IT WILL be welcome news to our readers to learn that the worst suffering from the Mississippi floods is now past. The following letter, acknowledging the receipt of the latest contributions from this journal, speaks for itself:

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR
CITY HALL, NEW YORK, July 10, 1912.

Editor The Christian Herald:

In behalf of the committee I beg to thank you for your check for $3,000 received to-day for the relief of the sufferers from the Southern floods. This check has been turned over to Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, treasurer of the Red Cross, who will forward it to the South. The committee is in receipt of a letter from Mr. Bicknell, national director of the Red Cross, stating that he believes it unnecessary to solicit further funds. The time has passed for planting seeds, and he thinks that with the money already on hand, and that will continue to come in for three or four weeks, there will be enough to meet the needs of the people.

Again thanking you for your active and generous co-operation, I am, etc., ROBERT ADAMSON, Secretary.

THE HOUSE OF PRAYER

THE plate from which our present cover subject is reproduced is a rarely beautiful etching on copper by G. Marchelli, the famous Italian etcher in colors. This view of the sweet, fresh water canal of Chartres, with the fine play of color reflected in it, and the famous Gothic cathedral known the world over as the "House of Prayer," its tall spire and azure roof outlined in the gray blue of a hazy midsummer day in France, is especially appealing and truly beautiful

The Cathedral at Chartres is one of the richest and finest Gothic cathedrals in Europe.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, July 24, 1912

	PAGE
Cathedral at Chartres . . . . . Etching by G. Marchelli	Cover
Our Mail-Bag	730
Mont-Lawn's Happy "Fourth" (Illustrated)	731, 732
In the Grip of the Heat (Illustrated) . . .	733
Hospitality in God's House. Sermon . . . By Rev. David J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D.	734, 735
Enthusiasm for Work	735
Jerusalem, Rome, Washington	736
Collisions in the Fog (Illustrated) . . .	736
Taming the American Eagle (Illustrated) . .	737
The Cyclone at Regina (Illustrated) . . .	737
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	738
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated) . .	739
America Befriend (Music)	740
Old-Time Camp Meeting	740
What It Means (Illustrated) . . . . . Story by Lily W. Long	741
Northfield, a Spiritual Mecca (Illustrated) . .	742
Sunday School Lesson . . . . . By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	745, 746
What Others Say	746
Happy Cozy Corner Days (Illustrated) . . .	747

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

amorrist Leaders Get Thirty Years

HE trial of the Camorrist leaders at Viterbo, which had been in progress for seventeen months, ended July 8 in the conviction of the survivors of the forty-one arrested for criminal conspiracy, and the sentence of five to thirty years of solitary confinement on the charge of murder. In June, 1906, Gennaro Cuocolo, a former Camorrist leader, was found stabbed to death on the lower slope of Mount Vesuvius. On the same night his wife was murdered in Naples. The government was four years in tracking down the murderers, and has now been a year and a half trying them. The cage of prisoners, howling, shrieking, cursing, and abusing the prosecution and the judge, has been the tragical picture witnessed by the world. The trial ended with a final outburst of shrieks, gestures, oaths and curses such as had characterized the proceedings from the start. One of the prisoners, Di Marinas, cut his throat with a piece of glass and fell bleeding to the floor. Women fainted and confusion prevailed. The president of the court immediately sent for the condemned men. Sortino, Cerrato, Salvi, Cuocolo, Di Gennaro, Alfano, Rapi, and Di Marinas, were sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment and seven years' police surveillance; Di Matteo to ten years and six months' imprisonment and ten years' police surveillance; Ascrittore to ten years' imprisonment and three years' surveillance; Ciro Vizzi, the priest, to seven years' imprisonment and two years' surveillance; the others to five years' imprisonment and three years' surveillance. Thus ended one of the most remarkable trials of history. The whole world looked on to see whether Italy had virtue and courage enough to succeed in the death struggle between civilization and organized assassination which the murderous secret societies of Italy had provoked. There was anxiety that the fear of vengeance that has been so swift and certain for so long a time might intimidate witnesses for prosecution, but it did not, and it is generally understood that the trial and verdict are the death of the Camorrist society, and that all nations of the earth are likely to have a new era of law and order. It will be well if the verdict puts added courage and efficiency into the courts of America, that they may put an end to the secret assassinations by criminal foreign organizations that are getting to be of too common occurrence in all the great cities of the country. The prophet thus described such people:

Their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood. (Isa. 59: 7.)

The Camorrists in the Cage, During the Trial at Viterbo

Bible Gives Woman Strength

THE "Gideons" put 100,000 Bibles in the various hotels of the country, which have been yielding abundant harvests in comforting and inspiring believers to duty, and in bringing unbelievers into the kingdom. Recently a woman had an important business engagement in a certain city. On the table of her hotel room she saw one of these Bibles. Having worried herself with heartsickness, she opened the sacred Book, yearning for comfort. Her eye fell at first upon these words, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee," and her heart was rested. With tears of gratitude running down her cheeks she opened the Book again, and read, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." The Spirit accompanied the written word and she went to the task that looked so difficult, and had the largest measure of success in her undertaking. Christ, through his revealed word, spoke to the woman these words:

I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. (John 14: 18.)

Heroic Rescue of Child

CHARLES STERLING, a little fellow three years of age, slipped away from home the other afternoon down to Rockaway Beach, New York City, where, seeing a rowboat high and dry on the sand, he got into it and began to play. The tide came up and took it away, and there being no boats or men at the dock at the time, the little fellow drifted out a mile into Jamaica Bay on his way to the big ocean. The mother, missing the boy, went to the shore, and, to her horror, saw him in the skiff clapping his hands and having the time of his life. The mother cried for help, and David Hugh and Milton Baillie, only twelve years old, taking off their shoes, went into the water and swam out to the skiff. Getting into it they found no oars, and those two little sailors got into the water. One taking the end of a rope at the bow and swimming tugged at his load, the other swam at the stern and pushed the boat, and in this way they brought the boat and child to shore. By this time a great crowd, mainly of women, had gathered at the dock, and the heroes were smothered with kisses. The incident occasioning the risking of the lives of three boys should not have occurred. Thousands of children, some not more than mere babies, play around the banks of rivers and shores of bays and the sea in the summer, and the toll of life is terrible. Constantly the papers tell of little boys falling off the pier or barge or out of the boat into the water to their death. These little urchins are dear to Christ, and should be to his followers, but to society the dropping of them out of life occasions almost as little notice or regret as the dying flies that are not missed by the swarm. There must be closer parental watching, and even better police protection of these little ones. Boys crave water in the summer time as much as ducks do, and under safe guardianship the poor, as well as the rich, should be provided with this healthy sport. But the reckless slaughter of the innocents that each summer produces is a sin and a shame. The heroism of the two boys only twelve years old is beautiful in the extreme. Our children in the schools in their essays and declamations refer to the heroic acts of Greece, Rome and other ancient nations, but few are more brave than the rescue of the baby in Jamaica Bay by boys only a little older than babies at the risk of their own lives. So many people are only silly children straying away from home, and playing in the boat on the sand with dangerous tides and no oars or human arm to save them from drifting out to the great ocean to death. There is One who is willing and mighty to save those who are helplessly drifting to ruin:

For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. (Luke 19: 10.)

American Athletes Capture Stockholm

FOR the third time in the history of Olympic games, the Stars and Stripes floated from all three flag poles on which are hoisted the national emblems of the countries obtaining first, second and third places in final events. The first occasion was at Athens when American athletes won all the points in the standing broad jump. In the first Olympic race recently run at Stockholm, the Americans made a clean sweep in the final of the 100-meter flat race. Barely a yard separated the first and fifth men at the finish, and none of the twenty thousand persons present except the judges knew who had won. But a moment later a mighty shout arose when the numbers were posted showing that Ralph Craig, of Detroit, was first; Meyer, of New York, second; and Lippincott, of Philadelphia, third. Patching of South Africa was fourth. On the third day of the games in the 800-meter race the American athletes took the first three points again when Meredith, Sheppard, and Davenport came sweeping down to the tape, all of them breaking the world's record. Meredith also broke the world's record for a half mile. At the close of the third day of the contests in Sweden, the United States had won twenty-six points, Finland six points, and Great Britain five points. America is very proud of the successes of her athletic representatives, which show physical strength, endurance and skill, and a splendid mental and moral self-mastery. In securing a living, in accumulating a fortune, in the search of preferment or fame, in the pursuit of happiness, in winning a crown of immortality, there is the contest, the race for the prize. The foot race is used by the apostle as the symbol of the spiritual race:

Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. (I. Cor. 9: 24.)

Old Horse Refuses Idleness

CHARLIE is the name of a gray horse sixteen hands high, who has been actively in the harness for thirty years in a lumber yard in New York City. The faithful old fellow the owners would not sell, but recently they retired him on a pension for the rest of his natural life. He was sent out to a pasture on Long Island, and instead of kicking up his heels and rolling on the ground like a colt he looked unhappy and grew sick. It was suggested that he was homesick and unhappy in an idle life, and so it seemed. For they took him back to his old stable in the city and to his old stall, and he picked up in health and spirit at once. But when the other horses with whom he had done his daily tasks went out to their work in the morning Charlie would tug at his halter and try to get away to them, and so every morning they would put his harness on him and let him go without cart or load anywhere he wanted in the lot, encouraging him with the idea that he was busy aiding the lumber business as he had done the rest of his life. Many men who undertake to retire from business are like old Charlie, nervous and ill, and some taken out of an active business or profession pine away and even die. The animals have not had their last say. The old horse, under the force of habit and love for work, teaches eloquently to men the tremendous power of habit, and the beauty and joy of an industrious life. People could go to this faithful old work-horse for a lesson of industry, as the Wise Man found that lesson taught by the lower tribes.

Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise. (Prov. 6: 6.)

Great Cave Just Discovered

ONE of the most wonderful caves in the world has been found in Southern Arizona. Unnamed, unexplored, and almost unknown, it gives evidence of being a rival of the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, whose fame is worldwide. Only a few have dared to enter it to view its grandeur and to study the marvelous handiwork of the Almighty in its construction. This cave lies at the foothills of the Huachuca Mountains, about forty miles northeast of Nogales, Santa Cruz County. Exploring parties have entered and spent days inside, but none has ever discovered the end. They report passageways, rooms and chambers innumerable. One room is level and smooth, and there are many deep and dangerous chasms. A cave figured in ancient times as a den for thieves, a grave for the dead, a refuge for the pursued and persecuted. Five kings who had fled to one for safety were penned up by Joshua and slain and made fearful examples by his order. David was afraid of Achish the king of Gath, and fled to a cave.

David therefore departed thence, and escaped to the cave Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him. (I. Sam. 22: 1.)

OUR JOYS

BETTER a smile than a tear or a sigh,
Better a laugh than a frown,
Better an upward look to the sky
Than always a sad look down.

The joys we find in each little day
Perhaps may seem few and small,
But better these little joys, I say,
Than to have no joys at all.

Keep faith in the love that blesses men
As the sunshine does the sod,
Let us do our best and trust the rest
To the after-heart of God.
—British Weekly.

A Live Sunday School

IT IS characteristic of the "busy Methodists" that they have in church and Sunday school many of the most prominent men in the community, but one might not find it easy to discover another Sunday school in a comparatively small place in which so many of the leading men are found, as in the Sunday school of the First M. E. Church of Garden City, Kan. The superintendent, Mr. C. L. Marmon, is a prominent lawyer in the town. The mayor is the leader of the orchestra, and is rather proud of the fact that he has missed but one session of the school in three years. Seven members of the town council are in one organized Bible class, in which there are a large number of other prominent men of the town. The town marshal is the successful teacher of a large class of boys, while the assistant superintendent is the principal of the high school. The superintendent of classification is also a teacher in the city schools. The sessions of the school are held in the High School building, while a fine new church is being erected. The new church will have accommodations for the Sunday school which is, it need hardly be added, the most important ally of this church. With so many men of activity and prominence in this school, it is a foregone conclusion that the boys are also there in large numbers.

J. L. H.

Old-Time Camp Meeting

THE third annual camp meeting of the New York District of the Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene was held at Groveville Park, Matteawan, N. Y., from June 28 to July 8. The services were scheduled to close on Sunday evening, July 7, but on that night there was such a remarkable demonstration of divine power in awakening and saving souls, and so keen an interest on the part of the people of the neighborhood, that another service was announced for Monday night, and this closed the eleven day campaign, which was noteworthy in interest, blessing and victory.

Mrs. Carrie Crow, of Kentucky, who has preached the gospel of full salvation in many States, and has recently conducted successful campaigns in New York and Brooklyn, was the evangelist of the Groveville camp. She and her sister, Miss Kell, sang earnest and beautiful selections, which added to the power and blessing of the services. Their younger sister, Miss Bonivere Kell, and Miss Hayes, who is soon to sail as a missionary to Persia, joined them occasionally in their "hymns and spiritual songs." A military band, organized by the men of the Utica Avenue Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene, under the leadership of Rev. Henry Elsner, arrived at Fishkill Landing Saturday afternoon, July 6, and marched through Fishkill-on-the-Hudson and Matteawan, out to the Park. Some of the camp meeting workers accompanied the band on parade, and the people of the villages looked on with respectful interest as these militant Christians marched along the brick-paved streets to the strains of "Holiness unto the Lord" and other stirring full salvation songs. When the camp ground was reached, the band played "The Christian Warfare," a march including the music of "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and "Hold the Fort." The tent-dwellers flocked down to the entrance and cheered as the procession continued its march about a circle under the trees until the last strains of "Hold the Fort" had been played. The band assisted at the Saturday evening meeting, and on Sunday morning, afternoon and evening it marched through the camp to the tabernacle to take part in the services.

The Sunday night meeting was one of most intense power, and closed in triumph. After the sermon by Mrs. Crow, the old invitation hymn, "Almost Persuaded," was sung, and while the stanzas were repeated again and again, seekers came from the body of the tabernacle and in from among the trees and bushes from which they had stood watching and listening. As the altar filled, the people standing outside drew nearer to gaze in wonder and respect at the demonstration of the changeless power of God to work the great transformation in human hearts. When the space outside the altar was filled with seekers and those who had brought them, others came inside the altar, kneeling to ask for pardon and cleansing. Faithful workers, many of them young men and women, went out to seek their companions, in some cases following them through the woods when they tried to escape from the conviction that had seized them, and brought them back to the altar. In one or two cases seekers were persuaded to fall on their knees out in the grove, and they found God under the trees. Altogether it was such a tangible demonstration of the supernatural as to strengthen the faith of many hearts and to justify high hopes that the results of that single service will tell through many years and in many lands. For side by side with the insistence upon regeneration and holiness there was carried throughout the camp meeting an earnest spirit of missionary zeal.

Among the preachers who assisted Mrs. Crow at the camp meeting were Rev. J. A. Ward, superintendent of the New York District and pastor of Utica Avenue Church, Brooklyn; Rev. William Howard Hoople, president of the Groveville Park Camp Meeting Association and pastor of John Wesley Church, Brooklyn; Rev. J. E. Angell, president of the Pentecostal Collegiate Institute at North Scituate, R. I., and Rev. Jeremiah Tamblyn.

AMERICA BEFRIEND!

A NEW AMERICAN HYMN

BY HENRY VAN DYKE

With Music by William Fierson Merrill

1. O Lord our God, Thy might - y hand Hath made our coun - try free;
2. The strength of ev - 'ry state in - crease In Un - ion's gold - en chain;
3. O suf - fer not her feet to stray; But guide her un - taught might,
4. Thro' all the wait - ing land pro - claim Thy gos - pel of good - will;
From all her broad and hap - py land May wor - ship rise to Thee.
Her thou-sand cit - ies fill with peace, Her mill - ion fields with grain.
That she may walk in peace - ful day, And lead the world in light.
And may the joy of Je - sus' name In ev - 'ry bo - som thrill.
Ful fill the prom - ise of her youth, Her lib - er - ty de - fend;
The vir - tues of her min - gled blood In one new peo - ple blend;
Bring down the proud, lift up the poor, Un - e - qual ways a - mend;
O'er hill and vale, from sea to sea, Thy ho - ly reign ex - tend;
By law and or - der, love and truth, A - mer - i - ca, A - mer - i - ca be-friend!
By u - ni - ty and broth-er - hood, A - mer - i - ca, A - mer - i - ca be-friend!
By jus - tice, na - tion - wide and sure, A - mer - i - ca, A - mer - i - ca be-friend!
By faith and hope and char - i - ty, A - mer - i - ca, A - mer - i - ca be-friend!

Copyright 1912 by The Continent

Professor Henry Van Dyke, of Princeton University, is the author of this beautiful National Hymn, the music being composed by Dr. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York. It has been pronounced by competent critics a musical masterpiece and is reproduced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by special permission of the authors and of The Continent, in which it originally appeared.

READY TO HEAR

JESUS listens with compassio
To the voice that prays relief
And his smiles, like sunshine, fi
Rainbows in the tears of gri
And the heartache soon is over,
And he seems the pain to sh
Ah, the world would soon recov
If the world would bow in pr

Comes a Magdalen confessing,
And he puts the sin away;
Comes a publican for blessing,
And he never answers nay;
And another voice is crying,
Crying "Lord, remember me!
And a thief is saved while dying
By his side on Calvary.

Ready every good to give us,
Every grief to take away,
All transgression to forgive us,
All our anguish to allay;
Never had the soul another
Friend so true and kind as he—
Closer cleaves he than a brother
Jesus Christ of Calvary.

Somerville, Mass. W. C. MART

A Life Transformed

ABOUT seven years ago a m
by the name of T. W. R ardson received THE CHRIST
HERALD from my law office.
liked the paper so much that called on me for it each w and for many years he has missed getting a dozen copies this paper. The community which he lived at the time commenced taking this pa had no church and no religi service, and he himself was open and outbreaking sinn
After many months he came the conclusion that he wo build a church in his comm nity. He was a very poor m had bought a tract of land credit and had to pay for it his own labor. While he w laboring to pay for this la unassisted and without mo influence to encourage him (e
cept THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
he persisted in his purpose building the church. He begg a few dollars here and there;
cut the timber off of his ov land, and did his hauling wi some assistance from his neig bors. A Baptist minister nam Bryant helped him at this jun ture, and he finally complet the church building, and it h been paid for and dedicate
It is a nice country church in beautiful location and has regular monthly service and Sunday school every Sunda
We consider that all this h been brought about by the goo
Christian influences exerte upon Mr. Richardson and hi neighbors by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
He is now a leading member and off cial in the church and is living a cor sistent life. WILLIAM M. PEYTON.

The Gospel in the Worksho

IN MANY workshops throughout th country brief religious services ar now held at the noon hour on one da each week. Meetings of this characte are held at noon in twelve of the fac tories of Brooklyn, N. Y., under th auspices of the Central Branch of th
Young Men's Christian Association
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been usec as a preacher of the Gospel at these meetings. In a communication from Secretary Alfred Stokes, he says: "I have become somewhat acquainted with the housing conditions of these men and realize that too little reading matter of a helpful character comes into their homes. I have distributed large numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at these shop meetings and they are taken eagerly. The cash gift of a generous friend enabled me to give away 1,000 copies of it at the noon meetings, and it is my cherished dream that I may in the near future give out 1,000 CHRISTIAN HERALDS every week, with their message of love, good cheer and hope."

WHAT IT MEANS

BY LILY A. LONG

ND, by the way, bring your wife with you. You are married, aren't you? Mrs. Anson will be glad to put her up for the night."

Mr. Anson pushed back his chair and rose he spoke, perhaps to signify to the young mining ineer that he had taken as much of a banker's uable time as he could in reason expect to claim. eorge Howe's face cleared at the last words and hesitation vanished. He certainly wanted most ticularly to come down and meet the great Al- Wirth, who had become the controlling owner he Blue Bird Mine, and explain to him in person and why it could be worked to produce satis- tory results; and he had hesitated about leaving et up at the camp. Howe had been married y four months, and his anxiety to the right thing by the most won- ful girl in the world was some- es complicated by a consciousness his ignorance as to what the right ng was. He hadn't quite come to stage of taking Janet for nted. His intentions were always the best; but this is the way in ich he reported Mr. Anson's cas- invitation:

'I have to go down to Ansonia on 10th on business" (having been rried only four months, he did yet know that a wife has any in- est in the details of a man's busi- ss), "and I'll have to stay over ht in order to meet a man I want see. How would you like to go wn with me? Mrs. Anson wants to come and spend the night."

'Oh, goody!" cried the intellec- al Janet Allington Howe, late of Chicago Women's Club and in- merable committees and societies, d now of the Blue Bird Mine in wilds of Washington. "How rfectly lovely! She is the wife of Mr. Anson who is a stockholder our mine, isn't she?"

"Yes," he said, looking surprised. He's a small stockholder. But he presents the man who owns the ntrolling interest, and who is com- g out on the 10th. How did you ow about him?"

"Oh, I can't help knowing some- ing, even if you don't tell me very uch! He's an important man in nsonia, isn't he?"

"The important man. He founded e town and still owns most of it."

"Then his wife is probably the so- al leader. Fancy! In Ansonia! ut I suppose they have them in amchatka. What sort of a woman she?"

"Why, rather a large woman, I ould say."

"Is that all you should say?" ughed Janet.

"Well, she has white hair."

"Nobly done!" jeered Janet. "You uld qualify for a society reporter. ever mind, Georgie dear. I'll find ut all I want to know in three min- tes when I see her. And I do think was very nice and friendly of her invite me. I wonder if she will ave any one else. Maybe she eans to give a party for me in the vening! And a chance to wear an evening gown! he trousseau trunk shall be opened at last."

"I'm afraid you must find the camp pretty stu- id," said Howe uneasily, taking note of her happy nimation. That was the brilliant look she had abitually worn when he first met her.

"Oh, not at all," said Janet lightly. "My mind o me ought to be a sufficient kingdom to save any lace from seeming stupid. But of course, with a hinese cook who looks cleavers and bolo knives at e if I venture to make any suggestion about the amp-keeping, there really isn't much for me to do. With no bric-à-brac to dust, no calls to make, no lubs to attend, nothing to eat but food and nothing o look at but landscape, I welcome a little diver- ion!"

"I'm afraid it is dull," he repeated, in a worried one.

Janet gave him a quizzical look, but she said nly, "Do you find it so?"

"I? Oh, no. The days aren't long enough for what I want to do. But then—this is my life."

"Well?" she smiled.

But he did not catch her point, and it was not in her nature to be more explicit. He only said, still in a disturbed tone, "I'm glad that you will have Mrs. Anson at least."

"The path of gold for you and the need of a world of women for me," said Janet with a curling smile. (And to George, who didn't know his Browning at sight, it sounded most unintelligible.) "But, truly, I am glad to go. Do you realize that I haven't seen a woman's face for nearly three months? I can hardly wait for Wednesday." And she went off to her own tent, where George heard her happily singing over some of the bridal finery which had never before been unpacked.

Wednesday dawned grayly on the mountains, but Janet met it with a face of sunshine.

Drawn by H. T. Fisk

"She clung to him with something of the terror of one who has been lifted from the edge of an abyss"

"In Ansonia the sun is shining," she said gaily. But George made literal answer:

"I'm afraid not. It's more likely to be raining down in the valley."

It was a four-hour ride down the mountain, part of the way on the spur track that belonged to the Blue Bird, and then on the main line. Janet had come up by this way when their wedding trip through California had ended with a climb to the mine where George was in charge of the operations on the Blue Bird, and she had not been away from the camp since that day. There had been no place to which she could go. Ansonia had not occurred to her as a social possibility. Besides, it was four hours away. At first the activities at the mine had had the fascination of novelty, and she had tried to interest herself in the details, but her quick mind grasped it all too soon. Then the large solitude of the place had folded her in. Heretofore her life had been busy, even crowded. Here, she told herself, she would be able to read, to sketch, perhaps to write. But the solitude did not prove fruitful. She began to feel that it was paralyzing her energies. The somber qualities of the fir forests which clothed the mountains and reduced their grandeur to shaggy uncouthness began to prey upon her spirits. She had not realized how far this had gone until to-day, the day of relief. As the unsteady little train of freighted cars slid down the chute which the railroad track cut through the dense forest, Janet tingled with a pleasant excitement which had long been a stranger.

George proved to be a true prophet as regarded the weather. It was five o'clock when they reached Ansonia, and a drizzling rain was doing its worst for the raw little town. Janet's eye swept the unprotected platform beside which the train stopped.

"There is no one to meet us," she said in surprise.

"Why, no, there wouldn't be," said Howe, surprised in his turn at her expectations. "I know the way to their house."

It wasn't Janet's idea of a gracious reception, but she was continually telling herself that she must learn to adjust her life to the new conditions, and she cheerfully stepped forth into the mud of the unpaved streets of Ansonia.

"Thank heaven I have a pretty dress in that suit-case," she said after a few minutes of trudging. Her skirt was mud-splashed, and she knew her hat was limp from the rain. "I feel that I must look like the maiden all forlorn."

"You look very nice," George said, and though she knew it was not the judgment with which Mrs. Anson would judge, it pleased her.

She was also pleased with the aspect of the Anson house when they were admitted. Compared with the rest of the town, it was imposing, and though Janet would once have laughed at its esthetics it struck her now as delightfully comfortable.

"Doesn't a house seem a good human invention?" she murmured to her husband while they waited for their hostess. "Even when it is as bourgeois as this is! It looks homelike to have doors and windows and shelves. Ah, here she comes."

Mrs. Anson came toward them slowly; dignity was a physical necessity with a lady of her avoirdupois.

"Common. Self-satisfied. Warmhearted. Good, but tactless," was Janet's swift appraisement as she rose to meet her.

"So this is Mrs. Howe," said the unconscious lady in a rich, throaty voice.

"Yes, I am beginning to acknowledge the name as something more than an alias," laughed Janet happily.

"And where did you drop from, my dear?" pursued Mrs. Anson amiably.

"Why, from the camp," said Janet, looking puzzled. "I'm staying up at the mine, you know."

"How should I know, when I didn't know till this minute that there was a Mrs. Howe?" said the large lady in chuckling raillery. "I thought George Howe was a gay young bachelor, and I've been plannin' to make a match for him; ha! ha! Lucky you let me know. So you're stayin' up at the mine, eh? Well, I've done the same thing in my young days, but the comforts of home mean a good deal to me now. You don't look as though you had been brought up in camps, either. From the East?"

"From Chicago," said Janet. In some indefinable way her manner had changed and George looked up inquiringly.

"I'm expectin' some people from the East myself this evening," said Mrs. Anson with placid importance. "Comin' up in their private car, if you please. Funny what some folks do have in this world, ain't it? Mr. Anson is afraid I can't entertain 'em good enough, but I tell him what is good enough for us is good enough for them. But you know how fussy men are."

"You are quite right," said Janet heartily. She rose as she spoke, and managed somehow to hold George dumb with a glance while she extended her hand cordially to Mrs. Anson. "We mustn't stay. I know you have things to see to. We are just

Continued on page 743

NORTHFIELD, A SPIRITUAL MECCA

An East Northfield Scene

A Section of the Campus at Northfield

The Grave on "Round Top"

WHEN the great evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, died there were many who spoke in foreboding tones of the future of the Northfield work. The two schools which the great evangelist had founded required $75,000 a year to pay expenses; the many summer conferences which had made Northfield a Mecca for Christians of all sects were now without a leader. The schools which D. L. Moody had said would be his monument they predicted would merely show his visionary judgment and lack of wisdom in starting such a movement, which no one else could carry on. But the critics were wrong, and the man whose abilities were untested measured up to the task. For over ten years William Revell Moody has raised a sufficient sum to cover the annual deficit on the schools, which now amounts to nearly $100,000 a year, for Northfield and Mount Hermon students pay only half their actual expenses. He has continued the Northfield Conferences, has aided in adding four new gatherings to the annual summer program, has brought to Northfield such men as Morgan, Johnston Ross, Jowett and Brown, and has become known as a chairman of ability nearly equal to his father. He has found new friends to support the Northfield work. The Northfield Schools to-day fulfil the prophecy made by their founder; they are his greatest monument. Already ten thousand men and women, scattered in every walk of life throughout the world, are better servants of their God and their fellow men because they have been at Mount Hermon or Northfield.

The Growth of Northfield

Within the past few years there has been a decided increase in material equipment; since 1910, alone, buildings costing over half a million dollars have been erected. One new building has just been dedicated, and three buildings are in process of construction now. At Mount Hermon, across the river from Northfield, the loyalty of the old students has been a striking factor in this material development. The alumni gifts, from men only slightly encumbered with this world's goods, have annually been in the thousands. At the twenty-fifth reunion two brothers gave Holbrook Hall, the administration building, and last year, when the "old boys" came back to celebrate the school's thirtieth birthday, $20,000 was raised to build a Principal's Home, which was used for the first time at the spring commencement. It is a fitting testimonial of the appreciation of the school to Henry F. Cutler, who has served as principal for twenty years. As the winter term was starting in January last year fire destroyed Crossley Hall, the largest dormitory, and two hundred students were without accommodations. The other buildings expanded in some miraculous way, and all were cared for. Last fall the returning Hermonite found a fine new fireproof dormitory ready for him, raised from the ashes of old Crossley, filled with every modern device, trimmed with marble, and large enough for two hundred and fifty students. Work is now progressing on the new library, the gift of Mrs. A. F. Schauffler, of New York, which will be completed in time for the fall term.

Three new friends have recently added a large sum to the equipment of the Northfield Seminary. A few years ago Mrs. Russell Sage gave the new Music Hall, and the beautiful gray stone chapel, which looks out across the broad river, over the other buildings. Beside it lies the boulder which marks the grave of Miss Evelyn S. Hall, who served the seminary as principal for a decade. The new principal, Charles E. Dickerson, who was vice principal at Mount Hermon, is completing his first year in the new position; a Principal's Home is being added to the equipment of the school. Mrs. John S. Kennedy, whose husband left $50,000 to each school, has recently given Kenarden Hall, which will serve as an Administration Building when completed, and will probably be the finest building on either campus. Another gift, just announced, is a home, on the seminary campus, for the director of the two schools, the position now occupied by Mr. W. R. Moody. At this particular time, however, interest is centered on Gould Hall, the new dormitory situated behind the chapel. The dedication exercises took place June 8, with addresses by Miss Helen Miller Gould, the donor, and Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross. There are ninety rooms, including suites for teachers, and with this added equipment the seminary will enroll at least six hundred girls next fall. With these new buildings the Northfield Schools have an equipment worth nearly two and a half millions.

Because the Moodys do not believe in having the Northfield plant lie idle, the plan was started some dozen years ago of continuing Mount Hermon School throughout the summer. The year is now divided into three terms, and graduation exercises are held in April and August; seventeen men expect to graduate this summer and go on to college in the fall. The August commencement at Mount Hermon is always a popular feature during the General Conference; the delegates drive over to attend, and the speakers to take part in the exercises. Nearly three hundred young men are busily studying there through these summer months; already nine hundred different students have attended the school since last September. A special feature of the summer term is the afternoon Bible class, taught by visiting teachers, among whom, this summer, are Rev. W. W. Weeks, D.D., Rev. Gaius Glenn Atkins, D.D., Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., Rev. John Henry Strong, D.D., Rev. F. B. Meyer, M.A., Professor Charles E. Erdman, D.D., Rev. James A. Francis, D.D., and Professor A. T. Robertson, D.D.

Conference for Theological Students

A new feature at this Conference, June 21 to 30, was a sub-conference for theological seminary students, with men of the caliber of Doctors Mott, Speer, Atkins, Cairns, of Edinburgh University, and Professor Horne of New York University, as leaders. In addition to the regular delegations from nearly a hundred and fifty New England, New York and Canada institutions, a number of Chinese delegates were invited. For the first time Northfield was to hear the Gospel preached in Chinese.

July has been largely occupied with the conferences for women, starting with the Young Women's Conference, and concluding with the Summer School for Sunday School Workers, which is Northfield's only co-educational summer school. The two s sions for women's missionary societies will att a large number of missionary leaders, including Cornelius H. Patton, secretary of the A. B. C. F. Dr. Walter C. Roe, an authority on work am Indians, and Dr. I. T. Headland, of China, who conduct a class on the new movements in that gr republic.

W. R. Moody's Conference Call

The General Conference, August 2 to 18, have as a new feature a central theme, which i consideration of "The Word and the World,' natural outgrowth of the great Men and Relig Movement. There will be sessions for minist and laymen; meetings for women and children probably be arranged later. Special plans are ing made for the music this year, which should to the effectiveness of the gathering. As with the Northfield Conferences, most of the afterno will be devoted to recreation, and during the summer months baseball games between coll men, girls, and ministers will succeed one anot on the diamond.

In a letter to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN H ALD, Mr. W. R. Moody says:

"In this day the world is challenging the auth ity of the evangel, and inquiring as to its conte There is need, therefore, that the Church of Chr should state in unmistakable terms its convicti that it carries the authentic message of God's vealed love for mankind, and of his provisions humanity's greatest need. Realizing that world was never in greater need of a Saviour fr sin, and convinced that this need can only be through the dissemination by the church of t Christian message, we earnestly invite the atter ance of all Christian workers to this thirtieth Co ference, to be held in Northfield from August 2 18. 'Not by might, but by my Spirit' is the conqu of the church to be accomplished, and in prepar tion for this end we extend this invitation.

"It was customary, in the early days of the Chr tian Workers' Conference, to choose some ther about which meditation should center, and in t coming season it is planned to return to this meth by adopting a general subject for consideratio The theme for 1912 will be 'The Christian Messag or The Word and The World.' In a theme so co prehensive in its scope there is sufficient latitude f every speaker, and at the same time a unity a homogeneity which will enhance the value of t gathering. Adaptations of this theme will be pr sented for all classes who attend.

"Special Ministers' Conferences will be held, co ducted by Rev. John A. Hutton and Dr. A. T. Ro ertson. 'The Weapons of Our Warfare' will the subject of Mr. Hutton's lectures, in which will review the conflict of the Christian messa with the hostile world during the first three Chri tian centuries, and will deduce from this conflic much-needed lessons for our own age. Dr. Rob ertson will give expositions in the Epistle of Jame entitled 'The Wisdom of James,' following th Greek Testament text. Although primarily fo students of the Greek Testament, a knowledge o Greek will not be necessary in order to follow th lectures of this eminent scholar."

arry This Pen in your White Vest

'S, upside down in your white vest ocket.
slip it in your trousers pocket along your jack knife and keys.
drop it in the bottom of your out-coat pocket.
short, carry it in any of undred places where you
ict a fountain pen to leak.
at's why it is called the er Jack Knife Safety
—because you can carry ywhere your jack knife be carried, and it won't a bit more than your knife leaks. Neither it slip out of your pocket n you stoop over.
very automobilist should one in the outside pocket is duster. Every profesal man, every travelling
, every tourist, every vanist, every lady who goes ping should carry one.
dy as a pencil, slips flat purse or bag.
any sizes and handsome ns, from 3¼inch pen knife for ladies to 5¾ inches for the man who wants ll size pen to grip. Prices
), $3.50, $4.00, $5.00 and wards.
scientific principle keeps Parker Jack Knife Pen n leaking. It contains the illary Attraction prine which makes every ker Lucky Curve Foun-
Pen write as smooth as s, and never leak or eat" in your pocket.

No. 14 Silver Mounted $5.00

arker Spear Head Ink troller gives absolutely form and easy ink flow.
gold pens with polished ium points write without h, skip or blot.
et a Parker from your ler on 10 days trial If don't find it the handiest writing trivance you ever saw, dealer will mptly refund. We protect him from your dealer does not carry Parker s, write us for catalog. But start ting a Parker today.

PARKER PENCIL COMPANY
Mill Street, Janesville, Wisconsin
New York Retail Store
ark Row Opposite Post Office

No. 23½ Chased Barrel $3.00

PARKER
Jack Knife Safety
OUNTAIN PEN

neumatic With Brush

ERE'S the perfect sweeper—cleans by powerful air suction and brush combined. Only machine that ps up lint and threads. No other in the world like it.

he DUNTLEY PNEUMATIC SWEEPER
uaranteed to take 5 ounces of dirt in 5 minutes out of any carpet or rug in use satisfactory in every way or money back. No power needed Runs by hand—easily, nightly Modern sizes. Write today for full description, our GUARANTEE and remarkably low price.

A few choice territories open to good agents. Splendid offer to ladies.

ntley Pneumatic Tool Co., 409 Harrester Bldg., Chicago

HAND MADE
Crochet Bow
34c in a box
We carry different styles of Bows and Jabots equally Hand Made. High Class Hand Made goods at machine made prices
Write for Catalog
Dept. 3
YAMA CO
104 Fifth Ave N Y

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books, inventions wanted prizes etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Save Steps One trip with Wheel Tray sets table and clears it. Stands comfortable for serving. Ready rack with wash or dishes. Fat-lasts because of improvements. Write for booklet. WHEEL TRAY CO., 433 West 41st Place, Chicago, Ill.

WHAT IT MEANS

Continued from page 741

going through Ansonia, and as there was time, Mr. Howe wanted to bring me here."

"But, Janet!" exclaimed Howe.

She cast him one swift look which paralyzed him into bewildered silence.

"Of course he wanted to show you off," said Mrs. Anson, who had noticed nothing. "I don't wonder! And when these important people have gone, I want you to come down to see me, and we'll have a nice cozy time gettin' acquainted. You and me mayn't be grand, but we can be comfortable!"

Once out again in the wet street, Janet turned to her husband with pent indignation.

"I thought you said she invited me for the night."

"He did. It's just the same. If you had let me explain—"

"It isn't at all the same. A man's casual invitation to a man! Even at that, he hadn't thought the matter of sufficient importance to mention it to his wife."

"I suppose he forgot," said Howe, with masculine fellow-feeling. "I am sure it would have been all right if you had let me explain. Mrs. Anson is really kind-hearted."

"And would have charitably taken me in out of the rain. Don't you understand that I don't want to visit her on that basis?"

"Oh, of course, if you feel that way about it, we'll go to the hotel."

"I won't go to the hotel. They would hear of it, and he would remember his invitation and tell her. I told her we were going through town. You said the train waited here an hour. We'll go on."

"But where? Good heavens, Janet, be reasonable. There's no place to go to!"

"The conductor and engineer go somewhere, don't they? We'll go, too. We can transfer somewhere to some train coming back—since I suppose we must come back!"

If you had asked George Howe when and where he was married, he would have said on May 15 in Judge Allington's drawing-room in Chicago, for he was a truthful young man after his lights. He would have seen nothing more than a figure of speech in the statement that he took a more decisive step in the direction of marriage that rainy evening in Ansonia, when he swiftly balanced in his mind the importance of staying over to see Anson and the new Owner against the importance of wiping that look of tragedy from Janet's face, and decided that since she felt so, the Blue Bird must take care of itself.

"All right, we'll go on," he said cheerfully.

Janet's sigh of relief was almost a sob, but she did not speak. She hurried on feverishly, and not until they had caught the train and dropped into their seats did the tense look leave her lips.

"I wonder where we are bound," said Howe jocularly, as they pulled out of the town. Since he had, in his own mind, made the great concession, he felt that he had a right to be facetious. Janet did not respond, so Howe unfolded the paper which he had time to snatch in the station, and left his unreasonable wife to her own thoughts.

They were dangerous thoughts. Janet had tried to control her speech, but her thoughts flared unrestrained. Why had she let herself in for this sort of thing? she questioned fiercely. She, whose life had been so significant, not only to herself but to her friends, and, beyond that circle, to her city—to exchange all that for this empty life in a wild country, where she, as a unit, counted for nothing even with such women as Mrs. Anson! She had possibly been a little proud of the plain living that went with the high thinking of her father's house, but now the "plain living," with its ordered peace and self-respecting dignity, rose before her in beauty. She had shared her father's thoughts, her mother's large beneficences. And all this she had given up—for what? For a strange man with whom she had spent less than a hundred hours all told before she placed her hand in his and turned away from that dear, familiar life to walk into a new world with him. She looked at him now, buried in his paper, judging him as a stranger. Was there anything to distinguish him from a million more, if she were seeing him for the first time? And here she was bound for life to go where he went, to stay where he stayed, to measure her step by his so long as they two should live! Was this what being married meant? Janet turned her face to the window, where the twilight of the rain had brought on the evening prematurely, and crushed her hands together in her lap.

Presently their train ran on a siding and stopped. Howe threw down his paper, yawned, and rose.

"What are we stopping here for, Jim?" he called familiarly to the conductor.

"There's a special to pass us here. Common folks like us have to step out of the way. There she comes now." And the two men walked out to the platform.

The special came up and stopped on the opposite track. Janet saw but gave no heed until a familiar figure on the platform of the private car which ended the train caught her careless glance. For a moment it seemed a vision; then she understood and jumped up. Her train was already beginning to move, but she caught up her suit case, ran to the door, called to George, who stood in the door of the next car, "Quick! It's Marian!" and, gathering her skirts in her hand, jumped to the ground. And George followed as a matter of course, though his mind was chaotic.

"In heaven's name, Janet," he began, but Janet had fled across the tracks to the other train and was already scrambling up the high steps of the rear car.

"Oh, Marian, Marian!" she cried, and the two girls were locked in each other's arms.

Howe found himself pushed and pulled up the steps as the train started. It was Anson who gave him a hand up. An impressive-looking stranger was laughing and shaking Janet's hands with both his own.

"So you know Mr. Wirth?" said Anson, with mingled surprise, annoyance, and respect.

"Who?" asked Howe blankly.

"Albert Wirth, the owner of the Blue Bird."

The great Mr. Wirth had heard and he turned, laughing, to lay a hand on Howe's shoulder.

"Oh, I know this young man very well—I was present at his wedding, though he may have been too absorbed in other matters to notice me. How do you happen to be in this part of the country, Mr. Howe?"

"Mr. Howe is superintendent of the Blue Bird," said Anson, puzzled, but determined not to be ignored.

"Oho! Oho! So!" said Mr. Wirth, looking keenly interested. "To be sure, I have seen your name in the reports, but it never occurred to me that it was Janet's Mr. Howe. That puts a new aspect on things. Come, my friends, let us talk business while Janet and my daughter are disposing of the more serious matters of life."

Janet was the first to withdraw from the clinging embrace of her friend.

"It's like heaven to see you," she said. "Quite unexpected, you know, and very nice. What brought you up here?"

Marian was looking at her with soulful gaze.

"Janet, are you happy?" she asked, ignoring trivialities.

Continued on next page

Titanic Disaster
Set to Music
by Glazounow, Great Composer

THE loss of the "Titanic," the heroism of the men who perished on it, have inspired the great Russian composer, Glazounow, to write a symphony. He is taking as a motive the melody of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," which the ship's band played as it went down into the depths.

Deeds of noblest heroism have inspired the writing of this piece of music. And the music will ring with this same nobility. It will inspire its hearers. It will even more inspire those who play it—who reproduce the composer's own sensations.

Have you ever experienced this power which nobly inspired music gives the one who plays it? Have you ever been lifted out of yourself by the wonderful message of a composer?

If you are a highly trained musician, it is probable that you have. But if you are an untrained, every-day music lover, this great experience is still ahead of you.

"The Inner Beauty" is a book that paves the way to this experience. It actually opens the gate to the land of music, which you will find far easier to enter, far more enchanting to linger in, than you even now think.

This book is so real and tells the truth about music so clearly, so sympathetically, that it might have been written by a Mozart, a Handel, a Beethoven himself. Truly has it been said, no such book was ever written before.

"The Inner Beauty" tells how this noble feeling of the composer can be brought directly to you. It tells how the invention of the gives you the composers very thoughts while you reproduce the notes and phrases he has written.

VIRTUOLO
THE NEW INSTINCTIVE PLAYER PIANO

It tells how such pieces as this one which Glazounow is writing can be played by you, with their full meaning made clear.

It tells how you or anyone, without any training in music, can sit down to the Virtuolo and get the great double pleasure of music—the pleasure of both pianist and listener, and the full inspiration of the composer.

We want you to have a copy of this book. Every lover of music ought to read it. Therefore we will mail a copy free if you will fill out and mail the attached coupon.

The Hallet & Davis Piano Company is one of the oldest firms of piano makers in the country—established 1839. Hallet & Davis pianos have been played and praised by greatest musicians and composers for over 75 years, including Franz Liszt, Johann Strauss, Mary Garden, and many others. We manufacture the Virtuolo in the famous Hallet & Davis Piano, also in the well known Conway Piano. Virtuolo prices run as low as $550. Sold on easy terms.

SEND THIS COUPON TODAY

and receive your copy of "The Inner Beauty." You will be glad you did not put off this chance to bring into your life a source of noble inspiration such as may never before have come to you. Send to-day, and you won't forget to send.

HALLET & DAVIS PIANO CO.
Dept. 17, 146 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Mail me a Free Copy of "The Inner Beauty," and full information about the Virtuolo.

Name .....

Address .....

WHAT IT MEANS

Continued from preceding page

Janet flushed and drew back. "Why, of course," she said, defensively. "As happy as falls to the lot of mortals. Did you really come to see me?"

"Why, dearest child, we are on our way around the world, father and I. A week ago he said to me, 'Honey, how would you like to go to Japan and India and Algiers and some of those places, and come home by way of Paris and London?' You can guess how I tore around. I didn't have time to write you, especially as I knew we'd go through Ansonia. Father is going up into the mountains from there to see an old mine of his. I wonder if your Mr. Howe knows anything about it—the Blue Bird."

"Why, that's our mine," said Janet quickly.

"Oh, really? I thought you were at Ansonia."

"That's our post office. I infer that you are the important people Mrs. Anson is expecting." And she told gaily her experiences of the day. She thought that she had stripped them of all sting and left them simply amusing, but Marian said fervently,

"How horrid! I hope you know some nicer people."

"Don't know any one," said Janet concisely. "There is no one to know."

Marian looked at her in expressive silence for a moment. Then she said, with apparent irrelevance,

"Father is going to shut up the Blue Bird, I think. He does not believe it will ever pay."

"Oh!" said Janet blankly. How would that affect George? she wondered. (Was that what being married meant?) And at the same moment, perhaps reflected from Marian's ingenuous eyes, she saw what such a decision might mean for her. Her old interests and affections arose like liberated ghosts and beckoned to her. She dropped her eyes so that Marian might not see the flare of joy which she knew they held.

Supper was served a few minutes later. Mr. Wirth devoted himself to Janet with a deferential and affectionate courtesy which (she could not help but know) greatly impressed Mr. Anson, and was not wholly without effect upon George. She responded with vivacity. George looked at her now and again with a puzzled air, and she smiled brightly as she might have done to some stranger. She did not clearly know whether she was acting a part or not. It somehow eased the pressure at her heart to smile at him in that way.

"So you are staying up at the Blue Bird," Mr. Wirth said. "Happy Bird! Do you know that you have saved his life, my dear, or at least secured a suspension of sentence. I came up here with the intention of clipping his wings, if not of wringing his expensive neck, but since you are interested in his worthless life—"

"Am I interested in his worthless life?" she laughed across the table to George.

"I hope so," he said quietly.

"At any rate, we'll go up and look at the creature," Mr. Wirth declared. "You've done that much by bringing Janet into it, Mr. Howe. I confess I had meant to close the whole thing up at a directors' meeting in Mr. Anson's office to-morrow—it didn't seem worth while to keep on pouring money into that hole in the ground—but since you have ideas on the subject, and since I have been given to understand that Janet thinks highly of your ideas, I'll go up and let you demonstrate them on the spot. Then we'll talk things over with Janet." He smiled at her affectionately, and patted her hand.

"Is Mrs. Howe a mining expert?" Mr. Anson asked, with a touch of derision. Evidently the turn things had taken did not altogether please him.

"She's a general expert on everything in particular," Mr. Wirth answered with smiling enthusiasm. "There used to be a saying among the lawyers that Judge Allington never decided a case without taking it home first and talking it over with his daughter, and that wasn't all imagination, either. Has this young man convinced you of the soundness of his theories about the Blue Bird, Janet?"

"I have reserved judgment," she said lightly. She could not bear to admit that he had never discussed his theories with her. She looked up suddenly and met his eyes—puzzled and a little troubled. She lowered her own. There was no smile in them for him.

Mr. Wirth at once decided that the car should proceed to the mine instead of stopping over at Ansonia. Janet noticed Mr. Anson's chagrin at this decision, and guessed perspicaciously that Mrs. Anson would have to suffer for his disappointment.

"Suppose you invite Mrs. Anson to accompany us," she prompted Marian aside. "She was expecting to entertain you."

"Why, of course, dear, if you want her," Marian answered amiably—and audibly. Then she turned to Anson and carelessly extended the invitation. When he accepted, Janet guessed how much he must have wanted to be identified with the party.

They ran into Ansonia for the night, and the next morning, with Mr. and Mrs. Anson aboard, they went up to the perch of the Blue Bird. The men went off at once to the field of operations, while Janet laughingly extended the hospitality of the scenery to her guests. There was little else to offer.

"But to live here!" protested Marian, in a dismayed tone. "It's gorgeous, of course, but—Oh, Janet!"

"I don't expect to live up here forever," said Janet lightly. But she wished that George had heard Marian's tone of voice!

Mrs. Anson had clung to Janet as a friendly raft in an unfamiliar social sea, but now she spoke up as one who knows.

"I lived mostly in mining camps until I was married," she said. "My father was just a miner. It seems like home to me to see the piles of raw earth beside the holes in the hillside and to hear the chug of the machinery. Of course Mr. Anson is above that sort of thing, and since I am married I have to think of what he likes. That's what being married means. But it makes me homesick to see that red mud, and that's the truth."

"Was that what being married meant?" Janet mused. In one way or another, was that what it always meant? Her heart went out in sympathy to the good, commonplace creature who was trying to live up to her husband's social ambitions.

The men came and went—and talked endlessly. George was eager and earnest, Janet noted, though she held aloof from any share in the discussion; and Mr. Wirth was critical and watchful, and secretly impressed; and Mr. Anson was trying to catch the wind whichever way it might blow. Marian was puzzled and bored and commiserating. Mrs. Anson alone was reminiscently happy.

On the third day George came back alone from a tramp on which he and Mr. Wirth had set out together. He came upon Janet by herself at a little distance from the camp. Marian had lain down with a headache and Janet had come away to the edge of a small waterfall which had seemed worth sketching. She saw George coming, and his grave face told her that something had gone amiss, but she had no impulse to go to him. A strange paralysis of affection had followed that evening in the car. She knew that George did not guess that anything was the matter. The presence of strangers had kept him from realizing her spiritual withdrawal, but she knew. She dreaded the hour when they should be alone. Now, with quiet indifference, she watched him approaching.

"I have been having a talk with Mr. Wirth," he said, stopping before her.

"Yes, I saw you go off," she answered, continuing to touch her drawing lightly. She felt no interest in what he might have to say.

"He is willing to have me go on in my own way," Howe continued. He spoke with something of an effort. "He had intended to shut down, but I have satisfied him that it is worth working in another direction. He is going to leave it in my hands for a trial."

"Well? That pleases you, doesn't it?" she said carelessly, to break the long pause that followed his words.

"Janet! Are you unhappy here?" he burst out suddenly. His voice sounded unnatural.

"What makes you think that?" she asked slowly, still touching her sketch.

He pressed his teeth on his lip for a moment, and then he spoke quietly, in his natural manner.

"Mr. Wirth proposes that you go with them on this trip around the world, Janet, while I am working out the Blue Bird problem. He says this is no place for you—your talents are lost here. And he is right. I ought to have realized it before. I do see it now, and I think you ought to go, Janet."

Janet's sketch had slipped from her hands, but she did not look up.

"Go with them? At once?" she asked. She was hardly conscious of surprise. It was like waking in a dream and finding that the dream was true.

"Yes," he said steadily. "He said it wouldn't take you long to get ready."

"Oh, no," she said, vaguely. "I have never unpacked."

"It is a great chance. Of course I see that. I quite agree with him," he reiterated, with unconvincing earnestness. "You mustn't miss it."

"Yes, it's a great chance," she said, in that same vague way. She did not see the tumbling water before her. Instead, she had a flashing vision of a minaretted temple, with herself, in her gray traveling suit and veil, in the foreground.

"Well, then, we'll consider it settled," Howe said quickly. "The sooner it's over—I mean, the sooner you can be ready, the better they will like it. He said Miss Wirth was shocked at finding you in such a place. I ought to have realized what a difference it was."

Janet looked up at last with a mocking smile. But the words that were behind it died upon her lips. Instead, she asked quickly,

"What's the matter with your hand?"

"Why, nothing. Oh, I cut it."

"Let me see," she said, springing up.

"Oh, it's nothing," he repeated, but he let her unwind the blood-stained handkerchief he had twisted about it. It was a jagged cut, not dangerous, but ugly-looking. She did not know till long afterward that it was Mr. Wirth's quiet suggestion that a year's travel would benefit Janet which had made his knife slip. Now, without a word, she brought a cup of water from the rippling mountain cataract she had thought to sketch, and bound up the cleansed finger in her own handkerchief.

Then she looked up at him with tears in her eyes—which was quite unworthy of the capable Miss Allington who, in her settlement work, had bound up mortal wounds after a street fight with never a quiver of her strong nerves.

"Does it hurt?" she murmured.

Then, in a moment, his arms were about her, and all the world was forgotten. Unreasonably, unaccountably, after the illogical fashion in which

Continued on next page

Delicacy—Deliciousness are inseparable terms when you attempt to describe Maple Flavor. The true Maple Flavor, to be delicious, must be delicate. If you haven't realized this important fact, perhaps you haven't realized all that you should in using

MAPLEINE

(The Flavor de Luxe)

If you've tried to make it better by using just a little more than the recipe calls for, you have missed the best part of the Mapleine—the delicate, elusive tang of the Maple sap. Mapleine makes it, if you use it right. If it isn't delicate, it isn't delicious.

If you haven't produced that delicious delicacy with your trial of Mapleine, write us. We will be glad to explain why and to send you a sample of Mapleine-made syrup to demonstrate.

Grocers sell Mapleine. 1-oz. bottle 20c. 2-oz. bottle 35c.

If not write Dept. F.

Crescent Mfg. Co.
Seattle, Washington

Send 2c. stamp for Mapleine Cook Book.

MENNEN'S
Borated Talcum
FOR MINE

For Prickly Heat and Sunburn
Relieves all Skin Irritations

Sample Box for 4c stamp

GERHARD MENNEN CO.
Newark, N. J.

The Boys' Magazine

is unquestionably the finest magazine in the world for boys. Each issue is filled with clean, fascinating stories and instructive articles, all of intense interest to every live boy. Also, each issue contains departments devoted to the Boy Scouts of America, Electricity, Mechanics, Photography, Carpentry, Stamps and Coins. A big Athletic Department edited by is a regular feature. This department is of great value to every boy who wishes to excel in athletic sports.

WALTER CAMP

A new handsome cover in colors each month. Beautifully illustrated throughout.

Special Offer: For only 50c. we will send you THE BOYS' MAGAZINE for six months and a copy of the most practical book you ever read, "Fifty Ways for Boys to Earn Money," and this splendid baseball fielder's glove. This glove is made of finest tan leather, felt padded and Leather Lined, web thumb and deep pocket.

Your money will be promptly refunded if you are not more than pleased with your investment. Address:

The Scott F. Redfield Co.
869 Main St., Smethport, Pa.

(The Boys' Magazine at all news-stands, 10 cents a copy.)

A BAD TEMPER

makes the owner, and friends and neighbors uncomfortable. It is nearly always caused by a bad stomach. Gas, fermentation and acid may be immediately removed by the use of Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), and irritation being removed, the disposition improves at once. For a single trial, a full size, 25 cent box will be sent for 10 cents in stamps. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

Values Compared by Jesus*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

BEING asked, "What is the kingdom of heaven?" a happy Christian replied: "It is something here" (laying his hand on his heart) "and something there" (pointing toward heaven). In such a condition one may be said to have found true happiness. In our lesson to-day Jesus tells us that the kingdom of heaven is a hidden treasure. He said so in a parable which he spoke to the multitudes. He knew that in each heart was the desire to be happy, and it was the wish of his loving heart to make everybody happy. But then and now almost every one has a different notion of the way to be happy. Varro, a Roman author, said he sent in many directions to find out from men what they thought to be the chief good. He received three hundred and twenty different replies, so many opinions were there in the world as to what is really the chief good to be sought, and the source of joy to be received.

When the missionary hero Alexander Mackay went to Uganda, he found a great want of water. By use of the geodolite, which he had carried with him, he calculated where he could find water at a depth of only sixteen feet. He set men to work, and reached water just that depth. The natives had never seen a well before, and it is said that their wonder knew no bounds. We are not told so, but we may be quite certain that he took the opportunity to teach them about the water of life which Jesus could give, that would be in them "a well of water springing up into eternal life." There are misguided people who have not taken the missionary's scientific way of finding water; instead, with the dry limb of a tree, and incantations, they have sought water and found it not. Many people seeking happiness are to be compared with them.

I once made search, in hope to find
Abiding peace of mind.
I toiled for riches, as if these Could bring the spirit ease.
I turned aside to books and lore,
Still baffled as before.
I tasted then of glorious fame,
But hungered still the same.
Then fell a voice from out the skies
With warning in this wise:
"O my disciple! is it meet
That roses tempt thy feet?
Thy Master, even for his head,
Had only thorns instead!"
Then, drawn as by heavenly grace,
I left the flowery place,
And walked on cutting flints and stones,
And said with tears and groans:
"O Lord, my feet, where thou dost lead,
Shall follow though they bleed!"
I walked in weakness, till at length
I suffered unto strength.
Henceforth I knew a holy prayer
To conquer pain and care;
For when my struggling flesh grows faint,
And murmurs with complaint,
My spirit cries, "Thy will be done,"
And finds the victory won.

—Unidentified.

Alexander Mackay described the kingdom of God in his heart when he wrote home: "Duty before pleasure, they say; but my duty is a pleasure."

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for August 4, 1912. "The Worth of the Kingdom." Matt. 13: 44-53. GOLDEN TEXT: "Seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6: 33.

This is the way Phillips Brooks put it: "To work; to help and be helped; to learn sympathy through suffering; to learn faith by perplexity; to reach truth through wonder; behold, this is what it is to prosper, this is what it is to live." That is indeed the way to find the hidden treasure of the kingdom of heaven, and happy are they who seek and find it! Some will find it in the home by seeking to do deeds of kind thoughtfulness; others will find it as the boy scouts are told to do: "Do a good turn for somebody every day"; others will find it by being kind neighbors. Boys and girls may find it in the schoolroom by being faithful and diligent and true.

The Pearl of Great Price

Jesus further compared the kingdom of heaven with a most valuable pearl. His hearers were familiar with pearls, or he would not have spoken the parable. From the time of King Solomon, pearls had been brought by merchantmen from Egypt, and more than likely pearls had been among the rich gifts which the Queen of Sheba had brought to King Solomon. It is not unlikely that the fame of the pearls of Cleopatra's earrings valued at $400,000 had reached some of the people to whom Jesus spoke. Jesus would have them know that those who would seek happiness in God's way were like merchantmen seeking for precious pearls, large, lustrous and shapely. Jesus is himself the supreme Pearl; his glory fills earth and heaven. And wondrous to tell, all who seek him are promised that they shall find him; that was what the merchantmen of Egypt could not hope for. Some of them sought many years, even a whole lifetime, and failed to get a perfect pearl, even though they were willing to pay a large price for it.

Dr. Horatius Bonar has said: "O Pearl of pearls! What shall we not give for thee? What shall we not lose by losing thee? What shall we not gain by gaining thee? Is there anything in earth or heaven that we would not be willing to part with in order to win thee?" We have everything to win in accepting Christ. "Seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you" (Golden Text, Matt. 6: 33). The great German poet Goethe did not at all comprehend the truth when he wrote "Religion is renunciation." Rather would we say, Religion is acquisition.

The Pearl of pearls can not be bought with a price. Jesus is the gift of God to us, and we must take him as a gift or not at all. It is said that the grand Lady Huntingdon was on her way to a brilliant assembly, when suddenly she remembered some words she had learned in the catechism when a child: "Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy him forever." It was like a flash of lightning, illuminating her soul, and from that moment her life revolved around a new center—Christ, and not self.

A charming little book has been

Continued on next page

WHAT IT MEANS

Continued from preceding page

ve works, the ice which had lain out her heart had melted away. his was no casual stranger to whom ie was bound by the chance of a marage ceremony! It was Geordie! ne clung to him with something of ie terror of one who has been lifted om the edge of an abyss.

He was the first to come back to the resent.

"Now about this plan of Mr. Firth's," he said gently. "It's a very ood plan. This is too barren a place or you to live in, and in a year's time will have worked myself free and an meet you when you come back—"

"Pooh!" she said lightly, still clinging to him but not lifting her eyes to his. "I'm not going anywhere. Not for a minute. I won't bother you if I stay—because I am going to stay!"

"Would you rather? Really?" he asked hoarsely, trying to look into her eyes.

"Of course," she said, lightly, sheering away from the emotion in his voice. A sudden shyness of his tenderness thrilled her. Then she looked up swiftly and added, under her breath,

"That's what it means, being married!"

Work is Easier—Play Pleasanter When You Drink Grape Juice

TONIC and blood-building, every glass yields energy and vitality, prevents indigestion, increases appetite.

Health-giving qualities which Nature has put in the grape—and which are perfectly preserved for you in pure, rich grape juice—

Armour's Grape Juice

The Family Drink

Bottled Where the Best Grapes Grow

Drink Armour's Grape Juice with meals and between meals, and you will work with less effort—brings new life to your play.

And enjoy the most delicious and refreshing of all beverages—the ideal hot weather drink.

Made only from luscious sun-ripened Concord Grapes, ready to burst with juice, Armour's Grape Juice is unsweetened and undiluted—just the pure, rich juice, preserved only by sterilization and air-tight bottling.

Each day's picking goes to the press that same day.

Grapes are never held over to wilt and wither.

Drunk freely by the children, it satisfies their natural craving for sugar, keeps them in good condition, helps build sturdy bodies.

Armour's Grape Juice is sold by grocers and druggists, at fountains, buffets and clubs.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will send you a trial dozen pints for $3, express prepaid.

Address Armour and Company, Dept. 169, Chicago.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

MONEY FOR A BOY'S VACATION

CARL PULS,
The
Christian Herald
PRIZE WINNER from ILLINOIS

Carl is going on his vacation for a short time and writes as follows:

As I expect to go away for a week's vacation, I wish you would not send more than 50 copies each week, as I have arranged with another boy to deliver to my regular customers during my absence. I received my knife, and it is a dandy, as you told me. I have sold the amount for my skates and expect to get them soon. I think those premium pictures will take a few eyes.

Very truly yours,
CARL PULS.

Our plan supplies you with READY MONEY for A VACATION. YOU can EARN MONEY and PRIZES, and need only fill out this coupon and mail it AT ONCE.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

This coupon has a value of fifty cents in payment for 10 copies to be sold at 5 cents each to start you in business. Booklets about, "How to Win Profits and Prizes," sent FREE.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

VALUE 50 CENTS

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

England and the Canal

THERE can be no question that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty gives the United States the right to make any rules and regulations, including tolls, for canal traffic that may seem good to it, the only stipulations being that all rules shall apply equally to the shipping of all nations and that the tolls shall be just and equitable. Now, waiving the contention that the stipulation of uniformity refers only to other nations, this country being free to make any discrimination in its own favor, it is difficult to see in what way either of the proposed regulations would conflict with those provisions of the treaty. The United States is inhibited from creating new discriminations, but it is certainly not required to abolish discriminations already and for a long time existing. It is the shipping law of the United States, and not the proposed canal law which excludes British shipping from whatever advantages are enjoyed by our coastwise trade. Nevertheless, it is quite possible to make representations concerning pending legislation in an entirely inoffensive and amicable manner. It is obviously better to have laws made right and satisfactory at the beginning than to have them subjected to contention and dispute after they have been made, and whatever contributes to that end should be welcome. Great Britain has, by virtue of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, a legitimate interest in canal legislation, and that interest may be expressed, even at this early stage of the legislation, without any semblance or suspicion of undue interference in American domestic affairs.—New York Tribune.

. . .

The Milk in the Cocoanut

IT IS understood that Ambassador Bryce discussed the matter of canal tolls with Count Bernstorff, the German ambassador, and M. Jusserand, the French ambassador, several months ago. Neither France nor Germany has manifested any disposition to contest the plan of free tolls for American ships. These countries have no commerce that competes with American coastwise shipping which would enjoy free tolls if allowed. Great Britain would have reason to complain on this score, but it is not so much competition in the carrying trade that makes Great Britain disposed to protest as it is the carrying trade between the producers of tropical and subtropical fruits in the British West Indies and Central America. The trade in tropical fruits, oranges, lemons, bananas, and pineapples produced in Jamaica, Barbadoes, the Bahamas, and British Honduras brought to the United States will be seriously interfered with when by lower freights through the canal California can reach the Eastern markets on a fairly competitive basis. This is the milk in the cocoanut, although the carrying trade of British tramp steamers is a part of the trouble.

When California can ship her fruit through the canal at freight rates one-fifth of those now charged by the railroads, which would be possible with free tolls, the British West Indies will be crowded to the wall, and the fact is well understood, and on this account the fight has been begun to prevent free tolls. Even the immense banana trade that the British planters now enjoy will suffer, although California produces no bananas. Cheaper oranges and other fruits produced in great abundance in California will in part displace bananas by reason of the low prices.—New York Times.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Continued from preceding page

written by N. C. Macfarlane on The Quest of the Yellow Pearl. We who are accustomed to judge pearls by their whiteness can hardly understand how a yellow pearl could have great value; but in India the yellow pearl—the "golden pearl"—is considered the choicest. We are reminded somewhat of the search for the Golden Fleece as we read the story of the quest of the yellow pearl. A gem merchant by the name of Eldad ben Jacob knew of one particular yellow pearl for which he was willing to pay all of his wealth. He did not know in whose possession the pearl was, and so kept on tracing it from one owner to another, but he was always unsuccessful. At last he sat down, and loosened his girdle, and allowed to flow from it a stream of pearls, which was the price he intended to pay for the one yellow pearl. A man in distress suddenly appeared before him, saying that his son was condemned to die or pay a large price. Eldad ben Jacob gave him a handful of his pearls, and the old man went gratefully and happily onward to redeem his son.

After that Eldad ben Jacob freely gave away his pearls, until one day he tossed his last pearl to a poor woman. It occurred to him to ask her if she had heard of the wonderful pearl he was seeking. She replied that she had heard that it was owned by a young prophet of Galilee—one Jesus. "And strangely," she said, "he is willing to give it away to any one who will appreciate its beauty." Eldad ben Jacob set out to find Jesus. He did find him, he heard his wonderful words, he determined to be his follower. Jesus spoke joyously to him, saying, "Blessed art thou who hath come into the light. Having chosen first the kingdom, all other things shall be added unto thee."

The Kingdom of Heaven Like a Net

By this parable of Jesus we are taught that all people in every part of the world may have a part of the kingdom of heaven in their own hearts. It is the custom at such seaside resorts as Atlantic City to draw once a day a huge net out of the sea, and land its contents on the end of a great pier. The large number of fishes, and the many different kinds, curiously and wondrously made, are an interesting sight to the beholders. Sometimes in great World Sunday School Conventions, as at Jerusalem and Rome, and also at Peace Conventions and World Parliaments at The Hague, one sees a gathering of people comparable in diversity to the fishes caught in the net. But they are decidedly more interesting than the fish, because they are men made in the likeness of God, because they have souls, and have an immortal life to lead.

But what a contrast there is between the net of cords drawn up from the sea, and the Gospel net! The first is cast unto death, that the fish may be destroyed, or eaten, while the Gospel net is cast unto life that men may be kept for a glorious eternity. Dean Farrar has put this thought most clearly thus: "In Luke's story of the great draught of fishes, Jesus tells Simon: 'From henceforth thou shalt catch men.' The phrase literally is: 'Thou shalt be catching alive,' and the words imply the contrast between the fish that lay glittering there in dead heaps, and the men who should be captured not for death, but for life."

Many people there are who delight in just fishing for fish. Such an one was John Quincy Adams. The story was told by one of his clients, whose case was to be tried on a certain morning, that he could not get his counsel to leave his fishing-boat except long enough to write a note to the judge which read: "Dear Judge: For the sake of old Izaak Walton, please continue my case until Friday. The smelt are biting, and I can't leave." And the judge having read the note announced to the court: "Mr. Adams is detained on important business." We do sometimes find a zeal in catching men, comparable with that shown by John Quincy Adams in catching fish, but alas, it is rare! We call it "sport" when we speak of fishing, but catching men is God's service. The hundreds and thousands of missionaries, and preachers of the Gospel, and the nearly three millions of Sunday school teachers and the other millions of Christian workers all agree as to the joy of such service. Their joy will not be complete until they see at last the Gospel net drawn up on the shores of heaven, and the number of living creatures out of every tribe and nation shall be ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands, and their song shall be "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive the power, and riches, and wisdom, and might, and honor, and glory, and blessing." (Rev. 5: 12.)

RIDGE'S

Send For a Sample Package

We will send it to you free.
This is the food that doctors give their own babies.
It will agree from the start and make your baby gain steadily every week. It will keep him happy and well through the hot weather.
Ridge's Food has raised over a million babies.
Write today for a sample for your baby.
Ridge's Food Co., 250 Dover St. Boston, Mass.

FOOD

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

Typewriters Slightly used machines $10.00 up. Ten Days' FREE TRIAL. Express prepaid. Price List Free.
FRANK C. PAYNE CO., Rosedale Station, Kansas City, Kan.

Called Higher

John R. Francis (87), of Lagarto, Texas, passed away July 3, 1911. He was for a long time a subscriber to this publication.

Mrs. Lydia Holt (92) passed away last June at her home in Bridgeport, Conn. This paper had been a source of great comfort to her for many years.

Miss Jeanette Adair Walter (24), of Bow, Wash., passed peacefully away December 9, 1910. She was a devoted Christian and reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. F. D. Coffin, of Binghamton, N. Y., passed to the life beyond November 9, 1911. She had been a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

Rev. D. L. Mitchel (78) died on May 30, 1911. He leaves a bereaved widow at Biloxi, Miss. He served his Master for more than sixty years, and was a devoted reader of this paper.

Answered Prayers

Reader, Forsythe, Mont. "God has answered my prayers."

A Reader, Pittsburg, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer."

B. E. L., Oberlin, O. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering prayer."

H. A. P., New Hampshire. "I wish to acknowledge that God hears and answers prayer."

K. H. J., West Va. "I had a deep sorrow which I took to the Lord in prayer, and he answered. Praise the Lord!"

A WINNING START
A Perfectly Digested Breakfast Makes Nerve Force For the Day

Everything goes wrong if the breakfast lies in your stomach like a mud pie. What you eat does harm if you can't digest it—it turns to poison.

A bright lady teacher found this to be true, even of an ordinary light breakfast of eggs and toast. She says:

"Two years ago I contracted a very annoying form of indigestion. My stomach was in such condition that a simple breakfast of fruit, toast and egg gave me great distress.

"I was slow to believe that trouble could come from such a simple diet but finally had to give it up, and found a great change upon a cup of hot Postum and Grape-Nuts with cream, for my morning meal. For more than a year I have held to this course and have not suffered except when injudiciously varying my diet.

"I have been a teacher for several years and find that my easily digested breakfast means a saving of nervous force for the entire day. My gain of ten pounds in weight also causes me to want to testify to the value of Grape-Nuts.

"Grape-Nuts holds first rank at our table."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL

Madame Schumann-Heink has selected the SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL
for her son as the best school in America in which he can pursue his musical education. Paderewski says that the principles of instructions followed by The Sherwood Music School are the "best in years". This school has developed many of its students into successful and prominent artists, among them being Karl Formes, grandson of the famous German Baritone, Herr Karl Formes. The President of the school, Miss Georgia Kober, is widely known as a successful and sympathetic teacher and her reputation as a pianiste is of international scope. All departments are under the direction of sterling artists. Complete courses in Piano, Vocal, Organ, Violin, Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Musical History, Elocution, Dramatic Art, Normal Training; Children's Dept. FIFTEEN YEARS of SUCCESSFUL, SINCERE WORK have proved that THE SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL develops its pupils to their full capacity. Write for a complete catalog—FREE.
Free Book
421 Michigan Blvd.
Sherwood Music School Fine Arts Bld. Chicago

Low Factory Price
On Empire Fence

Sold direct to you. The fence that has stood the hardest test of service on some of the biggest farms in the country.

The Empire is made of
ALL BIG WIRES
Of Basic Open Hearth Steel with special Stay Tie—the strongest made. Heavily galvanized against rust.

Write for Free Book
full of profit-making facts for you. A postal brings it. Also free sample and direct-from-factory price. Write BOND STEEL POST CO.
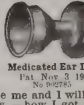
52 Maunee St., Adrian, Mich.

MONUMENTS

Over $150,000 worth of White Bronze Memorials sold through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
Moss-growth, chipping, cracking and crumbling, common to marble and granite are impossible with White Bronze. It will outlast the pyramids. More artistic, less expensive. Investigate. Write now for free illustrations and prices. State approximate cost desired. We deliver everywhere. Good Agents Wanted.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
355-G Howard Ave.,
Bridgeport, - - Conn.

I Was Deaf 25 Years
I CAN NOW HEAR



with these soft, pliable, artificial ear drums, I wear them in my ears night and day. They are perfectly comfortable. Nobody sees them in my ears. Write me and I will tell you the true story,—how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.
Medicated Ear Drum Pat. Nov 3 1908 No 907785
ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
G. P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

Happy Cozy Corner Days

PIN-MONEY SUGGESTIONS

ONE thing is certain about Cozy Corner boys and girls, and that is, they are pretty lively and up to date about ...ag independent and wanting to ...ke spending money of their own. ...ters come every day asking for ...ys and means to make money with ...ich to buy the dear "extras" which ...an so much to our girlhood and boy-...d. It is the distinct purpose of the ...y Corner to point out in special ...icles many sim-... and practical ...ys in which ...'s and girls can ...ke money. ...anwhile, we be-...e that an in-...esting list of ...ngs by which ...ung people of ...r acquaintance ...already mak-...successes will ...very useful ...l suggestive.

A Summer Pin-Money Girl

eedlework Ideas

'OVELTIES ... made of cre-...ne—bags, cen-...pieces, book-...ers for books ...d magazines, ...-bonnets and ...ies' sun-hats, ...kaback porch-...ow covers and ...ldren's romp-..., a layette for ... new baby, rag ...ls, cloth ani-...ls and brown-..., maids' aprons ...th bibs and ...kets, and chil-...n's school aprons find a ready ...rket anywhere. Dressmaking for ...ls, remodeling children's frocks, ...nding and stocking-darning is all ...e work and pays well.

More Pin-Money Pathways

SHIRTWAIST boxes and boxes for ... flowers, candy-boxes neatly covered ...h flowered cretonne or crinkly pa-..., Jack Horner pies, garden hats ...d paper dolls. A paper-doll trade is ...beautiful thing to work up and is ...le short of wonderful in its possi-...ities. I know girls working with ...e and scissors who are clearing ...ty dollars a month even in dull ...sons working in odd moments in ...eir homes; and in the busy holiday season frequently these busy girls double their receipts.

The girl who can take orders for birthday cakes, Boston beans and brown bread, beat biscuit, cottage cheese, grape juice, salted almonds, caramels, marrons glacés, date cream, fudge, doughnuts, popcorn balls, jellies, jumbles and kisses, preserved figs and candied ginger can easily work up a nice little trade. The point is to make these things a little bit richer, a little bit more delicate in flavoring than any one else can make them.

If you are successful with flowers, fern bowls, hanging baskets and potted plants, special care of flower gardens, and selling seeds and slips of your best plants, are good ways to make your knack with growing things practical. If you are handy with paints and brushes, dinner and menu and tally cards are always popular, and it will pay you to take a few lessons in painting on silk and satin. Planning children's parties, coaching backward children, kindergarten classes in the woods, are all pleasant and profitable occupations. Platting raffia baskets of all shapes and sizes is a very successful trade if the baskets are well woven and the colors and designs attractive.

A Little Gift-Shop is a nice thing to work toward. They are so popular now, and while it may take several years to realize the dream of a gift-shop, the effort to establish one in your neighborhood will repay you, and by way of advice I warn you to calculate carefully upon the tastes and needs of your prospective clients. Make the things of which they are in need, and your pin-money battle is half won.

You may write to me for particulars for money-making as often as you like. I will answer your letters painstakingly.

OUR LITTLE PEOPLE

THE DAISY'S SONG

The sun, with his great eye,
Sees not so much as I;
And the moon, all silver proud,
Might as well be in a cloud.
And oh, the spring—the spring!
I lead the life of a king!
Couched in the teeming grass,
I spy each pretty lass.
I look where no one dares
And stare where no one stares;
And when the night is nigh,
Lambs bleat my lullaby.

JOHN KEATS.

NOTE: Next week we will publish for our boys the first of a new series of articles on "gliders," written especially for CHRISTIAN HERALD boys and girls by Mr. Francis A. Collins, author of The Boys' Books of Model Aeroplanes.

GOOD-NIGHT VERSE

He only is my rock. The rock of my strength and my refuge is God.—Psalm.

Uncle Tom

For complete enjoyment of your summer holiday see well to the condition of your teeth.

There's no better time for a visit to your dentist than just before you leave for the mountains, the shore or abroad. And there's no better time than vacation time for appreciating the convenience, the elegance and the cleansing efficiency of

Dr. Lyon's PERFECT
Tooth Powder

Prepared for almost half a century by a Doctor of Dental Surgery.

Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder thoroughly cleanses and polishes the teeth without chemical or injurious action—it keeps the gums healthy and hard by inducing adequate brushing—it imparts a natural purity and fragrance to the breath—these are infallible teeth preserving virtues and these features have maintained it as the standard dentifrice throughout nearly fifty years.

And in addition the convenience of the patent measuring tube container and its elegant manner of use, at home or traveling, have made Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder inseparable from the best traditions of personal habit.

Use Dr. Lyon's night and morning—above all at night. Teach its regular use to your children and so assure them lifetimes of perfect teeth.

SOLD EVERYWHERE

"RANGER" BICYCLES

Have imported roller chains, sprockets and pedals; New Departure Coaster-Brakes and Hubs; Puncture Proof Tires; highest grade equipment and many advanced features possessed by no other wheels. Guaranteed 5 yrs.

FACTORY PRICES direct to you are less than others ask for cheap wheels. Other reliable models from $12 up. A few good second-hand machines $3 to $8.

10 DAYS' FREE TRIAL We ship on approval, freight prepaid, anywhere in U. S., without a cent in advance. DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you get our big new catalog and special prices and a marvelous new offer. Write it now.

A postal brings everything.

TIRES Coaster Brake Rear Wheels, lamps, parts, and sundries half usual prices.

Rider Agents everywhere are coining money selling our bicycles, tires and sundries. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. P-71 CHICAGO

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. How?" Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

made low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Ferry Building, Philadelphia

YOU don't have to undergo the muss and dirt and bother of plastering—You don't have to wait weeks for it to dry only to find it cracked and crazed in a dozen places.

UTILITY WALL BOARD

takes the place of both lath and plaster. It is put on easily and quickly—nailed direct to the studding. There is no muss—no waiting for it to dry—And once in place it is there to stay as long as the house lasts—It will not warp, or crack, or shrink—It may be decorated in any style desired—It is more economical than lath and plaster

Use it in making over the old house as well as in building the new
Send For a FREE Sample—And the Illustrated Book

THE HEPPES COMPANY, 4511 Fillmore St., Chicago, Ill.

The Hurry-Up Breakfast

How much of a man's fortune depends on his breakfast?

A good Breakfast, not too big, goes a long way toward making a man feel good.

When a man feels good he can do his best work.

Now it sometimes (not always) takes time to prepare a good breakfast.

The exception is the breakfast with

Post Toasties

Here's a breakfast that's ever ready to serve instantly—that's delicious—that makes a man (or woman or child) feel good—for it is good.

The thin, crispy wafers of toasted corn with some milk or cream and sugar (if you like it) should be responsible for a whole lot of success.

Post Toasties start off a good many thousands right each morning.

"The Memory Lingers"

Postum Cereal Company, Limited,
Battle Creek, Mich., U. S. A.

Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.,
Windsor, Ontario, Canada

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JULY 31, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 31. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

CRATER LAKE

Copyright by Kurtz Photo Co.

Our Mail-Bag

Questions and Answers

W. A. P., Meriden, Conn. Both Peary and Amundsen made allowances in determining the site of the Poles. Why? Is the location of the Poles not stationary?

No; it seems the position of the Poles is not perfectly constant, there being a counter-clock elliptical movement of some thirty feet and a counter-clock circular movement of some twenty-six feet in diameter in a period of 428 days at the extreme axes of the earth. This change, however, is so slight as not to be reckoned in practical calculations. Peary and Amundsen made no allowances, but took several observations from various standpoints to determine conclusively that they had reached the Poles.

G. M. H., Goff, Kan. 1. Was John the Baptist sentenced to death before the dance of Salome? 2. Was the Jewish Passover a type of the Lord's Supper?

1. While there is no record to prove it, the presumption is that Herod, in his mind, had already condemned John on political grounds as one whose existence endangered his position and authority, but his awakened conscience and the fear inspired by John's teachings restrained him. He had kept John in the prison of Machærus nearly a year when the Salome incident occurred, which gave Herodias her opportunity to be revenged upon the Baptist, who had rebuked both her and Herod for their sinful relations. It cannot be asserted that Herod would have executed John had not the king been caught by his pledge to Salome. On the contrary Mark 6: 26 tells us that he "was exceeding sorrowful." 2. The Lord's Supper was instituted at the time of the Passover and there is naturally a paschal analogy. But in the Supper itself, the usual formal ceremonies of the Passover were either set aside or transferred to the new order of things and given a new meaning, which has been perpetuated in the Christian Church.

W. D., Dorset, Minn. In ancient times, it was generally held that the unpardonable sin was attributing the works of the Holy Spirit to Satanic agency. If there be a modern counterpart of the unpardonable sin, we should think it is to be found in the case of the person who uses the livery of God to serve the devil in; who enacts the role of the shepherd of the sheep, while he is nothing but a ravening wolf in disguise; who assumes the attitude, language and demeanor of a saint while his exterior covers a heart black with sin and foul with guilt; who brings to the altar of God's house hands that are stained with crime and who keeps up this show of religion and utters the language of Christian invitation while he himself is not a Christian. It is a terrible picture and one which is almost unimaginable in the case of any sane and responsible person.

S. F. M., Elmira, N. Y. Who were the Essenes?

A small community of Jews in the time of Christ, who led a pastoral life and did not marry. They held their goods and took their meals in common, strictly observed the Sabbath, prayed before sunrise with their faces to the East, bathed daily in cold water, never swore, sacrificed no animals, and believed in immortality without a resurrection of the body.

Reader. 1. Who are the two witnesses spoken of in Rev. 11: 3? 2. Please explain I. Cor. 15: 29. 3. Also Luke 23: 31.

1. They are witnesses for Christ and the truth who are to be raised up in the final apostasy. It is conjectured that Moses and Elijah are meant. They appeared with Christ at the transfiguration. 2. This is an allusion to a practice which prevailed in the early church, of baptizing a living person in behalf of a friend who died unbaptized. In referring to this, Paul, however, does not give sanction to the practice. 3. The meaning intended to be conveyed by this passage is plainly this: If such sufferings fall to the lot of the comparatively innocent, what shall be done to those who are the greater sinners?

M. M. J., Kilbourn, Wis., writes: "I notice in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of July 10 an answer to a question of S. J. A., Cottonwood, Minn., in regard to Paul's attitude toward marriage (I. Cor. 7: 8). From Acts 26: 10 it would appear that he was a member of the Sanhedrin, and, if so, he had been married, as no unmarried man had a vote in that body. We may safely infer that Paul was a widower, and advises them to continue as he; or if unmarried, so to abide."

H. N., Pontotoc, and W. B., Hamlin, W. Va. Please explain I. Cor. 14: 34, I. Tim. 2: 12. Harmonize I. John 1: 8 and I. John 3: 6-8.

1. Both passages deal with the same subject the position of woman in public affairs and in the church. At the time when Paul wrote, the morals of Corinth and Ephesus were of such a character (with loose living and false teaching) that he deemed it advisable to urge the Christian women to a quieter and more seemly mode of living than their heathen contemporaries. His epistles were suited to the time and place and conditions. Like many other passages in Paul's writings, the texts in question were primarily designed to be of local ap-

Continued on last column

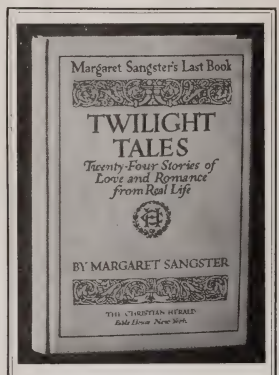
A Grand Book by Margaret Sangster!

TWILIGHT TALES

TWENTY-FOUR DELIGHTFUL STORIES OF LOVE AND ROMANCE FROM REAL LIFE

THOSE who already know the rare literary charm of Margaret Sangster's writings will welcome this volume—the last perfect product of her wonderful talent. Twilight Tales comes almost as a parting message from one who has been greatly beloved by countless multitudes, and whose contributions for many years in the pages of The Christian Herald have made her name a household word.

Mrs. Sangster's remarkable power of sympathy and of sounding the depth of human feeling is evident in every one of these twenty-four complete stories. She is never so much the mistress of her art as when relating in her own inimitable way the progress of some love-match in simple life, some idyl of the farm or the village, or a romance of the cottage, the garden, or the orchard. An ardent lover of nature in all its moods, she has put into these Tales the true atmosphere of American rural life as it is to-day, with all its charm of changeful season and its panorama of flowery lanes, ripening fruits and waving fields. Her heroes are fine types of manly character, and her women have the sweet and comely fascination, mental and physical, which we love to associate with the daintiest idea of American womanhood.



Margaret Sangster's Last Book
TWILIGHT TALES
Twenty-Four Stories of Love and Romance from Real Life
BY MARGARET SANGSTER
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York

This photograph shows the cover of the book in miniature. The actual size of the book is 5¼ inches wide by 7¾ inches long

THERE is a thread of pure gold running through the Twilight Tales from which the reader may divine the author's purpose in writing the book. It is the line of God's protecting love and care which encircles all who trust in Him, and the knowledge of which gives to even the smallest detail of everyday life a purpose and significance. She spreads before us the little daily dramas, the heartaches, the disappointments, the sweet surprises and unexpected joys, the separations and the reunions, the cares and consolations of the household, the "journeys that end in lovers' meeting;"—all are unrolled like a moving picture, with the vivid action of life itself. Mrs. Sangster has crowded the best heart and soul stories of her whole career into this book. Love, romance, self-denial, ambition and the success that true character commands are here pictured with a fragrant setting of American home-life in town and country. It is a book which will exert a strong spell on the mind of the reader and which creates its own atmosphere of woodlands and old-fashioned gardens, and charming American homes, and her men and women are such as we would love to meet.

THE last of the Twilight Tales—"The Opposite Shore"—gives a fore-gleam of that blessed land to which so many of our dear ones have already passed over and to which the author was even then hastening while she wrote. To the aged Christian nearing the close of life, the veil that severs the seen from the unseen grows so thin as to be almost transparent. This was the personal experience of Margaret Sangster, and in these last pages she sounds the note of Christian triumph, as the spirit passes in anticipation

"Out of the chill and the shadow,
Into the thrill and the shine."

No one can read this last book without feeling that it contains a personal message.

The Titles of the Stories in "Twilight Tales" are as Follows:

When Buckwheat Bloomed	At Lonesome Ford	The Little Old Lady
Mr. Warriner's Change of Heart	The Romance of Marcia	Letitia's First Love
A Refrain in Lilies	Mrs. Christy's Beginnings	Sister Hannah
The Patience of Hope	One Easter Day	Barbara Graham
The Saving of Benjamin Ray	Cousin Mary	Golden Sunsets
A Bend in the Road	A Midsummer Meeting	The Peacemaker
The New Pupil	A Little Corner	A Reparation
A Long Lane	The Snowdrop's Message	The Opposite Shore

HOW TO SECURE "TWILIGHT TALES"

Twilight Tales will be sent free, postpaid, as a premium to every subscriber who sends us one NEW six months' subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at 75 cents. This new subscription must be one not now on our list, or one to replace one now on our list. This is an excellent opportunity for our readers to get the book for themselves and to send the paper to some friend not now a subscriber, for half a year. To any of our present subscribers the book will be sent with one year's CHRISTIAN HERALD renewal for $2. If your subscription does not expire for some time to come, send in your renewal now with $2, and the date of expiration on your paper will be advanced for one year. Address all orders to

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under ... notice, a subscription blank and notice of ... piration for our subscribers whose Christ... HERALD subscriptions expired at any time ... ing the past month. If your copy has ... subscription blank attached, please use it ... renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR ... NEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THR... WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION ... THE BLANK.

When renewing, indicate on the blank w... your remittance whether you are subscrib... for any of our premium books, Women of ... Bible, $2; Samantha at Coney Island, $2; ... Mother, $2, with your subscription, or a strai... year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR O... RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCR... TION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEW... AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR ... It is understood that the old subscriber must ... the full subscription price of $1.50 from ... new subscriber and must not in any way sh... the special price with the new subscriber.

Send money by postal or express mo... orders. Address,

CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York

Our Mail-Bag

Continued from first column

plication. Paul stands practically alone, am... the early writers, in the rigidity of his attit... towards women. He believed in wifely obe... ence and modesty in behavior and apparel, ... he did not wish to see the women of the Ch... tian Church emulate the brazen conduct of... certain class of Greek women. 2. Both passa... are in agreement. I. John 1: 8 occurs in... discussion which must be interpreted as ... whole. The statement is made in verse se... that the blood of Jesus Christ, God's S... cleanseth us from all sin. Verse eight decla... that if we say we have no sin from which ... be cleansed we deceive ourselves. We m... acknowledge the sin before we can be clean... from it. Thus read the passage is in ex... agreement with I. John 3: 6-8.

L. J., New York. What are the privileges o... wife? Has she no privileges at all, or ... she simply to be a slave, or one un... bondage to her husband? I know the w... of a farmer, whose husband never gi... her any freedom. If she goes to call or... neighbor (which she seldom does) he v... say: "What did you go there for?" or i... neighbor comes in to call on her, he v... say: "What did they come here for?" ... she takes the trolley to town in the aft... noon, he will go on like a madman a... say: "You could have gone with me ... morrow morning" (he is a milkman as w... as a farmer) "and saved that trolley far... She never gets to church and he thinks ... should never go anywhere unless with hi... He does not wish her to see or associate w... any but himself. I repeat: What do y... consider the reasonable privilege of ... wife?

This letter presents a case which is so unus... in some respects that we would be glad to s... mit it to the judgment of a jury of wives a... mothers, if that were practicable. Meanwhi... we invite the ladies who read THE MAIL-B... married or single, to send us, very briefly, th... idea of a wife's privileges and of what cou... should be followed in the peculiar case descril... in the foregoing letter.

Miscellaneous

F. P. R., Pembroke, N. H. Traditional ... counts of incidents in the career of John t... disciple, not found in the Scriptures, are chie... gleaned from the writings of Eusebius, Augu... tine, Jerome, Nicephorus and others.

Subscriber, Litchfield, N. S. Lotteries, as ... means of raising money for churches, are to ... discouraged. Church members should be taus... to regard their gifts to the Lord's work as ... privilege and a duty, and they should not ne... the persuasion of lotteries or other worl... schemes. The strongest churches, spiritual... are those in which the members cultivate t... habit of regular giving and where spasmo... methods of exciting generosity are not nec... sary.

M. E. B., Sioux City, Ia. "Espoused" mea... "betrothed." Joseph was the nominal fath... before the Jewish law, but it is expres... stated in the Scripture that Jesus was begott... of the Holy Spirit. James the Younger a... Joses, according to the usual interpretati... were the sons of Salome, the sister of Ma... and wife of Cleophas (see John 19: 25, Acts ... 13, Matt. 27: 56, Mark 15: 40). This is t... view of many commentators, who hold that t... term "brethren" was applied to cousins a... others of the same kindred. On the other han... there are not a few who hold that the brothe... in question were later sons of Mary herself.

DELIGHTED WITH THE FLAG

In acknowledging receipt of the Americ... flag sent us some weeks ago, we wish to l... you know how pleased we are with it. We d... not realize its full beauty until it was used ... yesterday's decorations.

MRS. JUDSON A. CLEVELAND.

Holyoke, Mass.

NEW YORK, JULY 31, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Around the Camp Fire at Guild Camp, West Hills, L. I.

SETTLEMENTS GO CAMPING

WHILE for many years the children of the poor have been given opportunity to spend part of summer in the country, the plan of taking whole families away from the city's heat for an outing among the fields is somewhat new. The United Neighborhood Guild of Brooklyn has recently purchased a large farm in Rockland County and will carry on there during the summer the settlement work which it conducts in the winter. A number of other settlements have made similar arrangements to extend their operations into the country through the summer, and the whole movement marks an interesting development in modern philanthropy.

Very noble has been the city settlement work in our crowded towns. And it has been somewhat difficult to keep the work well in hand during the demoralization of vacation time and the intense summer heat. The new idea transplants part of the settlement work from city to country, keeps the interest keen, and gives the humble city dwellers a breath of sea or field in the torrid summer days.

The whole idea of settlement work is correct and charming. Charity "handed out" or "handed down" does not always accomplish the most absolutely desirable results. It is infinitely better than selfishness, but the settlement idea carries with it something else. The settlement worker goes to the people; he becomes one of them; his dwelling is their dwelling—and so their homes are open to him. And now these workers have arranged a plan by which the people they try to assist and inspire can share with them the benefit and pleasures of rural life. A little section of the city is moved into the country under the auspices of the settlement.

The settlement workers know the needs of the individuals with whom they are in daily contact. They know best how to make up parties so that the members will be congenial and the results of companionship satisfactory. Where the camp is a year-to-year affair it happens that many of the same people go to it season after season and thus certain customs and traditions are established which may contribute much to the social life and the achievement of good results. The influences are carried over from the summer into the winter and bind all together in stronger friendship, making for greater success in all settlement activities. The United Neighborhood Guild of Brooklyn for several summers maintained an extensive camp at West Hills, in the township of Huntington, L. I., on property loaned to it for the purpose by Robert W. DeForest, who has long been actively identified with the philanthropic work of Greater New York. It was a beautiful location and a fine work was done there, but the Guild needed a permanent home of its own where plans could be made for extension of this branch of the settlement activities as the needs might suggest. This ambition was realized when money was forthcoming and title was taken this summer to the historic farm between the villages of Haverstraw and New York City, known as the Coe Place. It is in the edge of the Ramapo Mountains, and contains a quaint homestead which tradition places at about 200 years of age. There is a story that General Anthony Wayne slept there and that Washington and his army once camped in the nearby fields. There are outbuildings which can readily be adapted to the various purposes of the camp. The tract purchased embraces eighty acres and includes a portion of a mountain where it is proposed to establish a bungalow colony. Several bungalows have already been erected. This is in fulfilment of the dream of the former head worker, Louis Heaton Pink, to establish as one phase of the summer work of the Guild a camp where families might take their outings together, renting tents or bungalows from the Guild and either cooking their own meals or getting them at the mess tent as preferred, but in either case enjoying the benefit of rates much lower than prevail at ordinary summer resorts, such outings being thus brought within the reach of families which could not otherwise obtain them. Accommodations are free to those unable to pay, but most of the campers share to some extent in the expense of the outing. Mr. Pink recently resigned as head worker of the Guild in order to take up the practice of the legal profession, but his ideas are being carried out under his successor, Miss Alice E. Robbins, and with the extensive property now in the Guild's possession it is hoped to evolve many plans which will increase the efficiency of the work. For camp life tends to bind together in friendship the workers in a settlement and the people of the neighborhood whom they seek to benefit. It creates esprit du corps, and as a result a loyalty is produced which renders possible greater success in work for the benefit of the community. In these respects the settlement camp exerts a far-reaching influence and attains an importance above and beyond that of giving fresh air to a certain number of deserving people, however valuable that in itself may be. In passing, however, it may be well to mention that the privileges of the United Neighborhood Guild Camp at West Hills were enjoyed last summer by about five hundred people, and no doubt the roll of visitors to the new camp in Rockland County, N. Y., will be longer.

Dining Tent for West Hill Campers

Among other settlements which have done interesting and significant fresh-air work is Hale House, Boston, which for several seasons has conducted an all-summer camp at Squam Lake, N. H. Another Boston settlement, the South End House, has since 1907 provided and directed the caddy force for the golf links of the two great hotels at Bretton Woods in the broad valley at the base of Mount Washington. This forms practically a summer camp for boys connected with the clubs of the settlement. Sixty or seventy boys each season are benefited by two solid months of good air, good food, and wholesome companionship, together with occupation and its reward. They have the best of sleeping quarters and excellent fare, play rooms, picnic, open fireplaces, etc., and are under sufficient discipline to prevent disorder without its being irksome.

Christadora House and the University Settlement, both of Manhattan Borough, New York City, carry on summer camps. The latter has a camp for girls called Cedar Grove, near Montclair, N. J., which it owns and has conducted for several summers; and a boys' camp is maintained at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, on the estate recently presented to the University Settlement by Mrs. Joseph Howland in memory of her husband, the late General Howland. The estate comprises 225 acres of woods and meadowland situated at the foot of Mount Beacon and with splendid views of the Hudson. The Howland mansion itself is used as a vacation resort for social workers. It is known as Tioronda House.

Continued on next page

ON THE ROOF OF NEW YORK

HE THRIVES IN HIGH ALTITUDES

TOP OF THE TALLEST BUSINESS BUILDING ON EARTH

CITY HALL PARK FROM THE WOOLWORTH BUILDING

LOOKING DOWN INTO BROADWAY'S CANYON

WHERE A DIZZY HEAD MEANS DEATH

"TO EVERY MAN HIS WORK"

A FEW days ago the last steel beam in the skeleton of the tallest office structure in the world was put in place. This is the new Woolworth Building, which is being erected on Broadway, New York, between Park Place and Barclay Street, diagonally across from City Hall. The latest triumph of architectural genius towers to a height of 750 feet above the sidewalk, dwarfing its neighbors of steel and stone, which less than a decade ago were looked upon as colossal in their dimensions. Viewed from the tower of this mammoth edifice, the City Hall looks like a doll house, and the fountain in the park appears no larger than a cockle shell in a mill pond. The post office, directly opposite, housing its hundreds of busy employees, sinks to the insignificance of a suburban cottage. The crowds of New Yorkers hurrying down the great thoroughfare and darting here and there across the Park, appear as so many ants scurrying from their hills in the sunlight. Street cars, automobiles, busses, wagons, horses, and all the hustle and bustle of the great city's busy life when looked at from this dazzling height are seen in such miniature as to seem like shifting pieces on a child's chessboard. To give some idea of the vastness of the immense pile, it may be stated that there will be two thousand offices, with a floor space of twenty-three acres, an area equal to that of a small farm. The total cost will be $13,000,000.

America is pre-eminently the land of the skyscrapers and New York City their especial location, though Chicago is coming well to the front as a competitor. In no other spot in the world is space at such a premium as in New York. The land area is so small for the population and for the amount of business to be done that the real estate value is enormous, hence space must be utilized, and as a result we have the skyscrapers.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Building, on the southeast corner of Madison Square at Twenty-third Street, held supremacy in height till the erection of the latest marvel. This huge campanile is 700 feet 3 inches high, and has fifty stories, with two acres more of floor space than the Woolworth Building. The Singer Building, at the corner of Broadway and Liberty Street, has a total height from the basement floor to top of flagstaff of 742 feet, the height from the street to the main roof being 612 feet 1 inch. It has forty-one stories and nine and one-half acres of floor space. The Bankers' Trust Company Building, at the corner of Wall and Nassau Streets, is 539 feet high and has thirty-nine stories. The Times Building, at Forty-second Street and Broadway, is 419 feet high and has twenty-eight stories.

Of course, the cost to build and maintain these giant edifices is enormous, but apart from this consideration, their erection has been made possible only by the mighty strides of modern science, which, within the past ten years or so, may be said to have revolutionized the art of building. Steel, combined with hoisting facilities, has enabled modern progress to erect the skyscraper, and erect it in a space of time marvelously short when one comes to consider the amount of work to be done. Each workman employed is an adept in his particular line, be he hod-carrier or engineer. The structural ironworkers are trained to the business with a thoroughness which only the initiated can understand. The brain thinks, the eyes see, and the hands perform. These men are like circus acrobats—they start early, and they keep at it until it becomes a kind of second nature to them. With something of a feeling of awe, we view them from the streets, looking up to the dizzy heights where they appear like mechanically operated objects, flitting hither and thither with mathematical precision. We see them running along narrow ledges and beams at those immense heights, or stretching far out underneath copings and girders to rivet bolts and ties, etc., seemingly the while defying all the laws of gravity, and we wonder how it is possible for them to do such things. The answer is: It is their business, and they have learned it so well that danger has been almost eliminated.

SETTLEMENTS GO CAMPING

A settlement camp is usually a lively place, and in the boys' section at least there is not much to suggest a home for invalids. The idea that charity is being dispensed is strictly tabooed. As a matter of fact most of those who come pay their way, and they feel at liberty to have a good time, just as if they were at an ordinary resort, though of course there has to be reasonable limitation on the doings of the young people. With beach parties, camp fires, boating, fishing, there is always something going on, and it is surprising what a change two weeks in the country will often make in the city boy or girl. The tenement children are wise enough, and perhaps too wise about some ways of the world, but many things that country boys and girls are familiar with from babyhood are new and strange to them. They learn what a hornet's nest looks like and that it is not necessary to have a key to a tent as if it were a city flat, and they find that neither bears nor Indians are to be feared in the forests, in the vicinity of the great cities at least, and their horizon is widened in many ways. On the return of the campers, whether they are children, young working boys or girls or adults who needed a vacation, their attachment to the settlement which provided their pleasure is bound to be strengthened and their interest in its activities redoubled.

Continued from preceding page

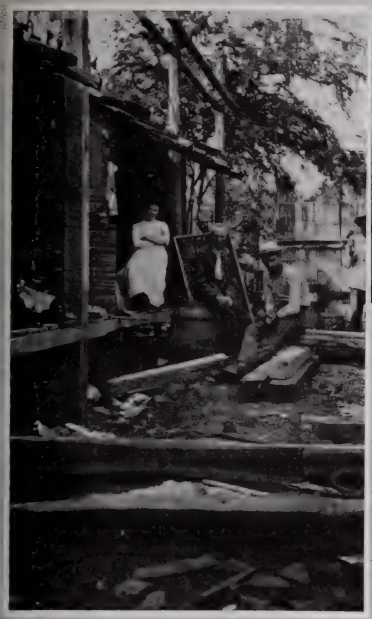
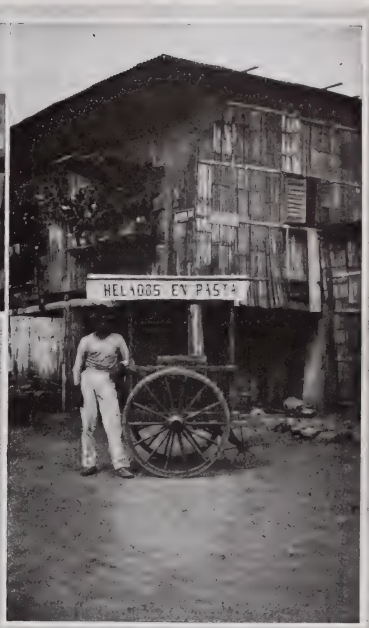
EDWARD HALE BRUSH.



Mr. and Mrs. John Funk and Mr. Freeland

Colporteur Irigoyen Reading the Scriptures to Deckhands



A Street of Guayaquil

SCATTERING BIBLES IN ECUADOR

BY A. R. STARK

Callao, Peru

GUAYAQUIL, Ecuador, has well earned the name of the world's pestilential port. Yellow fever, bubonic plague, smallpox, malaria, and many other deadly diseases flourish amid its bad sanitary conditions. The United States Marine Hospital Service maintains a sanitary officer at Guayaquil to establish a system of quarantine and supervise all ships bound for Panama. The amount of fumigating done on this coast is extraordinary, much to the deterioration of the ship and cargo and the annoyance of the passengers. Each ship is provided with a Clayton machine, and before entering Guayaquil is thoroughly disinfected with dioxide of sulphur. But even quarantine officers are not proof against the deadly bite of the infected stegomyia calopus, or yellow fever mosquito. One of their officials, Dr. Whitman, succumbed recently to yellow fever. Both bubonic and yellow fever exist here in their most deadly form; generally ninety cases out of every hundred are fatal.

On arrival at the wharf, I met two American Adventist missionaries who were leaving for the provinces. They gave me an alarming description of the ravages of bubonic and yellow fever, and urged me on no account to sleep in Guayaquil at night. Whole blocks of the city were infested with the plague, and a number of cases of yellow fever were reported. Under this depressing news I found my way to the Guayaquil Hotel, run by a good-natured Basque, who boasted that he had never lost a traveler through Yellow Jack or bubonic. Here I was billeted for nine days. Anxious to know who his traveler was, I informed him that I was representing the greatest Bible publishing house in the world. Thereupon he was very kind to me, gave me a good room, and honored me with a seat at his table. Here I visited every part of the city, market-place, slums, river front, barges, etc., and when I left Guayaquil it was surely a testimony to the goodness of God, cold water and the simple life that I was the only passenger who sailed down the river with a normal temperature. As a result I sold several books on the Victoria, and the little "Blue Books" became quite popular, and the Peruvian health officer of Tumbes bought a Bible and Testament.

Notwithstanding that fires and earthquakes have devastated the place and bubonic and yellow fever scourges have swept over it, Guayaquil is to-day a crowded city of 80,000 or more. It is the emporium of the greater part of the country. The houses are of the lightest construction, built of wood and split bamboo. Given the frame outline and the flooring, a house of considerable dimensions can be walled with bamboo in a week. Glass, unless in a few shop windows, is unknown. Venetian shutters serve to close the house windows, excluding the sun and allowing a cool breeze to pass through the rooms. Stoves are unknown, yet a Guayaquil cook, over a primitive charcoal fire, can cook a dinner for a party of fifteen or twenty in a remarkably short time, after the taste and flavor of the place.

Edison is credited with defining American genius as 2 per cent. of inspiration and 98 per cent. of perspiration. Guayaquil genius cannot claim such a high percentage, and must rank about 99.9 per cent. of perspiration and 0.1 per cent. of inspiration. The new arrival, amid equatorial heat, walks the stuffy streets bathed in perspiration, beholding the apparently unruffled, indolent, easy-going Guayaquileño who has never awakened to the reality of the strenuous life. Chicha boys and ice-cream vendors are the only people who seem to put energy into life. With voice and bell they push their trade everywhere.

To a man who believes that the highest and most lasting inspiration in life and conduct, business and social development comes through the Bible, it was an inspiration to see men and boys along the malecon reading Gospels and New Testaments. Ecuador has been cursed by a system which has divorced morality from religion. But men are beginning to realize that the religion of the Bible is something distinct from the religion of the priest; that it is a working Gospel for everyday life.

Colporteur Irigoyen, though living in one of the most enervating climates, is an active and well-known figure on the streets of Guayaquil and along the river front. There is an immense number of river craft bringing bananas, oranges, cacao and other products down for exportation and carrying passengers to different ports on the extensive river system. Canoes or dug-outs, floating balsas made from bamboo cane, cabalitos (small houses made from reeds) and river steamers line the river front. It is a pretty sight in the soft tropical light of the evening to see canoes and other small craft being carried swiftly up the river with the tide, guided by the helm or paddle.

Drifting up and down the river a tribe of people may be found. Numerous little house-boats are moored along the banks of the river. Whole families are born and reared in these balsas among grunting pigs and cackling hens. Accustomed as they are to the rough life of the river, children grow up half-naked and begrimed, without education or religious instruction. About the only chance they have of ever hearing the Gospel story is through the lips of Colporteur Irigoyen. A good part of his life in Guayaquil is spent on canoes and balsas, providing this river tribe with the Christian Chart—the New Testament. Times without number he has defined life's course,—the narrow way, or cast the anchor of promise and hope for some mariner without God and without hope, or lifted men in heart and thought to the great Captain who pilots the course from time to eternity.

His monthly report for last October is before me. The circulation is 50 Bibles, 96 Testaments, 180 Gospels and Psalms; receipts £8.0.2. To place this number of books in circulation he has during the month been in touch with over seven thousand people. Month by month his report shows the same steady average of work.

For years the Gospel Union has been at work among the Spanish-speaking people, the Quechua Indians of the Sierra and the savage tribes of the Oriente. Rev. W. E. Reed, the field secretary, who has shown so much kindly interest in our work, is at present off on an extended Bible tour along with a fellow worker. During two years Mr. John Funk, accompanied by Mr. Chapman of the same mission, made one of the most extensive Bible journeys ever made in Colombia. In their travels they visited over one hundred and thirty towns. Mr. Funk was recently married. I am glad to enclose a photo of Mr. Funk rebuilding the mission station in Guayaquil. It also shows Mr. Freeland, who has spent eight years in the Oriente conquering the language of the wild Jibaros and trying to make the Gospel speak in their language. Two lady missionaries are toiling among the Quechuas and translating the Gospel story into a dialect of the Quechua language in Ecuador. No more heroic devotion to Christ can be found in any other mission field.

We are now steaming south on the steamship Victoria, one of the comfortable coast boats of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. Guayaquil is behind us. The doctor has examined the passengers and taken their temperature. Now fumigation has been vigorously renewed. The Clayton has been pumping sulphur fumes for hours into the holds until the passengers are nearly choked. Later we call at Etem, the port of Chiclayo, Monsefu, Lambayeque and other towns where our Colporteur Herrera was at work a good part of the year.

In the course of the Bible Society's operations every one of these ports and the towns and villages that lie behind them away on the eastern slopes of the Andes have been canvassed by the colporteur with the message of the Gospel. Our journey is near its end. Scriptures have been circulated and friends have been made. One night about 10 P.M. I heard a knock at my cabin door. It was an American Jew who is traveling round South America. About an hour before that a group of passengers had been discussing Christianity, and the Jew made an irreverent remark about Jesus Christ. "I have come to apologize for that rude remark about Jesus Christ," he said. Like many more educated American Jews, he had never read his own Scriptures. It is midnight and we stand on the cool deck under the Southern Cross. For two hours we have been trying to bring this intelligent Jew to glory in the cross of Christ. "How strange," he said, "that I should have to come to South America to meet a man like you! At first I was afraid of you and your Bibles. Now I understand you. Believe me, I want to read the Bible. I have read Ingersoll and men like that, but I have never read my own Jewish Scriptures."

The lights of Callao are beginning to loom on the distant horizon. In thought we wander to the scattered Bible workers across this vast continent, who have gone forth in the spirit of conquest. May the prayers of those who have made it possible to send them forth follow them until the light from the cross of Christ shines into the darkest nook.

Shall We Know Each Other in Heaven?

A Sermon

BY

Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D.*

TEXT: "Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." I. Cor. 13: 12

SHALL we know each other in heaven?" Poetry, philosophy and revelation say Yes. Even the pagan poets and philosophers expected to meet and know their friends in the future world. Homer, in his Odyssey, represented Ulysses as recognizing his mother in the world of spirits. Virgil pictures Æneas on a visit to the spirit world recognizing and being recognized by the acquaintances he met. Socrates in his defense before the judges said, "Who would not part with a great deal to purchase a meeting with Orpheus, Hesiod and Homer? If it be true that this is to be the consequence of death, I would even be glad to die often. What pleasure will it give to live with Palmedes and others, who suffered unjustly, and to compare my fate with theirs! What an inconceivable happiness will it be to converse in another world with Sisyphus and Ulysses, especially as those who inhabit that world will die no more."

A Universal Hope

Cicero echoed the same hope in the words: "For my own part, I feel myself transported with the most ardent impatience to join the society of my two departed friends, whose character I greatly respected, and whose persons I sincerely loved. Nor is this, my earnest desire, confined to those excellent persons alone with whom I was formerly connected. I ardently wish to visit also those celebrated worthies of whose honorable conduct I have heard and read so much, whose virtues I myself have commemorated in some of my writings. To this glorious assembly I am speedily advancing; and I would not be turned back in my journey, even on the assured condition that my future, like that of Pelias, should again be restored."

The savage American Indians buried wives and dogs and arrows with their chiefs because they thought they would need them in the happy hunting ground. The same motive prompted the burning of the Hindu widow on the funeral pyre of her husband. The king of Dahomey was in the habit of sending messages to his departed friends by whispering into the ear of a subject and at once cutting off his head. When a king of Guinea died, hundreds of subjects were slain that he might have better attention in the spirit world. Now what are we to learn from the views of cultured pagan poets and from the customs of untutored savages? Simply and emphatically this: The belief in a future recognition is as universal as the belief in immortality, and this universal hope, based on natural religion, though associated with much evil, is a strong presumption, if not proof, in favor of the claim that we shall know each other in heaven. There is a sense in which the voice of the people is the voice of God. God does not give such a universal expectation only to disappoint it.

Foregleams of the Immortal Life

Let us pass now through this vestibule of philosophy and poetry into the sacred temple of revelation. What say the Scriptures? The text is a positive declaration that we shall know each other in heaven. A fair translation of it would be: "Now I know in part, but then shall I know thoroughly, even as I am known thoroughly." It teaches without doubt that we shall know each other better in heaven than on earth. Here our knowledge of each other is partial; then it will be complete. The flesh is a veil that covers the soul and conceals much from view. The limitation of human language prevents us from revealing our inner selves to our most intimate friends. A better medium of communication will insure greater knowledge. And it may be that our spirit, when freed from the flesh, shall discern another spirit in a sense that we cannot even understand. It is well that our souls do not live in glass houses, for there is much in the best of us which others ought not to see. But when we have attained unto the heavenly character, there will be no reason for concealment. Motive, imagination, desire, disposition and temper may then be open to all the world, because they will be such as God himself approves, and their publicity will make everybody holy and happy. When one has reached the perfection of being and living on earth that he can afford to have others know all there is in and about him, he is in the outer court of heaven.

This thorough knowledge which every one will have of every one else will prevent all misunderstanding and will make heaven a very much more desirable place to live in than earth.

In the second place, the positive declaration of the text is confirmed by five considerations:

1. The immortality of the soul carries with it the recognition of each other in heaven. We learn from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus that memory lives after death, and while memory lasts, we can never forget the mental, moral and spiritual features of our friends. The disciples recognized Moses and Elijah on the Mount of Transfiguration as they heard them talk to Jesus. After we have spent a lifetime studying the Psalms, shall we not recognize David in heaven, if we shall be permitted to hear him speak? Have we not in his Epistles the heart and mind of Paul, and do we not know him through them? Think you not that we shall recognize the same Paul in heaven? A wife asked a dying Scotchman, "Will you know me in heaven?" and he replied, "Do you think, my dear, that I shall have less sense in heaven than I have here?" Imagination, reason, conscience, taste and love are parts of the immortal soul, and in order to prevent recognition you would have to blot them out forever. When you have done that, there is no soul left to recognize.

The Deathlessness of Love

The distinguished preacher, Dr. Gregg, in his sermon on "The Occupations of the Heaven-Life" truly says: "Human love was made for eternity. Contrast human love with animal love and you will see this. The animal mother loves her offspring until it is able to take care of itself, and then that natural affection ceases. Not so with the human mother. She may be bent with the weight of fourscore years and ten, and her living son may be more than threescore years, but yet that first natural love, instead of ceasing, is seemingly growing stronger, and is just as heartily reciprocated. Why is this? Because these loves are as immortal as the soul." I saw something of this maternal love a month ago when I spent a month with my own mother on the other side of the Alleghanies. She is seventy and seven now. When I was coming away, she came to me and said, "Son, it seems to me that I have done nothing but cry since you have been here. But, son, do not think that I am not glad to see you. The tears are not tears of sorrow; they are, every one of them, the tears of love and joy." She did not need to tell me that; I knew it by the way she pronounced the word "son" and by the number of times she called me "son."

2. Heaven is revealed as a social place. Lazarus in the bosom of Abraham means fellowship, and such fellowship without recognition is almost inconceivable. Jesus defines heaven as "our Father's house," and think of a family of children in a father's house total strangers to each other! Paul writes of "the whole family in heaven and earth." The new version translation is, "Every family in heaven and earth." Though we shall lose our carnal relations in heaven, every spiritual tie will continue. If I should go there to-day I think I should try to bring about a meeting of the glorified members of my church, that we might worship and talk together of Christ and his dealings with us.

Some good people, however, refuse to believe in heavenly recognition because they declare that it would make them forever miserable to learn that a loved one was not there. But this refusal does not help the case, for if they recognize no one, they may be doubtful through all eternity as to whether any loved one was saved. If I miss my dearest friend in heaven, I shall be certain of two things: (1) God is justified, for he has done all that infinite love and power could do for a free moral agent to save in heaven; (2) he is less miserable where he is than he would be in heaven, unprepared for the place. If I had the power to make some of you serve God as the glorified saints serve him, I would put you in a hell upon earth. You shun a prayer-meeting and a revival as you do the leprosy, and as for holy spiritual service, you have no taste for it. To compel you to live as you do among people who do not love sin would be to give you the experience of a chain-gang.

Our Names Written in Heaven

3. Our names are written in heaven. "Rejoice not," said Jesus, "that the devils are subject to you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." The name stands for the person. It means him and no one else. It marks him off as an individual distinct from all other individuals. And this Scripture teaches that we are known in heaven before we get there. Shall we cease to be recognized when we arrive? There will be a new name given to the overcomers known only to God and the one who receives it (Rev. 2: 17), but that new name does not imply that personality will be destroyed. There is even here a sacred relation between each one of us and God, which only God and we fully understand, and yet this does not hinder us from knowing each other. "The general assembly and the church of the first-born which are written in heaven" will each and all answer to the roll-call, knowing each other thoroughly even as they shall be thoroughly known.

4. The joy of heaven is increased by the presence of our friends. In writing to the Thessalonians, Paul asks, "What is our hope of joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Paul is looking forward to the coming of Christ with pleasure, because, among other things, he expects to see the Thessalonian converts standing among the saved, and be permitted to present them to Jesus as trophies of his grace. How could he rejoice in them before Christ if he did not know them? And if you will turn to II. Cor. 1: 14, you will see that the apostle expects a mutual recognition: "As ye have acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus." This "day of the Lord Jesus" is the glad day, when he shall be revealed in glory, and Paul is comforting himself with the reflection that he and his Corinthian converts shall rejoice in each other in that day. There must, of course, be mutual recognition before there can be mutual joy. Happy days it will be for faithful pastor and loving people when, in the presence of the King in his beauty, they shall meet each other and rejoice together in paying tribute to their Saviour. Jesus urges his disciples to "make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness that when you fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations." In other words, so use your money that you will make men your friends by making them Christians, and thus you will have friends who have gone ahead to welcome you when you shall arrive at the doors of heaven. Such a welcome would not be possible without recognition.

The Glorified Spiritual Body

5. Our Lord Jesus between his resurrection and his ascension is the first fruits of the life after the resurrection, and his friends recognized him, though on one occasion their eyes were holden that they should not know him. He was no longer subject to the natural law. He appeared and disappeared at will. The glorified physical body was under complete control of the Spirit. There was no need of beast on which to ride. He simply willed and his body went even through closed doors. And yet his personality was not lost. The two disciples at Emmaus recognized him as the same Jesus they had known by the simple act of breaking bread. Mary recognized his voice. Thomas saw at a glance his Lord and his God. And as they knew Jesus after his resurrection while in the glorified body, so shall we know each other in our glorified bodies.

I feel a strong, immortal hope,
Which bears my spirit up
Beneath its mountain load:
Redeemed from death and grief and pain,
I soon shall find my friends again
Within the arms of God.

* Formerly of Moody Church, Chicago, now of Metropolitan Tabernacle, London.

ADVERSITY

THE mist was heavy on the mountain, where
I walked alone, and thought of God as near,
Till, huge and threatening, loomed a monster there
Full in my face, and I was filled with fear.

Nearer it came and larger seemed to grow,
My heart beat faster and I turned to flee,
When a stray zephyr cleared the mist, and lo!
The monster was a man, like unto me!

I called, he answered merrily, and came
To where I stood, with God not far away;
Long years had changed him, but he spoke his name—
My brother, lost to me for many a day!

A. S. COATS, D.D.

Africa Calling for Workers

BY BISHOP I. B. SCOTT

THE seventy-ninth session of the Liberia (West Africa) Annual Conference has just been held and the reports surprised and thrilled the members of that body. These reports not only gave evidence of a year of real triumph in the salvation of men, but that the heathen of this part of Africa are actually pleading in vain for some one to point them to the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world." It is about seven years since I came to Africa to work. That the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may note the progress of the work, let me say that then there was a membership of 3,301; now the membership is 7,687. The Sunday school scholars were 2,447; now they number 4,442. Then the church and parsonage property was estimated at $95,200; now it is $165,454. The number of pupils in the day schools is 1,925, of whom 1,548 are natives. If we could enlarge our equipment we could easily increase the enrolment.

I want the Christian world to know that we are in the midst of the most remarkable uprising of heathen natives in their call for education and the Gospel that Africa has ever witnessed. I am wholly unable to respond to their calls. I have neither the men nor the money. Delegation after delegation has besieged me and I have sent out all the workers I could and am hoping and praying for others. Hundreds have been received into the church, while thousands are pleading for admittance. I have only one American missionary among a people whose towns extend along a line which covers a distance of about two hundred miles. There are native workers at intervals, but what are they among so many? With $2,000 I could bring out and provide for two prepared missionaries for a year. And you ask where would I place them? I should place one in a town of ten thousand or more people where we have more than six hundred Christians and hundreds of others awaiting instructions. From this center he could reach ten thousand more by a walk of two or three hours. I should place another in a center where there is a large body of Christians and where he could easily reach ten thousand or more, many of whom have been converted, and thousands of whom are under our influence.

It was in this region that an old gray-headed king said to me on my first visit, "Bishop, I am the man who came to Monrovia for you because I believe my people should know your God. Some of my people say they ought to kill me, but I believe my people should learn about God." Again I am led to exclaim: If the Christian Church were only ready! Some years ago I asked the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to save Jasper Grant's family from heathenism and they did so. Now I ask, will they not provide the two workers for this region and thus save thousands from heathenism?

[Any contributions for this worthy cause sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be acknowledged and forwarded to Bishop Scott at Monrovia, Liberia, West Africa.]

Use for the Blind Spot

IN EVERY eye there is a little spot that is totally blind. Young eyes, old eyes, sharp eyes, dull eyes, blue, brown or black eyes—all of them, even the most perfect, have, in each retina, a little round spot which is wholly blind both to brightness and color. This spot is located just at the point where the optic nerve enters, and is approximately one-twelfth of an inch wide.

Several interesting experiments can be made to prove the presence of this blind spot. For example, cover the right eye with the hand, or a bandage, and gaze with the left eye steadily at a point on the wall or screen about seven feet distant. Let another person be seated against the wall on your left-hand side, in such a position that his forehead is on a level with the point at which you are gazing, and his nearer cheek about twenty inches distant from it. Do not turn your eyeball, but gaze steadily as at first, and his face will entirely disappear, and the wall will seem to be perfectly blank. If you spread a sheet of paper on the wall and note the points at which a pencil moved back and forth by another person appears and disappears, you will be able to make an accurate map of the blind spot as projected on the wall.

Another experiment is performed by painting nine large letters in three vertical columns of three letters each, upon a sheet of paper. Hold the paper at such a distance and in such a position before the eye that the central letter of the square falls within the blind spot, while the surrounding eight letters are still visible.

So much for the facts as gathered from the encyclopedia; but there are other more important and more interesting facts regarding blind spots in the eyes which mere scientists and encyclopedias do not recognize.

* * *

BLINDNESS is not often counted among the good things of life. In every realm—the physical, the mental, the spiritual—we are urged to exercise and develop our ability to see clearly. The highest premium is placed on good eyesight and on perfect vision. All manner of optical contrivances are made to correct or increase the physical sight, and philosophers are constantly appealing for broader, more searching vision of things hidden that should be revealed to the seer.

Now, however, we shall consider a word in praise of blindness. The blind spot in the eye may be so cultivated as to become one of life's greatest blessings. The man or the woman who goes through life partly blind is far happier and more useful than the one who sees everything; just as the person who is partially deaf spends a more comfortable and enjoyable life than the one who hears everything.

The photographic lens sees a great deal more than is taken in by the human eye. Artists complain that the photograph presents only a record of details, that it includes everything and therefore it includes too much. It is not a correct picture as the eye sees it. The beauty is lost in the detail. Light and shade, color, depth, feeling, "atmosphere" are what the artist wants. Instead, the camera gives him a catalogue of all the physical objects within range of the lens. Therefore the artist photographer has resorted to many tricks to make his camera see less. He has thrown the lens out of focus; he has covered it with colored glass; he has tried in every possible way to make it blind to the non-essential things that it might better record the things which make the real beauty of the landscape.

* * *

TWO friends were looking across the Hudson River in the twilight. One remarked on the beauty of the water and the rocky cliffs of the Palisades crowned with green. The other complained of the railroad tracks, the sheds, the gas-tanks, and the rubbish in the foreground on the side of the river where they were standing. "Oh, just let those things come into the blind spot of your eye and look beyond them," laughed the other—and there you have the whole secret.

Here is a random sentence stolen from a manuscript which passed through my hands the other day. "What a strange girl she was, he thought, as he watched her busy fingers. She was hatless, and the soft wind ruffled her brown hair. It was a pity that her mouth was so large and her nose so small. No one could think she was pretty, and just as he decided that, she raised her eyes and smiled and he caught a glimpse of a dimple and of gray eyes fringed with long black lashes and knew he had made a mistake, that she was charming, that her eyes would make a man forget she had a mouth or a nose." There again you have the same secret.

In every landscape and in every person there is beauty worth seeing, but seldom indeed is there nothing but beauty. Often the foreground is littered with rubbish it were better not to see. Often there are defects of face and defects of manner to which it were far better to be blind. The real picture is not found in the sticks and stones of the foreground. The real person is not to be measured by the little deformities of feature or the little unpleasant personal characteristics which appear on the surface. These are the things which we must contrive to lose within the area of our blind spot. Sometimes it is necessary to stretch this area of blindness in order that we may see the better.

A paradox of sight is the fact that blindness often is an aid to the clearest vision, while ability to see everything is the greatest hindrance to seeing truly. In fact, sight itself becomes a kind of blindness. Our eyes are filled with the rubbish in the foreground to the exclusion of the beauty beyond. It is possible to look at a five-cent piece before the eye in such a way as to shut out the sun itself.

It is possible to go through life refusing to see the faults and blemishes of our friends and neighbors, blind to their failures and defects, shutting out of our vision all that is ugly, in order that we may see their beauties and virtues and do them and ourselves better justice. The sister, the brother, the wife, the husband who learns how to use the blind spot in the home will discover unexpected loveliness in the other members of the family as they see one another with the clearer vision of the soul.

Poems Everyone Should Know

Per Pacem ad Lucem

I DO not ask, O Lord, that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that thou wouldst take from me
Aught of its load.

I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet;
I know too well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet.

For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead:
Lead me aright—
Though strength should falter and though heart should bleed,
Through Peace to Light.

I do not ask, O Lord, that thou shouldst shed
Full radiance here;
Give but a ray of peace, that I may tread
Without a fear.

I do not ask my cross to understand,
My way to see;
Better in darkness just to feel thy hand,
And follow thee.

A. A. PROCTER.

Mrs. Sangster Remembered

MANY letters have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD paying tribute to the literary genius and beautiful lifework of the late Margaret E. Sangster. Mrs. Nelson Root, Kankakee, Ill., writes: "For many years she has been our guide-post. She has gone, but she is yet living. Oh that we all some day may meet her in the heavenly home."

Miss Annie Rodd sends these verses:

Gone, thou faithful, gentle spirit.
Gone to live in heaven above;
Gone the kingdom to inherit,
Purchased by the God of love.

"We dearly loved her writings," says Mrs. N. J. Reiniger; "they were so commonsense and motherly."

G. W. Tuttle sends some memorial verses:

Her thoughts were like a fountain, pure and sweet,
Where thirsty mortals stayed their weary feet
A fountain of refreshing, pouring out
Its wealth of blessing on the world about.

Fred Martin, Kansas, writes: "She endeared herself to the whole English-speaking world. Her Gospel was that of good cheer. Permit me, as one to whom her words of comfort meant a great blessing, to pay this tribute to her memory."

Very touching is the letter of Mrs. I. K. Bates, Michigan, who writes:

We women who for many years have been readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have, I think, quite generally sought Margaret Sangster's page and received help and inspiration from the reading. Words cannot express how greatly her weekly message will be missed. We realize afresh how blessed her life must have been in the possession and use of a talent that brought her into such close and tender relation with a large and ever-widening circle of those who will now feel a sense of personal loss When we reach the other shore, we shall seek to meet this friend, whom we have known here only through written words and a sweet pictured face.

Mrs. J. McA., Watkins, N. Y. writes: "Truly a good woman has departed, but her work was well done and she has received the plaudit, 'Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'"

"I have had THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twenty years, writes Mrs. Drumm, of Pittsburg, Pa., "and I had grown to love Mrs. Sangster dearly. If I should get to heaven, I think she will be one of the first for whom I shall look. I am sure my loss is only one of thousands of others, because she was so dear to us all."

These and many other similar tributes have been forwarded to Mrs Sangster's family.

TO ONE GREATLY BELOVED

In Memory of Margaret Sangster

O GENTLE counselor, with heart of gold,
And loving hand that labored evermore
To bless the home and lift it nearer God!
Where shall thy mantle fall? O faithful friend,
Our ways are parted for a little space!
Thine is the Master's welcome and reward,
And ours to live the precepts he has given,
And follow in the path thy feet have trod.

New York. MRS. C. W. BABCOCK.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price. $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

"The Law of the Spirit"

THERE is a great deal of haphazard religious work, which is barren of result because it ignores fundamental, fixed laws. No one would dream of trying to produce electric light without following absolutely the laws of electricity. Yet people plunge ahead in religious activity and are dismayed to find their activities fruitless, when, as a matter of fact, they have no reason to expect anything but failure because they are ignoring the law.

Theology is called, technically, a science. So the operations of the Holy Spirit may be said to form a science. It is, after all, the same God in nature and in the realm of the spirit. The changing of the position and combinations of bits of physical matter produces electricity and electrical results, which are the manifestations of God's physical power; certain other acts and changes in human minds and wills bring about conditions in which God's spiritual power is revealed and made fruitful. It is as fair to call the second a science as the first. There is a law of the Spirit.

It would require a book rather than a paragraph even to outline the things which shut off the power of God. But a few positive items of "the law of the Spirit," as it applies to work done for the souls of others, may be laid down.

There must be straight preaching about sin. No other idea will lead a soul to seek real salvation except the idea of real sin. Wrongdoing is not a misfortune, even a calamity. It is sin—the kind of sin that means guilt and danger. Next there must be straight preaching about the Cross of Christ. The message of Christ crucified is the message that moves and melts hearts. No better altar song for seekers has ever been found than this:

> What can wash away my sin?
> Nothing but the blood of Jesus.

There must be intense love for those to whom the message is delivered. There must be consecration. God's Spirit can work only through lives that are yielded wholly to him. Lastly, there must be faith. In fact, faith is so vital that it is almost true to say faith is the only requirement, because faith can come only to the heart that has done these other things first. But when faith comes to such a soul, victory is sure.

This, then, is the law of the Spirit in the work of saving souls: the preaching of sin, the preaching of the Cross, love, consecration and faith. Prayer is not mentioned specifically, for the whole matter is a matter of prayer. Prayer is getting into touch with God and keeping in touch with him. We must pray while we preach, we must pray while we love—and as we pray, in consecration and love, we believe. And with the faith comes triumph.

Exit Lorimer

BY a vote of fifty-five to twenty-eight, the United States Senate, on July 12, declared the election of William Lorimer to that body invalid, and he was accordingly unseated. There was something exceedingly pathetic in his closing appeal to the Senate. He spoke of his past life, of his family and of his political associations. He pleaded for generous consideration, and claimed to be a victim of misrepresentation and of a combination of the "interests"; but the Senate accepted the evidence as conclusive, and Lorimer went into retirement, the second member of the Upper House to go out under charges, the first having been Senator William Blount, of Tennessee, in 1797. It is a tragic thing to witness the fall of a man who has attained high position in the public service. The use of money in politics has given rise to many abuses, but it is only the open and flagrant instances that come to light. Lorimer's fate should be a warning. We hear of huge funds being raised in political campaigns, and the modern tendency is toward the increase of this dangerous feature of our political system. Hardly a candidate for any important office need expect success, in these days, unless he has the amplest financial backing. It is true, the machinery of politics cannot be set in motion except the wheels be lubricated financially; but there is surely a limit to such lubrication. The nearer we approach to the day of clean politics, the less we shall hear of gigantic funds placed under the control of campaign managers.

Is Valentine's Head Wanted?

IT IS a matter of open comment in Washington that there is a movement to force the resignation of Hon. Robert G. Valentine, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in order to relieve the administration from embarrassment on the Indian school question. As our readers will remember, Mr. Valentine is the official who several months ago issued the famous order prohibiting the use of religious insignia or garb by employees of the Indian service while on duty in the Indian schools supported by the general government. This order, which was clearly conceived in the spirit of obedience to the Constitution, and which applied to twenty-three schools, was immediately opposed by the Roman Catholics, but it was cordially approved by the entire Protestant ministry and press of the country as a proper step to secure compliance with the laws and regulations governing all public-supported schools. President Taft revoked the order, pending a hearing of both sides. Weeks have elapsed, and still there are no signs of a decision by the Commissioner of the Interior, who has the matter in charge. Now the situation, as explained by the correspondent of the New York Sun, is a peculiar one. If the order is permanently revoked by the President, notwithstanding that it is admitted on both sides to be constitutionally sound, the revocation will naturally bring a storm of protest from every part of the country. Any plan to force Valentine out, under present conditions, would be rash and unwarranted and would intensify the situation. That such an attempt has been made is generally reported. In reply to a telegram of inquiry from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Commissioner Valentine wired in very positive terms that he had not resigned and had no intention of resigning.

As we have already intimated, the Indian school question is one which should be decided now—not after election. It involves a serious violation of constitutional rights, and the point raised in the Valentine order—that the usage complained of in our Indian schools is in conflict with the essential principle of the separation of church and state—has been so abundantly sustained by the highest courts, that no attempt has been made up to date to defend or refute the charge. Denial or evasion is not refutation. Somebody is responsible to the people for the continuance of this condition in the schools, and for the delay in reaching an official decision. To decapitate Commissioner Valentine would simply make matters worse. If he should be made a victim in return for his fidelity to public interests, the people will certainly want to know all about it.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, July 31, 1912

	PAGE
Crater Lake	Cover
Our Mail-Bag	760
Settlements Go Camping (Illustrated) By Edward Hale Brush	751, 752
On the Roof of New York (Illustrated)	752
Scattering Bibles in Ecuador (Illustrated) By A. R. Stark	753
Shall We Know Each Other in Heaven? Sermon By Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D.	754
Use for the Blind Spot	755
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	756
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	757
The Prohibition Nominations (Portraits)	758
The Invincible Power of Love By Orison Swett Marden	758
"Jerusalem, Rome, Washington"	759, 760
Mt. Katmai's Volcanic Shower (Illustrated)	760
Do You Know Your Bible?	761, 767
A Man Who Goes Where Men Are (Illustrated)	761
Back with her Own Folks (Illustrated) Story by Stella Clanton Dysart	762, 763
Railway Disaster in Illinois (Illustrated)	763
A British Insurance Act	764
Sunday School Lesson By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	765
Happy Cozy Corner Days (Illustrated)	766
What Others Say	767

Portugal's Struggle for Independence

ONE of the papal maxims is "Divide and rule." It is to-day finding practical illustration in Portugal, where the young republic is in a life-and-death struggle with the royalist movement, which is fomented by Romanist influences. Reactionary success would mean the restoration of the Roman Church to power and the return of the horde of orders which were lately expelled from the country. That the Papal Church is a past master in the art of stirring up strife and exciting disturbance is also shown in the case of Belgium, where the Clericals, though a minority, really control the government, and through the plural voting system so limit the popular voting power as to render it ineffective. There the essential point is the struggle of the powerful Clerical body (Roman Catholic) to secure for the church schools the same financial support as is now received by the public schools (which are subsidized by the communes, the provinces and the state), and thus divide the public funds to the advantage of the sectarian schools. These concrete instances of papal politics in action show that the Roman Church is as ready to-day as it ever was in olden times, to plot and to do battle for temporal power wherever it finds the opportunity.

A Tangled Crime

CRIME committed to conceal crime is usually futile. Within a few hours after the murder of Herman Rosenthal, gambler, in front of a Broadway hotel on July 16, all New York was stirred by the conviction that the tragedy was one that demanded instant investigation, chiefly for the reason that it furnished, in some of its attendant details, strong indications of a secret understanding between the police and the criminal underworld. Rosenthal had quarreled with his gambling associates and had bitterly complained that police exactions for immunity from prosecution had become intolerable. He had made a partial exposé to the district attorney, and his allegations, involving the police as well as the gamblers, were so startling that of themselves they would have forced an official inquiry. There was, of course, a prompt denial from the police. Then, when the situation became intensely acute, and when Rosenthal was preparing to produce a number of witnesses, whose disclosures would have precipitated a scandal, he was deliberately assassinated. Public opinion is demanding that the whole case be thoroughly investigated, and it seems likely that Burns, the famous graft-hunting detective, may take part in the investigation. Whether Rosenthal was the victim of a gambler's feud or whether the police had knowledge of the plan to silence him but took no steps to prevent it, will soon be shown. What interests the citizens most deeply is that all the facts should be brought out relative to the alleged secret understanding between the gamblers and the police, which Rosenthal was preparing to establish when he met his fate.

General Notes

—ONE OF THE latest fads among the fashionable women of London is to wear live lizards attached to gold collars and chains, which are bound around the neck. These creatures are non-poisonous, although repulsive, and there are many varieties. Some are twelve to eighteen inches long. They are said to be easily tamed and taught not to bite.

—AN EGYPTIAN SPHYNX, weighing ninety tons and carved out of alabaster, has been excavated from the sand on a marshy plain near Memphis. It is fourteen feet in height and twenty-six feet in length and has a singular tail. It is believed to have been carved about 1300 B.C. Professor Flinders Petrie, the celebrated Egyptologist, has examined the figure, which bore no inscription, and considers it a very remarkable find.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

King Awards Olympic Prizes

THE Olympic games in Stockholm have ended. The closing events were shadowed by the death of Lazaro, a Portuguese athlete, who, after covering nineteen miles in the Marathon in the broiling sun, fell exhausted and was carried to the hospital, where he died. The point score for all sports, including shooting, swimming, lawn tennis, football, etc., follows: United States, 128; Great Britain, 108; Sweden, 104; Finland, 46; Germany, 34; France, 23; Denmark, 14; Italy, 13; Belgium, 11; Norway, 10; Hungary, 8; Russia, 5; Greece, 4; Austria, 4; Holland, 2. It will be seen that the American athletes led the world in the games. The royal family was deeply interested in the awarding of prizes. Gustav, king of Sweden, conferred on each of the winners of a first prize a laurel wreath, a gold medal, and a cup. Crown Prince Gustav Adolph presented silver medals to the members of the second group, and Prince Charles, brother of the king, handed bronze medals to the third group. The procession into the arena was a remarkable sight. Every sort of civil and military costume figured, from full dress military with plumed and shining helmet and much gold lace to simple khaki, and from frock coat and silk hat to running tights. The women swimmers and tennis players wore pink and white dresses, while the women gymnasts made a very charming appearance in sailor frocks. King Gustav, in gray frock coat, mounted the rostrum, behind which were the tables loaded with trophies, wreaths and medals. Ralph O. Craig, Detroit Y. M. C. A., the double winner of the 100 and 200 meter dashes, was the first victor called. He stepped forward to the platform and the king placed the wreath on his head and shook him warmly by the hands. Several other Americans followed. The Marathon winner, McArthur, of South Africa, received enthusiastic cheers. He appeared in green tights, with bare arms and legs. In addition to other laurels he was presented with a big bronze statue of the original Marathon hero falling at the finish. The king applauded him and held his hand for a long time. All the Swedish winners were given ovations. James Thorpe, of the Carlisle Indian School, took the highest honors of the Olympic games. He followed up his earlier victory in the Pentathlon by winning the Decathlon for the trophy offered by the Czar of Russia, and established himself as the greatest all-round athlete in the world. The competition, made up of ten events, including running, hurdling, throwing the weights, vaulting and jumping, provided a remarkable test of speed, strength and agility, and Thorpe won from a representative field by 8,814 points out of a possible 10,000. It is fitting that this man with an Indian face and blood should be quick and strong, the perfect animal his fathers were, and should have that strong, quick body under the direction of an educated mind. The popular press and public sentiment join our country in congratulating its representatives in Sweden at the victories fairly won. The Olympic games and the prizes awarded by the king call to mind the language of a hero who, having won in the real contests of life, awaited his prize:

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day. (II. Tim. 4: 7, 8.)

James Thorpe, of Carlisle School
The World's Greatest Athlete

Ralph Craig, of Detroit Y. M. C. A.
Winner of 100 and 200 Meter Races

Influence of Christian Womanhood

AT AN old-fashioned Methodist class meeting the other Sunday morning at the Metropolitan Temple, New York City, two rare tributes were paid to the value of Christian womanhood. A woman said that her mother had died when she was a babe eighteen months old, and that a drunken father had given her twenty-five years of as miserable existence as a mortal could have, but that her mother's prayers in his behalf after a quarter of a century had availed and her father was reformed, and life became a paradise to her. A man next spoke, who said that he had been a saloonkeeper for fourteen years, and had gone to the point of suicide from remorse at his bad life, when his wife clung to him with her love and godly example and prayers, and saved him to his family, to a noble occupation and a life of happiness in the church. Paul pays a tribute to the influence of sanctified womanhood on the Christian character in his letter to Timothy:

When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice, and I am persuaded that in thee also. (II. Tim. 1: 5.)

Barrett Browning Dies

ON JULY 9, at Asolo, Italy, Robert Wiedemann Barrett Browning, the only son of Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, died on the land that the Brownings won permission from the Town Council to buy on the very day that the poet passed away. In Asolo Robert Browning planned to build Pippa's Tower for his dwelling-place, and here his son afterward established an industrial school as a memorial to his poet mother. Barrett Browning was born in 1849. Of him Bayard Taylor wrote: "Their child, a blue-eyed, golden-haired boy of two years old, stammered Italian sentences only; he knew nothing yet of his native tongue. He has since exhibited a remarkable genius for music and drawing, a fortunate circumstance, for inherited genius is always fresher and more vigorous when it seeks a new form of expression." In a letter to Leigh Hunt, Mrs. Browning herself wrote: "You are aware that that child, I am more proud of than twenty 'Auroras,' even after Leigh Hunt has praised them. He is eight years old, but reads English, Italian, French, German, and plays the piano—then is the sweetest child." This boy was Browning's anchor when the mother died and the two of them lived in England and journeyed about Europe with Browning's sister Sariana. The son adopted art as his profession. He studied at Antwerp, and at the Royal Academy. In 1878 he exhibited for the first time a piece of his work, "A Worker in Brass." The painting attracted much attention, partly because of the story behind its authorship, but also because it promised a successful career for the artist. He bought the Palazzo Rezzonico in Venice, where on December 12, 1889, Robert Browning died. The children of great parents as a rule suffer a handicap in the race of life. It is hard to raise a harvest of grain under the shadow of tall forest trees. The comparison of the Brownings with their issue is unfair and disappointing. The artist son's reverence for his father was profound and love for his mother intense. His establishment of a benevolent institution in honor of his mother calls to mind these words:

Her children arise up, and call her blessed. (Prov. 31: 28.)

Fidelity of the War-horse

RIDING over the field at Aguaje on the Mexican Northwestern Railway where a battle had recently been fought, a ranchman came upon a horse saddled and bridled there, ready to perish with thirst and hunger. His rider, a Federal officer, lay dead on the ground with a rope clenched in his cold fingers fastened to the horse's bit. The horse could have broken loose and found water and food, but he loved his master and was dying out of devotion to him. What an eloquent lesson the dying creature taught on the fidelity of love, and how it shows the many inconsistencies of human infidelity. It calls to mind the deathless fidelity of human love expressed in these words:

The Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me. (Ruth 1: 17.)

Telegrapher's Mistake Prevents Marriage

A YOUNG man sent to a young lady he expected to marry soon this telegram: "I love you forever." The operator mistook the word and delivered the telegram, "I leave you forever." The Morse spelling for love and leave are so nearly alike that the mistake could be easily made. The young lady sent his ring, his letters and all his presents back to him, and said that henceforth they would be only strangers. Before he had time to explain, she had engaged herself to another man. The young man, it is said, has entered suit against the telegraph company for the mistake and the wounds it caused to his heart. There is the necessity of being careful about the dots in the message. Success or failure in life depends often on the accuracy with which tasks are done. Fearful conquences have resulted from little mistakes through carelessness in secular and spiritual things. The impulsive lover could have avoided the mistake by sending a night wire letter, where he could have had a longer message not difficult to understand, or he could have used a two-cent stamp and drawn his sweetness longer out at a trifling expense, even if it had reached the object of his affection a few hours later. It would be natural for an impulsive young man like this to sue the telegraph company for damages. His course in doing so may not be wise. The message was not repeated, and he may have no legal claim. Besides, it would seem that there was not much love for him to alienate where the betrothed, on the receipt of a telegram, and before there was time to explain it, could or would turn around and engage herself to be the wife of another suitor. A man whose judgment was not beclouded by sentiment might rather send a note of thanks to the company for the mistake which revealed the inconstant love, rather than enter suit against it for damages. The impulsiveness of love on the one side and its shallowness on the other are in marked contrast to the Christian's love for the Master.

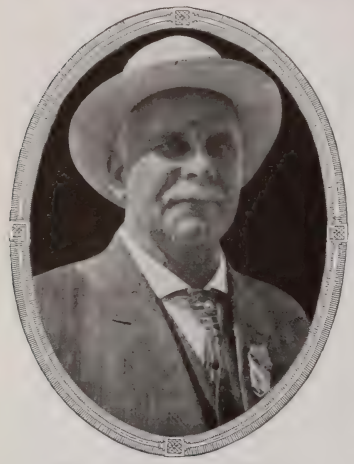
For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Rom. 8: 38, 39.)

Miss Kate Malecka Pardoned

MISS MALECKA, the daughter of a Polish exile, but a naturalized British subject, was convicted in a Russian court on the charge of belonging to the revolutionary wing of the Polish Socialist Party, and was sentenced to four years' penal servitude, with the loss of civil rights. The Czar has just pardoned her and released her from the prison in Warsaw. The power of the modern newspaper has been demonstrated in securing the prisoner's release. The London Daily Chronicle championed the cause of Miss Malecka and stirred a public sentiment on the subject in England that reached the Czar and secured her pardon. The woman publicly gives the British press, and especially the Chronicle, credit for having procured her liberty. Her friends claim that the pardon of the emperor is an act of justice and not of mercy, as she was convicted by unfair processes. Even when the condemned is guilty, if there be penitence, the Ruler of the universe will pardon.

Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. (Isa. 55: 7.)

THE PROHIBITION NOMINATIONS



Eugene W. Chafin, of Illinois
Prohibition Candidate for President

AFTER a three days' session at Atlantic City, N. J., the National Prohibition Convention on July 12 placed in nomination Eugene W. Chafin, of Illinois, as its candidate for President, and Aaron H. Watkins, of Ohio, for Vice President. This is the second nomination of these candidates, both having been chosen as the party leaders in 1908.

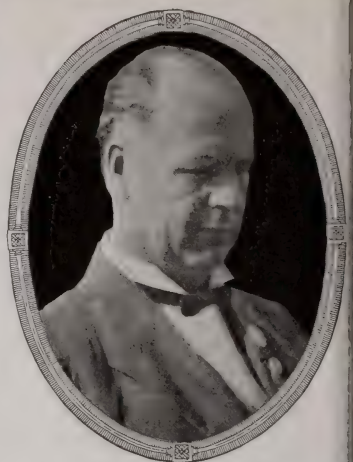
The Prohibition platform is in line with progressive ideas. It declares that alcoholic drink, considered as a traffic, is a crime and not a business, and that it is a duty to prevent the manufacture, sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages. Other planks of the platform include the following:

Election of Senators by the people; a six-year term for the President with no re-election; uniform marriage and divorce laws; the extermination of polygamy; the suppression of the white slave traffic; court review for Post Office Department decisions; the initiative and referendum; a non-partisan tariff board; an elastic currency system; graduated income and inheritance taxes; conservation and reclamation of public lands; votes for women; government regulation and control of corporations doing an interstate business; economy in the public service.

Virgil G. Henshaw will manage the Prohibitionist campaign. He is an Oregonian and was chosen after a sharp contest, in which three other candidates figured. The Prohibition campaign fund is small compared with those of the leading parties. Up to the present time, it is said to amount to $46,000.

The Rev. Stephen Taft, founder of Humboldt College, Sawtelle, Calif., tried to secure a change in the title of the party to "Conservation," and the Rev. William Taft, also of California, started the campaign fund with a contribution of $10,000. In its present condition, the Prohibition campaign is a campaign of conscience and principle rather than practicality. It looks more to the promulgation of the basic idea of Prohibition than to the election of its candidates, and accordingly its fund will be largely used in spreading the principles of Prohibition in a campaign of education conducted by the party leaders.

Professor E. O. Excell, of Chicago, led the music of the convention. Gospel hymns were sung with rousing enthusiasm. "Onward, Christian Soldiers" and "Where He Leads Me I Will Follow" were sung with great earnestness.



Aaron H. Watkins, of Ohio
Prohibition Candidate for Vice-President

The platform as originally presented by the Resolutions Committee was changed in several particulars. Some of the delegates contended there was "not enough prohibition" in the document, so several strong phrases were added on that subject. Then came the elimination of the plank declaring for a separation of state and church and declaring against the use of public moneys for sectarian schools and churches. Dr. Silas Swallow, of Pennsylvania, sought also to add a declaration against the wearing of clerical garb in schools. Father George Zurcher, of Buffalo, a Catholic priest and delegate, declared this would be interpreted as an affront to Catholics. After much discussion the plank was voted down.

THE INVINCIBLE POWER OF LOVE

By Orison Swett Marden

"WITH long life will I satisfy him," declares Jehovah in the words of the Psalmist, "because he hath set his love upon me." Love is harmony, and harmony prolongs life, as fear, jealousy, envy, friction, and discord shorten it.

All through the Bible are passages which show that love is a health-tonic, a healing balm, and actually lengthens life.

There is no doubt that those who are filled with the spirit of love, which is the Christ spirit—whose sympathies and tenderness are not confined to their immediate relatives and friends, but reach out to every member of the human family—live longer and are more exempt from the ills of mankind than the selfish and pessimistic, who, centered in themselves, lose the better part of life, the joy and the strength that come from giving themselves to others. Christ taught the healing and sustaining power of love. In no other way than through the marvelous power of love can we account for the wonderful miracles of endurance presented by many mothers in bringing up large families.

. . .

THE power of love is often illustrated in a delicate mother who walks the floor, night after night, with a sick child, and whose days pass without recreation or change, week in and week out, and who feels more than compensated if she can only procure relief for her suffering little one.

Think of a mother carrying about, perhaps for the greater part of a day and the night following, the same weight, in merchandise or other matter, as that of a sick child! She could not stand the strain. She would be ill in a short time. But love lightens her load and makes self-sacrifice a pleasure. She can bear any burden, even poverty, disappointment, or suffering, for the sake of the loved one. This sublimely unselfish mother-love is a type of the most exalted creative love that encircles the universe, that invites us to be partakers and dispensers of this world-tonic, this great panacea for all of the ills of mankind.

Many a mother's love for her children has undoubtedly stayed the ravages of some fatal disease. Her conviction that she was necessary to them and her great love for them have braced her, and have enabled her to cope successfully with the enemies of her physical life for a long time.

When shall we learn that the great curative principle is love, that love heals because it is harmony? There can be no discord where it reigns. Love is serenity, is peace and happiness. Everywhere we see people starving for love, famishing for affection, for some one to appreciate them. On every hand we see men and women possessing material comfort, luxury, all that can contribute to their physical well-being—who are able to gratify almost any wish—and yet they are hungry for love. They seem to have plenty of everything but affection. They have lands and houses, automobiles, yachts, horses, money—everything but love!

. . .

THERE is only one way to win love, and that is to love. Love will break the bonds of selfishness and self-consciousness. Stop thinking of self, and take an interest in others; develop an admiration and love for them, a real desire to help them, and you will not fail to be loved and to be popular.

Much of what goes by the name of love is only selfishness. Until love extends beyond the narrow circle of relatives and friends; until it stretches beyond the shores of one's own land, it is not real love. The Christ-love is not that which nourishes and cares with greatest solicitude for one's own child, and yet turns a deaf ear to the cry of the hungry and forsaken one in the street. Pure love is in the act, and does not take note of the object.

Who has not seen the magic power of love in transforming rough, uncouth men into refined and devoted husbands? I have known women who had such great loving, helpful hearts and such charm of manner, that the worst men, the most hardened characters, would do anything in the world for them—would give up their lives, even, to protect them. But they could never be reformed by prison methods, could never be touched by unkindness or compulsion. Love is the only power that could reach them.

I do not believe there is any human being, in prison or out, so depraved, so low, so bad, but that there is somebody in the world who could control him perfectly by love, by kindness, by patience.

Many a man has been kept from performing a disgraceful, even a criminal act, by the thought that somebody loved him, believed in him, trusted him.

. . .

LOVE is the great disciplinarian, the supreme harmonizer, the true peacemaker. It is the great balm for all that blights happiness or breeds discontent, a sovereign panacea for malice, revenge, and all the brutal propensities. As cruelty melts before kindness, so the evil passions find their antidote in sweet charity and loving sympathy.

. . .

MANY parents are very much distressed by the waywardness of their children; but the waywardness they deplore is often more imaginary than real. A large part of their children's pranks and mischief is merely the result of exuberant youthful spirits. They are so full of energy, and so buoyant with life that it is difficult for them to restrain themselves. Love is the only power that will control them.

A man ought to look back upon the home of his childhood as the Eden of his life, where love reigned, instead of as a place where long-faced solemn severity ruled, and he was suppressed and his fun-loving spirits snuffed out.

Love is the great educator, the great unfolder of youth. As the sun is the only thing that will bring out the sweet juices and develop the luscious flavor, the exquisite beauty and tint of fruits and flowers, so love is the only thing that will develop the sweetness and beauty of the child. It is the only power that will call out the true, the natural, the responsive, the spontaneous, the beautiful side of its nature. It is only the hard, coarse, and unlovely qualities that are developed by force and repression.

JERUSALEM, ROME, WASHINGTON"

WO years pass after the benignant gentleman from Italy has linked Washington with Rome. On the 6th of January, 1895, there is issued at Rome another encyclical letter, essed directly and exclusively to the "Catho- y in the United States."* The aged Pope, tot- ng on the brink of the grave, "traverses in it and thought the wide expanse of ocean." says to his beloved sons in America: "We shall God willing, of some assistance to the Catholic e among you." Was "the Catholic cause" in ger? Had Catholics become disfranchised? the country entering upon an anti-Catholic paign? Had laws been made that rendered existence of the Catholic Church precarious? in the least; we shall hear that the Pope in this tle acknowledges that the flourishing condition he Catholic Church in our country is "due to the ty of the laws which obtain in America." The istance," then, which he wishes to render can- be for defensive purposes. He goes on to say:

highly esteem and love exceedingly the young and vigorous ican nation, in which We plainly discern latent forces for dvancement alike of civilization and of Christianity. t long ago, when your whole nation, as was fitting, cele- d with grateful recollection and every manifestation of joy ompletion of the fourth century since the discovery of ica, We, too, commemorated together with you that most cious event, sharing in your rejoicings with equal good- Nor were We on that occasion content with offering rs at a distance for your welfare and greatness. It was wish to be in some manner present with you in your fes- es. Hence We cheerfully sent one who should represent person. Not without good reason did We take part in your ration. For when America was, as yet, but a newborn uttering in its cradle its first feeble cries, the Church it to her bosom and motherly embrace. Columbus, as We elsewhere expressly shown,† sought, as the primary fruit s voyages and labors, to open a pathway for the Christian into new lands and new seas. Keeping this thought con- ly in view, his first solicitude, when he disembarked, to plant upon the shore the sacred emblem of the cross. refore, like as the Ark of Noe, surmounting the overflowing rs, bore the seed of Israel together with the remnants of uman race, even thus did the barks launched by Columbus the ocean carry into regions beyond the seas as well the is of mighty States as the principles of the Catholic religion. is is not the place to give a detailed account of what there- ensued. Very rapidly did the light of the Gospel shine the savage tribes discovered by the Ligurian. For it is iently well known how many of the children of Francis, ell as of Dominic and of Loyola, were accustomed during wo following centuries to voyage thither for this purpose; they cared for the colonies brought over from Europe, but arily and chiefly, how they converted the nations from rstition to Christianity, sealing their labors in many in- es with the testimony of their blood. The names newly to so many of your towns and rivers and mountains and teach and clearly witness how deeply your beginnings marked with the footprints of the Catholic Church.

All America as a Papal Domain his agile old Pope, who possesses such a lithe nory, is blessed with a convenient forgetfulness. forgets that the religious character of the erican colonists in British territory during the iods of exploration and colonization differed most kingly from that of the colonists in Spanish and nch dependencies. He forgets that the flocking "the children of Loyola," etc., to America was also to other causes besides their missionary l. Their overthrow in Portugal, their expulsion m France, the rise of Gallicanism, Febronian- , Josephinism, the fierce fight which European ions at that time were making upon the infa- us Bull Unigenitus of Clement XI—all these nts‡ persuaded the Society of Jesus that their ient pastures had turned into warring camps inst them, and they must find new pastures. forgets that the superstitions of which he aks have not been removed, but merely sup- nted by a different sort of superstitions in all se parts of the New World where Rome held lisputed sway. His genial reminiscences, then, valuable only as showing that he regards all America as a papal domain, from the day that it e out of the ocean to the eyes of Columbus. e Pope proceeds:

or, perchance, did the fact which We now recall take place hout some design of divine Providence. Precisely at the ch when the American colonies, having, with Catholic aid, ieved liberty and independence, coalesced into a constitu- al Republic, the ecclesiastical hierarchy was happily estab- ed amongst you; and at the very time when the popular rage placed the great Washington at the helm of the Repub- the first bishop was set by apostolic authority over the erican Church. The well-known friendship and familiar rcourse which subsisted between these two men seems to be evidence that the United States ought to be conjoined in cord and amity with the Catholic Church. And not without se; for without morality the state cannot endure—a truth ch that illustrious citizen of yours, whom We have just tioned, with a keenness of insight worthy of his genius and

* See encyclical Longinque Oceani in Encyclical Letters of XIII., l. c. pp. 320-335.

In the encyclical Abrupto Saeculo, of July 16, 1892. This ument was issued expressly in commemoration of the Colum- Tercentenary. It was from this encyclical that Satolli took cue for the address at the Carroll Institute. See l. c. pp. -270.

See Dr. Fredrik Nielsen's History of the Papacy in the XIX. Century. Translated under the direction of Arthur nes Mason, D.D. 2 vols. London, 1906; a third volume theoming. Chapters III and V of the first volume are espe- ly valuable.

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

In St. Louis Theological Quarterly
By Permission

Concluded

statesmanship, perceived and proclaimed. But the best and strongest support of morality is religion. She, by her very nature, guards and defends all the principles on which duties are founded, and, setting before us the motives most powerful to influence us, commands us to live virtuously, and forbids us to transgress. Now what is the Church other than a legitimate society, founded by the will and ordinance of Jesus Christ for the preservation of morality and the defense of religion? For this reason have We repeatedly endeavored, from the summit of the pontifical dignity, to inculcate that the Church, whilst directly and immediately aiming at the salvation of souls and the beatitude which is to be attained in heaven, is yet, even in the order of temporal things, the fountain of blessings so numerous and great that they could not have been greater or more numerous had the original purpose of her institution been the pursuit of happiness during the life which is spent on earth.

The Hierarchy in the United States

Here we observe again that dexterous grouping of heterogeneous elements which succeeds in welding Jerusalem, Rome, and Washington into a popish chain. The establishment of the North American Republic and the establishment of the Roman hierarchy in the United States coincide in point of time. Hence, they are allied causes working to achieve the same ends. That is the argument. George Washington was a personal friend of some Catholic priest. Hence, the American Congress and the Roman Curia must be allied. That is the argument. The State cannot endure without morality. Hence it needs the guardian care of "the Church," i.e., the Papacy. That is the argument. If this is not baculus in angulo logic, what is? If the Church of England had created an American bishop at the time of the Declaration of Independence, we presume we would, as a nation, by that coincidence become "conjoined in concord" with the Episcopal Church. If George Washington had fellowshipped Henry Muehlenberg in a social way, we presume that the country would have been destined, by the irresistible force of that event, to become Lutheran. If the Presbyterians were to declare themselves "a legitimate society, founded by the will and ordinance of Jesus Christ for the preservation of morality," Congress, we anticipate, seeing that the State is in need of morality, would have to recognize that it is useful and necessary for these free American States to be conjoined in concord and amity with the Presbyterian Church. But we are still in search of some indication why Catholicity in the United States is in need of "assistance." The next paragraph seems to render this task almost hopeless. It reads:

That your Republic is progressing and developing by giant strides is patent to all; and this holds good in religious matters also. For even as your cities, in the course of one century, have made a prodigious increase in wealth and power, so do we behold the Church, from scant and slender beginnings, grown with rapidity to be great and exceedingly flourishing. Now if, on the one hand, the increased riches and resources of your cities are justly attributed to the talents and active industry of the American people, on the other hand, the prosperous condition of Catholicity must be ascribed, first indeed, to the virtue, the ability, and the prudence of the bishops and clergy, but in no slight measure also to the faith and generosity of the Catholic laity. Thus, while the different classes exerted their best energies, you were enabled to erect unnumbered religious and useful institutions, sacred edifices, schools for the instruction of youth, colleges for the higher branches, homes for the poor, hospitals for the sick, and convents and monasteries. As for what more closely touches spiritual interest, which are based upon the exercise of Christian virtues, many facts have been brought to our notice, whereby we are animated with hope and filled with joy, namely, that the numbers of the secular and regular clergy are steadily augmenting, that pious sodalities and confraternities are held in esteem, that the Catholic parochial schools, the Sunday schools for imparting Christian doctrine, and summer schools are in a flourishing condition; moreover, associations for mutual aid, for the relief of the indigent, for the promotion of temperate living, add to all this the many evidences of popular piety.

What the Roman Church Wants of the State

After reading this paragraph, which depicts American Catholicism in the present age with astonishing accuracy, one is utterly at a loss to understand why this wealthy, influential society, which is very conspicuous on our avenues and elevated building sites, which is without exaggeration the largest landholder in the country, whose activities ramify in the life of Americans from border to border—why this ubiquitous, plethoric society should be in need of "assistance" from the Pope. We make one more effort at discovering the obscure cause.

The main factor, no doubt, in bringing things into this happy state were the ordinances and decrees of your synods, especially of those which in most recent times were convened and confirmed by the authority of the Apostolic See. But, moreover (a fact which it gives pleasure to acknowledge), thanks are due to the equity of the laws which obtain in America, and to the customs of the well-ordered Republic.

We are beginning to be extremely attentive at this point.

For the Church amongst you, unopposed by the Constitution and government of your nation, fettered by no hostile legislation, protected against violence by the common laws and the impartiality of the tribunals, is free to live and act without hindrance. Yet,

We are wide awake.

though all this is true, *it would be very erroneous to draw the conclusion that in America is to be sought the type of the most desirable status of the Church, or that it would be universally lawful or expedient for State and Church to be, as in America, dissevered and divorced. The fact that Catholicity with you is in good condition, nay, is even enjoying a prosperous growth, is by all means to be attributed to the fecundity with which God has endowed His Church, in virtue of which, unless men or circumstances interfere, she spontaneously expands and propagates herself; but she would bring forth more abundant fruits if, in addition to liberty, she enjoyed the favor of † .e laws and the patronage of the public authority.

Now we shall have to do some juxtaposing. Here are two official statements of the sovereign ruler of the Catholic Church as to the status of Catholicism in the United States:

(a) The Pope is pleased with it, because the laws of the Republic protect his church impartially, and do not oppose it.

(b) The Pope is not pleased with it, because his church does not enjoy "the favor of the laws and the patronage of the public authority."

The Pope acknowledges that his church is receiving common favors, and regrets that he has not—uncommon favors. What he has is good, as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. There is one thing, one only thing in the way which keeps him from getting more: the mistaken notion that the separation of church and state is expedient. Hence, his assistance is needed. This country must be led to see that what they consider "lawful and expedient" is an "erroneous conclusion."

What "The Assistance of the Pope" Means

We remarked that the "assistance" of the Pope could not be required for defensive purposes. The Pope is not attacked, but the Pope means to attack. He means to take the offensive. We are not seeing any ghosts of armed Catholics marching through the land and shooting down Protestants. We are not dreaming of concealed arsenals in the cellars of Catholic citizens, as a gentleman in the Pioneer Press of St. Paul† (November 22) imagines. Merely as a matter of history we would note that St. Bartholomew's Day of 1572, and sundry other events, afford food for reflection. When we speak of attacks at this present day, we do not mean an attack with grape and canister, but we mean those measures which Pope Leo XIII has suggested to American Catholics in his letter of January 6, 1895, the letter which we are now studying. He has suggested:

(a) The enlargement of educational facilities for Catholics in the United States, the Pope himself taking the lead by founding "at Washington, your capital city," a Catholic university (l. c. pp. 324-326);

(b) Submission to the statutes of the third Plenary Council of Baltimore, the Pope himself "putting, so to speak, a proper and becoming crown upon its work" "through the due establishment by the Apostolic See of an American Legation" (pp. 326-330);

(c) The general adoption by American citizens of "the Catholic teaching and the Catholic customs" regarding marriage and divorce (p. 330 f.);

(d) "The virtue of temperance, the frequent use of the sacraments, and observance of the just laws and institutions of the Republic" (p. 331). (N.B. In what sense and to what extent the laws and institutions of the Republic are regarded as just has been noted);

(e) Shunning associations which "have been openly condemned by the judgment of the church," and associating with Catholics (p. 331 ff.);

(f) A controlling influence on the daily press (p. 333 f.);

(g) Increased missionary activity among "those who dissent from us in matters of Christian faith," among the Indians and negroes.

By a gradual, silent process the Catholics are to wrest to themselves the instruments for controlling public opinion; in every possible way they are to commend themselves to the nation as a well-compacted, well-organized body; they are to impress Americans more and more with their wealth and influence. Then the day will come at length, when "the favor of the laws and the patronage of public authority" will be theirs.

Are Faith and Liberty Irreconcilable?

To show how the spirit and letter of this papal communication was inculcated upon Catholics, we revert once more to our Italian gentleman, the forger of the chain "Jerusalem, Rome, and Washington." The scene this time lies in the Quaker City, and the occasion is the eighteenth anniversary of the Catholic Club of Philadelphia, February 14, 1895. In a hall profusely draped with the

* Italics ours.

† From the Hancock (Mich.) Gazette we learn that the gentleman is Rev. P. A. Sullivan.

Continued on next page

MT. KATMAI'S VOLCANIC SHOWER

Removing a Triple Layer of Volcanic Ash Near Kodiak

The Pumice Lies Over the Land Like a Smooth Glacier

THE eruption of Mt. Katmai, Alaska, is over and the worst is past, but the mountain, a week after the eruption had practically ceased, was still sending fire and smoke thousands of feet into the air, and deep guttural sounds as of angry muttering came from the earth. On the Kodiak Island side, about fourteen hundred people are attempting to realize that the splendid homes of a few days ago are now an arid ash land. Vegetation is almost impossible and the water supply is greatly reduced. When a stream runs it is laden with pumice ash and not good for man or beast to drink. It clogs the gills of the fish and kills them or drives them away.

The south end of the Island was not affected and the early report of suffering has been reduced to a little more than half the population. The gove ment is now caring for them in relief camps, a no actual want exists.

Villagers on the islands are digging out th houses and gardens and trying to reinhabit th homes. There will be many in want for a l time after the present emergency is past.

Seward, Alaska. J. H. R

"JERUSALEM, ROME, WASHINGTON"

Continued from preceding page

American and the Papal colors Monsignor Satolli, in response to a toast by the president of the club, said, after a few introductory remarks:

> The arms of the Catholic Club of Philadelphia appropriately express its character and its aim. In them I see the symbol of heavenly light and the sign of man's redemption by the Man-God; and I read that motto, which is a great principle of social life, Per fidem libertas. This is a solemn declaration against the error of those who think that the sacrifice is incompatible with generous sentiments, and that a clear, well-defined religious faith is irreconcilable with liberty. . . .
>
> Every historical epoch has its special conflicts, and from the sixteenth century down to our own time the conflict has been between liberty and authority. It is the office of religious and social truth to establish harmony between these two terms. The excess of social authority leads to oppression, and the excess of liberty leads to license and the disorganization of the social fabric. The equilibrium of the two constitutes and maintains the life of all society. Proofs are not needed to show that it has ever been the highest glory of the Catholic Church, I do not say to have invented either social authority or social freedom, but to have maintained the equilibrium and established the harmony of the one with the other. And this harmony is what is symbolized in the arms of the Catholic Club of Philadelphia.
>
> I need not tell you how dear to the heart of the Holy Father is the Church in America. I need not tell you the admiration he has for this great American Republic and all her institutions. His encyclical, which we have so lately received, tells plainly enough his high regard and tender affection for this country.—Loyalty to Church and State, p. 211 ff.

The author goes on to say that Catholic clubs have the special approval of, and are commended by, the Pope. Their mission he characterizes thus:

> In Catholic Clubs a filial affection for the Pope should be cherished in a special manner. The Catholic Club ought to feel that it has a special mission—to teach respect for the Pope in the fulness of his dignity and authority, to sustain him on every occasion, and to aid his plans with regard to the Church and to society. And not only should the Catholic Club universally exhibit the harmony between being a good Catholic and a good citizen, but it should show how one can submit with docility to the teachings of the Pope, and sustain at the same time with all his strength the liberties of his country.—l. c. p. 214.

We have here a plain echo from Longinque Oceani. But the wand of the magician has again passed over the papal bull. Listen how innocently everything that the Pope has said sounds as it comes from the lips of his legate! For "state" we read "society" and "social authority"; for "enjoying the favor of the laws and the patronage of the public authority" we read "maintaining the equilibrium between social authority and social freedom." There is a reminder that a conflict is on between these two, and that it is an old conflict. (Query: Who in America is engaged in this conflict?) The Catholic Church is the arbiter in this sad disagreement. The echo winds up with an appeal to "sustain the Pope on every occasion."

The gentleman from St. Paul whom we mentioned before says that "undue prominence" is being given to a certain Lutheran letter to President Roosevelt. He calls the contents of that letter "an antiquated charge," and declares that "up to the present there is positively no 'de fide' doctrine" (that is to say, no doctrine constituting an essential part of Catholic belief) "existing in the church" to prove the hostility of the Roman Church to the principle of the separation of Church and State. No "de fide doctrine"; this is good. Risum teneatis, amici! What about the "de facto" teaching of Rome? No one charged the Catholics with having embodied their anti-American tenets in their Sunday-school leaflets, or in their catechisms for children. The point made was this: Gentlemen, so says your Pope, and so you must do, whether the statement is de fide or de infidelitate. That is just the truth which we are trying to make Catholics see, that they must disobey their Pope, in order to be loyal American citizens. "Antiquated"? Would to God this were so! No Lutheran has any interest in flaunting Unam Sanctam in the face of a peaceful nation and sounding an alarm. The man who is responsible for our present fears is not dead more than five years, and his successor has not unsaid, but solemnly reaffirmed, what his predecessor said.

The Lutheran Protest

The gentleman from St. Paul and the editor of the New World of Chicago have also cited the state churches existing in some Lutheran countries, to show that the protest from New York is not in keeping with the general practice of Lutherans. This is beside the mark. The Lutherans who protest are living in America, not in Germany, nor Sweden, nor Norway. Moreover, these protesting Lutherans have never endorsed a state church. Fact is, many of them have come to America because they could not conscientiously live in a state church. Besides, we do not grant that state churches are identical with the Roman hierarchy. And lastly, the argument of the New York letter, and also of a similar one from Philadelphia, does not seek to exalt a Lutheran Church tenet, and to denounce a Roman tenet, because it differs from the Lutheran. True, the Augsburg Confession in the 28th Article plainly teaches the separation of church and state, as the gentleman from St. Paul has correctly observed. But he seems not to have observed that the Lutheran letter from New York does not cite the Augsburg Confession, that the authors never thought of citing the confessional writings of their church in this issue. The Augsburg Confession merely happens to coincide, in this instance, with a political principle, and it is from that well-known American principle, as citizens, not as Lutherans, that the authors have addressed the President. The Presbyterians and the Baptists have no connection with the Augsburg Confession, and it is not known that their churches anywhere in the world are allied with the State, yet the Presbyterians and the Baptists have said the same things as the Lutherans.

It is plain to any calm observer of the trend of affairs in our country that Rome wants the United States of America for herself. Not in a subdued whisper, not sotto voce, but loud and ever louder comes the urgent call: "America and Catholicism," "Rome and Washington." At Chicago, during the recent Catholic Missionary Congress, Bishop P. J. Donahue, of Wheeling, W. Va., spoke in the evening session of Wednesday, November 19. The Chicago Inter-Ocean sums up his remarks in a significant headline in bold print:

"SEES CATHOLIC REPUBLIC."

It reports that the bishop "pictured an era of t future when Catholicism will be supreme throu out the United States." And it quotes him saying:

> Half a century hence, or at the most a century hence, I a Catholic country. In the winter months, from the Atlanti the Pacific and from the North to the South, I hear one Ang bell after another calling the millions to prayer. Over the l are dotted the Catholic churches. I see Christ ruling Christ loving through this broad nation. I see the extinct of all fads and various philosophies.

Of these words it might be said what some c has said of similar utterances of Catholics fift years ago: they are worthless as prophecies, b they are valuable as confessions. Our country h reason to be awake, to observe, and to ponder. noting the letter of protest which Lutheran cler men in New York addressed to President Roo velt, the St. Louis Mirror of December 3 said:

> VOTING AND CATHOLICISM
>
> Church organizations of the Lutherans and the Presbyteri have remonstrated with the President for denouncing as calumny the assertion that Protestants will not vote fo Roman Catholic for President. The President wrote magn mously, but we believe he is mistaken. We believe that if issue were presented of a Catholic candidate for President, vast majority of Protestants would vote against such a can date because of his religious faith, believing that in a crisis c moral sort he would be dominated by Roman Catholic as supe to American considerations. We don't defend this attitude. simply state it as a fact. We have no hesitation, either, stating that a great deal of the surprise in Mr. Taft's vote President was due to Catholic support because of Mr. Ta friendliness to the Catholic Church in the Philippines. Catholic vote gave such a city as Brooklyn to Taft. This may make trouble in future, but as a fact we must accept it.

Cardinal Gibbons also foresees trouble; and his judgment the trouble is imminent. He says, quoted in the Lutheran of December 10:

> There is a great evil in the land which forebodes revolution a partial upheaval of society.

This language, coming as it does on the heels the New York letter to President Roosevelt, is s nificant. Surely, the Baltimore ecclesiastic wo not call his church organization "a great evil" anything that Catholics have done. Nor is the l ter of the President to Mr. Martin the great e For Catholics love that letter, and the Cardi has, no doubt, increased his importance in his c church, because he has been able to say: "I kn the letter was coming." The "great evil" m have arisen later than the President's lett Something has happened since then that "forebo revolution or a partial social upheaval."

Yes, there may be trouble; but there is a way forestall trouble: the ceaseless agitation of the sue which the Popes have forced upon us. Not Catholics actually know what their Popes ha said. Not all Protestants know it. The avera American citizen does not know it. They must told. And they must be told also that the oppo tion to a Roman Catholic President of the Uni States is made "on purely patriotic grounds," from bigoted zeal.

A Man Who Goes Where Men Are

A Noon Meeting at the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company's Works

T WAS midday of a fair June day when the writer went with Dr. Greenwood to get first-hand knowledge of just how he carried forward the shop and factory meetings with which he been successful. The place was the Boston ır Works at Norfolk Downs, a short distance m Boston. When the noon whistles blew the n left their noisy machines to eat their dinner, l they ate it with despatch, for they knew this s the day on which Mr. Greenwood held his noon- meeting. He or some of his helpers hold a eting of this kind every day in the week at some tory or shop, and often Mr. Greenwood is again ging his songs at midnight with all the fervor t has brought his success. The gift of persua- e and compelling speech is his as well as the gift song, and from start to finish he held the close ention of the men and boys who assembled in the wing sunshine for the meeting at Norfolk wns. Mounting a chair he sang a simple Gospel nn and then gave them a simple and direct Gos- message. There was need of being direct, for men had but forty-five minutes at noon, and many of them had to go home and get dinner before coming to the meeting. Mr. Greenwood used every minute well, and when the whistle blew to recall the men to their machines they called out cheery good-byes, and some of them added,

"Be sure and come again next Friday, won't you?"

"Sure, boys!" was the reply as he clasped the grimy hands of the men nearest him. Having been told that one of the boys in the factory was a good drummer, he added:

"And have that drummer boy on hand with his drum next Friday, and we'll have him play the drum to beat the band!"

"Is it difficult to get permission to go into the shops, and what is the attitude of the owners toward you and your meetings?"

When Mr. Greenwood was asked this question his reply was:

"I am seldom refused admission, and when I am, it is from those you would think most likely to welcome such meetings. I have had the most cordial welcome from some non-Christian mill owners. More than one mill or factory owner feels as Mr. Burgess, owner of the Boston Gear Works, felt when he said to me: "Mr. Greenwood, the best thing I ever put into my shop outside of the machinery itself is these meetings of yours. Their influence has been good from the start."

The Young Men's Christian Association has assumed a part of the responsibility of the meetings in some places, and a number of Christian ministers and laymen have gladly given their services in helping to conduct the meetings in some of the shops. Musicians have given their services, and foremen and superintendents of factories and shops have co-operated with Mr. Greenwood in the most helpful way. The workmen themselves have sometimes come forward as musicians or singers, and it always adds to the interest of the meetings when the men know that one of their own number is to do a musical "stunt" of any kind. At one railroad round-house where midnight services have been held, the men took hold of the musical part of the service in the most enthusiastic way and made a great "go" of it. One of the mill superintendents said: "I tell you, Mr. Greenwood, but you've got them going all right. I have seen one hundred per cent. improvement in the last four weeks in the working force of this plant."

J. L. HARBOUR.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

UMMER weather does not keep people from being interested in Bible study. And the summer record for accuracy is rather better than that of winter and spring. One hundred thirty-three readers answered correctly all lve of the June questions. One successful pupil Rock Island, Ill., who answers 11½ questions rectly, writes: "This is my fourth venture, and, I am one of the oldest if not the oldest of the ss, being past eighty-eight, I am anxious to reach Honor Roll. I have been a Bible reader all my , having read it through every year since a child twelve, and sometimes as many as three times ear."

ndicating the wide variety in the conditions of workers at their Bible tasks, in the same package letters in which is found this from the dear old nt in Illinois, are two letters from penitentiaries. d the two convicts are successful students, too, h of them answering eleven questions correctly, l finding a place in the Honor Roll.

ollowing are the correct answers to List No. 6:

(a) What prophet received the divine call to his work by g touched with a live coal? Ans. Isaiah (Isa. 6: 6). (b) what prophet did the Lord say: "Behold, I have put my da in thy mouth"? Ans. Jeremiah (Jer. 1: 9). (c) What phet saw a mysterious vision of living creatures and wheels? Ezekiel (Ezek. 1: 15).

To what great warrior did Jehovah promise that he would mpany and aid him as he had his predecessor? Ans. Joshua. ah. 1).

What bountiful supplies and provisions were brought to id and his followers by a few friendly men during his cam- gn against Absalom? Ans. II. Sam. 17: 27-29.

What is the first recorded instance of clapping hands as a imony of joy? Ans. II. Kings 11: 12.

Who was the youngest king of Judah and how old was he n he was anointed? Ans. Jehoash. (II. Kings 11: 21, or Chron. 24: 1.)

What other extremely young king became a great reformer remained faithful to righteousness to the end of his life? . Josiah. (II. Kings 22 to 24, or II. Chron. 34: 1-2.)

What letter-carrier's name is mentioned in the New Testa- t? To this question there are ten possible answers, for t number of persons are referred to in such a way as to imply that they were bearers of written messages: Tychicus (Eph. 6: 21, 22); Phebe (Rom. 16: 1, 2); Epaphroditus (Phil. 4); Onesimus, Philemon, Silvanus (I. Pet. 5: 12); Titus, Lucas (II. Cor. 13. Note at end of chapter); Stephanas, Fortunatus, Achaicus, Timotheus (I. Cor. 16. Note at end of chapter); Paul, Barnabas, Judas, Silas (Acts 15: 23-32; 22: 5, and 9: 1-3).

8. Where have we an instance of certain officers falling backward when confronted by their victim? Ans. John 18: 6.

9. Where is God's covenant declared to be more lasting than the mountains? Ans. Isa. 54: 10.

10. Where is God's covenant declared to be as unchangeable as the law of day and night? Ans. Two places in one chapter. (Jer. 33: 20, 21; 25, 26.)

11. In what passage does Jesus liken himself to a faithful man who gives his life for his charges? Ans. (John 10: 11-15; or, 11 and 15; or, 11 or 15.)

12. In what single epistle is Christ shown to be our Joshua to lead us into rest, our High Priest to bring us to perfection, and the sacrificial Victim to purify us through his blood? Ans. Hebrews.

NEW QUESTIONS, LIST No. 7

1. What man was spared by a king and slain by a prophet?
2. What prophet was detained as a deserter?
3. What two young men fell victims to a warning pronounced five hundred years before?
4. Of what were the mirrors made that are mentioned in Scripture, and where is this stated?
5. What is the largest number converted at one time in New Testament days?
6. Who, speaking in derision, first used the phrase: "No doubt ye are the people"?
7. What is the only revenge permitted to the Christian faith?
8. Where in the Bible are mortgages mentioned?
9. What is the first Bible reference to a library?
10. What good man was rebuked and punished because he did not control his sons?
11. What attendant upon royalty mourned because of the trouble of his people, and was later allowed to help them?
12. What striking sign of the new birth does Paul mention in II. Corinthians?

The Honor Roll

The following 133 answered 12 questions:

Mrs. Will T. Aitchison, Mrs. Mary Anders, Mrs. George Anderson, M. J. Archibald, J. H. Archibald, Mrs. J. A. Ainslie, Mrs. H. H. Barrows, Mrs. O. G. Beard, Mrs. D. I. Biggar, Rev. A. E. Bloom, Amelia C. Bohl, Emma B. Burrill, S. J. Black, Mrs. John Burgoyne, Mrs. A. L. Brackett, Mrs. Luanna Baldwin, Mrs. M. W. Barr, Bell W. Brown, John Bissett, Lawrence A. Brooks, Mrs. Chas. Bartholme, Mrs. Rebecca A. Best, Mrs. Jennie A. Clapp, Mrs. Isaac T. Coppock, Una Corner, Mrs. E. DeM. Case, Lila A. Cook, Mr. & Mrs. Wm. E. Camp, Mrs. E. E. Cammack and daughters, Mrs. H. P. Calkins, Ora M. Curry and parents, Annie Currie, Clara B. Cushing, Mrs. Alma Culver, Mrs. R. Cance, Jennie Cunningham, Mrs. S. H. Clark Mrs. Marion A. Clark, Sadie L. Dawson, Anna Dill, W. K. Desh, Mrs. B. I. DuBois, Sallie Davidson, Mrs. J. C. Douglass, Mrs. E. M. Doan, Rev. B. A. Disney, Mrs. Neil Davis, Mrs. Mary E. Diament, Miss M. J. Elmore, Wm. Eason, Mrs. W. J. Evans, John Erickson, Mrs. Sarah Eberhart, Mrs. N. E. Emmons, Mrs. H. C. French, Flora French, John Fleming, Elisha Frail, Eliza J. Fuller, Mary Fitzgerald, Mrs. Wm. Findlay, H. D. Gordon, Marion F. Grinnell, Annie M. Glover, Mrs. Samuel Guth, Mrs. Susan A. Glover, Wm. W. Hammond, Mrs. W. C. Henderson, David Haisley, Mrs. E. A. Haynes, The Hutchings Family, J. F. Hannay, Emily H. Harrington, Mrs. G. W. Hanert, Marie M. Holt, Mrs. Annie Howell, Mrs. Jennie E. W. Howell, David T. Hewsom, Mrs. D. W. Jackson, Helen M. Jones, E. A. Johnson, Delinda A. Jackson, Esther D. Jones, Mrs. Kate A. Jackson, Katie Kennel, Mrs. J. A. Koontz, Mrs. E. L. King, Nancy R. King, J. H. Layton, Minnie Lohr, Mrs. W. B. Lawrence, Estella J. Lathrop, Mrs. Alice Lee, Nellie Mead, Mrs. Lizzie Morse, Charles Miller, Viola L. Morse, Charles Martin, George McLachlan, Mrs. Ellen R. O'Neil, J. M. Phillips, Mrs. Addie Perrine, Flossie Patton, Mrs. M. A. Pringle, Frances L. Pettigrew, Maria L. Rue, Rosina Rausch, Mrs. David Robb, Mrs. A. C. Rhodes, Mrs. A. S. Ross, Helen S. Scammell, Clara M. Spencer, C. F. Schumacher, Mrs. Alonzo Sedgwick, Mrs. M. E. Stotts, Ellen Simkin, Mrs. S. W. Sloan, Rosa Stevenson, J. R. Strickland, Mrs. Ida L. Sharp, Mrs. Wm. Sattler, Mrs. F. K. Tucker, W. J. Taylor, Mrs. J. A. Tuthill, Rhoda B. Thompson, Julia Thomas, Mrs. A. W. Trueblood, Mrs. Mattie C. Vivens, Julia E. Wilson, Mrs. C. E. Wells, Mrs. Andrew Wilson, No Name from New Mexico, No Name from Cresson, Pa.

The following 15 answered 11½ questions correctly:

Fannie L. Bell, Mrs. Harriet N. Cheney, Miss M. E. Dietrick, Annie S. Dyer, Wm. H. Griffing, Richard Galley, R. J. Hazlett, Jennie E. Holmes, Altie E. Kemble, Mrs. Emily O. Lewis, Miss F. M. Moseley, Alfred Morton, W. D. Moore, Mrs. Sarah A. Strong, Amelia Williams.

Continued on page 767

BACK WITH HER OWN FOLKS

BY STELLA CLANTON DYSART

THERE, the list I have made out includes just twelve. That's as many as this little room will hold. And there's not a social scrub among them, Tommy dear! But every one of them has been as kind and hospitable to us as they could be. Oh, I want to have things really nice for once, and give them something worth while!"

Dorothy Pangburn looked up from her note-book and across the breakfast table at her husband.

"Why, I haven't poured your coffee yet, have I?" she exclaimed. "And it's stone cold."

"Oh, never mind," returned Tom lightly. "You've not poured your own either, or eaten a bite. You do get so wrapped up in a thing, Dot. When did you say this affair is to come off? To-morrow?"

"To-morrow!" scoffed Dorothy. "It will take three weeks at least to get up such a scrumptious dinner as this is to be. I want to have this old dining-room all done over first—new rugs and varnish and paper. I was ashamed of it last week when we entertained the Webbs, and when I try to look at it through Mrs. Purdy's lorgnette it is simply impossible. I think I shall engage Delancy to take charge of the serving and bring in everything, as he did at Judge Moreland's last week. It will cost something, of course, but I'd have to get somebody to serve, anyway, so that Mary can be with Kathryn. Kathryn would be sure to wake up. And think of having to trundle a baby out into this company as I have had to sometimes! Here's the list, Tom."

"Whew!" whistled Tom, glancing down the row of names. "What a lot of big-wigs! But, Dorothy, do you think we should go to the expense of having the dining-room fixed up now? We've planned to some time, I know, but just now—you know I didn't get that raise we'd counted on, and I may not get it for a year yet. And about Delancy's, I suppose he must be the fashion, but how much do you suppose one of his course dinners cost, waiters and all?"

"Why, Tom Pangburn!" exclaimed Dorothy. Never before had her husband objected to any of her little plans. Could he be teasing her? But Tom's face was painfully sober.

"I think," he remarked slowly, as he pushed the note-book back and gathered up his napkin, "that if we must entertain in such style we had better not entertain at all."

"Oh!" said Dorothy. She had known that there were men who supposed they must keep a sort of checkrein on their wives, and must themselves see and approve every little item of household expenditure, but it had never occurred to her that her husband might develop into one of these. As if she were not as capable of deciding what they could afford as was Tom, after working as hard as she could for two years to keep within their meager income! If the company Tom was with didn't pay him enough, why did he stay there? Other men went ahead, why didn't he?

"Among my folks, the mistress of the house always manages its domestic affairs," she remarked coldly. "If the expenses of a home weigh upon you so, perhaps you would prefer not to maintain one."

"I don't see," retorted Tom, "how I'm going to keep up this one unless you can find a way of running it a little differently. Our expenses have climbed steadily in the two years, and my salary hasn't. During the last three months we've gone over our income. That can't go on indefinitely."

Tom got up and reached for his hat, and Dorothy, too, rose from her chair. Had she ever dreamed, when she left everything to be Tom's wife, that he could talk to her like this?

"It will not go on," she answered in a low voice. "My extravagances shall not trouble you further." Then, as her husband stood looking at her, making no move toward going, she added: "Good-by. Don't let me keep you."

"Good-by," echoed Tom, without coming a step nearer to her. In a moment more the front door had closed sharply, and she heard his quick step on the walk.

Dorothy wondered afterward how she would have got through that day without Kathryn. The lump in her throat could not be allowed to quite choke her when Kathryn needed to be bathed and dressed. If her heart was lead and her eyes burned, Kathryn must still be fed and amused. It was a relief that Mary, the small housemaid, had the day off, although it seemed almost impossible to get everything done all alone.

By three o'clock, however, the house was in perfect order, even to one favorite dish of Tom's keeping warm on the back of the range, and another keeping cool in the ice-chest; and Dorothy and Kathryn were both dressed for traveling, with trunk and suit case packed. For Dorothy was going away—oh, yes! Tom could not but have understood what her words meant, and he had not made a single protest! Back among her own folks she could think things out and decide what she must do. Nothing was quite clear to her yet, except that she must get back there to that haven of love and peace and to those welcoming dear ones. No one there had ever used such words to her as her husband had used just now, and she had had charge of the house, too, for three years after her mother's death. Could she not remember how her father—dear man, he hadn't an idea of things domestic, nor desired to have—had held her close just before she came away with Tom that first time, and told her how he would miss his little housekeeper? And Ralph—why, Ralph was through college now and starting into the business world! Ralph had always relied upon her so and trusted to her judgment, and so had Bernice and Sally, sixteen-year-old Sally, who would always be the baby of the family, no matter how grown up she got to

Drawn by Lawrence Herndon

"For the moment she forgot everything except that something new and beautiful had come into the life of this beloved chum and brother"

Dorothy cashed a check on her own little savi account for the amount of her ticket (she had tended to keep the whole sum for Kathryn's coll expenses), and two days later they steamed i her home town, where, in answer to a brief t gram, her father and Sally met them.

Dorothy ran to her father's arms first, Kath held close. It seemed to her that she could rest that dear shelter forever. But Sally was wait to be greeted, and Kathryn must be given her sh of attention, and presently the commonplace bu ness of getting into the family carriage must h its place.

"How is Tom?" Dorothy's father asked, turn half around to face the others in back seat, when they reached a q street. "We hoped he was along.

Dorothy felt her cheeks bu
She had decided it would be best tell the home folks everything once, but she could not do that h and now.

"Tom is well and busy," she m aged to answer. "And you are w father? You look younger t when we were here last."

"There!" laughed Sally. "W have we been telling you?"

"It's these youngsters," explai her father, with a pretended grim at Sally. "They won't give me t to grow old. When you were home to make out four without m used to get a chance to play off s of the time, but they pretend t can't do without me now at all."

Dorothy sighed involuntarily, t were both so happy and so unc scious of her trouble. But she co not tell them just then.

Bernice, waiting on the front randa, would hardly look at Doro until she could get Kathryn into arms.

"But where is Tom?" she qu tioned. "We wondered if your c ing so suddenly was because he an unexpected vacation."

Now was the opportunity to plain everything. Dorothy knew, somehow she found herself say only, "Tom is busy. I came alon

"Alone!" echoed Bernice, lead the way with Kathryn in her a through the hall and into the liv room. "Do you hear that, M
Pangburn? Oh, very well, I
Then, when you get ready, pray back alone and leave this preci baby where she will count for so thing."

Dorothy tried to laugh, but laugh choked her. Was Kathry absence counting in the home had left behind? It reminded of Tom, too, the way Bernice t possession of Kathryn. She glad to escape from them all into own room for a little while, un
the pretense of brushing up.

The room was the one that been hers as a girl, and Dorothy her eyes fill—it seemed so welcom and homelike. She turned the ke the lock and went about, touch softly the familiar things that had been deares her, patting the bed cover, drawing aside the v dow draperies, re-arranging the dresser sc
What happy memories everything held!
dressing table had come from her mother on D thy's twelfth birthday; the chair with qu carved legs and low back was a gift of Ralph the little dressing articles scattered about had b mostly made and given her by her younger sis
—there was nothing to remind her of Tom or of dreadful things that had been happening du the last few days.

After a while the sound of another voice mi ling with those down stairs told Dorothy that brother had come home, and she began hurriedly get ready to go down. Dear Ralph! It would easier to confide in him than in any one else. T two had always been chums. She would tell everything, she decided, and he could let the oth know.

Kathryn was gurgling and cooing in Ralp arms when Dorothy entered the room. "See tha

Continued on next page

BACK WITH HER OWN FOLKS

Continued from preceding page

was saying, "She knows uncles are rce and precious articles in this pany. Do you suppose," he asked othy, "that she thinks I'm Tom?" f Dorothy was not entirely herself t evening, nobody seemed to notice

I telephoned Anna you were com- Dot," Bernice remarked.
And I told Cousin John and Aunt riet," added Sally. "You know nt Harriet thinks the world of you Tom, Dot. She hasn't been out of house for weeks, but she said she ld come over to-morrow. 'And how those three babies have been ing care of each other,' she put it. thought Tom was along."
Dorothy started. She had not real- that here with her own folks she st meet others, also, and she felt ost as though the quarrel between and Tom were already a matter of mon knowledge.
We want to tell you about Har- " Bernice went on. "If you didn't w, you might say something that ld hurt Anna. He gets more thless every day, and has lost ry good place he's got lately. He is poor Anna a terrible life, we w, although she never says a word ut it."
nna had been a special friend of othy's at a time when there was a uliar bond of sympathy between two—their marriages had been week apart—and a vision of the ntive Harold of the old days and na in the weeks of joyous prepara- for her wedding came to Dorothy h a swift desire to meet her old nd again and let her know at least silent hand-clasp that she sympa- ed. But the thought of her own tions with Tom made her shrink m this. She hoped Anna would come in for a while at least. She n found herself thinking, in a re- ed way, that Aunt Harriet might be well enough to come, much as wanted to.
t was toward the end of the even- , after Kathryn was tucked away the night, that Dorothy's oppor- ity came to talk to her brother ne.
I feel like stretching my legs a " Ralph said suddenly. "Dot, you d to enjoy tramping. Let's take a lk."
Outside in the still night air the walked some time in silence. nehow Dorothy could find no words begin. This path along the edge of garden had been Tom's favorite, d on a little way was the rustic seat t knew all their plans and hopes the future that was now spoiled.
After what seemed a long time, lph began speaking in a low tone.
I've been wanting a chance to talk h you, Dorothy." (When had her ther called her by her full name ore? Did he suspect something?) rothy's heart seemed to stop beat- , and her limbs trembled.
You can help me more than any e else. But first I want to tell you nething. Knowing you and Tom, not afraid but you'll understand. —Nell!" Ralph paused for a mo- nt. "She doesn't know yet what e is to me, but lately I've hardly red to go near her for fear I uldn't keep from telling her until sure I'm ready."
'Oh, Ralph!" breathed Dorothy, ssing the arm she clung to. "I am glad for you!" For the moment e forgot everything except that nething new and beautiful had ne into the life of this beloved chum d brother. "Nell is such a dear l."
"Don't!" begged Ralph. "I mustn't nk about that just now. What I nt to know, Dot, is whether a fel- v just starting out like I am has y right to ask a girl like Nell to are his life. You know Nell teaches makes almost as much by the year I do. Is it fair to ask her to give up everything and come to help make a home on little more than half of what we both have now; and if she would do it, would she be sorry some time, when she has to skimp and do without things she might have had? Don't answer right away, Dorothy. I've tried more than once to ask you this in a letter. Think about it. And don't let sentiment warp your judgment."

"Oh, Ralph!" cried Dorothy, "I don't have to think about it. Nobody would! It isn't as if you couldn't keep a family from real want. Can't you see how it would be to Nell if she loves you? Doing without things couldn't matter when she has—" Dorothy suddenly faltered and stopped. What was she saying? Hadn't doing without things mattered to her? But she could not spoil these sweet, new hopes of Ralph's—she had no right to! Because her own life was spoiled must she go about trailing it against every other life to spoil it, too?

But Ralph read nothing but sympathy in her unfinished words.

"I believe," he said in a low voice, "that Nell is beginning to care some. And she's like you, Dot. If yours and Tom's life hasn't lost the sweetness in the hard pull you must have had, I believe ours wouldn't."

Dorothy gave Ralph's arm a squeeze. She could not say anything. But Ralph did not seem to notice. They were near the house now, and before they went inside, he added: "I'd rather the others wouldn't know just yet."

When Dorothy went to kiss her father good-night, he drew her down upon the arm of his chair and patted her hand softly in the old way. Dorothy had felt that she had gone through with almost all she could stand when she had come in from her walk with Ralph, but after that had come a kitchen tête-à-tête with Bernice, in which that confident and admiring younger sister sought unravelment of some domestic problems, ethical and economical. "You always managed so beautifully," Bernice declared, "I wish you lived nearer so I could run in and take object lessons in home-making."

Now, sitting by her father, Dorothy felt as she had felt when everything had gone wrong in her little girl world long years ago. How could she have thought of confiding in any one else, even in Ralph, before her father!

"You are like your mother, Dot," he was saying, as Dorothy searched for words in which to tell him of her trouble, "more so, I think, since you are a wife and mother yourself. She was just such a loving little thing as you are: not so cheery on the surface as some, maybe, but with a depth of sympathy and feeling that makes the true helpmate."

"Oh, father!" cried Dorothy. "I am not nearly what you think me!" She could not say, "I have given up trying to be a helpmate at all!" without explaining what had driven her to do this. And yet she could not say anything to her father against Tom! But perhaps her father would understand. "I—I've been so disappointed," she stammered miserably.

"Well, you needn't be," soothed her father. "Nobody else is disappointed in you, little Tenderheart. What is it?" he went on teasingly. "Did your last cake fall, or can't you make Kathryn toe the mark as she should?" And Dorothy, half laughing and half crying, hid her face in his shoulder, not knowing whether to be glad or sorry that he had not understood.

Dorothy had just turned out the light and crept into bed beside the sleeping Kathryn, when, with a light tap on the door, came Sally's voice calling softly, "May I come in, Dot, dear?"

"Yes," she answered, dabbing her eyes and trying to speak naturally. "Be careful, child, or you'll stumble over that chair in the middle of the room. Here. Would you like to turn on the light?"

"Not if I can get in without waking that precious baby. There! Oh, it's good to feel your arms about me again, sister mine. You must stay a good long time now you're here."

"Yes," Dorothy said. It would be easy now to add, "I may stay always, Sally, dear." And Sally would understand and would let the others know.

Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Wreck at Western Springs, Ill.

THREE shocking railroad wrecks occurred in an interval of eleven days in the early part of July. The first was near Corning, N. Y., on July 4, when a west-bound Lackawanna express ran into another passenger train which had been blocked by a stalled freight train. In this disaster more than forty persons were killed and about fifty injured. On the day following twenty-one persons were killed and thirty injured at Wilpen, Pa., when a double-header freight train on the Ligonier Valley Railroad ran into a crowded passenger car being pushed by a locomotive. On July 14 the Overland Express of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Line was struck by a fast mail train just outside of Chicago. The Overland was standing on the track, and the mail train telescoped two of its Pullman cars, killing thirteen persons and injuring from twenty to thirty others.

"Sally," she began, "can you realize that people who think they are just everything to each other sometimes find out after they are married that they were mistaken?"

The cheek against Dorothy's grew suddenly hot. Sally's arm clasp tightened.

"Oh, do you know about it, Dot? I didn't know any one except father knew. But I came in to tell you, because—" There was a silence of a full minute until Dorothy urged, "Tell me all about it, sister." Then Sally went on: "Bob's going away out West to an uncle—you remember Bob Cardigan, Dot. He's to take a year or two in an agricultural school out there and go in with his uncle on a big ranch. And he's been wanting father to consent to our marriage—oh, not now, of course! But he wanted my promise now before he goes away, and father won't consent. Father says we shouldn't make any plans or promises about it till we're both through school and Bob has a start somewhere. I wouldn't mind that, I really think I should like best to leave things just as they are now for ever so long, only—Dorothy, I couldn't talk about it to father or to any one else except you, but I've wondered whether Bob might, away off out there, forget to keep on caring for me, if I make him wait that way!"

Dorothy forgot, as she listened, everything but that Sally, little motherless Sally, already deep in one of the real problems of life, was coming to her for sympathy and council. Oh, yes, she remembered Bob Cardigan! An irresponsible, light-headed boy she had always considered him, not worth a second thought. What if Sally had not come to either her or her father about him—had even run away out West with Bob!

Dorothy could not have told afterward just what she said to Sally. But she did not say what she had meant to a few minutes before—oh, no, not that! And she felt that Sally was listening—that Sally was being led. It was not until when her sister was ready to slip back to her own room that Dorothy mentioned herself. Then she said:

"You were so young you may not know it, but I had to make Tom wait for a long time. I wasn't in school, but I didn't feel free to even promise to leave home until Bernice could take my place. I'm glad now that our love was put to that test, for if I hadn't been able to stand that, I'm afraid maybe it couldn't have stood some other things that are sure to come later. It must be true that the love that is highest and best can no more be affected by separations or delays or deprivations—oh, I think I am beginning to learn, Sally, what a wonderful thing true love is!"

The next morning before any one was astir, Dorothy slipped out and mailed a letter to her husband, stopping at the lower end of the garden to sit for a while on the rustic seat there. In the letter, among other things, she had said: "And don't let us ever let any one know about this. It doesn't seem to me I could bear that!"

But when, before her letter had more than been gathered into the carrier's bag, she had a call to the long distance telephone from Tom, whoever cared to listen might have heard at her end of the line something like the following:

"Yes, this is Dorothy. Oh, I am so glad, Tommy dear! I hope you haven't suffered. Why, you were just right! It was every bit my fault. I won't have you say that! The idea of my wanting to give that extravagant dinner party! Oh, I can't, I must come home. . . . A good visit! Oh, Tom, when you're there all alone! . . . Don't you know, Tommy, that you're the very ownest folks I have?"

The British Insurance Act

CHANCELLOR LLOYD-GEORGE'S Insurance Act, which went into effect on July 15, is probably the most extraordinary piece of legislation of this age in its far-reaching scope and in the character of the benefits involved. Fourteen million people are to be provided with various sick benefits, doctors and hospital treatment; 76 tuberculosis sanatoria with 2,500 beds are to be provided and 50,000 tuberculous patients will be treated, many being outdoor cases. Every person in the service of an employer must be insured, and every employer must contribute a share of the insurance and use "health insurance postal stamps" in his communications on the subject. Sick benefits of $2 a week for workers last twenty-six weeks; disablement benefits are $1 a week, and maternity benefits, $6 (single payment). The act provides for the recognition of a large number of trades-unions, provident societies, industrial associations and others as "Approved Societies," and it is optional with the beneficiaries to join one of these societies or to become what is called a "deposit contributor." Among those who are not included in the insurance act are apprentices and learners receiving low wages, children working for their parents without wages, wives employed by husbands, farm help working without wages, certain classes of agents, men and women employed at more than $800 a year, employees of the Crown, of the local or public authorities, and of railroads which have already established superannuation funds. These are only a few of the many features of the new legislation. It will require a year or more to bring all the branches into full operation. Many of the English newspapers criticize the situation as a "muddle," but Lloyd-George and those who are most familiar with the plans believe that order will speedily emerge from the present chaos.

The Chancellor, in a speech delivered on July 14, declared that although he recognized the fact that the act did not bring the millennium, he was confident that it did bring it nearer.

"It brings it nearer," he said, "because it is a step in the great Liberal forward movement which began with the Old Age Pension Act, which was continued by the budget of 1909, providing for the taxation of land in Great Britain, and which has since been furthered by the enactment of the law depriving the House of Lords of its power of veto over legislation thrice passed by the Commons, the people's representatives.

"For the first time in the history of Great Britain as a state, employer and worker are now to co-operate to maintain and to increase the efficiency of the individual and of the nation. The Workman's Insurance Act aims to make provision for keeping the household from poverty, to keep the worker and his family from pauperism in the dark days of sickness which come to every household in turn, and to guard against suffering from unemployment for which the workman is not responsible.

"It will help the mother at childbirth and will inaugurate a great national campaign against consumption. Instead of devoting our strength altogether to fighting our neighbors abroad, we are organizing armaments to fight social evils at home.

"Although the act has been the subject of unscrupulous attacks and of deliberate misrepresentation, I am convinced that it will be hailed throughout the whole country as one of the most beneficent measures ever given to the people.

"And now that the Workman's Insurance Act will be in full operation next Monday," he concluded, "we intend to put our hands to the great work of freeing the land."

Amazing News from Korea

A CABLE despatch from Seoul, Korea, received in New York July 12, contained the amazing statement that native Korean prisoners being tried for conspiracy against the Japanese Government gave the names of nineteen missionaries as being implicated in the plot. The cablegram stated that the confessions were forced by torture. This fact alone renders the testimony altogether valueless; but aside from this, it is thoroughly and ridiculously incredible. The plot being investigated was one to assassinate Count Terauchi, the Japanese Governor General of Korea, and to those who know the noble and consecrated men whose names were put into the mouths of these tortured wretches while on trial, their accusations are altogether preposterous. One hundred and twenty-three Koreans are being tried, and while it is true that some of them are Christians, yet the movement is wholly political, and the Christian element has been injected into the episode. One of the most prominent of the natives on trial in Baron Yun Chi Ho, a well-known Christian. Four of the missionaries named in the statements of the prisoners were Methodists —Bishop Harris, and Messrs. Noble, Becker and Morris. The others, Messrs. Moffett, Wells, Swallen, Blair, Bernheisel, Baird, Holdcroft, Lee, McCune, Roberts, Sarrocks, Ross, Lampe and Whittemore are under the Presbyterian Board.

The one really distressing feature of the episode is the fear that it may imply a change of attitude on the part of the Japanese Government toward missionaries. On the other hand, the hope was expressed that later despatches might disclose the fact that the torture had been administered and the false testimony secured by Korean police who were not actually representing the Japanese authorities. It is hoped that Japan will repudiate the whole proceeding and condemn the officers who employed these base methods to discredit the missionary cause.

Brightens and Uplifts Lives

God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its efforts to uplift and brighten the many lives with which it comes in contact.

Shirlensburg, Pa. EMMA L. COLGATE.

Morgan Park Academy

A Real School for Real Boys

With notable record for developing students conscientiously through personal interest for College, Business and Life. Home influences with military features of training and physique-building. Members of Faculty live and eat with boys. Healthfully located 14 miles south of Chicago. Write us today for free catalogue and interesting book "Results with Boys." Morgan Park Academy, Morgan Park, Ill., Box 2100

Known for Character Building

TRY THIS WONDERFUL DISHWASHER FOR TWENTY DAYS FREE

This is the Kitchenette—a dishwasher that will wash, dry and sterilize all the dishes used by a large family in three minutes. No need to put your hands in water or perform any labor whatever, and the Kitchenette does it all and does it better. It is so easy and simple that a child can work it, and it is regularly guaranteed.

Pay $1.00 a Month

Every housekeeper should have one at once. We don't ask you to buy it until you have tried it for 20 days and proved to your own satisfaction that it is worth its weight in gold. We don't ask you for a penny down. We ship you the Kitchenette FREE. Try it for 20 days. Then if you like it, pay on our easiest of easy payment plans—$1.00 a month for a few months. If you don't like it, return it at our expense.

KITCHENETTE CO., 42 Pearl St., Buffalo, N. Y. Dept. C

Please send me a Kitchenette for 20 days' trial with the understanding that I can return it if not satisfactory. This coupon is to be worth $1.00 if I keep the Kitchenette.

Name .....

Address .....

Brainy Diet

The Salient Principles of the Brainy Diet Curative Treatm

1. Hardened concretions are dissolved by mild or strong acids (tomatoes, lemons), combined with other suitable foods.

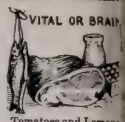
2. Unsound or foreign substances (the cause of ill-health) are eliminated by blood-purifying fresh vegetables, combined with other suitable foods.

3. The nervous system is strengthened by suitable brain or nerve foods (meat, game, poultry, fish, and dairy food), combined with other suitable foods.

4. The muscular system is strengthened by muscle, or force, or starchy foods, combined with other suitable foods.

5. The system is best supplied with heat in cold weather by the heating brain or nerve foods (fresh pork, goose, duck, eels, and custard), combined with other suitable foods.

6. Inflammatory conditions are reduced by cooling, fresh vegetables, combined with other s able foods. A similar diet will also keep the body cool and energetic in hot weather.



Tomatoes and Lemons Solvents; Green Veg bles are Laxative, e

Intending Consultants Must Answer the Following Questions

1. Sex? 2. Age? 3. Are you married? 4. Occupation (mental or physical, or bot 5. Complexion?—Condition of hair and teeth? 6. Temperament? 7. Weight? 8. Heig 9. How do you sleep? 10. How do you feel when waking up? 11. Do you ever feel langu 12. Is distension felt after meals? 13. Do you suffer from constipation? 14. How do the kidr act? 15. Add any other symptoms you feel. 16. Is food relished? 17. Specify the foods you th 18. Do you smoke or take alcohol? If so, how much? 19. What fruits and other foods do prefer? 20. What vegetables and fruits can you obtain? 21. What amount can you spend on f daily? 22. Can you get your food properly cooked? 23. Specify on what subjects you de information, in addition to learning how to cure your painful and unsightly symptoms. 24. (any further information which you think will be of service. My opinion is free.

Send 10 cents for four very instructive booklets. Inclose the names of sick friends.
1.—The New Brainy Diet System. 2.—Diet vs. Drugs. 3.—Effects of Foods. 4.—Key to Longevity.

G. H. BRINKLER, Food Expert, Dept. 3 G, Washington, D.

Shoo-Fly THE ANIMALS FRIEND

Keeps flies and other insect pests off of animals—in barn or pasture—longer than any imitation. Used and endorsed since 1885 by leading dairymen and farmers.

$1 worth saves $20.00 in milk and flesh on each cow in a single season. Heals sores, stops itching and prevents infection. Nothing better for galls. Kills lice and mites in poultry houses.

SEND $1, if your dealer can't supply you, for 200 cows, and our 3-tube gravity sprayer without extra charge. Money back if not satisfactory. Write for booklet, FREE. Special terms to agents.

Shoo-Fly Mfg. Co., Dept. 34, 1310 N. 10th St., Phila.

The BEST Ligh

Cheapest and best light for h stores, factories, churches and public Makes and burns 1 sowngas. Brighter electricity or acetylene. Cheaper than sense. Over 200 styles. Agents wa Write for catalogue.

THE BEST LIGHT CO 3-70 E. 5th St., Canton

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Gu Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free. VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D.

PATENTS That Protect and P Advice and Books FRE Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Servic WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D

YOU CAN AFFORD a new Song Book in your Chu or Sunday School, and one every person; "FAMILIAR SON OF THE GOSPEL," Round or Shape Notes, for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. HACKETT, 128 North Wayne Street, Fort Wayne,

Boys Earn Money

Boys Win Prizes

Christian Herald Crest Pin

Your First Prize

Crest Pins, Baseball Suits, Knives, Roller Skates, Name Stamps, Cameras and Watches

You can win all these prizes in addition to the money you earn.

The Christian Herald will start you FREE.

Any boy who would like to try should fill out this coupon and mail it at once.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. Date.....

This coupon has a value of fifty cents in payment for 10 copies to be sold at 5 cents each to start you in business. Booklets about, "How to Win Profits and Prizes," sent FREE.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

VALUE 50 CENTS

THE COMFORT CHRIST*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

ALL told, the Sea of Galilee is the most interesting body of water in all the world, and this is not at all because of any ...ity in itself. We have heard of a ... in the sky—Lake Louise in the ...cies—but Galilee is a lake in the ...hs, six hundred feet below sea ...el. Formerly there were a few ...s and fishing villages on its west... side, as Capernaum, Tiberias, ... while the eastern shore has ...ays been precipitous and rocky ...d wild. The lake in the sky is all ...es and beautiful in its reflections, ... Galilee smiles and frowns by ...s; worse than this, it is lashed ... fury as the winds sweep down ...n it through the cavernous rocks ...h surround it. We study Galilee ...ay in one of these angry moods, ... a wild beast whose bellowings ...duce terror in the hearts of men. ... the sea found its Master, and was ...ed. Only three words were spoken, ...ace, be still," by the Lord Jesus ...st, "the wind ceased, and there ... a great calm." And this was not ... twelve other tempests were stilled ... the same power and the same ...e, in the hearts of the twelve ...tles, who were in the boat with ...s, crossing the lake from the ...ern to the eastern shore.

The First Gospel Boat

...cording to our modern way of ...king, we would say Jesus had had ...renuous day, for he had been con...ously speaking to and teaching ...multitudes gathered on the shore, ... Peter's boat for a pulpit. Being ...an among men, he became weary ...ody, and desired physical rest, ... so proposed to cross the sea to ...less inhabited side. But he was ...ined by one and another, who ...sed their needs upon him, and fin... when his boat did get under way, ...as followed by a fleet of small ...s filled with people who were say... "We will not let thee go." How ... they followed we do not know, ... when the storm burst, they were ...ably not in sight, having put back ...he first signs of its coming. We ... with tenderness the sleeping ...st, with his head laid upon the ...rman's hard pillow in the stern ...he boat. And we can but sympa... with the apostles when they ...d the bellowing of the storm... ...t and saw his grip upon their ... They came to Jesus and woke ... up, saying in querulous tones: ...acher, carest thou not that we ...sh?" And when Jesus had calmed ...sea, he spoke also to the turbulent ...ts of his apostles, saying, "Why ... ye fearful? Have ye not yet ...?"

...ne evening eight years ago, we sat ...n the steps of the monastery at ...rias in the gloaming, waiting for ... fish to be cooked, which had been ...ght in the Sea of Galilee; a boy ...sed in a coat of many colors, with ...d fez upon his head, came and ...d in front of us, and reached out ... hand, full of small shells, impor...ng us to buy them. He said, ...ey are from the Sea of Galilee." ... asked him where he had learned ...peak English, and he replied, "In ... Scotch mission." And then we ...d if he had ever been told stories ...ut Jesus or the Sea of Galilee." ..., shall I tell it to you?" he re... And this he proceeded to do in ...ost dramatic way, but in broken ...lish, which was quite charming. ...n he came to that part of the ... where Jesus rebuked his disci...

*THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON ...ugust 11, 1912. "A Troubled Sea and a ...led Soul." Mark 4: 35—5: 20. GOLDEN ... "God is our refuge and strength, a very ...t help in trouble. Therefore we will not ... though the earth do change, and though ...ountains be shaken into the heart of the ... Ps. 46: 1, 2.

ples, the boy said, "And Jesus said, 'Are ye not Christian? Ye are not Christian at all.'" It was quite evident that the meaning of the story was very clear to the boy. And though he knew it not, he had brought us a blessing that has lasted until now, and will always last.

The Man Christ Jesus

"Who, then, is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?" That was the question the apostles of Jesus asked each other. Even though they had been the close associates of Jesus for nearly two years, they had failed to comprehend him. There was an unknown quantity in Christ which they had not at all measured. Dr. Joseph Parker, in commenting upon this, says: "There was, of course, no doubt in the mind of the disciples that Jesus Christ was a man, yet there was a something about him which very often made them look upon him with surprise, and even bewilderment. . . . For days together they would be able to look upon his face as the face of a gentle brother, pensive indeed, and much worn, yet quite human and most tender. Then, in an unexpected moment, there would come into that brother's face a look unlike all other looks; a gleam of spiritual light, a flush and color, showing that through his heart had just passed a wave of more than mortal life, and he would look more like an angel than a man. He was a man; no doubt at all about that; yet there was something about him that there was about nobody else; even when he appeared to be a common stranger, there was a power in his speech which made men's hearts burn. He was a man, but a man plus, to say the least of it."

In all the ages men have been trying to come at this "unknown quantity," and in the end they could but yield "reverent and loving homage."

Jesus Stills a Storm in Man's Soul

After the stilling of the tempest, Jesus and his apostles passed over to the other side of the sea and landed in Gerasa. There Jesus encountered another tempest. It was a brain-storm in a man who lived in a cavern (or tomb) in the rocks, like a beast in his lair, and so fierce was he that he cut himself with stones, and he could not be bound with chains, and no man could tame him. But fierce as he was, he came out to meet Jesus when he saw him landing. He did not cry out against Jesus, or attempt to do him violence, but instead, he fell down before Jesus and worshiped him. The apostles might have exclaimed again about Jesus, "Who, then, is this, that even sinful man obeys him?" Their surprise must have been as great, or even greater, than when Jesus calmed the sea, as it was more wonderful to calm a human soul. But listen: there is a voice of defiance: "What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God?" Oh, that was Satan, who had come to live in the heart of the man, and demonized him! "Come out of the man," said Jesus, and he did come out, bringing all of his devil helpers with him. They had to go somewhere, and Jesus did not want them to go into any other man, so he let them go into a herd of pigs that were feeding in the mountain, and the devils rushed the pigs down the mountain into the sea, and they were drowned.

But how calm and peaceful and lovely was the man whose brain-storm Jesus had calmed. He wanted to go away with Jesus in the boat and be as one of his apostles. "No," said Jesus, "you must stay in your own land, and go and tell your friends what great things have been done for you, and get them ready to hear me when I come again." And so the man became a herald for Jesus, and a few months later when Jesus went to Decapolis, he found that the man had prepared the hearts of many people to listen to him and receive the Gospel message.

Edersheim in his book, The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, calls this instance "a parabolic miracle," and he says of it: "There are critical epochs in the history of the kingdom of God, when the power of evil, standing out in the sharpest contrast, challenges that overwhelming manifestation of the Divine, as such, to bear down and crush that which opposes it. Periods of that kind are characterized by miraculous interposition of power, unique even in Bible history."

Looking to Jesus to Calm Our Souls

Let us remember Jesus' power over the troubled sea, and over the troubled soul. Not trusting him is being like that man on a train for the first time. As the train rushed into a tunnel, he threw down his paper, and shouted in great fear: "I am blind, I am blind!"

I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope
Indeed beyond the zenith and the slope
Of yon gray blank of sky, we might be faint
To muse upon eternity's constraint
Round our aspirant souls. But since the scope
Must widen early, is it well to droop,
For a few days consumed in loss and taint?

O pusillanimous heart, be comforted,
And like a cheerful traveler take the road,
Singing beside the hedge. What if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said,
Because the way is short, I thank thee, God.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

A Lesson Story to Tell the Children

Harry had a great trial. He was sitting on the floor, looking over all his pictures, when baby toddled up, and tore one right across, one of the very prettiest. Harry called out, "O mamma, see!" and began to cry. "Harry," said mamma, as she took baby away, "did you know tears are salt water?" Harry checked a sob and looked up. "No," he said, with great interest, "are they? How did you find out, mamma?" "Oh, somebody told me that when I was a little girl, and I tried a tear, and found it was true." "Real salt water?" asked Harry. "Yes, try and see." Harry would very gladly have tried it if he could have found a tear. But by that time there was not one left, and his eyes were so clear and bright there was no hope for any more at that time. "Next time I cry I will find out," he said. That very afternoon while climbing over the top of the rocking chair, he fell, and got a great bump. He was just beginning to cry when he remembered it would be a good chance to see if tears were really salt. He put up his finger, but there was not a tear to catch, for he had forgotten all about the bump. "I can't get a single tear to taste, mamma," he said ruefully.

Another little boy let his tears run down his cheeks and into his mouth, and he said, "They didn't taste good." Jesus can wipe away all tears, and he has promised to do it, and to make us happy if we will pray to him to do it. Let the teacher now tell the lesson stories.

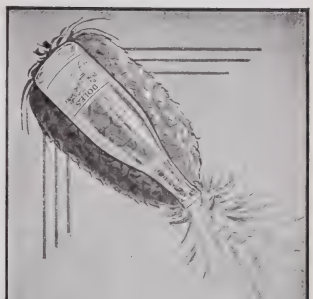
JOHN'S GRACE

JOHN is a small boy, the youngest of a minister's family.

As a punishment for some misdemeanor at the table, it was decided that John must not eat with the family at the next meal.

So his dinner was placed on a small table at the end of the dining-room. When all were seated, the minister said: "Now, John, you should ask a blessing before you eat."

This was a new duty to John, but he bowed his head and said reverently: "Our Father in heaven, thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies. Thanks for the food. Amen."



Refreshing, cooling, energy and health producing is

Pure Pineapple Juice

Medical science recognizing these valuable qualities prescribes it in preference to other beverages in cases of impaired digestion, lack of appetite or run-down system.

The refreshing, thirst-quenching qualities of

Pure Pineapple Juice

are only surpassed by its digestive, tonic and blood building powers.

Dole's Hawaiian Pineapple Juice

is simply the pure juice of golden ripe pineapples, carefully bottled and sterilized at Honolulu.

The Real Health Drink

Sold by your druggist, grocer or fountain.

"Cooling Drinks and Desserts" telling all about it, and how to make many delectable dainties. Mailed free on request.

Hawaiian Pineapple Products Co., Ltd.

112 MARKET ST.
San Francisco
California

Happy Cozy Corner Days

It Happened This Way

Ingle Nook

IN the Cozy Corner some weeks ago we talked about storing our girlhood with courage and usefulness. In the American Girl Paper before that we visited France and loved together Joan of Arc with her wonderful homespun courage—and I want to thank all of you plucky girls again for your nice letters, full of ambition and ideals, prompted by Joan. It was a great pleasure to answer them. How good it always is to feel that we are on such a fine footing of friendship here in the dear CHRISTIAN HERALD.

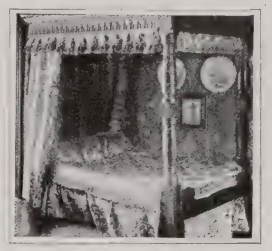
And right here I want to say something about ideals, girlhood ideals, that so often are poohpoohed by unimaginative grown-ups. Not only do I believe in them with all my heart and soul, but I believe that each one of us girls, no matter what our sphere of life, can so far follow after them that somewhere along the line we can make them definitely and permanently count for much.

This week I want to ask you to come with me into the highlands of wild Wales and visit there in the romantic vale Crucis the famous "Little Ladies of Llangollen." Doubtless you have heard of them, because their story today is one of the far-away, lovely legends of the world. There is something very inspiring, I think, in the actual surroundings where beautiful and real people have lived, and in hearing their story at first hand.

A Girlhood Dream

UPWARDS of a hundred years ago, the Little Ladies of Llangollen made their way on a summer holiday into this paradise of a sweet Welsh valley. They were but slips of schoolgirls then, as full of romantic ideals as the proverbial egg is full of meat. The restless, hurrying river Dee, threading its way like a silver ribbon in and out of woodland and clearing; the long mysterious roadways where Crusaders had passed on their way to the Holy Land; Dinas Bran, the stronghold of King Arthur, like a sentinel commanding the mountain pass where the river hurls itself into the outside world through the irregular arches of an ancient Roman bridge that is one of the seven wonders of Wales—held them spellbound with ancient romance. In the rich gardens of Llangollen, quaintest, sunniest village of the British Isles, jauntily perched on a flowery upland commanding the valley, and like nothing so much as a gracious lady of warmth and power inviting them to come and stay; the spell was cast and then and there they made a schoolgirl compact, declaring that on coming of age they would return and build them a home in the valley, and live such lives there as would "match up" with the richness and wonder of what they saw and felt that day. "Kings and emperors shall pay us homage," declared the romantic Lady Elinor, elder of the two girls, yet scarcely sixteen. "The great and noted folk of many lands shall know us, for instead of frittering our lives away, we shall learn to know and love the people of the valley and serve them and in turn be served by them."

"Plas Newydd, Like a Richly Carved Old Oaken Chest"—Tennyson



Quaint Teester Bed at Plas Newydd

On the face of things this was an extravagant fancy, a girlhood dream; but at the same time there was lofty and laudable ambition in the hearts of those two girls, who, in every sense, had that day hitched their wagon to a star.

The rest of the story is like the fairy tales that come true. No sooner had the Lady Elinor Butler inheri her share of her father's fortu than she set to work to make g that compact. Entreaties, argumer threats, brilliant offers of marri were brought to bear against "girlish whim"; but nothing deter her. Sarah Ponsonby, her sch girl chum, stood stanch and faithf and together they built beautiful P Newydd, where for fifty years t lived dignified and useful lives. from being eccentric or aloof, clever and attractive ladies w among the Welsh people and learn their language, encouraging the i to work, teaching the dull to pl gardens and be thrifty, tenderly c ing for the sick, and frequently t sent promising girls and boys to L don or Glasgow to learn a trade.

In recognition of their bounti work, the queen of England and emperor of France accorded them r gifts, and in the proud little gu book at Plas Newydd appear the nan Wellington, Tennyson, Ruskin, Wor worth, Browning, Lady Bulwer L ton, Spencer and many others equa notable. So the world came to the tle ladies, even as they had dreame might.

Yes, I believe in girlhood drea Loyalty to ideals is a good thi Love and heroism, sympathy and a bition are never brighter than no to translate them into everyday u fulness is to determine to carry w us always the flaming torch of yo and courage, the "cherished heroi out of which our lives may be m rich instead of dull, radiant instead drab and indefinite? Out of the v abundance, brilliancy and inconsist cies of our girlhood fancies, we sho be able to crown our womanhood w glory and gladness and make our li blessings in the world.

Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

THE EASY WAY TO SUCCESSFUL PHOTOGRAPHY

A Film Pack Premo Camera, FREE TO YOU!

Takes Splendid Pictures 2½ x 3½ Suitable for Post Cards and Albums

WITH a film pack Premo every operation, from the loading of the camera to the development of the film, is so easy that any one, even without previous photographic experience, can make good pictures.

With every camera comes a book of directions. The merest novice has but to follow the simple instructions laid down to successfully operate any Premo.

The Premo Film Pack, being absolutely light-tight can be loaded and unloaded in broad daylight.

Just open back of camera—drop in film pack—close back—and the camera is loaded. This is by far the quickest and easiest method of loading any camera.

To prepare for the first exposure, simply pull out from the pack the paper tab marked "Safety Cover." Then to change each film for successive exposures, merely pull out successive tabs. Upon pulling out the twelfth tab the pack is rendered light-tight, so that it may be safely removed in any light and a fresh pack substituted. The entire operation of changing the twelve films can be done in as many seconds.

The easiest to load, the simplest to operate, the film pack has one other unique advantage—the fact that one or more films can be removed any time for tray or tank development.

You don't have to wait until the whole twelve films have been exposed, but whenever you wish, can take the pack to a dark room, open it at the bottom, take out the exposed film or films, close it up again and replace the pack for the remaining exposures. This operation can be repeated as often as desired until the pack is exhausted.

There is nothing in the entire process of picture making with a Premo Junior which anybody cannot easily perform without previous knowledge of photography. No focusing, no estimating of distances is necessary.

Just set the shutter, locate and center the subject in the finder and press the shutter release. These cameras load in daylight, have automatic shutters for time or snap shot exposures, and are built to withstand hard usage.

REDUCED PHOTOGRAPH OF FILM PACK PREMO JUNIOR No. 1 FULL SIZE 3⅛ x 4½ x 5¾

Capacity—12 exposures without reloading.
Size of Camera—3⅜x4½x5¾
Weight—12 ounces.
Shutters—Automatic with diaphragm stops
Achromatic Lens.
Two tripod sockets and two finders.
Retails at $2.00.

OUR OFFERS

WE WILL SEND ENTIRELY FREE to any of our old subscribers a Premo Junior No. 1 Camera, postpaid, as a premium for securing TWO New Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year at . . . . . $1.50 Each

OR, We will send a Premo Junior No. 1 Camera, postpaid to any subscriber now on our list who will send in their renewal at once for One Year's subscription with remittance of $2.25

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, - - New York

5%

Write to-day for the Calvert Book—it is a book that everyone who is saving money or has money to invest ought to have.

It is full of interesting information for investors, and tells in detail of this Company and its 17 years of successful experience.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Company pays 5 Per Cent interest on all money entrusted to its care.

Money begins to draw interest the day it is received, and it may be withdrawn at any time without notice.

In the entire history of the Company there has never been a day's delay in the mailing of interest checks or in the repayment of principal when demanded.

It is an ideal savings or investment plan. Don't fail to write for the book.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Buy the Original
ZIMMERMANN "AUTOHARP"
The Nation's Favorite
Never genuine without our trade mark "Autoharp"
A musical instrument adapted to all classes. At all music stores or direct from us.
"Easy to Play. Easy to Buy."
Send for Free catalog. Up-to-date musical gems for Autoharp.
THE PHONO-HARP CO.
East Boston, Mass.

Feet Hurt?
Is it worth while to have comfortable feet? To forget stinging, throbbing aches? Your next pair shoe trouble is over with The FAMILY SHOE STRETCHER For Men and Women.
The Greatest Device of the age for the feet. Prevents and removes corns, bunions and tender spots. Acts at once on any pressure. Makes your shoes fit perfectly. Produces perfect ease and comfort. Easy to wear. Endorsed by physicians. Send for full particulars with list of the 6 sizes you require. Sent Free. The Pedicure Co., Dept. VT Buffalo, N. Y.

Wear Before You Buy PROCESSED HOSIERY
Pair sent you without charge to prove its Durability. Order by style from our Catalogue "The Book of Stockings." Book describes wonderful "Dual Process"—just as soldiers' uniforms have been processed to stop bullets—so the "dual process" of stocking fabrics creates the most Skillful durability of "Processed Hosiery"—the New Stocking. Send for the Catalogue to-day and select your trial pair
THE STOCKING STORE, . . . 399 Broadway, New York

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES VISIBLE WRITERS
or otherwise
L. C. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
All Makes Supplies Fresh from the Mfrs. Write for Illustrated Catalog 74 pewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over, will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent prepaid for $1
HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

JUST OIL your sewing machine with "3-in-One;" then just watch it run! This wonderful, labor-saving oil makes machine sewing delightfully easy. It prevents rust, cleans out dirt and grease, keeps all parts running perfect order. Trial bottle sent FREE.
3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY, 42C W. Broadway, New York City. 3-in-One is sold at all stores—trial size 10c; Household size 50c.

Cheap Fire Insurance!
Matchless Wall Lighter
No more matches in your home! No more scorched hands—burnt holes in clothes, carpet, or set fire to house. No more burnt matches to sweep up. Lasts forever. Never fuses—light, soft brass eyelet-finish ornament to any room. Money back if not satisfied. Postpaid, only 50c. Agents Wanted.
AMERICAN PYROFOB CO., Dept. E 5841 Calumet Ave., CHICAGO

One Stamp or Coin brings you a tin of GOLDEN WEST SALAD DRESSING POWDER
Makes a pint of delicious Salad Dressing
Address Claret & Devers, Portland, Ore.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON TOPICS OF THE DAY

Mail Carrier Fire Patrol

RURAL mail-carriers are hereafter to act as a fire-patrol on the million miles of highway over which they travel every day. They have been ordered to report all forest fires to the nearest ranger or fire warden. If they do this part of their work as faithfully as they have delivered the mail, the loss from forest fires will be greatly reduced.—Scientific American.

. . .

To Rid the World of Locusts

IN THE course of a visit to Mexico two years ago, Dr. Felix Dherelle, a young French scientist of the Pasteur Institute, noticed that locusts were subject to an epidemic disease and concluded that the best means of destroying the insects would be to spread the disease among them.

After careful research he discovered the bacillus of the disease and as a result of a paper he read before the Academy of Science in Paris, Dr. Dherelle was invited to make a practical test of his discovery by the government of Argentina, where every year a plague of locusts does incalculable damage to crops.

The first experiments were immediately successful. A swarm of locusts was kept between barriers for observation purposes. Six days after they had eaten grass sprinkled with Dr. Dherelle's preparation the insects were dead. Locusts were also found twenty miles from the infected fields, while forty days afterward locusts bearing marks of the epidemic were picked up 250 miles from the infected area.

The locust plague in Argentina threatened to be worse than ever this year, and in the spring the doctor set out, accompanied by mules carrying the disease-spreading liquid, and sprinkled every swarm of locusts that could be found in the province of Rioja, where acre after acre of insects had just been hatched. After three weeks only one living swarm was left in the entire district.

The doctor declares that his preparation in no way affected the cattle grazing in the fields sprinkled with the liquid.—New York Times.

. . .

Plural Voting

WOULD plural voting be a good thing in this country? We presume there are many people who think so. In Belgium, which we are told is one of the happiest and most prosperous countries in the world, they have plural voting. They have universal suffrage there, which may be a dangerous thing, for the same persons who so warmly praise Belgian social conditions tell us that to universal suffrage "a very valuable corrective is added." Every man who has reached the age of twenty-five has one vote; at the age of thirty-five, if he has children and pays a house tax, he has two votes; or if he is a bachelor and has property valued at $400, and has $20 income a year from national bonds, he has two votes. If he has an academic or professional degree he is allowed three votes. Thus 1,000,000 men have one vote each, 400,000 have two votes each, and 300,000 have three each. Thus the two preferred classes have 1,700,000 votes with which to "nullify," we are told, the votes of the "worthless or incompetent." We trust the people better here, with "one man, one vote."—Independent.

. . .

Practical Eugenics

FOLLOWING the example of clergymen in Chicago and Boston, the Lutheran ministers of Pittsburg have invited the clergy of all other denominations to join them in refusing to marry any man who cannot produce a health certificate from a reputable physician. They might well have included the prospective brides in their proscription, as has been done in other cities. The taint of the diseases against which this general movement is directed comes often through a mother who gives no indication of anything but robust health, and who herself may have inherited it.

All persons who hope to see the new generation start life a little healthier and with a little better chance in the fight for existence than this one had must be gratified at the spread of this movement among the clergymen. Its practical benefit is twofold. It is sure to prevent some unwise and improper marriages and its educational value may be even greater, since it inevitably compels thought and discussion on a subject on which ignorance and silence have wrought great harm. No rules and regulations, however desirable or necessary, will bind all the race. At the same time it is possible, through reasonable and proper preventive action and the spread of education, to lessen greatly the sum total of human misery resulting from marriages of diseased persons who are certain to transmit disease to their offspring. The stand taken by these clergymen will help much toward that end.—New York Tribune.

. . .

Sane Summer Clothes

SOME of the hottest days of summer slay as many as, or more than, an insane Fourth of July did a few years back. But there is no public authority to decree that men shall wear sane clothes in the heated term, and the slaughter goes on. A glance at a crowd in the street when the official thermometer is registering more than ninety degrees shows how little progress is made not toward more sensible summer clothing, at least among men. A quarter of a century ago men perhaps dressed more inappropriately, when starched shirts prevailed and when waistcoats were more generally held to be indispensable. But in recent years about the only progress toward more suitable hot weather attire is the use of less starch.

But the coat remains as conservatively oppressive as ever. Perhaps one man in a hundred wears clothes of some light washable fabric, but the number does not increase from year to year. Such clothing is cheaper than woolen clothing and might be worn with advantage on a good many summer days besides those which have their record of death.—New York Tribune.

Do You Know Your Bible?

Continued from page 761

The following 91 answered 11 questions of List No. 6 correctly:

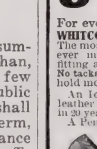
Mrs. J. Adam Andrea, Mrs. Kittie Baldwin, J. W. Baker, Miss C. Jane Barton, Mrs. B. F. Bohne, Mary M. Bhule, Mrs. Mary U. Brown, Mrs. O. C. Barnes, Mrs. Geo. Brill, Mrs. S. B. Barnes, Mrs. Mary Coupland, Bess M. Carpenter, Harriet Crocker, Stella Crosby, Mrs. C. E. Clark, Mrs. J. K. Davis, Isabella T. Dyer, Mrs. Nettie Dymond, Adelaid W. DeRevere, J. Harry Deems, J. T. Fazer, Mrs. A. L. Freeman, Mrs. R. F. French, Mrs. A. P. Fassett, John A. Freeman, H. C. Fallon, Ruth Griffeth, Mary Graham, R. M. Gittings, Geo. A. Gilderson, Evelyn Gardner, George L. Gray, Mrs. F. M. Gainfort, Geo. F. Hills, E. Higgins, Marion S. Hamblett, Mrs. Percy W. Holmes, Edward Hicks, Alfred H. Holt, Lois L. Hoyt, Mrs. C. A. Heath, Mrs. S. Grace Harlow, Rosa Hirschy, D. S. Hadden, Mrs. Elizabeth Hoover, Mrs. Edith L. Hupert, Mrs. M. T. Jones, Caroline Johnson, Mrs. Ella Jameson, Miss E. M. King, Julia E. Kemp, Mrs. Amelia J. Kichline, Mrs. James P. Low, Miss S. E. Lyle, Mrs. E. J. Matthews, Jas. H. Munro, C. H. Mather, Eva J. Moscrip, N. K. McLeod, Mrs. E. J. Merrill, Mrs. Clara R. Moore, Mrs. W. A. Melton, Thomas Nickson, Mrs. S. D. Osborn, Miss H. Maud Plaisted, Mrs. M. Perry, S. P. Parker, Vilie Powell, Miss Sallie E. Penn, James M. Payne, Goldie Quinn, Annie E. Roberts, Mrs. E. W. Reynolds, Ethelbert Stover, Mary T. Scott, A. Lucetta Sherman, J. P. Street, Hallie McP. See, M. J. Sattler, Mrs. Mary E. Stephens, Mrs. C. R. Stone, Ida Shields, Lucy Saussy, M. A. Trowbridge, Annie Tipton, Mrs. Chas. A. Taggart, Mrs. W. W. Wills, W. A. Wilson, James Wilson, Mack Wilson, Edward Yoder.

Do You Enjoy Wearing GOOD HOSIERY GUARANTEED FOR SERVICE?
From MILL HEADQUARTERS direct to you, will come the greatest values in wear-proof, lustrous, snug-fitting, guaranteed hosiery for men and women.

3 Pairs of these Ladies' Hosiery, snug-fitting, reinforced hose $1 prepaid. Value anywhere else 50c the pair. Special double garter top. Special price by us
$1 for 3 pairs sent prepaid.
Colors are black, white or tan. Every pair GUARANTEED to give satisfaction or money will be refunded. Stock of sizes and colors is limited. Mention size and color wanted. Write for special catalogs of unusually attractive dress needs.

GUARANTEED Silk Socks for Men 3 Pairs $1.00 POSTPAID
BLACK, TAN, OR WHITE
Sold everywhere at 50c the pair. Extra reinforcement at heel, sole and toe. Thin, shapely, snug fit. Fine, wear-proof, PURE SILK. Every pair guaranteed.
Worn of specially selected Fine Thread Silk. Finest 50 cent sock at reduced price. Our price 3 pairs for $1
Send for your free copy of latest catalog of timely dress accessories. Newest styles in everything to wear at wholesale prices.
FIFTH AVENUE MAIL ORDER COMPANY
Hosiery Department D, 208 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. City
Reference: Union Exchange National Bank, N. Y. City

COMFORT and EASE FOR TENDER FEET
For every woman who will wear WHITCOMB'S "FLEXSOLE" SHOES. The most comfortable shoe for women ever made. Soft, flexible, perfect-fitting and handsome. Very durable. No tacks. No Lining to wrinkle and hold moisture. No seams.
An Iowa woman writes: "First leather shoe I have worn made to wear in 20 years."
A Pennsylvania woman writes: "Enclosed find order for a friend. My feet are cured entirely."



Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded.
Can be bent double.
Prices: LACE, $3.00; BUTTON, $3.25; OXFORDS, $2.50 Prepaid.
We refer to any bank anywhere.
Send outline of foot and give size usually worn.
Eastern Shoe Co., 55 Broadway, Beverly, Mass.
Agents Wanted Everywhere. Special Inducements.

Alco Self Heating Curling Iron
AGENTS MEN & WOMEN WANTED
An electric new self-regulating alcohol iron that never burns or singes the hair, because it cannot overheat. Produces a beautiful Marcel wave. A Necessity for every Woman. Best for Home or Traveling. Heater, nickel plated, fine black ebonized handles. Each one in a handsome box. Satisfaction guaranteed or Money refunded.
A Big Summer Money Maker.
Agents Making $5 to $10 a day. Every woman wants one. Positively sells on sight. Send 25c today for agent's sample. Exclusive territory.
GOOD SIDELINE FOR SALESMEN
The Self-Heating Curling Iron Mfg. Co., Inc.
911 Manhattan Bldg. CHICAGO, U. S. A.

Rider Agents Wanted

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1912 bicycle. Write for special offer.
Finest Guaranteed 1912 Models with Coaster Brakes and Puncture-Proof tires, $10 to $27
1910 & 1911 Models all of best makes.... $7 to $12
100 Second-Hand Wheels All makes and models, good as new $3 to $8
Great FACTORY CLEARING SALE
We Ship on Approval without a cent in advance, and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL.
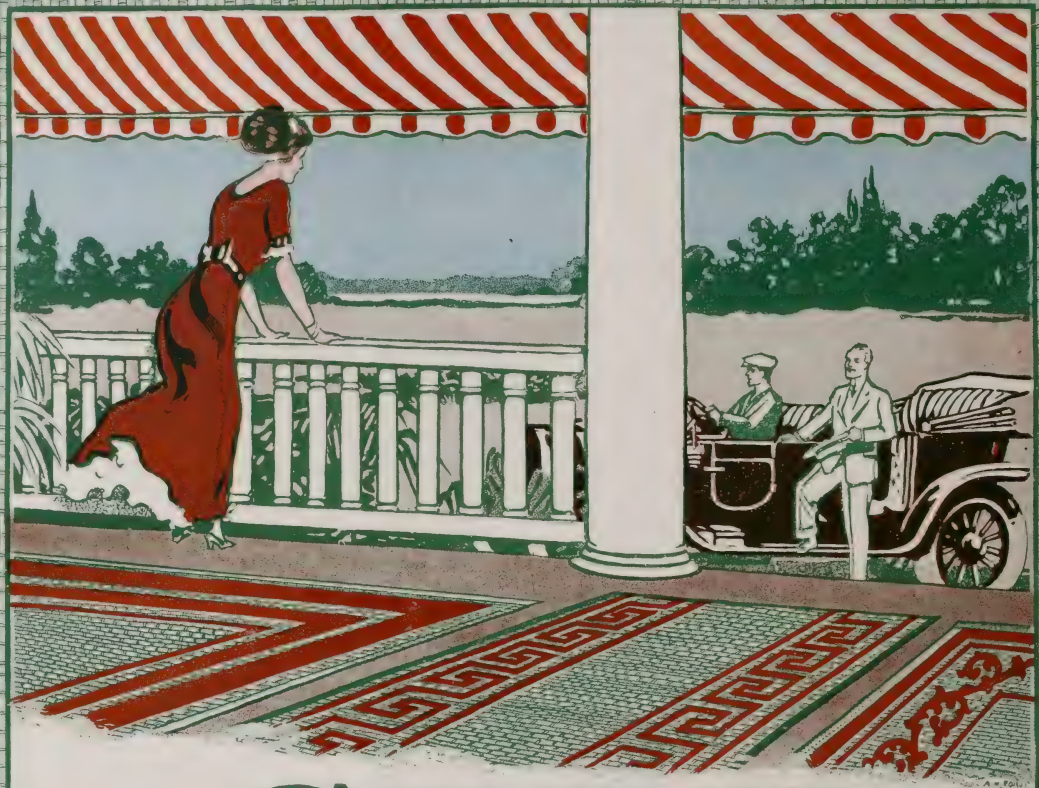
TIRES, coaster brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, parts and repairs at half usual prices. DO NOT BUY until you get our catalogues and offer. Write now.
MEAD CYCLE CO. Dept. P 71 CHICAGO

Buy SILKS Direct From the Mill
Save store profits and get better quality of Dress Silks, Taffetas, Satins, etc., cut any length direct from our looms. Send 10 cents for samples.
New Wash Silks for Petticoats, Waists, Dresses, Negligees, Men's Shirts. Will wash and iron perfectly. Sam ples Free.
Experience CANVASSING AGENTS Wanted. Please state Agency desired.
Auburn Silk Mill
Dept. C. - - - Auburn, N. Y.

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair

Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short stem Guaranteed hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain, remit $2 in ten days, or send 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 2c postage.
Free beauty book showing latest styles of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A618 22 Quincy St., Chicago

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.



CREX

Grass Carpets and Rugs

TRADE MARK

In Luxurious Homes as Well as In the Modest

Their natural beauty, delicate fragrance, cleanliness and durability appeal to discriminating housewives of all classes—in city or country—in all parts of the civilized world.

CREX coverings are also popular with men. They graced the floors of the recent National Conventions at Chicago and Baltimore. You will find them on Young's famous Iron Pier at Atlantic City and on the floors of most of the automobile shows, year after year.

Nowadays, the living porch is not considered complete without a CREX rug. It makes one's veranda delightfully cheerful and inviting. Dampness and even pouring rains do not affect—they lie flat—never bulge or curl.

A CREX covering in the sleeping-room is a real luxury, especially in warm weather. Its material (wire-grass) is impervious to heat as well as water. In opening a closed room for retiring, one is greeted with a soothing, new-mown-hay-like perfume, which promotes restful sleep.

CREX carpets, rugs and runners are also recommended for halls, dens, dining-rooms, offices, club-houses, churches, hotels, public buildings, etc.

Most all-carpet and furniture dealers carry the CREX line. Patterns, colorings and sizes are so numerous that the tastes and incomes of the most exacting can be satisfied. Their low prices will astonish you.

There are imitation grass floor coverings, but none can compare with CREX. This trade-mark has the same meaning as the word "Sterling" in the silverware trade. It's THE standard of quality. Send postal for illustrated catalogue "1912 Special."

CREX CARPET COMPANY, Originators of WIRE-GRASS FLOOR COVERINGS

Sales and Executive Offices: 377 Broadway, New York. Mills: St. Paul, Minn.

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, AUGUST 7, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 32. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

HAPPY EXPECTATION

From the original painting by L. Nicolet

The spirit which inspires the making of Ivory Soap, as conceived by Charles A. Winter

Illustration Copyright, 1912, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati

INSPIRATION

Always is it faith in someone or something that inspires us to lift our work above the commonplace.

IT is the confidence which even the humblest worker in the Ivorydale factories has in the product he helps to make that is the basis of the superiority of Ivory Soap.

It is the knowledge that his efforts are given to an article worth while which inspires him to do his best.

It is the certainty that the soap which he helps to produce is the purest and most economical, the soap that is doing the greatest good in the world, which enables him to look beyond the drudgery of the moment and see his labor glorified.

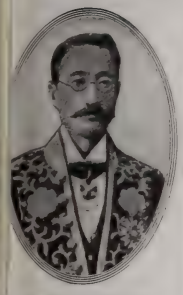
And as his thousands of fellow-workers share the same inspiration, it is but natural that Ivory Soap should be the embodiment of the Spirit of Cleanliness.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 7, 1912

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Korean Christian Prayer Service in a Buddhist Temple



Baron Yun Chi Ho

Bishop Merriman C. Harris

THE KOREAN PUZZLE

[T IS perhaps not too much to say that not since the Boxer uprising in China twelve years ago has an event occurred which caused such apprehension to the missionary forces of the world as the recent news that nineteen American missionaries had been implicated by confessions of native prisoners on trial for conspiracy in Korea of being parties to a plot to assassinate the governor general. Reading the names of those thus implicated, people who know them feel that the whole matter must be the arch-jest of the long romance of missions. Heading the list was Bishop Harris, Methodist Episcopal Missionary Bishop to Korea. With him were named Dr. Samuel A. Moffett, president of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Pyenyang; Dr. Horace Grant Underwood, the first Protestant missionary to Korea, now stationed at Seoul; Dr. Graham Lee, now on furlough in this country on account of ill health; Dr. J. Hunter Wells, a medical missionary in charge of the Caroline Ladd Hospital at Pyenyang. Dr. Wells was on his way to America, through Siberia, at the time the news was received here, taking his regular furlough, allowed after each seven years' service. Rev. George S. McCune, head of the boys' school at Syenchun; Rev. Stacy L. Roberts, also stationed at Syenchun; Dr. A. M. Sharrocks, head of the hospital at Syenchun; Dr. W. M. Baird, president of the Union College at Pyenyang, were also named, while Dr. W. A. Noble, senior Methodist missionary in Korea; Rev. Charles D. Morris, superintendent of the Methodist work of Pyenyang district; Rev. A. L. Becker, vice-principal of the Union College conducted by Presbyterians and Methodists at Pyenyang, shared in the strange fame of being accused. The others named were Messrs. Swallen, Blair, Bernheisel, Ross, Lampe, Holdcroft and Whittemore, faithful, fully accredited emissaries of the Gospel of Christ. The accusation itself is incomparably ridiculous. But what it means may be very far from ridiculous. Briefly stated, the incident was as follows: Some months ago 123 Koreans were arrested, charged with conspiracy against the life of Count Terauchi, governor general of Korea. A number of these prisoners were Christians; reports differ widely as to how many of them profess the Christian faith. One of their number, Baron Yun Chi Ho, is not only a Christian, but the most influential native Christian of Korea. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University in America; was a member of the Korean Cabinet before the country was annexed by Japan, is vice-president of the Korean Young Men's Christian Association, and president of the Methodist College at Sangdo. Some of these prisoners, under torture, confessed that nineteen American missionaries, including Bishop Harris, were implicated in the plot. Later in court every one of these witnesses repudiated his previous testimony.

A Native Pastor and the Secretary of the Seoul Y. M. C. A.

The charges specify a number of occasions on which preparations were said to have been made to take the life of Count Terauchi. In connection with two of these occasions a number of students from the Presbyterian school for boys at Syenchun, of which Mr. McCune is president, are accused. They are alleged to have come to the railway station when Count Terauchi was to pass through the city, armed and ready to slay him. The mere reading of the charges carries with it the impression of their fictitious character. The official organ of the Japanese Government in Korea thus describes what was supposed to be the manifestation of a plot to kill the count at the Syenchun railway station. After describing one attempt which it claimed was foiled because the governor general did not leave his compartment in the train, the report continues:

"The following day the conspirators, concealing revolvers or short swords under their turumaki (outer garments) went to the station, where they mingled with Japanese and Koreans assembling to welcome the governor general. About noon the train carrying Count Terauchi and party arrived at the station from New Wiju. Count Terauchi alighted from the train and greeted those gathered there to welcome him. He passed by but a few steps from the conspirators, but on account of the vigilant watch kept by the police, none of the conspirators dared attack him." A little farther on the narrative reads: "At New Wiju a large number of conspirators watched on the morning of December 28, 1910, for an opportunity to make murderous attempts on Count Terauchi. The latter passed close to them, and twice they were on point of drawing their revolvers. The vigilance of the police, however, foiled their attempt." There is an air of insincerity and pretense in the very words that goes far toward making one think that the whole charge is manufactured out of whole cloth. It is hard to see how the police would know that certain men were "on the point of drawing their revolvers." Perhaps the Korean police are mind-readers. Further facts point to fraud and falsehood on the part of those making the charges. On the two occasions when the students from Mr. McCune's school went to the station to greet the governor general they had been commanded to do so by the Japanese police. Since some arrests of students and teachers of his school had been made following the first visit of the count, Mr. McCune directed on the second visit that all the boys should be searched, and they were not allowed to take even their pocket-knives to the station with them. The charges state that this school was a center of conspiracy, that anti-Japanese meetings were held there and inflammatory speeches made. The claim is made that the students signed with their own blood an oath binding them to assassinate the governor general. Now, following the news of the flimsy charges, comes the horrible account of cruel tortures and the strange determination to implicate American missionaries in the tangled situation.

Count Terauchi

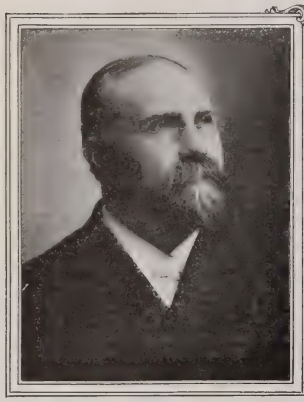
It must be recognized that the Japanese Government has good reason to fear that plots for the assassination of its Korean officials may be formed. Prince Ito was shot down by Korean patriots, and the murder of tyrants is recognized in Mongolian countries as a noble act. It is the established patriotic method. A secret patriotic society, Sin Min Hoi (New People's Society) is said to have been formed as long ago as 1905, and it is claimed that the object of this society is the assassination of government officials. It has also been intimated that Koreans now living in America have had a share in these schemes, as well as Koreans in Russia.

But the most insistent question of all is, "Why?" If the whole charge is trumped up, why has it been done? And most especially, why have the names of American missionaries been dragged in?

One interesting solution which, if found true, would bring vast relief is that the whole matter is due to the determination of the Korean police to demonstrate their powers of activity. Dr. George Heber Jones, former missionary to Korea, and now one of the secretaries of the Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions, in a statement made for the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, said that he does not anticipate that this prosecution is indicative of a change in attitude on the part of the Japanese Government toward Christianity. "The constitution of the empire," he declared, "guarantees religious liberty. The high officials of the government have been and continue to be friendly personally toward the missionaries.

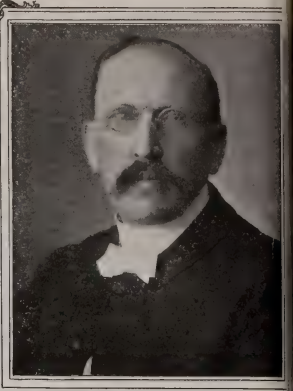
Continued on page 780

The Swedish Free Church of America



Rev. K. F. Ohlson
Pres. Swedish Eastern Missionary Association

Chinese Militia Escorting the Swedish-American Missionaries of Shensi to Shanghai at the Revolutionists' Commands



Rev. G. E. Hjerpe
Pres. Swedish American Evangelical Covenant

THE recent tragedy at Sianfu, in Shensi, China, where seven missionaries were murdered, including the wife and three children of Rev. E. R. Beckman, has brought into prominence the work of the Swedish Free Church of America, with which these Christian martyrs were affiliated.

There are three fairly strong Swedish-American church organizations that may be classed under the general name, the Swedish Free Church, and their members are known as "Mission-Friends." The largest and strongest one is the Swedish Evangelical Mission Covenant of America, the others are the Swedish Free Church of America and the Eastern Swedish Missionary Association or the Swedish Congregationalists. Together they comprise five hundred active churches which are scattered over nearly every State in the Union. In all essential points of doctrine there is little difference between these church bodies. Ministers from one of the groups are frequently invited to hold pastorates in the other. Efforts are being made to consolidate these three church bodies, and it is hoped that an amalgamation may eventually be brought about.

The Swedish Evangelical Mission Covenant has, during the twenty-seven years of its existence, made phenomenal progress and marvelous growth. At its annual convention in Chicago a fortnight ago reports showed nearly $100,000 to have been expended for mission and educational work.

Hon. W. W. Thomas, ex-United States minister to Norway and Sweden, briefly summarizes the chief characteristics of the Swedish people as follows:

"Wherever in this broad land the Swedes fix their habitation, whether it be among the forests of Minnesota or Michigan or on the prairies of Illinois or Iowa, everywhere they are noted for their honesty and industry, their economy and thrift. . . . No other foreign race so speedily embrace our American ideals, and become so thoroughly assimilated with us and so completely Americanized. Our Swedish fellow citizens do not try to subvert our institutions. There are no Swedish anarchists or dynamite bomb throwers. Order-loving as well as liberty-loving, God-fearing and law-abiding, the Swede seeks to know the law of the land, not to break, but to keep it. . . . Upon the prairies and in the backwoods of the great West they have by honest toil converted millions of acres of wild land into fertile farms and happy homes. The Swede also brings with him, from his old home, the fear of God, the reverence for the Bible, the respect for sacred things. . . . It is my belief that no immigrants to-day, in both faith and works, so closely resemble the sturdy pilgrim fathers of New England as the Swedes."

A spark from the mighty revival and great spiritual awakening that swept Sweden from 1850 to 1880 kindled a fire of religious zeal and enthusiasm among the pioneer Swedish settlers of America. The result was the Swedish Free Church movement. The settlers tilled the virgin soil and built small meeting-houses simultaneously; to-day these primitive houses of worship are replaced by modern church edifices.

It is quite unfair to the Swedish people to be placed in matters of religion on the same level as the people that come here from southern Europe. But the mistake is often made in the press, perhaps with no intention to misconstrue, but purely from lack of knowledge of actual facts. More than any othe nationality the Swedes resemble in their religiou development the Scotch and English people. Mos of our churches have been founded by earne Christians, who came across the ocean, never b American missionaries of any church denomina tion. The Swede did not find the Gospel in Ame ica, he brought it with him from the strongest Pro estant country in the world.

The activity of the "Mission-Friends" on th home and foreign field justifies their name. I New England the Swedish Congregationalist numbering seventy churches, support and maintai wholly and in part some forty missionaries and na tive helpers and evangelists in Japan, China, Sout America and Africa. The Evangelical Missio Covenant has many stations of its own in Chin and carries on a strong medical mission and doe a great deal of educational work. It also has mission in Alaska as old as The Covenant itself.

On the 22d of October, 1911, when 15,000 to 21, 000 Manchus were mercilessly massacred by th revolutionists in Sianfu, Shensi, China, seven o our missionaries were murdered. The school a Sianfu was demolished and burned. The touchin story related by one of the survivors, Rev. E. R Beckman, has already appeared in these col umns. He says, further:

"The death of my dear one was the means of saving al the missionaries in the whol province of Shensi. Hearin of the murder, the revolution ists feared European interven tion and sent soldiers to brin all the missionaries to Sianf safely, and from there we were all escorted by a large detach ment of soldiers and brough in safety to Shanghai after month's perilous journey.

"My shocking experience ap pears more like a horrib dream than a reality. Th Gospel field has once more beer watered with the blood of th saints."

"And they overcame by th blood of the Lamb, and by th word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unt the death."

REV. ADOLPH LILJENGREN

The Burial of the Swedish-American Martyrs of Sianfu, China

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—THE APPEARANCE of the bubonic plague in Cuba and Porto Rico has stimulated our health authorities to adopt stringent measures to prevent its importation into this country. Three cases in Havana have been diagnosed as true bubonic plague. In Porto Rico there have been 42 cases and 23 deaths. All freight is being carefully inspected and forces of rat-catchers are at work in San Juan and other points. Five hundred rats are being examined daily and this number will shortly be increased to 1,000 a day. Rats are the prime carriers of infection. At home ports, vessels from the West Indies are being rigidly inspected.

—LATE IN JULY a destructive earthquake occurred at Piura, Peru, a city with 12,000 inhabitants, capital of the Department of Piura, the most northerly of the Pacific departments. The shock lasted forty seconds. The city is said to be almost in ruins. While advices from the district are meager, it is reported that a number of children were killed and that many persons were injured. The dry bed of a river was torn open and jets of water were thrown out. The heaviest shock of earthquake in many years occurred at Guayaquil at the same time. It caused a great panic among the inhabitants of the city, most of whom left their homes and rushed to the open spaces. No material damage has yet been reported.

—A RECENT CAUCUS of the Democratic members of the House of Representatives at Washington again put that party on record against the building of additional battleships for our navy. By a vote of 70 to 62 the caucus refused to permit the conferees on the naval appropriation bill to accept the Senate amendment authorizing two battleships, nor would it accept the compromise suggestion of one battleship. The larger navy advocates quoted the Democratic platform as voicing the stand of the party in favor of an adequate navy. The House "economists," led by Representative Fitzgerald, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, asserted the platform did not bind the House to authorize new ships at this session, and those advocating a retrenchment of annual naval expenditure won by a margin of eight votes.

—ONE OF THE DISQUIETING revelations that have come out of the official inquiry in New York into the murder of Rosenthal the gambler, is the fact that criminal gangs are still numerous in the metropolis. In the light of this remarkable case, it is not difficult to understand how gangs exist and crimes go unpunished. Meanwhile, the actual assassins are in hiding somewhere, and "the police of the world" have been notified that these men are "wanted." Unless some confederate turns informer, on the promise of immunity, the hunt for the Rosenthal murderer may be a long one.

—JOHN MITCHELL, VICE-PRESIDENT of the American Federation of Labor, was sentenced by Justice Wright in Washington, D. C., on July 23, to nine months' imprisonment for contempt of court in the violation of the injunction in the Bucks Stove and Range Company case, prohibiting the Federation from carrying out a boycott. Samuel Gompers, president of the Federation, and Frank Morrison, secretary, were recently sentenced to eighteen months in jail each on the same charge. All three cases have been appealed.

THE FIFTH OLYMPIC CONTEST

THE CRACK ATHLETES AND SPORTSMEN OF MANY NATIONS COMPETE FOR THE LAURELS AND MEDALS OF THE VICTORS BEFORE VAST CROWDS IN THE STADIUM AT STOCKHOLM

THE START OF THE FIRST HEAT OF THE 800-METER RACE

Photos copyrighted by Underwood & Underwood

THE FINISH OF THE 800-METER RACE, MEREDITH (U. S.) WINNING

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

HE CROWN PRINCE AND THE KING OF SWEDEN AT THE TENNIS FINALS

ON JULY 17 the foreign teams which had participated in the great Olympic contest at Stockholm started for their distant homes. The steamship Finland, bearing the American representatives, was cheered away from her dock by an enthusiastic, flag-waving crowd. The pictures here presented show typical scenes at the Stadium. In the 800-meter race pictured above, J. E. Meredith made a new world's record of 1 minute 51 9-10 seconds. The photograph on the lower right-hand corner of this page shows Ralph C. Craig of Detroit making a new world's record of 10 4-5 seconds for a 100-meter run. In that event Americans secured all the places, A. T. Meyer taking second and D. F. Lippincott third. Another new world's record was that made in the shot-put contest by "Babe" McDonald, a New York City policeman, whose picture appears below.

The keenest interest was shown in all the international contests. The tennis matches were watched by thousands of all nationalities. The marksmanship trophies, the horsemanship prizes and the awards in the swimming and diving events were all objects of the hottest contests. Each particular event had its throng of enthusiastic watchers, and well may the victors treasure even more than their cups and medals the simple laurel wreaths awarded them as reminders of the games of ancient Greece, where this symbol of fame was the only prize.

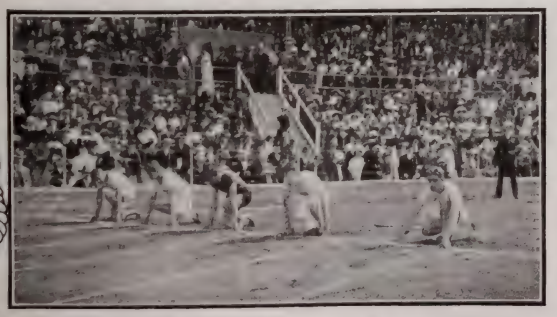
SCOTT (ENGLAND) AND KOLEHMAINEN (FINLAND) IN THE 10,000-METER DASH

THE UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVES PASSING THE ROYAL BOX

Photographs Copyrighted by Underwood & Underwood

A WORLD'S RECORD SHOT-PUT

CANADIAN AND AUSTRALIAN GROUPS SALUTING THE ROYAL BOX



THE START OF THE FINAL 100-METER DASH

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

R. C. CRAIG (DETROIT, U. S.) WINNING THE 100-METER FINAL

Christ and Chronic Infirmity

A Sermon

BY

Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.*

TEXT: "And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years." John 5: 1-9

I THINK it is needful that we try to appreciate the condition of the man before we can apprehend the ministry of the Lord. What then is the influence of prolonged infirmity upon men? How does chronic ailment affect them? Let us trace the possible deterioration in one or two examples. Of course I am stating the case as a tendency, not as a necessity; as something probable, but not inevitable.

Consider first the influence of chronic deprivation. Take the matter of work. To be without work for a week may have all the ministry of a holiday. It may rest the jaded powers, it may sharpen dull perceptions, it may restore man to a healthy and fruitful delight in labor. But to be out of work for a year is a much more serious matter. And to be out of work three or five years is to reach a point where deprivation becomes the agent of disease. Experience tells us how the worker can degenerate through worklessness into worthlessness. There comes a stage when the moral tissue may begin to be impaired, and the once healthy worker deteriorates into the loafer and the tramp. I do not think it impossible, or even difficult, to trace the line of descent and degradation. There is first of all a functional waste. Prolonged deprivation of work produces incapacity for work; the unused talent is lost. And then, secondly, there is an affectional waste. The fire of desire begins to smolder, hope dies down, the life becomes possessed by a lukewarm air of indifference. And thirdly, there is a volitional waste. With the loss of talent and desire there comes the sapping of the will. Endeavor is relaxed. The man ceases to steer and begins to drift. We witness the emergence of Micawber and the death of the real man. This surely is a by no means infrequent occurrence. There are multitudes of men, now tossed about helplessly on the sea of circumstances, mere human driftwood, who were once good-going vessels, engaged in purposeful voyagings, and who have been reduced to this pathetic helplessness by chronic deprivation.

Changing Life's Forces

Or take the possible influence of a chronic complaint. To be ill for a week is one thing. It would be quite possible to name a few compensations which emerge from a brief illness, but to be ill for a year is quite another matter. And to be ill for five years, ten years, twenty years, eight and thirty years, creates possibilities at once momentous and destructive. Every one is familiar with this path of possible peril and fatality. Let us partially trace it. An ailment first of all startles us into serious concern. We have consultations and we seek advice. We inquire about remedies and amelioratives, and we are punctual and punctilious in their application. There is an air of concern about us, and the forces of our life are enlisted in a campaign of restoration. We have a will to be well.

But let it be prolonged, and a very remarkable change may occur. The craving to be healed may be changed into a deeper craving for sympathy. We become more intent on exhibiting our complaints than on getting rid of them, more disposed to talk about them than to seek their banishment. We find more pleasure in people's pity than in the hope of recovery. When our ailments become our exhibits the process of demoralization has begun.

It is not difficult to name the subsequent issue in the descent. However paradoxical it may sound it is nevertheless true that the will either becomes emasculated or it becomes subtly enlisted in the retention of the complaint. It was a wise saying of one of the wisest of men that "The only reason why some invalids are not cured is because they will not be healed." The long continued illness has set the forces of their life away from the paths of restoration, and they have made a sort of pathetic friendship with an interesting invalidism, and their recovery seems impossible.

Or consider the influence of a long continued vice. Now a vice in the soul is like a cancer in the body; you never know where it may find fresh food and break out in further destruction. But there is one thing perfectly sure. Though a long continued vice may impair one power more than another it never leaves a single power intact. I suppose a man may have a stroke, which deprives him of the use of certain parts of his body, and yet his brain, for thinking purposes, may remain as clear and strong as ever. I only offer that as a supposition which a more perfect knowledge might not confirm. But however it may be with the body, this at any rate is true of the soul; a vice impairs all our moral and spiritual powers. They all receive the taint and all of them lose their excellency and the vigor of their prime. Take a long continued abuse of the flesh. What power remains unscathed? Is it love? Is it imagination? Is it fine appreciation? What power is it that remains white as the dove and majestic as the eagle? All the powers are touched with the malady, and like varied plants in a vitiated air they all begin to droop. A long established vice produces a general drooping of the soul, the sickening of faith and hope. Then mark the stages in the moral sequence. There comes a sense of the incurableness of the vice; then a growing languor and indifference; then an increasing indolence; and last of all a regnant insensitiveness in which the man becomes unconscious of the presence of his vice. "Thou knowest not that thou art poor and naked and blind." Such is the influence of chronic infirmity and vice.

"Wilt Thou?"

Now, let us watch the Lord as he seeks to minister to this man who lies in the grip of chronic infirmity. First of all he addresses himself to the waking of the will: "Wilt thou be made whole?" The man had altogether ceased to exercise his will. Effort had been abandoned. He was now contented to wait for some one to lift him into the pool. He had become a log and was no longer an originating power.

And for this reason the Lord began to minister to his slumbering, flabby, imbecile will. For the Saviour of men demands the active co-operation of man's will. The will may be almost extinct, but what remains has got to be used. And therefore a saved life is not entirely a passive acquisition. There is to be a co-operating initiative in ourselves. All remedial ministries are hindered, and many are rendered futile, by dormant and inactive wills. Even in the realm of the body an unaiding will is the doctor's strongest foe. In the realm of knowledge an obstinate will can close all the pores of the mind. And in the realm of the soul, if the will is unsurrendered, God's grace remains inoperative. "Wilt thou?" The Lord demands the will.

And in the second place, the Saviour addresses himself to the heightening of the desires: "Wilt thou be made whole?" Really whole? Art thou willing to lose people's pity, and to become independent of people's alms and to be willing to work? Or does thy will choose only a partial recovery, which will enable thee to retain the soothing pity of men? Our Lord purposes to lift our desires to perfect restoration. And when he comes to you and me, in our infirmity of spiritual desire and purpose, he makes the same demand. "Art thou willing to be made a really whole Christian, not merely endowed with Christian privileges, but with the Christian's obligations, and share in blood-shedding campaigns?" How far will our desires lead us? How high will they take us? Do we only wish our Lord to give us comfort, or to make us comforters? Is it our sole ambition to be saved, or to become saviors? Shall we be contented to get to heaven, or do we crave to be Greathearts leading others there? Do we wish only to be made sure of the New Jerusalem, or by bloody sweat would we give the thews and sinews of body, mind and soul to build the New Jerusalem "in England's green and pleasant land?" If this is the meaning of being made "whole" how many us are willing? If it means to lose thyself for othe and for the sake of others to tread the gloom thy Gethsemane, and not even shrink from the cr on Calvary's slope, "Wilt thou be made whole?" say the Lord would hearten our desires and lead o choices to the worthiest and the best.

"Rise!"

And thirdly, there is a word addressed to t evoking of a venturesome faith in himself. "Rise The word is addressed to a man who had lapsed in the assumption that he had no power to rise! faith in the Lord Jesus he is commanded to ris In faith in Jesus he is to attempt the impossibl and he will find that the impossible can be achieve And so is it ever in our relationship to Christ. W are to prove our faith in our attempted obedienc and in our infantile endeavor we shall discover th Infinite. But our obedience must be prompt, must be complete, and it must be progressive. "Tak up thy bed and walk!" We are to go on in the wa of obedience, and in that way of venturesome co fidence we shall discover how rich is the strengt "which God supplies through his eternal Son."

The Missionary Call

PAUL, the great missionary, was a self-suppor ing missionary. William Carey, the cobble served the Lord by cobbling shoes to pay his ow expenses. Teachers, ministers, doctors, nurses, in dustrial workers, farmers and many others ar sorely needed on the mission field to-day. A Chris tian home in those lands is like an oasis in the des ert; like a lighthouse on the coast of a dark sea, center of light for those who sit in darkness and i the shadow of death. The need of workers and th great variety of work offer an opportunity an room for any who can go. Sunday-school teachers personal workers, ministers, teachers for da schools, matrons in hospitals and schools, busines men, stenographers, mechanical workers, and othe forms of work are needed.

A few years ago, the writer met a missionary from Borneo. He said that several years befor Bishop Thoburn of India had sent out a call fo thirty young men who were willing to find thei support without any guarantee, to go to the mission fields. The thirty young men were found. This missionary had made his support by teaching, hac married the daughter of a missionary, and he an his wife were working on the island of Borneo, in Sarawak, where are found many of the Dyaks, the savage head-hunters.

A few years ago a refined Christian woman lef her home, and went at her own charges to Korea She has had a very useful and blessed service in teaching God's Word to many poor, ignorant heathen women. Her home is visited almost daily by numbers of these women, who meet to study the Bible. She is their friend and helper, and writes she never knew what true joy was until she entered upon this life of service.

A young lady in Virginia said to her parents that as they could support her on the mission field for the same amount they spent at home, "then why not have me for your missionary?" A sister writes that her mother is sending her son, a young business man, to one of the most difficult places in our African mission. Some years ago a Kentucky business man sold out his business and to-day he is one of our most useful and honored missionaries in China. A retired minister and his wife recently went to spend their time in Korea and do what they could for the furtherance of the Gospel. A mother went out with her daughter and, aside from being a help and blessing, has found time to teach the younger children of the missionaries, and teach a class in English.

"Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Ps. 110: 3. "Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me." Isa. 6: 8.

* Pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

THE OCEAN'S MESSAGE

SIT on the sands in the sunlight
And the waves break away on the beach;
y tell of a deep, restless longing, or a something they never can reach.
y are yearning for something beyond them, hat each moment they strive to attain—y are restlessly moving toward it, ut never are able to gain.

l mortals are just like the billows,
With their wearisome tossing oppressed;
y are breaking, and breaking, and breaking,
ut never they seem to find rest.
knowing that right in life's ocean,
Where the surges unceasingly roll,
nds One with sweet calm for each trouble,
nd rest for the poor weary soul.

l He speaks, oh, so tender and sweetly,
In the world shall your trials ne'er cease,
be of good comfort, O loved one!
n me you shall find perfect peace.
ough the waves dash so madly about you," he same gentle voice says, "be still!"
r heart, let him still the wild tempest;
he waves must obey his sweet will.

re's a calm in the ocean of trouble,
here's a rest in each pathway of life;
re's a Pilot who stands at the rudder
o guide thee o'er waters of strife.
oul with the deep restless yearning,
) heart that is longing for rest,
the waves but lift you up higher,
o the haven of Jesus' dear breast.

sic, N. J. REV. JAMES R. MORRIS.

A Unique Gospel Service

A FEW days ago it occurred to me that we might get a few rowboats gether and go out on Culver Lake, w Jersey, on Sunday afternoon and ld a Gospel Song Service. I had en or heard of almost every kind of service, but had never heard of one e this. The idea was suggested at e little "Christ's Union Chapel," re at the lake. Yesterday at 6:30 M. we started out with a little fold- g organ in our boat, with about six her boats following, and when we t out a little way we anchored our at and invited the others to tie to rs. We started to sing, and in a w minutes other boats and canoes gan to come from all directions, ving been attracted by the singing. ie hundred and seventeen people re counted in attendance. It was a eat sight. Some of the people were first inclined to keep at a distance; t as song after song was sung, and vitations for them to "tie up" with were repeated, they kept coming ser till at last they were all at- ched to the central group. Dr. eming of Drew spoke on "The Call- g of the Fishermen," putting stress the words, "Come after Me, and I ill make you." It was one of the veetest addresses I have ever heard. then followed briefly with the clos- g of that passage, "Make you fishers men." Another service of the me kind is called for next Sunday.

GRANT COLFAX TULLAR.

Anvil Sparks

..A CONTENTIOUS spirit always nds something to do.

..ONE never learns how to do any- ing by worrying over it.

..THE half-truth outclasses the lain lie as a trouble-maker.

..AN EMPTY mind is like a vacuum eaner; it gathers up the dirt.

..THE church needs you, but not arly so much as you need it.

..TO CHEAT another, one first eats himself into thinking it pays.

..UPLIFTED hands may be those of rayer; but toiling ones are those of aith.

..THE church bell seems to be the nly call to service some of the mem- ers ever hear.

..LIGHTEN the pocketbook a little t church and you are surer to go way with a light heart.

..DON'T be too generous with the ermon; what you take for yourself is o deprivation of another.

The Plague of Flies

SWAT the fly!" is a new national slogan that makes up in efficiency what it lacks in elegance. Newspapers and magazines are teaching it to the people. Photographic exhibits, moving pictures, and scientific experiments are being employed to drive it home. State and municipal authorities are urging it upon their citizens. Even the pulpits ring with the new slogan "Swat the fly!"

One of the ten plagues of Egypt has been upon us for years and we have not realized it. The awful results have been charged to other causes. It has been hard to interest the people seriously in so commonplace a thing as flies. The little pest has been a subject of banter and joke. It has collaborated with the baldheaded man in supplying the professional humorist with material for mirth. At the worst it has aroused only the impatience of irritable humanity. We have fished it from the milk and dug it from the butter. We have shooed it, and laid all manner of traps for it, as an inevitable part of the summer routine, regarding it, the while, merely as something sent to annoy us and try our patience; for after all it was nothing but the common, insignificant house-fly.

But scientists have been busy investigating the formation and habits of the tiny creature, and suddenly they have revealed facts which startle the world. No longer can the common house-fly be treated with indifference or mere petulance. It must receive the most serious and aggressive attention. It is a matter of life and death to thousands of men, women and children.

. . .

THIS busy buzzing little beast, the common house-fly, is the most dangerous and deadly wild animal in all the world. More persons are killed by it every year than by all the other poisonous insects, all the snakes, and all the beasts of prey combined. More persons fall victims each year to the common house-fly than are killed on all the fields of battle throughout the world.

Capture one of the most insignificant looking flies buzzing around your baby's head as she lies sleeping, put the fly under a microscope, and at once its character is revealed. You can hardly refrain from starting back in horror at the thought that your baby is constantly being attacked by so terrible a beast. Each foot of the fly is covered with claws and little sticky hairs. You have seen many times how the fly is continually rubbing his feet together. He does this to scrape off everything that adheres to his feet and legs. These sticky feet are loaded with germs and microbes deadlier than bullets, and the fly industriously wipes them off on your baby's face or on your food.

Flies feed on filth. They flourish only where refuse or filth of some kind exists. They bring typhoid germs from sewage and deposit them in the home. Intestinal diseases which afflict so many thousands of persons come from the feet of the house-fly as they bring the poisonous germs and microbes in direct contact with their human victims.

Man made the fly by carelessness in the disposal of filth. The fly inhabits the dwelling places of man, finding more to encourage it than to discourage. Now man must unmake the fly. The State of Utah has adopted the slogan, "Man must kill the fly or the fly will kill the man." In many cities rewards are being offered for systematic extermination of flies. The tiny assassin, hitherto ignored because of his diminutive size and familiar appearance, now has a price set upon his head. Men and women, and even children are rising to "swat the fly." In one small city the result of a few days' campaign was ten barrels full of dead flies as a public exhibit.

Every family should join the campaign, and by strict cleanliness of rooms and grounds and aggressive warfare against every intruder should banish the house-fly forever from the home.

. . .

IF YOU want a moral lesson from the plague of flies, think it over and discover the things for which the fly is a symbol. You will find it easy to draw the parallel point by point. Few of our boys and girls, or our men and women are attacked and destroyed by the great sins, which are so quickly recognized and so easily shunned. But the little temptations, the little deceits, the little meannesses come swarming into our homes like the poison-bearing flies, and the germs of sin they bring eat into the character with deadly effect.

A malicious bit of gossip told in an easy way about some absent friend or neighbor is laden with poison for the mind. Bzz-zz-zz! Swat that fly!

A cross or sneering rejoinder in some trifling family dispute fastens its sting in the very soul. Buzz-zz-zz! Swat that fly!

Just a little carelessness of the truth in telling of some event or some person starts a disease of dishonesty in the one who tells the story and may carry a vicious hurt to the one who is the subject of remark. Buzz-zz-zz! Swat that fly!

Just a little selfishness; just a little ill-temper; just a little irreverence; just a little laughter at a coarse jest; just a little dallying with impurity; just a little indulgence in sin while it looks harmless—all the swarm of moral insects that have been so common and have seemed so harmless to us because we have not considered their real character—when we examine them through the magnifying lens of a pure heart and a conscience void of offense we find that they are dangerous wild beasts sent upon us out of the pit. Join the campaign of extermination. Swat the fly!

Poems Everyone Should Know

LIFE'S BEAUTY

HOW beautiful it is to be alive!
To wake each morn as if the Maker's grace
Did us afresh from nothingness derive
That we might sing, "How happy is our case!
How beautiful it is to be alive!"

To read in God's great Book, until we feel
Love for the love that gave it; then to kneel
Close unto him whose truth our souls will shrive,
While every moment's joy doth more reveal
How beautiful it is to be alive.

Rather to go without what might increase
Our worldly standing, than our souls deprive
Of frequent speech with God, or than to cease
To feel, through having wasted health or peace,
How beautiful it is to be alive.

Not to forget, when pain and grief draw nigh,
Into the ocean of time past to dive
For memories of God's mercies, or to try
To bear all sweetly, hoping still to cry,
"How beautiful it is to be alive!"

Thus ever towards man's height of nobleness
Strive still some new progression to contrive;
Till, just as any other friend's, we press
Death's hand; and, having died, feel none the less
How beautiful it is to be alive.

HENRY SEPTIMUS SUTTON.

He Wrote "Beulah Land"

"O Beulah land, sweet Beulah land!
As on the highest mount I stand,
I look away across the sea,
Where mansions are prepared for me,
And view the shining glory shore,
My heaven, my home, for evermore."

Edgar Page Stites, the writer of the famous hymn, "Beulah Land," is now an aged man living in modest retirement at Cape May, N. J. His pen name of "Edgar Page" has hidden for three decades the real authorship of a song that has voiced the religious enthusiasm of countless millions.

"It was in 1876 that I wrote 'Beulah Land,'" said Mr. Stites. "I could write only two verses and the chorus of 'Beulah Land' when I was overcome and fell on my face. I could only weep and write no more. That was one Sunday. On the following Sunday I wrote the third and fourth verses and again I was so influenced by emotion that I could only pray and weep. The first time it was sung was at the regular Monday morning meeting of Methodist ministers at 1018 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Bishop McCabe sang it to the assembled ministers. Since then its story is known wherever religious people congregate. I have never received a cent for my songs. Perhaps that is why they have had such a wide popularity. I could not do work for the Master and receive pay for it."

Mr. Stites is now seventy-four years of age, over six feet tall and straight as an arrow. A remarkable thing about him is that the eyes with which he still "looks away across the sea" have never needed glasses. At seventy-six years of age he can still see to read and write without glasses.

Papal Temporal Supremacy

THE arrogant pretensions of the Church of Rome are exemplified in the following extract from a recognized authority on Roman Catholic theology. It is taken from Outlines of Dogmatic Theology, by the Jesuit Sylvester Joseph Hunter, which was published in 1898, bearing the imprimatur of the late Cardinal Vaughan. On page 398 of Vol. I we find:

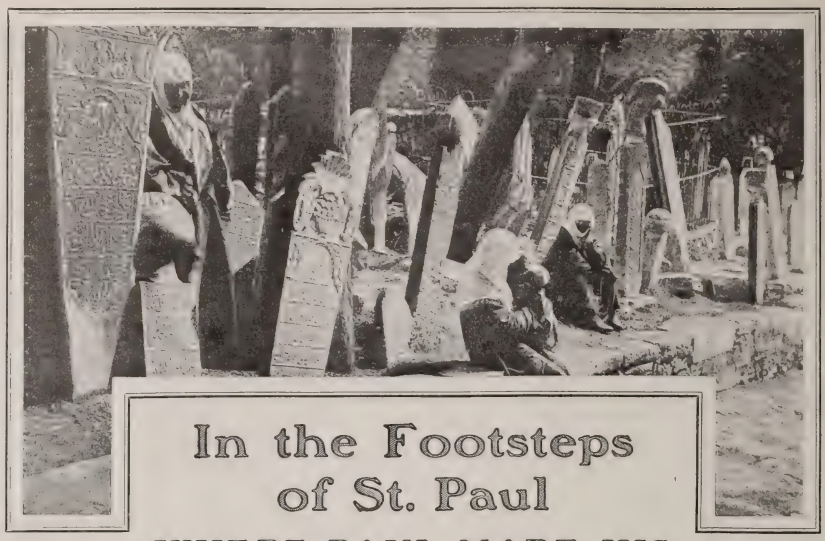
"Every merely human law, though it may be ancient in the church, and even of Apostolic origin, may be swept away by him (the Pope) who at the present day wields an authority equal if not superior to that of the Apostle or other man by whom the law was enacted."—Protestant Observer, London, June 12.

Always Full of Good Things

Please accept my heartiest thanks for the gift of The Christian Herald Almanac for 1912. It is like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD itself, replete with useful information and good things. I have always enjoyed reading it.

Farley, Ia. MRS. GEO. MCGEE.

A Typical Scene in a Turkish Cemetery



In the Footsteps of St. Paul

WHERE PAUL MADE HIS FIRST RECORDED SPEECH

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

President and Founder of the Christian Endeavor Society

THE city where Paul made the first public address that has come down to us through the nineteen centuries that have elapsed since it was uttered is of special interest as we follow in the footsteps of the great apostle, for this address was an epoch-making speech. It sounded the keynote, as it were, of all Paul's ministry. It attracted vast numbers of people to the synagogue where it was delivered. It aroused tremendous enthusiasm, and at the same time provoked unbounded antagonism. It opened the door of the Gospel to the Gentiles, and for that reason alone it is of supreme interest to every modern Christian.

This city of Paul's first speech was Antioch of Pisidia. It is important to designate the city by the province of which it was the capital, since Seleucus, the founder of the city, the great conqueror and ruler of the Seleucid Empire, named no less than sixteen cities after his father Antiochus.

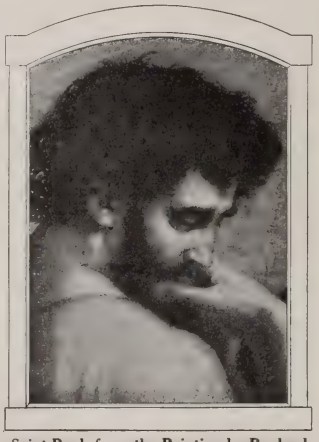
The name Antioch, however, is not repeated in ancient geography so often as many modern names recur in modern geography. There is, for instance, a Washington in almost every State of the Union, and no postmaster would be wise enough to know where a letter addressed to "Newton" should go unless the State was also added. It is interesting, by the way, to note that the name Newton was as popular in the ancient geographies as in the modern, only it was called Neapolis, which meant new town, or new city.

There was a Neapolis through which St. Paul passed on this very journey some twenty miles from Antioch. At another Neapolis on the coast of Macedonia he landed on his way to Philippi on a later journey; and the great modern city of Naples is but another way of spelling Neapolis or New Town.

The modern traveler in visiting Antioch of Pisidia will be likely to start from Constantinople. He will take the steam ferry at the bustling Galata bridge, the most famous and the most crowded bridge perhaps in all the world: he will land at Haidar Pasha after a half hour's sail, where he will take a very comfortable train on the Anatolian Railway, which is built and equipped in first class German style.

For fifty miles the road winds beside the beautiful Sea of Marmora, affording charming glimpses of mountain and ocean, of peaceful bay and bold surf-washed headlands. At Ismid the road begins to rise, and great granite mountains, snow-covered through much of the year, come into view.

Through stern, rocky, barren defiles the railroad winds its way, occasionally skirting a small village of adobe houses, surrounded by vineyards and by groves of olives and mulberries. The silkworm is a chief source of the little wealth of this country, and thousands of acres of mulberry trees furnish him with food.



Saint Paul, from the Painting by Raphael

At some stations one sees some small boys with long poles on which are strung large round rings of bread covered with sesame seeds. At others the boys who purvey eatables for passengers carry apples, strung like beads on a long cord.

After a long day's ride we reach Eski Chehir, a place which every traveler is likely to remember, for here he must spend the night, since no trains in Asia Minor travel in the night time, but tie up at some convenient station and wait for daybreak before resuming the journey.

Bright and early the next morning, before it is fairly light, we are off once more. Every moment is full of interest, since our surroundings are so novel and the route so untraveled. Our fellow travelers themselves are objects of unfailing interest. Their brilliant sashes and turbans add a touch of color to the grayness of the winter days. Their gaily embroidered saddle-bags, their baggy blue trousers, and the bright embroidered handkerchiefs that are around the fezes of the young dandies all remind us that we are far from the Occidental lines of travel.

Our train stops at every principal station some fifte or twenty minutes, a gives us ample time stroll about on t platform and to wat the natives who alwa surround a railw station in every la The stations are w built and substanti and at every one is fountain with runni water, for the Tu always likes to dri and wash in a flowi stream, even though runs only from a s got. At every stati a stampede is ma for the fountain by t third-class passenge with brown water-ja or old kerosene-ca which they fill and ta back to their comrad on the train.

Eski Chehir is w up among the mou tains, some three tho sand feet above t sea, and from now for many days, in f lowing the footsteps St. Paul we find ou selves on the great el vated table-land Asia Minor, a hu and lofty prairie from three tho sand to five thousand feet high.

We are now indeed in the land the classics. This is the very rou that Cyrus the Younger follow with his great army, four hundr years before Christ, in the expe tion of which Xenophon tells us.

At the town of Chai, where we arrive at noon on t second day, the army of Cyrus mutinied and halted f five days, demanding an increase of pay. Thus we s that strikes and quarrels over wages are not altogeth things of modern invention. Near here, too, was foug a great battle a hundred years later, when Seleucus the founder of Antioch, and the mighty ruler of all th region, defeated Antigonus, the one-eyed general Cappadocia.

Shortly before reaching Chai the train makes a lo halt at Afion Kara Hissar, the most picturesque town the route, and in some respects the most picturesque tow in the world, for in the very center of the town there ri a mighty monument of stone, a symmetrical granite h eight hundred feet high. On top of this tremendous ro a Byzantine fortress was built, which seemed in the old days to make the town absolutely impregnable.

About the middle of the afternoon of this second da we reach Ak Shehir. This city was for a long time su posed to be the ancient Antioch for which we are boun but later explorers have found that, beyond a questio Ak Shehir is not Antioch, but the equally ancient city Philomenion. Here we must leave the railway and pr ceed by a tolerably good wagon road, which is, howeve frequently impassable in mid-winter, to Antioch, the ci of Paul's first recorded speech.

Before we view its scanty ruins, let us follow for a fe minutes Paul's route on his first journey to Pisidian A tioch. He had sailed from the port of the more famo Antioch, in Syria, and after various adventures in C prus, which we may describe in later articles, he came to Perga, on the Med terranean coast. But he did not stay long in this fever-stricken city, thou long enough, as some commentators suppose, to contract the malarious disea for which it had so evil a reputation.

It was probably in the month of May that he reached Perga, and here a s disappointment awaited him, f his trusted and beloved disci John Mark, refused to go any fa ther. Paul evidently charged th refusal to cowardice, or at least unworthy weakness, though Barn bas, his stalwart companion, te a more charitable view of his your nephew.

But Mark would go no farthe and was unmoved by Paul's u braidings or the entreaties of Ba nabas, and the two older men to their journey as soon as possib from the hot marshy plains Perga over the rugged mountain from which they could look back the tropical plain so beautiful wh seen from a distance, as it skirt the blue waters of the Mediterr nean.

We can imagine the sick a way-worn traveler sustained the strong arm of his companio as they toiled on day after day, u the steep mountain side throu the narrow gorges, and at la across the great central plai

Continued on next page

Unloading the Camels at the End of the Day's Journey

The Emperor of Japan

Princess Takeda

Crown Prince Yoshihito

Princess Kitashirakawa

The Empress of Japan

JAPAN'S GREATEST EMPEROR

MUTSUHITO, Emperor of Japan, is reported to be lying critically ill in his palace at Tokio, and it is feared that by the time this paper aches the reader, the greatest ruler of Old Nip- n shall have passed away, leaving behind a mem- y which shall be treasured by his country with ide as long as it retains the prestige gained un- r his wise and beneficent rule.

Mutsuhito has been on the imperial throne forty- e years, a longer time than any European mon- ch except Franz Joseph of Austria, but even this a very short span as compared with the life of a tion. Brief as it has been, no country in history n show such strides of advancement and national ogress as has been made by Japan in this short ne. Indeed, short as it is, a further limitation ay be put upon it, for it was not until late in the neteenth century that this Oriental land began awaken from the long sleep in which she had en indulging for many centuries.

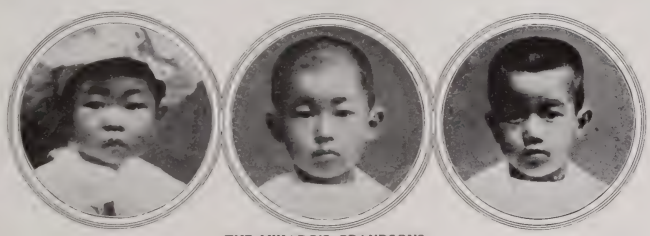
When Mutsuhito was a boy, his untry was little farther advanced Occidental knowledge and civili- tion than some of the South Sea lands. Japanese soldiers then ught with bows and arrows or ith lances behind great barri- des of padded armor. Their ets consisted of rudely con- ructed open galleys of woodwork, r inferior to the Viking craft of thousand years ago. There were railroads in their land, no great anufactories, no agricultural sys- ms, no modern science. The ords Alexander Pope applied to it and China two hundred years ago could have fit- tingly been applied to it then:

> Jealous China, strange Japan;
> Ye are but Dead Seas of man.

But a change was coming; the Japs were soon to awake and discover their own dormant power. This awakening they owe to America, and they ac- knowledge it. Perry taught them an object lesson when they looked upon his ships, the practical em- blems of the might of a Western Power. They learned the power of a cannon and the efficiency of gunpowder and steel. They became fighters, and they have fought so well since as to excite the won- der and admiration of the world. First, they had troubles among themselves and many internal dis- sensions to settle. The patriotic rebellion of 1867 against the Shogun restored the power of the throne. The caste system was swept away in 1871 and the East was for the first time opened to Western civilization. The Satsuma rebellion was crushed in 1877. In 1890 a modern constitution was adopted, and in 1894-5 the might of imperial China, with her populous mil- lions, was humbled in the dust of defeat. But the crowning glory of all was when the snarls of con- tempt of the Russian Bear were turned into howls of dismay and defeat in 1904 by a series of the most brilliant victories the world has ever witnessed.

All these things happened in the time of Mutsu- hito, and Japan stands to-day at the gates of the East, one of the Great Powers of the world. What changes will take place on the passing of Mutsuhito lies, of course, in the future. The Crown Prince Yoshihito, who himself is but recovering from a severe illness, is very popular with all classes. He is thirty-three years old and has already made an honorable record. He is an admiral in the navy and a hero of the war with Russia. Every precaution has been made to meet the situation in the event of the Emperor's death. The newspapers have been warned not to print sen- sational rumors, and all troops whose loyalty is doubted or whose discipline is known not to be up to the mark have been ordered con- fined to their barracks.

There is universal sorrow throughout the Empire for the be- loved ruler. All realize that his passing will mean much to their country. His reign will be a long shining page in Nippon's history.



THE MIKADO'S GRANDSONS

Prince Hikaru — Prince Atsu — Prince Michi

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF ST. PAUL

Continued from preceding page

hich we have already skirted in our journey from onstantinople, until they came to the important oman city, as it then was, of Antioch.

It stood upon a hillside, and was strongly forti- ed, with low gateways in its walls, to admit the coming travelers.

Then it was a city with great white marble build- gs, an immense theater, a temple to the moon, a arble shrine to Bacchus, and other public build- gs that marked it as the capital and most im- ortant city of all that region. To-day only a few attered fragments of its ancient magnificence re- ain; some huge foundation stones, the fragment a splendid aqueduct, and some rock cuttings hich are supposed to be the sanctuary of the chief od of Pisidia—these scant ruins only are left to ll the story of Antioch's ancient glory.

In Paul's time a large and influential colony of ews was found in Antioch, and the synagogue, eir house of worship, was the one building hich, though no relic of it can be found, is yet of upreme interest to the Christian traveler.

Here the great apostle came on his first Saturday Antioch. It was the Jewish Sabbath, and not nly had the Jews assembled for their weekly wor- ip, but also many of the Gentile residents of An- och, who had become converts to Judaism. The uler of the synagogue read the lesson of the day, hich was probably from the first chapter of saiah. The stately words had re-echoed through he synagogue: "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O arth, for Jehovah hath spoken. . . . Come ow and let us reason together, saith Jehovah: hough your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as hite as snow; though they be red like crimson, ey shall be as wool."

Then he laid aside the book, and, seeing the two istinguished strangers, of whom he had doubtless heard, he said to them, "Brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation to the people, say on."

Paul was not slow to accept the invitation. Then began his memorable address which Luke re- cords in the thirteenth chapter of Acts, the first of which we have any record. We will read it again with new interest as we think of its setting in the great synagogue of Antioch. It seems like an echo of the address of the martyr Stephen, the speech that Paul heard in the synagogue at Jerusalem.

We notice, too, with peculiar interest, that in Paul's first word he couples the believing Gentiles with the Jews, "Men of Israel, and ye that fear God." A little later, in the fervor of his eloquence he draws still closer to the Gentile converts. He calls them "brethren," he couples them with the Jews in the very same breath. "Brethren," he says, "children of the stock of Abraham, and those among you who fear God, to us, not to the Jews only, but to all of you who hear me, is the word of this salvation sent forth."

Probably that was the first time in all history that a Jew ever called a Gentile "brother," and placed him on the same exalted platform with the stock of Abraham. Then he goes on to preach to them all, Jews and Gentiles alike, Christ and him crucified, Christ the fulfilment of ancient proph- ecy; Christ the Risen One; Christ the Saviour of sinners and the Atonement for sin.

It was an amazing speech. It was apparently so unexpected that the rulers of the synagogue knew not what to do, but the people desired to hear more of this matter, and urged the apostles to speak again on the next Sabbath. A week passed, and with every day the excitement grew more intense, so that on the following Saturday "almost the whole city," we are told, "was gathered together to hear the word of God."

The great success of the Gospel brought with it, as is often the case, great opposition. The wily Jewish leaders, always ready to stir up opposition against the new religion, found influential allies among the chief women of the city, who had become proselytes of the gate, while their husbands, the magistrates, probably remained attached to their heathen worship. With the help of these powerful allies the Jewish rulers not only contradicted Paul and Barnabas, and blasphemed, but they stirred up such persecution that at last they were able to cast the apostles out of the very borders of their city.

We can easily imagine them, as they made their way, dejected, perhaps, and dispirited, apparently defeated, in the city where at first everything looked so propitious. As they turned back to look upon the city they were leaving, they remembered the words of their Lord, and taking off their san- dals, they shook out the dust that had collected in them as a sign, not only of man's disappointment, but of God's disapproval.

But their six months' stay in Antioch had not been in vain, for many Gentiles had heard the glad tidings and glorified the word of God. A door, wide and effectual, had been opened to the Gentiles, not only of Antioch, but of all the world. Hence- forth they were to be considered by Christians, not as aliens and outcasts, but "brethren," as Paul called them. "Moreover, the Word of the Lord was spread abroad throughout all the region," and not only throughout the region of Antioch, but, start- ing from Antioch, throughout all the Gentile world. Perhaps some such thoughts as these cheered the noble Christian warriors, as they turned their backs on Antioch and their faces toward Iconium.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N.Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Korean Conspiracy Trial

WE HAVE been accustomed to accord to Japan a leading place among those nations that have come to the front in adopting the methods of modern civilization. We have paid tribute to the heroism, the magnanimity, the broad-mindedness of the Japanese statesmen and people. Recent events, however, seem to have changed to some extent the attitude of Japan towards the Western nations. Especially has this been true since the annexation of Korea. Some time ago, the cable despatches announced the discovery of an extensive plot against the life of Governor General Terauchi, in which hundreds of natives were implicated. Lately this matter took a surprising turn when a number of American missionaries in Korea were publicly accused of having fomented the alleged conspiracy. Confessions extorted from Korean prisoners were said to have implicated the Americans as accessories in the plot. These alleged confessions, wrung from helpless men while undergoing physical tortures that recall the doings of the Spanish Inquisition, were read in open court to the amazement of the missionaries. Stirred with indignation, they demanded a hearing that they might refute the slander; but this was peremptorily denied. They were not allowed even to face their defamers. This may be according to Japanese law, but it should be noted that the whole proceeding, from first to last, is opposed to the usage of civilized nations, and is a distinct blot upon the fair fame of Japan. Our State Department has thus far taken no action in the matter, and the Japanese Government has adopted an attitude of non-interference while the trial continues. Beyond the actual defamation itself, there has been no attempt to cause annoyance to the missionaries. But what has been done is more than enough. The names of men so distinguished in missionary work as Bishop Harris, and Messrs. Underwood, McCune and Morris and others well known and beloved for their earnest Christian labors, have been held up to odium and the pastors and teachers in the Christian churches and schools of Korea have been grossly defamed. If the object was to slander Christianity in Korea, where it has made such remarkable progress, it is an attack that must recoil upon its perpetrators. If it be true that the Japanese are seeking to supplant Christianity with Shintoism, they will fail. Christianity ever thrives best in persecution, and the Christians of Korea will multiply as a result of this course. Japan owes much to this country. We have done much to lead her into the paths of civilization and progress, and she has repeatedly acknowledged this indebtedness. We cannot believe that the broad-minded ruler of the Island Empire, who has been prostrated by a serious illness, would ever have assented to such a policy as that which seems to have been followed by the Japanese authorities in Korea, which is altogether unworthy of a great and progressive nation.

The Warnings of History

FROM the days of Luther down to our own time —and indeed in all ages—there have been men of far-seeing spiritual vision who looked down through the future and warned the people of the presence of any element that might ultimately become a foe to religious liberty and freedom of conscience. John Wesley, in 1780, in an article contributed to the Public Advertiser of London, gave warning to England of the danger of Roman Catholic domination in these pregnant words:

> It is a Roman Catholic maxim, established, not by private men, but by a public council, that "no faith is to be kept with heretics." This has been openly avowed by the Council of Constance; but it never was openly disclaimed. Whether private persons avow or disavow it, it is a fixed maxim of the Church of Rome. But as long as it is so, nothing can be more plain than that the members of that church can give no reasonable security to any government of their allegiance or peaceable behavior. Therefore they ought not to be tolerated by any government, Protestant, Mohammedan or pagan.
>
> You may say, "Nay, but they will take an oath of allegiance." True, 500 oaths; but the maxim, "No faith is to be kept with heretics," sweeps them all away as a spider's web. So that still no governors that are not Roman Catholics can have any security of their allegiance.
>
> Again: Those who acknowledge the spiritual power of the Pope can give no security of their allegiance to any government; but all Roman Catholics acknowledge this; therefore they can give no security for their allegiance.

Setting then religion aside, it is plain that upon principles of reason no government ought to tolerate men who cannot give any security to that government for their allegiance and peaceable behavior. But this no Romanist can do, not only while he holds that "no faith is to be kept with heretics"; but so long as he acknowledges either priestly absolution or the spiritual power of the Pope.

Portugal and Belgium heard many similar warnings; but, permitting them to pass unheeded, the trouble came upon them which they are now struggling to overcome. They felt the destructive force of the Roman maxim: "Divide and conquer." It has been the same experience in other lands. Here, where the Roman power is looking eagerly forward to the "conquest of America," the question is one which no American should set aside without serious consideration.

The Struggle for Sea Supremacy

IF THE recent speeches in the British Parliament are to be accepted seriously, we may look forward to a furious rivalry in battleship building between England and Germany for the next half-dozen years. Amazed at the rapidly growing strength of Emperor William's navy, the British see in imagination their supremacy in the North Sea threatened and the day drawing nearer when their naval superiority may be called in question in the Mediterranean as well. They conjure up the specter of a strong Austrian fleet as Germany's sea ally. Britain has resources such as few nations possess for strengthening her sea power. Her colonies can be depended upon and her home treasure would be poured out freely to build all the warships needed. It may well be questioned whether the present scare has a real foundation, or whether Germany, naturally proud of her new navy, actually has any serious designs on the "tight little island." German trade and commerce are expanding rapidly; she now has considerable colonial possessions which may need at any time to be safeguarded, and her foreign commerce needs nurture and protection. Perhaps the next move in the drama of national rivalry may come in the shape of a reassuring declaration of pacific intentions from the lips of the Kaiser himself. Who can tell?

Shall Civilization Triumph?

THE people who shake their heads when the question is asked: "Is the world growing better?" must have felt that a big item was added to their side of the debate when the recent disclosures were made of appalling horrors in connection with th rubber industry in Peru. It would be difficult t find in all history a more hideous page. It mu certainly stagger one's hope that some of the base qualities of the human heart have been entirel outgrown. Evidently they are present, as stron and terrible as ever. The delight in causing pai the eagerness to bruise and grieve and kill for th sake of gain, these things evidently remain in som souls that must be called human.

And one of the very worst features of the whol affair is that the Christian world knew somethin of these horrors five years ago. In 1907, Reginal Enock, F.R.G.S., published, in London and Ne York, a book in which he described the condition of slavery under which the Amazonian rubbe gatherers labor, and the cruelties committed to se cure slaves to carry on the work. During the fiv years since then matters have been growing wors rather than better, and a recent report made fo Parliament by Sir Roger Casement, British consu at Rio de Janeiro, contains the most heartrendin accounts of cruelty. Men and women beaten t death, mothers flogged in the presence of their littl sons to terrorize and penalize the boys for bringin in scant supplies of rubber, ingenious and diaboli cal forms of torture, even the burning alive of men women and children, are included in the dreadfu list of atrocities.

The company under whose auspices these thing were done is in liquidation, and there seems to b some uncertainty whether, under the existing Eng lish laws, the actual promoters of the outrages ca be seized and punished, but arrests of some of th guilty men in Peru have been made, and some o the culprits have fled the country. No British sub ject is accused of actually inflicting the tortures The work was done by underlings who desired to increase their commissions on rubber gathered fo the company.

Peru has already promised that the offenders wil be punished and the practices stopped. Mr. Stuar J. Fuller, special agent of the United States, is o the ground and has been commissioned to see to it that these promises are kept. Great Britain has acquiesced in giving the United States a free hand in the matter, realizing that this government is in a better position than theirs to control South American affairs.

It is certainly a time for the Christian Church t make its power felt. The whole affair reflects seriously on Roman Catholicism, for it has long been established in Peru. The situation seems to call for courageous Protestant missionaries who will go to protect and convert the harassed natives and make a more determined effort than has yet been put forth to evangelize the country. And some punishment must be found for the monsters who, representing a Christian nation, have been guilty, for the sake of commercial gain, of countenancing these pagan practices.

As to the whole matter furnishing proof that the world is growing no better, it must be noted that the modern spiritual consciousness is horror-struck at the revelations, whereas in other days deeds of like character evoked no comment or rebuke. Furthermore, whereas cruelty was once the common practice of mankind, it has now grown almost rare. But what Christian civilization must learn is not only to be shocked at wrongs like these, but to stop them. The forces of the Cross are once more on trial before the world. We can put an end to this South American shame if we will. Shall it be done?

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, August 7, 1912

	PAGE
Happy Expectation	Cover
From a painting by L. Noster
The Korean Puzzle (Illustrated)	771, 780
The Swedish Free Church of America (Illustrated)	772
By Rev. Adolph Liljengren
The Fifth Olympic Contest (Illustrated)	773
Christ and Chronic Infirmity. Sermon	774
By Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.
The Plague of Flies	775
In the Footsteps of St. Paul (Illustrated)	776, 777
By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.
Japan's Greatest Emperor (Portraits)	777
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	778
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	779
Midsummer Joys at Mont-Lawn	780
The Gospel at the Curbstone (Illustrated)	780
Johnny Cup-o'-Tea (Illustrated)	781, 782
Story by Catharine Houghton Griebel
Happy Cozy Corner Days (Illustrated)	783
Our Mail-Bag	784, 785
Transformed by Grace	785
Sunday School Lesson	786, 787
By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
The Death of Andrew Lang (Portrait)	787

Our New Serial

NEXT week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will present the opening chapters of a new and especially attractive short serial story by Cyrus Townsend Brady, entitled:

"A BABY OF THE FRONTIER"

Every subscriber should not only enjoy the reading of this brilliant story, but should get his friends to read it. It is a tale of American frontier life and adventure, of woman's devotion and man's bravery, and of the strange chain of events that led hundreds of heroes to risk their lives for the sake of a little child.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

A Concrete Retaining Wall Swept Away by the Flood

The Ruins of Speer Boulevard, One of Denver's Most Beautiful Roads

Cloudburst in Denver

RECENT heavy rains flooded many parts of the country, causing great damage to life and property, as at Reno, Nev., where twenty bodies were found. The flood in Denver, Colo., was particularly severe, resulting in the death of two, the serious injury of fifteen, and the destruction of $2,500,000 worth of property. Had it not been for a note of warning sounded over the telephone from an unknown source to the city hall just before the crest of the flood reached the city, the losses by death would have been appalling. The rain began at three o'clock Sunday afternoon and continued two hours, one hour with the fury of a cloudburst. At 8:30 o'clock the flood poured down the shallow bed of Cherry Creek, overflowing its banks and flooding the city. Six hundred persons were rendered homeless. The entire residence district from Broadway east to the city limits and from Broadway to the Platte River between Thirteenth Street and Seventh Avenue was two feet under water. The Union Depot was flooded, and the women had to be transported on baggage trucks. Men waded through four feet of water. At daylight hundreds of men, women and children had to be gathered into the City Auditorium to be fed and cared for by the city. Mayor Arnold, the fire and police departments and thousands of heroic citizens were early on the scene to rescue the imperiled and care for them. As is always the case under such circumstances, instances of splendid heroism were recorded. This pathetic story was told: Joseph Bickford hastened to his aged mother's home when the fearful storm broke, and knocking hard at the door got no response. Feeling certain that she had made her escape, he devoted his time to saving the lives of others. The son then instituted a search for his mother among the rescued ones, failing to find her, and on his return to his mother's home to his horror he discovered her drowned body. These cloudbursts were quite common in Palestine, and the great World-Teacher uses them as a symbol of the spiritual storms that come and the stability of character necessary to withstand them.

And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. (Matt. 7:25.)

Saved Eighty-nine Lives

CAPTAIN PATRICK GRACE, aged seventy-three, skipper for nearly sixty years of the boat that plies between New York City and the House of Refuge on Randall's Island, has to his credit the saving of eighty-nine precious lives, many of them at great risk to himself. This is pretty near to a world's record. He retired in June from active service, with his loving cup, his many medals, his badges and flags, and the memory of his perils and glorious rescues as a precious treasure. This old man ought not to slip out of service and notice without some recognition of the grand life driven by the divinest passion. What a privilege some rich man might count it to fix him up for a rainy day. It would be nothing more than ordinary gratitude for the State or city to pension this humble servant, so loyal to a sacred trust. There are hardy captains that fight the storms, there are brave commanders of vessels that discover lands; there are able masters of floating palaces that race the ocean with goods and men; but brave and great as they are, they are not so much to be praised or honored as this modest skipper who saved eighty-nine lives, and made no fuss about it whatever, and never thought he had done anything but his duty, such service being his joy and supreme life passion. What a zeal in the salvation of souls the life of this blessed old hero should inspire! This passion for soul-saving is thus described:

For they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief. (Heb. 13: 17.)

Gunda Attacks His Keeper

GUNDA of the Bronx Zoo, one of the largest elephants in captivity, turned upon his friend and keeper, Walter Thuman, and nearly killed him. Thuman, who is the only person Gunda will allow about him, was in the cage cleaning it out, when, without any provocation or warning, the elephant swung his trunk through the air, and with the impact of a rushing locomotive struck his keeper across the breast, hurling him fifteen feet with a crash against the iron wall. The beast tried to trample the man to death, but his own great head was in the way. He then thrust his huge tusk into the man's leg, making a hole in it three inches deep. Charging again, he struck one tusk against the wall, breaking it off and leaving five pounds of broken ivory on the floor. Richards, a fellow workman, answered Thuman's screams for help, and with a pitchfork drove Gunda away and rescued the wounded man, who was sent in a serious condition to the hospital. Gunda is from Assam in northeast India. He is sixteen years old. He was captured in 1903. In 1904 Colonel O. H. Payne gave $3,000 for him and presented him to the Bronx Zoological Society. He was then six feet seven inches high and weighed 3,740 pounds. Now he is eight feet nine inches high and weighs more than four tons. He used to be kind and often carried the children on his back about the park; now he is sullen and his man-killing instinct is strongly marked. Gunda, after this last performance, has been given up as a hopelessly bad elephant, and has been condemned to chains the rest of his life. Some people are like Gunda, essentially mean and murderous in their disposition, and there is no telling when they may break out in homicidal attempts. Gunda does not know any better, and is not so much to blame; people do know better and are to blame. Christ traces such evil impulses in the human heart to Satan.

Ye are of your father the devil. He was a murderer from the beginning. (John 8: 44.)

The Bubonic Peril

THE bubonic plague does its continuous work of death in certain parts of the Far East, where the crowded and none too cleanly millions furnish food for it, and where it stays year after year with a never decreasing rate of mortality. It has for a long time cursed parts of South America, and we have had every reason and plenty of time to provide against its entrance into this country. Now we hear that it has got a foothold in Porto Rico, and our own fellow citizens are threatened with this pestilence. Rats carry fleas, and fleas carry the plague; but we suggest that the flea-and-rat danger has been overemphasized, and that the real carrier of the disease is in most cases the patient suffering from the malady. Anything short of the most rigid quarantine of ships from infected ports, or most complete isolation of suspects, is a crime. We cannot understand why the United States could not keep out, not simply rats and fleas, but infected people, who were unquestionably allowed to land in Porto Rico. Just one infected person allowed to land is enough to blight the whole island. Some of the specialists of the Health Department who were sent to Porto Rico to investigate the plague are reported to be quite pessimistic, holding that the infected rats cannot be kept out of the United States. We do not share such discouraging opinions. The bubonic plague must be kept out of these States, and we have faith enough in the scientific ability and the conscience of the State and Federal health officials to believe that an incessant warfare will be waged on this deadly plague, and that infection from patients or rats or fleas will be prevented. Among the Jews leprosy, not nearly so dangerous as the bubonic plague, was most rigidly isolated, the king himself being no exception to the rule.

And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the Lord. (II. Chron. 26: 21.)

City in Darkness

THE electric lights of Newark, N. J., went out a few nights since, and many districts of the city were in pitchy darkness. A slight fire in the power house of the Public Service Electric Company of Newark caused by the blowing out of an oil-cooled engine caused the trouble. Burning oil was spattered over the insulation of the heavy cables and made them useless. How necessary to have all the connections in good order to send the subtle current with its light to the streets and buildings! How necessary it is for the Christian to be vitally related to Christ, the fountain of life and light, if there would be personal illumination and outer influence!

In him was life; and the life was the light of men. (John 1: 4.)

$35,000 for Saving Child

WILLIAM BUSBY, formerly a soldier in the British army and now a hornplayer in an orchestra in Melbourne, has been left $35,000 under these romantic circumstances: Ten years ago Mr. Busby rescued from drowning a child who had fallen over the Chelsea Bridge into the Thames. The father of the child handed him $50 and said: "You will hear from me later." And he did in the news communicated to him by cablegram that the father of the child had died, and left him $35,000 in his will. The young soldier in his manly act had no idea of reward. He was utterly unselfish and took the risk of his own life in the rescue. But the father was grateful, and did the gracious thing by him. Sooner or later every good act will bring its reward. It may not be in dollars and cents, but it will come in coin more valuable. The apostle refers to this law in these words:

Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. (I. Cor. 3: 8)

THE KOREAN PUZZLE

The chief danger is from the possibility that the sensational press in Japan may exploit the false reports to the damage of the representatives of Christianity, but this on the other hand will be corrected by the utterances of the more sober-minded and influential papers of the country. The whole incident is of temporary rather than permanent importance. Though for a time we shall undoubtedly be caught in its heat and distress, yet without doubt when the whole thing has been probed to the bottom and the real truth discovered, things will resume their normal condition. and as is well known, the normal condition in Japan is not at all antagonistic to the Christian propaganda. It must not be forgotten, however, that the Christian Church will have to reckon with the misunderstanding that seems to prevail among the police and gendarmerie concerning the purpose and the privilege of the Christian Church in Korea. A misunderstanding may have arisen between the local authorities at Syenchun and the local church authorities, but it is incredible that out of a small affair like that this great complication should have arisen. In common with other missionary leaders in the United States, I am awaiting further light on the whole situation in its genesis and its development and its outcome."

Continued from page 771

Much less lenient is the opinion expressed by Mr. Seek Hun Kimm, president of the New ... Korean Patriotic Society. In a statement rece... issued Mr. Kimm declares: "Korea is a Chris... nation to-day and the Japanese are seeking to ... plant this religion with Shintoism."

While waiting confirmation of ei... side, American Christians earnestly h... that the opinions expressed by Dr. J... and the other missionary leaders are ... rect and that this episode will not in ... degree block the progress of the Ch... tian faith in old Korea, where alre... one hundred and twenty thousand pe... are said to have accepted Christ ... many flourishing churches are in e... tence.

While authorities at Washington h... followed closely the Korean reports, ... official action was taken as late as J... 26, and it is not likely that any repres... tations to the Japanese Government ... be made. No direct charges were m... against American citizens, and while i... believed that there must have been s... official pressure brought to bear to ext... the confessions implicating the Am... cans whose names were thus brou... into the trial, this in itself would not c... stitute a cause for official representati... to Japan from Washington.

A Korean Middle Class Christian

A Scene by the Roadside, Korea

MIDSUMMER JOYS AT MONT-LAWN

THIS summer is an unusually busy one at our Children's Home. Ever since the opening day, the dormitories have been kept full and every little snowy cot has its tiny occupant. Applications have been received in behalf of hundreds of other little tenement dwellers, and any of our readers who have not yet sent in their contributions have now an opportunity to do so, and to make some little child of poverty happy for ten whole blissful, health-giving days at the Children's Paradise.

Among the letters received from friends of the Home there are many that express hearty appreciation of the Fresh-Air work. H. H., Martin, Mich., encloses a contribution to the Endowment Fund, and writes: "It is the accrued savings in a toy bank of years ago by my son Howard. He was a frail but good boy, and after a week's illness in the autumn of '93 he was called home. I have been in New York enough to know the needs of a little fresh air for the poor waifs of that city." Mrs. L. S. E. writes, expressing cordial appreciation of the kind treatment accorded to her beneficiaries, three little brothers from Newark, N. J. "It was the first glimpse they ever had of the beautiful Hudson and the lovely country along its shores." Mrs. L. H. H., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes that her little son came home from Mont-Lawn "so well and full of loving fun and happy and brown as a berry. He just loves Mont-Lawn and his teachers. Each evening we sit together and he sings the dear Mont-Lawn songs." A poor mother in the Bronx, New York, writes, appealing for an outing for her two little boys, who are sickly. Her husband is in the hospital as the result of an accident.

A widow on the West Side, New York City, pleads for her three little children, who are eager to go to Mont-Lawn, and for whom she cannot afford to pay for a holiday. A missionary on Eighth Avenue says she has thirty poor children who are looking longingly to her to get them accepted for the Children's Home. Mary D., West One Hundred-and-Twenty-third Street, New York, writes in behalf of a poor little deaf lad, who is also somewhat lame, but whose eyes lighten up amazingly when told that he may go "to the country." These will probably all be accepted and sent to our Children's Home within the next few weeks.

There have been many visitors at the Home recently, a large proportion of whom came there this season for the first time. All unite in expressing their admiration of the work. The handsome new bathing pavilion is now nearly completed and will go into operation shortly. It will be a great boon to the children.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR OUR CHILDREN'S HOME NOT PREVIOUSLY ACKNOWLEDGED.

In the name of Howard W. Herbert	$250.00	Jno. F. Burke	1.00
Geo. P. Ahlf	10.00	Mrs. Sarah J. Burton	5.00
Helen T. K. Brunner	1.00	Frances H. Butler	21.00
Emery W. Buckley	1.00	Mrs. J. W. Butler	1.00
M. J. Buechler	4.00	J. P. Button	5.00
Dr. E. Burd	6.00	Mrs. J. F. Byxbee	1.00
James W. Burdette	5.00	Mrs. H. P. Calkins	3.00
L. H. Burdick	1.00	Mrs. H. A. Camp	25.00
		E. F. Campbell	1.00
J. R. Campbell	1.00	Albert Clark
Mark Campbell	1.00	Miss E. V. Clark
Mr & Mrs J F Camper	2.50	Wm. B. Clark
Annie F. Carlton	3.00	Geo. W. Clendening
Mrs. Carpenter	1.00	Mrs. J. C. Clutts
Mrs. C. Carpenter	5.00	C. T. Coates
Ira Carr	1.00	L. B. Coddington
E. M. Cary	1.00	Ruth Colby
Mrs. C. R. Casselman	1.00	Capt. C. A. Colcord
A. M. Cate	1.00	E. S. Cole	3
Fred B. Chaffee	1.00	Mrs. A. Collins
Joseph Chalfin	1.00	Emma C. Collins
C. W. Charles	3.00	Salome S. Collins
J. H. Christie	5.00	Susan Collins	2
Julius W. Christie	1.00	Casper K. Conger
Mrs. J. L. Church	3.00	S. Hettie Conover
Geo. S. Clapp	10.00	Thornton Conover
		James D. Cook	1
		Mrs. L. Corning
		Mrs. E. S. Corse
		Charles E. Corwin
		Mrs. Fred Coulter
		W. W. Cover
		Harry L. Crabtree
		Mrs. E. M. Crandell
		Prudence J. Crawford
		Wm. Crebbin
		George W. Crossman	2
		W. H. Cryne
		Alfred Curtis
		Mary B. Curtis
		B. W. Danielson
		Addie Dasch
		Miss Emma M. Davis
		Mrs. Leila A. Davis
		Sadie N. Davis
		Andrew H. Dawley
		Mrs. M. Day
		Mrs. T. B. Dean
		Vincent De Angelis
		H. F. Dernell	21
		J. Dettmar
		S. S. Dickson	10
		Mrs. M. G. Donaldson
		Wilbur L. Doremus
		Charles Dorr	10
		Miss Alice E. Dougan
		A. DuBois	10
		Josephine M. Dunham
		Mrs. Annie Dunn
		Lottie L. Duren
		Mrs. Sarah D. Dwyer	21
		Annie M. Eastman	21
		Mrs. A. E. Eaton	21
		Ida Eberly
		N. K. Eby
		Mrs. George H. Eck
		Mrs. J. G. Edmonds
		Mrs. Charles Edwards
		Mrs. J. D. Eggleston	10
		O. S. Ellefson
		Charles I. Engel
		Miss F. M. English	25
		C. Engstrom & Wife
		E. J. Ennis
		Mrs. Webster C. Estes
		Mr. & Mrs. E. R. Evans
		Mrs. Lillie Evans
		P. C. Evans
		Mrs. E. F. Evitts
		Miss Lizzie K. Faure
		Mrs. Chas. Ferguson
		Theo. Ferguson	10
		Wm. Ferguson
		Mrs. E. Ferrell
		M. L. Fielder
		T. D. Filkins
		J. Wilmer Fisher	10
		D. W. Fitch
		H. N. Flannagan
		Mrs. Alice E. Ford
		A. L. Forsyth
		Mr. & Mrs. D. W. Fountain
		Esther J. Fox
		G. H. Franklin
		C. H. Freeman
		Mrs. E. J. Freeman
		Mrs. Mattie Freman	10
		Mrs. C. R. French
		G. W. French
		Mrs. L. F. French
		Mrs. M. J. French

THE GOSPEL AT THE CURBSTONE

AN OPEN AIR MEETING IN PRINTING HOUSE SQUARE

THE National Bible Institute of 156 Fifth Avenue last year held over eleven hundred distinct out-door evangelistic meetings with an aggregate attendance, by actual count, of 165,000 men, women, and children. Inquiries revealed that nearly eighty per cent. of the auditors attended no church or were without church membership. This year the work is carried on on a larger scale, as more speakers, singers, and helpers than ever are enlisted in the out-door evangelistic campaign, which has for its ideal an every-day evangelism carried on continuously in the teeming metropolis. Six years ago Don O. Shelton and his associate, R. Willis Reed, under the branches of one of the trees that beautify Madison Square Park, held their first meeting at high noon, and meetings have since that time been continued there and at Union Square and other dense centers of city life. Though theological students and ministers help in the work, the aim has been to enlist the laymen systematically in the meetings in business centers on business days. Now the speakers are largely alert, active, magnetic, Christ-loving and loyal business men. Like a business man's church, it ministers to the unshepherded, uncared for, and unsaved crowds, who need and are hungry for God's Word. To speak on the curb and hold the crowd one needs a good vocal apparatus and a bright mind and modern vocabulary, without cant or over-religious Latinized words. But the crowd, from hundreds to a thousand, as at Printing House Square, will listen as long as you talk from a saved experience to lost men and tell them of Jesus only. The curb-stone crowd will leave you to speak to the pavement if you do not have a vital message worth while for time-driven men. Out of touch with God and far from their best, multitudes gather to hear the noon-day Gospel and are held, touched and saved.

The work is supported by voluntary contributions. Hugh R. Munroe is treasurer, and Evangelist David Hughes, a converted Welsh opera singer, is director of the out-door campaign, where often his sweet voice is heard pleading with the men to give their hearts to the Lord, or singing some sweet Gospel hymn like "Saved by Grace," "My Lord and I," or a melody born in the Welsh revival. In Mr. Shelton's office a conference and prayer meeting is held each day by the workers for God's blessing on the men and their messages.

JOHNNY CUP-O'-TEA

By Catharine Houghton Griebel

JOHNNY cleared his throat and asked for a cup of tea in his politest manner. It was a crisp evening in October and the hatchet-faced man who stood in the doorway shivered as he peered into the gathering dusk. Johnny s surprised to see the man there. Only two nths before, his wanderings had brought him vn this identical road and a woman, a weary-king little woman, had given him his breakfast. was an exceedingly warm day, he remembered, d she was bending over a hot stove frying crul-s. She had given him some, too, and they were icious.

Johnny had occasion to see many people in his vels and he had become a keen observer of his low men. That was why, instead of asking for nething to eat, he always asked for a cup of tea. "Most every one'll give yer tea," he explained, n' it's mighty few won't be offering yer a bite to with it."

Ever since Johnny could remember he had been tramp, and he decided he must have been born e; for his earliest recollection was of lying flat on back in a great field, watching the clouds sail and feeling glad he was alive.

ice, when he grew older, he d tried to work in a shop, but was so utterly miserable that gave it up and went back to e road.

Work! Why, Johnny was per-ctly willing to work—but he anted to choose his own time r doing it. For days at a ne he would loaf along the untry highways, watching the rds and squirrels until he was eary, and then, creeping off to a clump of trees, have a ap, lying on his face with the hell of the cool earth in his strils. He often wondered w any one could sleep in a bed the summertime, when he ight, if he chose, lie under e stars and wake with the rds at rosy dawn! When the ngs of hunger assailed him, would amble to the nearest rmhouse, and, asking mod-tly for a cup of tea, be served ith a hearty meal of corned ef and cabbage by the good-atured housewife. For every ie knew Johnny Cup-o'-Tea, id hardly one of them but knew at he could do more work— hen he felt like it—than any vo men in the neighborhood.

And so he had grown from oung Johnny to middle-aged ohnny, and now—well, his hair as scant and gray, and his old gs were twisted with rheu-atism. He had a number of old coats which he ore, one over the other, according to the weather. o-day he wore four and consequently looked quite obust, though really he was getting so thin that a rong blast from the north almost lifted him off ie ground.

He shifted uneasily from one foot to the other as ie man in the doorway continued to stare. He as really very hungry and he had gone out of his ay to come to this particular house. He remem-ered the excellent crullers.

"I hope she ain't dead," he thought. And he re-alled the frailness of the little woman.

Then the Man spoke.

"I ain't got much in the house, but I'll find uthin' fer ye, Johnny."

Once inside, Johnny Cup-o'-Tea looked curiously bout for the Woman. "She must 'a' died," he oncluded, gazing pityingly at the Man as he set he tea-kettle over the fire. The red tablecloth was wry, and there were ashes on the floor by the tove. The kitchen-towel hung from its roller treaked with grime. There was a pile of dirty ishes in the dish-pan, and a basket of half-decayed pples on the shelf. A geranium, by the window, rooped, withered and sickly, and half its leaves ay yellowed on the floor.

A loaf of unwholesome-looking bread was rought from the pantry, and this, together with huge wedge of strong cheese, washed down with veak tea, formed an evening meal for the two men.

At first they talked about the weather and the rops; of the early frost that had killed the corn; f the other damage it had done in some localities.

"I hed a fine lot o' inyuns, though," remarked the Man as he gulped down a second cupful of tea. "Fine!"

"I noticed 'em when I wuz here in August," said Johnny. Had he not lain by that very stone wall all one afternoon, and then pulled a few of these same onions to eat on his bread for supper?

"Wuz you here?" asked the Man eagerly.

"Yep! Hed my breakfast right at this 'ere table."

The Man carefully buttered another slice of bread before he spoke. He took a huge bite, and while he chewed it, seemed debating what he should say next.

"Ye saw her then?" he asked after a few minutes, looking over the top of Johnny's head.

"Hm-hm. She give me a right good breakfast, too. She was fryin' nut-cakes when I come in." Johnny grew eloquent. Perhaps now he should hear what had ailed the Woman. But the Man ate the entire slice of bread before he spoke again. Then, as if he had dropped the subject, he said:

"I—I've hed the pump fixed. It's been broke fur more'n a year. She hed t' tug most o' the water from the well."

Drawn by Corwin Knapp Linson

"I came to-night to git out his winter flannels . . . I wuz afraid he couldn't find 'em"

Johnny made no reply, but he made up his mind that it would have done the Woman more good if the pump had been fixed while she was alive.

"I've got a big box outside the kitchen door now —t' keep wood in. She uster bring it all in from the shed an' it's quite a ways when it's bad weather."

Again Johnny ruminated on the tardiness of the Man in making things easier for his wife.

"I got a good bit o' cash fur my inyuns," continued the Man, "an' I wus calculatin' to give her some fur clothes. I been savin' t' git some new-fangled machine fur threshin', but—" his voice trailed off and he put down the piece of cheese he had cut without tasting it.

"I—didn't—know how much I thought o' her till she—"

Johnny interrupted. "That's the way o' the world, Mr. Man. When—they're dead—then—we know."

The Man stared at him with wide eyes.

"Dead!" He swallowed uncomfortably. "She ain't dead, Johnny. She's—she's run off—an' left me!"

"Left yer!" Johnny's eyes showed his astonishment.

"That's what she did—an'—I dunno es I blame her. I—didn't mean fur t' make her unhappy—but she'd gone on—uncomplainin' fur so many years, I—thought 'twas all right.

"That day she'd asked me fur money fur a new dress. Said she hadn't hed one since Minnie—thet's our little gal thet died when she wuz a baby—wuz born. Wall, she always looked clean an' good in her calico dress an' I said that wuz enough fur her. I wanted t' buy a new horse, an' paint the barn, I told her. An' then she up an' spoke her little piece.

"I never knowed she felt like thet afore. Why, we had been married twenty years come spring, an' —she'd never said a word—never complained once in all thet time. Three years ago I wus goin' to git a new stove an' she wus so pleased! Then I lost two cows an' hed t' put the money into s'more an' she never even said she wuz disappinted.

"But this day she let it all out. I'd never thought about it thet way afore—an' I went right down t' the village an' bought her the best silk dress Bill Pierce hed in his store. An' when I come home—she—wuz—gone.

"Et first I thought she'd come back in a day 'r two, an' when she didn't come I tried t' find out where she wuz. But 'twant no use. I've been everywheres. I can't find hide nor hair o' her.

"After the second week I didn't lock the back door nights any more, hopin' she'd show up—but—it's so long now I'm thinkin' she won't never come home.

"I bought a new stove, too—an' a mattress fur the spare chamber. She's always wanted one. I've got all the things she's ever spoke of, an'—"

The Man bowed his head on his hands and Johnny Cup-o'-Tea knew he was crying.

"I'm—I'm awful sorry fer ye," stammered Johnny. "Ef ye could only find her, why, p'raps she'd give yer another chanst. Wimmen is patient critters, mostly, an' fergivin' too."

The Man shook his head and began to clear away the dishes.

"S'posin' we wash up them dishes," suggested Johnny, hoping to divert the Man.

The Man hesitated. "I usually let 'em go fer a week an' then do 'em all t'onct," he remarked.

But he filled the kettle, and while they waited for the water to heat, Johnny took off a few of his coats in preparation for his task. He hadn't done a day's work for a week now. It had been such glorious weather, he felt that he must enjoy it while it lasted; for winter would soon be here and he couldn't stand the cold as he used to.

The Man grew cheerful as they worked, and when the last dish was set in its place and the fire banked for the night, he insisted that Johnny sleep on the lounge in the kitchen.

"I'd let yer sleep in the spare chamber ef 'twan't fer that new mattress," he said.

But Johnny declared that he preferred the lounge. Indeed it was much more like his usual bed than the mattress would have been, for it was as hard as the rockiest pasture-land and it was covered with a gay flowered carpet that would have put to shame any field on the face of the earth! And Johnny Cup-o'-Tea slept sweetly.

And as he slept he dreamed of the little Woman who belonged there in the house. She seemed to be frying an indeterminable number of crisp, brown crullers, but whenever Johnny tried to reach one it disappeared. And, when he tried to induce the Woman to give him one, she disappeared also. Johnny was so unhappy to think that she was gone that he wakened and lay for some time watching the bright isinglass eyes in the stove.

"That's a mighty good stove," he thought drowsily. "It's a pity—"

The doorknob turned softly. Johnny's heart stood still a full second. The door opened—and in the dim light he could see the slight form of the Woman. He knew her in a minute, and, when she carefully lighted a candle she had brought with her, he spoke softly.

"It's only me—Johnny Cup-o'-Tea—ma'am," he breathed—not to startle her.

She dropped the candle, but it was quickly recovered, and Johnny explained his presence.

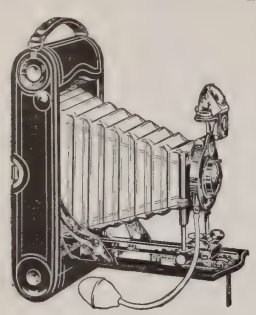
"I'm goin' to the city to-morrow," said the Woman in a whisper.

"He tol' me ye wuz gone," murmured Johnny.

"I—come—to-night to git out his winter flannels," continued the Woman. "They're put away in the chest an' I wuz afraid he couldn't find 'em. It's

Continued on next page

If it isn't an Eastman, it isn't a Kodak.



KODAK

means photography with the bother left out—means that the once difficult processes have been so simplified that you can readily take good pictures by following the perfectly simple directions that accompany each camera.

The Kodak Advantage

Kodaks load in daylight; plate cameras require plate holders which must be loaded in a dark-room. Kodak films are light; glass plates are heavy; Kodak films are non-breakable; glass plates are fragile. Kodak films may be developed in a dark-room but are preferably developed in the Kodak Film Tank in broad daylight. Glass plates must either be developed in a dark-room or loaded into a tank in the dark-room—the film cartridge system is the only practical means of entirely eliminating the dark-room. You may easily develop your own films or may send them by mail for development. Sending glass plates by mail is risky.

With a Kodak there are no extra attachments to buy; it is complete, ready for use. With a plate camera you must buy extra plate-holders or it is of no use you—remember this in counting the cost.

Kodak films give better results for the amateur than glass plates because they have the orthochromatic and non-halation qualities that help overcome the harsh lighting conditions that he encounters.

Plate camera manufacturers advertise the fact that professinal photographers use glass plates and that therefore you should. Its true that professional photographers use plates in their studios for their regular work because their dark-room is only a few feet from the spot where their camera stands. For their vacation trips they use Kodaks mostly, just the same as other folks.

Kodak photography means less trouble, better pictures.

Ask your dealer or write us for the illustrated Kodak catalogue. Kodaks $5.00 and up, Brownie cameras, they work like Kodaks, $1.00 to $12.00.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,

433 State Street, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

ZOBO THE MUSICAL WONDER. YOU CAN PLAY IT Without Learning. Sing into the mouthpiece. Zobo does the rest. For Home, Church and Sunday School Entertainments. Price from $1.00 up. Full information FREE on request. STRAUSS MFG. CO., 366 Broadway, Dept. 19, New York

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1865 Hillsboro, Ohio

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, prizes, etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

JOHNNY CUP-O'-TEA

Continued from preceding page

growin' cold an' ef he don't put 'em on early he's likely t' git a cold that'll hang on all winter."

She disappeared into the next room and Johnny could hear her moving softly about. "It's a wonder he wouldn't hear her," thought Johnny. Then he remembered that the Man had closed the door after him.

In a few moments the Woman returned with the garments which she looked over carefully.

"I'll leave 'em in the closet right by his coat," she said. "Then he can't help but see 'em."

"I wish't ye'd stay," said Johnny after a while.

"Stay!" the Woman looked at him indignantly.

"Why—yes—ma'am. He feels purty bad t' think ye've gone," explained Johnny.

"Humph!" She began to put on her coat.

"That's right," continued the old man. "He's bought a new stove."

" 'Bout time! The other's been wore out fer five years."

"He's got a wood-box by the door."

"Noticed it when I come in," said the Woman shortly.

"An' the pump's fixed—an'—an' there's a new mattress in the spare chamber—an'—" Johnny thought desperately. If he could only remember all the things the Man had done.

"He's awful sorry he wuz so clost with ye," pleaded Johnny. "He's sold his inyuns an' got a right good price fer 'em, an'—an'—he bought ye a new dress. Yes ma'am! A bumbazine dress! Or wuz it silk?"

The Woman stood quite near Johnny now, and in the flickering light of the candle he could see tears in her eyes.

"He's about—sick—from not bein' able t' find ye. He can't work nor do nothin'. He's got everythin' ye ever spoke of, he says, an' he'll git ye anythin' else ye want, I reckon. He's mighty fond o' ye, ma'am—ye'd oughter hear him talk! An' that day ye went off—that very day—he'd—bought—ye—that—dress! Silk! I'm sure he said silk—an' when he brung it home ye was gone! I wish't ye would stay, ma'am. He—he needs ye bad."

The soft light of early dawn crept through the kitchen window while the two talked. The roosters began to crow and the sparrows in the maple tree by the door chirped noisily. The Woman noticed the drooping geranium in the window and began to pick up the scattered leaves. And all the while Johnny pleaded for the Man!

"An' thet dress, ma'am, he bought ye! The—best—one—Bill Pierce—hed—in—his—store!"

The Woman took down the soiled towel and put a clean one in its place. She brushed up the ashes by the stove, and straightened the red tablecloth.

Encouraged, Johnny talked on, and, when the sun began to show through the apple trees, the Woman took off her hat and coat and started up the fire.

Johnny's eyes were very happy when he saw her take down the frying-pan and begin to slice some bacon. He put on his coats, and, under plea of a promised day's work at a neighboring farm, started for the door.

"He'll be awful glad ye're here," he said from the threshold, "awful—glad."

The Woman smiled, a pale little smile, and continued her preparations for breakfast.

"Come around another day an' I'll give ye some crullers," she said.

Then came heavy steps on the stairs, and Johnny Cup-o'-Tea clapped on his faded hat and was gone. A moment more and he would have heard the glad cry of the Man as he gathered the little Woman in his arms to kiss away her tears.

Among the Workers

—A READER IN PASADENA, CALIF., writes us that Pasadena, contrary to a very widespread impression, for the last four years has not been a "dry" city. The "drys," however, have not lost hope of yet succeeding in their campaign.

—REV. W. BROWNE, of England, a preacher well known in general evangelical work in that country, is visiting the United States. He will accept engagements to speak in missions, etc., and may be addressed in the care of this journal.

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN recently concluded one of the best union meetings ever held at New Kensington, Pa. A large tabernacle erected by different churches held over 109,000 people during the campaign. Over a thousand conversions were reported.

—W. FRED LONG, secretary of the Mississippi Sunday School Association, Jackson, Miss., writes that they are doing an exceptional thing in having a negro secretary working among his own race. "He is making good and we are making history against no little opposition. We believe God will give us the friends we need to help us in this work."

—REV. H. D. SHELDON, evangelist, Auburn, N. Y., assisted by William McEwan, Binghamton, N. Y., recently conducted a very successful evangelistic campaign in the First Congregational Church, Huntington, W. Va. The whole congregation has been spiritually revived, and about thirty professed conversion, most of whom have, or will in the near future, come into church fellowship.

—HOME MISSION WEEK is to be celebrated by the Protestant churches of America from November 17 to 24. The committee having this matter in charge is desirous of securing articles on twelve subjects which are to be presented each week during the three months' preliminary period. Details will be given upon request by Mr. Charles Stelzle, executive secretary, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

—MISS CORINNA SHATTUCK, who labored for seventeen years at Ourfa, Asiatic Turkey, was one of the world's great heroines. During the massacre of the Armenians in 1895 she personally saved over three hundred lives by her heroism, and later built up a great industrial work and school in Ourfa, whereby the widows have been enabled to support themselves and the orphans educated and industrially trained. She remained at her post until a few weeks before her death, May 22, 1910. It is proposed to honor her memory by erecting a building in Ourfa to be called "Shattuck Memorial Hall" for educational and religious purposes in connection with the orphanage and schools she founded.

—THE MOVEMENT FOR church unity received vigorous sanction in the resolution recently passed by the bishops, clergy and laity of the Episcopal Church, in convocation at Clarendon, Tex. The resolution was as follows: "Resolved, That this convocation heartily place on record its earnest desire for Christian union, and as an end thereto recommends (a) the clergy and laity to avail themselves of any opportunity for Christian co-operation which does not involve a sacrifice of church principles, and (b) that the clergy seek opportunities to confer with their brethren of other communions concerning the principles of Christian union."

—ONE OF THE MOST prominent and best educated citizens of Newark, O., passed away when Dr. Wray Beattie was called to his reward last February. Dr. Beattie was born in Ireland, January 6, 1831. When he was two years old his parents moved to this country. He was graduated from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1852, receiving later many college degrees, among them that of doctor of medicine. He became a professor in Iowa Wesleyan University and was subsequently made vice-president of that institution. For a time he was engaged in missionary work in South America. Thirty years of his long and useful life were spent in the practice of medicine, chiefly in Washington, D. C.

—DR. J. H. ROMIG writes from Seward, Alaska, thanking THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for their generosity in sending pecuniary help for some of the poor diseased and needy natives for whom it bought much-needed medicines. He says further: "I received a check of the same amount for a like purpose about two years ago, which I applied on the account of a destitute miner, whom misfortune had brought to my hospital. I amputated his limb and boarded and cared for him for seven months before he was able to care for himself. Last year we treated over eighty natives gratis. One of these was going blind. The others needed treatment for different ailments and as they were poor no compensation could be had from them, and there was no source from which we could secure such. There are continual calls for medicine and surgical aid and we are doing all we can to alleviate suffering, among those unable to pay for care and who are far from the aid of a charitable institution. Alaska has no organized charity except what is done by the Missions, and the small amount carried on by schools and the gratuitous work of physicians."

Chiclets

REALLY DELIGHTFUL

The Dainty Mint Covered Candy Coated Chewing Gum

Chiclets are the refinement of chewing gum for people of refinement. Served at swagger luncheons, teas, dinners, and parties. The only chewing gum that ever received the unqualified sanction of best society. It's the pep-permint—the true mint.

Look for the Bird Cards in the packages. You can secure a beautiful Bird Album free.

For Sale at all the Better Sort of Stores

5c. the Ounce and in 5c., 10c. and 25c. Packets

SEN-SEN CHICLET COMPANY
Metropolitan Tower
New York

Shirr-Ruffle Bust Form

New Model
A Perfect Figure for $1.

If you are not satisfied with your figure; not fully developed as nature intended, wear the Shirr-Ruffle Bust Form.

Makes a Woman Charming and Attractive

Produces that perfect, natural form every woman covets. Fills hollows in front and under the arms. Gives full, shapely bust. Light, sanitary, refined. Closes high in back forming corset cover. Ruffles under flat. Thousands of delighted women praise it. Look for the label—refuse cheap imitations. At your dealers or prepaid for $1.00. When ordering, give bust measure.

Shirr-Ruffle Co., 225 E. Spring St., Lima, Ohio

Stoves at Wholesale Prices Direct from Factory, Freight Paid, and safe delivery insured. Then after ONE YEAR'S FREE TRIAL we refund your money if you are not satisfied.

GOLD COIN RANGES

have 50 years' reputation behind them. Our Stove Book, Free, tells what makes a stove good.

Our Profit Sharing Plan Will Interest You

GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak Street, TROY, N.Y.

There is a growing demand for Carnation Milk — uniform in richness and purity — and absolutely guaranteed.

American women, the most particular buyers in the world, have literally compelled us to build more condenseries, that we may meet their demands for more

CARNATION MILK

From Contented Cows

Mothers want it for their growing children as well as for babies.

Good cooks want it for making cooked foods light and most delicious, and as the perfect seasoning for vegetables.

Carnation Milk cows live where the grass is sweetest, water clearest, air the purest. They live in contentment. This makes richer milk—better for baby.

Try Carnation Milk one month for everything and compare its cost with your bill for ordinary milk. You will save money and you will be sure, in Carnation, of a milk absolutely pure. Carnation milk will not bring infection to you or your children. It is safe, delicious, convenient.

FREE BOOK

We have prepared an unusual booklet containing recipes, suggestions for economical cooking, and the story of Carnation Milk. Write for your copy today.

Tall can 10c—Baby size 5c
At your Grocer's

CARNATION MILK
—the Modern Milkman

"Flavor superior to all others or your money back"

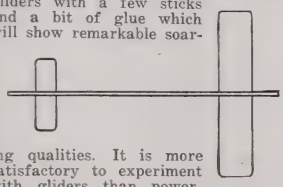
Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co.
SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Fourteen Condenseries in the States of Washington, Oregon, Wisconsin and Illinois

Happy Cozy Corner Days

Long Distance Model Glider

A GREAT deal has been learned of late about the action of the glider, or the model aeroplane which flies without any propelling device. It is now possible to construct gliders with a few sticks and a bit of glue which will show remarkable soaring qualities. It is more satisfactory to experiment with gliders than power-driven models, because there is so much less mechanism to get out of order, and the results are more certain.



Still another advantage of this model is that it may be flown even in very high winds. When launched against the wind it will not travel forward or backward as might be imagined, but will stand or rise almost vertically, and then, as it meets with less resistance, will soar gracefully forward. Once aloft it will swoop like a bird in long graceful lines, often returning to the exact spot from which it was launched.

Such a glider may be made in several sizes, but a small model is best to begin with. To enlarge your model it is only necessary to build a new model, exactly doubling all its dimensions. The best wood for the purpose is probably white pine, although any straight-grained wood of light weight will serve. A soft wood will be found easier to work with.

For the backbone of your model prepare a stick, fifteen inches in length and about three-sixteenths of an inch square. See that the piece is perfectly straight. Plane and sandpaper the stick until it is perfectly smooth and its sides will offer as little resistance to the air as possible. The model will require a rudder, which should be cut from a thin board not more than one-sixteenth of an inch thick. Make your rudder two inches square. This should be fastened to the main stick by gluing it an inch from the end flush with the top of the stick.

The two planes should be cut from wood of the same thickness. Make one ten by two inches and the smaller plane four by one and a half inches. Sandpaper them all carefully. The larger plane should be fastened to the end above the rudder, the smaller plane near the opposite end. Secure them in position by tying them firmly with rubber bands. These will hold them in position, and at the same time allow you to slip them back and forth to get just the right position.

Begin your tests by placing the planes about one inch from either end. The glider should be thrown against the wind with the small plane forward. Be careful to throw it in a straight line, and not upward or downward. Should it dive down, raise the plane by placing a small piece of wood beneath the front of the forward plane. If it tilts to one side, slip the planes a trifle in the other direction until it travels on an even keel.

EDITOR'S NOTE. — Mr. Francis A. Collins, author of the well-known Boys' Books of Model Aeroplanes, has written expressly for the "younger readers" of the CHRISTIAN HERALD a second series of articles on up-to-date Miniature Air Shipping, of which this is the first. It was crowded out of last week's magazine. Any of our boys and girls who have not already received a complimentary copy of the Cozy Corner booklet No. 3, titled Miniature Air Shipping, may have one by writing a letter for it and sending a self-addressed and stamped envelope, 5½ x 3½ in.

Barbara Sheffield, a Cozy Corner Girl

GUESS ME PLEASE

You may find me in May but not in June,
A simple statement to understand soon,
I am not in November, in April am I,
I am in October, but am not in July,
I am not in hot August, but in cool December.
My last letter is in but one month of the year.

Send answers to the Cozy Corner Aunt before August 14. The answer will be published here on that date.

Such a Nice Letter

DEAR AUNT IN THE COZY CORNER:

I received my prize kite in good shape and I was very glad to get it. Thank you ever so much for sending it to me. I have three hundred feet of string on it now. I fly it every day and it goes all the way up. I am sending you a picture of myself.

Your Cozy Corner Boy, OSCAR NELSON.

OUR LITTLE PEOPLE

In the Garden Long Ago

THE garden was pleasant with old-fashioned flowers,
The sunflowers and hollyhocks stood up like towers.
There were dark turncapped lilies and jessamine rare,
Sweet thyme and marjoram scented the air.

The moon made the sundial tell the time wrong;
'Twas the time in the year for the nightingale's song:
The box-trees were clipped into alleys so straight
Till you came by the shrubbery hard by the gate.

Fairies stepped out of the lavender beds
With mob-caps and wings on their quaint little heads;
My lord had a sword, my lady a fan;
Music struck up and the frolic began.

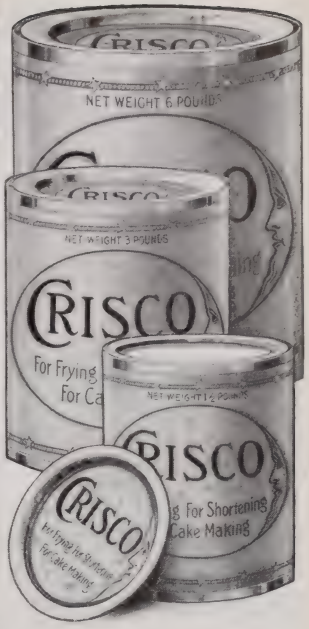
I watched them go through the grave minuet;
Their pretty sweet antics I'll never forget:
They bowed and they curtsied, the brave and the fair,
And laughter like chirping of crickets was there.

Then all of a sudden the church clock rang out!
With flutter and shiver they hurried about;
The cock crew, the wind blew, the trees tossed their heads,
And the fairy folk hid in the lavender beds.

WILLIAM BRIGHTLY RANDS.

Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner



Crisco is more economical –

PRICES of almost everything used in cooking, except Crisco, have gone up steadily. Pure lard is materially higher than Crisco while butter costs nearly twice as much.

Moreover, when you use Crisco in place of butter and lard you use about one-fifth less. Thus Crisco is more economical than either butter or lard even without considering the difference in price.

But the real economy of Crisco cannot be measured in money. Crisco being purely vegetable is far more digestible than cooking fats of animal origin, especially lard. It makes your food not only more delicious but more wholesome.

Purchase a package today and see for yourself.

Send for this Booklet

It tells how Crisco makes better foods at less cost and gives over 100 tested recipes showing the best way to use Crisco for frying, for shortening, for cake making. Address The Procter & Gamble Company, Dept. S, Cincinnati, O.

Drawn to Her by Some Subtle Attraction

The plainest woman may weave about herself an exquisite charm. She can be like a lovely flower, alluring with the evasive fragrance of the lily, the rose, or the modest violet. Even when gone she will hold "him" by the memory of this dreamily subtle atmosphere. It is a germ of romance —this fragrance we call

EXACT SIZE REGULAR BOTTLE

Rieger's FlowerDrops

Not just a "perfume"—it is too refined for that name. It is made of the pure odor of thousands of flower petals—nothing added. It is fifty times more concentrated than ordinary perfumes—a drop is too much.

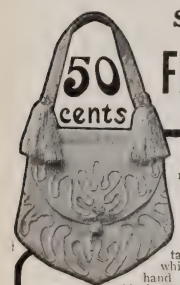
Send for a FREE SAMPLE and you'll be a friend forever. Just give our name and address and dealer's name, and we'll send the sample.

Rieger's "Flower Drops" is sold by all dealers in perfume—$1.50 in pretty cut-glass bottles. Odors: Lily of the Valley, Violet, Rose, Crabapple, Lilac. If you can't get the genuine Rieger's, we'll send it prepaid on receipt of price. Money back if not satisfied.

PAUL RIEGER, 280 First St., San Francisco
Paris New York San Francisco

SPECIAL Offer of FABRIKOID Leather



TO introduce this new fancy work material we will send pattern and enough Fabrikoid to make this handsome Hand Bag for 50 cents stamps. Colors: blue, green, lemon, light or dark tan, pink, gray, red or white. Easily sewn by hand or machine. The ideal material for Christmas presents. State color.

FABRIKOID Chair Seats, 25c

As a demonstration, we will send postpaid, 16½x18 inches of dark green, maroon or black upholstery grade to cover a dining room chair seat. Outwears most leather. Washable, fadeless, durable.

Use "10,000" FABRIKOID For Automobiles

Better than the Split Leather ordinarily used, costs less, sample FREE.

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER CO.
Fabrikoid Dept. 372, Wilmington, Del.

LABLACHE FACE POWDER

AS SUMMER PASSES

Woman's delicate complexion is again exposed to sudden, trying weather changes. The use of LABLACHE prevents ill effect from cold or heat, wind or sun. Protects the complexion, retains the delicate bloom and velvety softness desired by women of refinement.

Refuse Substitutes

They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pinks or Cream 50c, a box of druggists or by mail. Over two million boxes sold annually. Send 10 cents for a sample box.

BEN. LEVY CO.,
French Perfumers, Dept. 22,
125 Kingston St., Boston, Mass.

LADIES Make $3 to $5 Daily Selling Dress Goods, Skirts and Handkerchiefs. Free Outfit. No capital required. Mutual Fabric Co., Dept. 405, Binghamton, N.Y.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

R. S. S., Oklahoma City, Okla. We often hear that Noah was 120 years building the Ark. How do we get the time, 120 years?

The passage in Gen. 6: 3 and the corresponding passages in I. Pet. 3: 20, II. Pet. 2: 5 are generally interpreted as meaning that a respite of 120 years was mercifully granted to bring the race to repentance, and during this period Noah, who was a "preacher of righteousness," labored in the work of awakening the people to the enormity of their sins and of urging them to repentance. It does not necessarily mean that that period was occupied in building the Ark. (We have no means of answering your other question.)

M. S. B. M., Weehawken, N. J. At the time when God said he would destroy humanity with a flood on account of the wickedness of man, was polygamy one of the greatest evils? After the flood, according to the Bible, what was the first evil committed?

By reason of their long lives, the antediluvians had fallen into many sins. This is expressly stated in Gen. 6: 5, 6. We may gather from Gen. 4: 19 that polygamy was known and practiced, but the universal depravity to which the Bible refers does not specify this particularly. Their sins must have been widespread to justify the description in Gen. 6: 11-13. The first grievous sin of which we have any record immediately after the flood was the sin that came from Noah's drunkenness.

L. G. H., Hopkinsville, Ky. 1. What is the greatest height attained by an aeronaut? 2. What height is it possible to attain? 3. Will the moon ever be reached?

1. Glaisher and Coxwell, two Englishmen, on September 5, 1862, ascended over 30,000 feet in a balloon and had almost lost consciousness, as there was no artificial oxygen in those days, when Coxwell managed to open the descending valve with his teeth. This is the greatest height ever reached by man. Present day aviators in aeroplanes have ascended as high as 12,000 feet. 2. It is hard to say. At a height of about five miles the air becomes so tenuous that life is almost impossible, but aviators carry compressed oxygen and with the aid of this agency it may be possible to ascend to a much greater height. 3. No, the moon can never be reached by any means within our present comprehension. The atmosphere extends only a short distance beyond the earth's surface (200 miles in an extremely attenuated form) and where it ceases space becomes but a vacuum. The moon is a dead mass of rock, with no air, no water, where no kind of life or vegetation is possible.

R. M., Decatur. How is the book of Job to be interpreted? As a real history or as a dramatic allegory?

Job is the oldest of the Biblical books. Its principal character is an Arabian, a godly man of Uz in North Arabia. Job is believed to have been a real personage—a type of the earliest patriarchs, a man of high intelligence and great faith. The story is cast in dramatic form. Professor S. S. Curry, of Yale and Harvard Divinity Schools, thus outlines it: the place, a hill outside the city; a rising storm flashing lightning, rolling thunder and a rainbow; the speakers, God, the patriarch Job, his friends, and Satan; the theme, the mystery of human suffering, and human existence." To which may be added, a sublime faith in the divine wisdom, righteousness and justice.

A. S., Washington, D. C. Whenever one wants any passage of Scripture made a little plainer he calls on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for he almost invariably gets a satisfactory explanation. 1. In Luke 8: 26-36 is the account of a man having devils. What became of the evil spirits which had entered the swine? These evil spirits recognized Jesus as the Son of God. 2. In John 5: 2-9, we read of the pool called Bethesda, of which it was said, at certain times an angel went down and troubled the waters. Did an angel actually come down and disturb the water? It seems to me there was superstition exhibited about that pool, and Jesus took the opportunity to show the impotent man, and possibly many others, that faith in the Christ was the all important thing.

1. This question has been frequently raised. According to the law of Moses, swine were unclean, and any Jew owning them or using them as food violated this law. The destruction of the herd and the question of the destination of the evil spirits has been well explained by Trench in his famous book on Miracles. He wrote: "A man is of more value than many swine," and added that it is not necessary to suppose that our Lord sent the devils into the swine, but merely permitted them to go, adding further that if those Gadarene villagers who owned the swine were Jews, as may be supposed, they were properly punished by the loss of that which they ought not to have had at all. As for the evil spirits, it is reasonable to conclude that they found a congenial refuge somewhere else. With regard to their recognition of Jesus as divine, we have Scripture assurance that "the devils believe and tremble." 2. It should be observed that the evangelist, in giving an account of the pool, does nothing more than to state the popular belief (probably a legend) as he found it, without vouching for it except so far as it explained the invalid's presence there. Jesus simply put aside as of no moment the alleged healing virtues of the pool, and aroused the man's faith in that power which alone could minister to his need.

H. G. D., Bismarck, N. D. What is the amount of the public debt, and was it on account of war that it was contracted?

In 1911, $2,831,330,305.66. The debt is mostly on account of war, especially the Civil War. Eight principal debts have been contracted by the nation, and these have overlapped each other and also have been complicated with incidental loans for special purposes. Five of the debts were for wars—that of Independence, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War and the Spanish-American War. The other three were due to the commercial panics of 1837 and 1857 and the imminent silver bankruptcy of 1893.

J. H. M., Oliver Springs, Tenn. Is it consistent with a Christian life to cherish a revengeful spirit?

The Gospel teaching on the subject is so clear that we are surprised that the question should be asked. The spirit of revenge was rebuked and condemned by Jesus himself on many occasions. See Luke 6: 27-37 and similar passages. The old natural law of justice—"an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth"—was superseded under the Gospel by the law of love and forgiveness. No one who claims to be a follower of Jesus will cherish revenge in his heart against any one. We are to forgive as we ourselves hope to be forgiven.

E. R., Harrison, Ark. What denominations were represented in the committee who revised the Bible in 1911?

Practically all the Protestant denominations were represented. The Committee on Textual Corrections included Episcopalian, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Reformed Episcopal, Dutch Reformed, Congregationalist and Lutheran. It had thirty-three members, and included the most distinguished living scholars in these denominations.

L., Brooklyn, N. Y. I have just had an argument with a Roman Catholic about the Sacrament. He says that after the priest blesses it, it becomes a part of the real body and blood of Christ, and quotes John 6: 53, 54. Please explain.

Transubstantiation (the term applied to the change of the substance of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Jesus Christ at the Sacrament) is a doctrine held by some, but not all, of the Christian churches. The Church of England and a large number of Protestant bodies hold that the bread and wine are sanctified symbols. Chrysostom wrote that after divine grace had sanctified the bread, "it is no longer called bread, but dignified with the name of the body of the Lord, although the nature of bread remains in it." Theodoret declared that the bread and wine remain still in their own nature, after consecration. Augustine taught that what they saw upon the altar was bread and the cup, as their own eyes could testify; but that their faith required to be instructed that the bread is the body of Christ; and he added, "These things are therefore called sacraments, because in them one thing is seen and another is understood. That which is seen has a bodily appearance; that which is understood has a spiritual fruit." Isidore of Seville said: "These two things are visible, but being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, they become the sacrament of the Lord's body." Luther held the doctrine of the true presence of the body and blood of Christ, saying, "The bread is the body, the wine is the blood of the Lord," according to a sacramental union, but not in the manner of transubstantiation, adhering literally to the language of the Scriptures. The Catholic Church has always held the doctrine of the real, corporeal presence. With a few exceptions the Protestants interpret the Saviour's language figuratively, and hold that Jesus intended to convey to men the lesson that unless they voluntarily appropriated to themselves his death and sacrifice, so that they become their very life and nourishment, they can have no spiritual and eternal life at all.

Mrs. F. A. A., Garber, Okla. 1. Please explain Matt. 11: 11. 2. Also tell us if the one spoken of as being raised up under the apple tree (Song of Solomon 8: 5) is or has reference to our Saviour.

1. Jesus was here referring not to John's personal character, but presumably to his official standing or position in the economy of grace, in which, although he was above those that went before him, he belonged to the old dispensation and was therefore behind the humblest worker in the new order of things. See Matt. 11: 15; Luke 16: 16, which further illustrate the meaning of the passage. 2. The reference here is to restored Israel who comes up from the wilderness where she has long sojourned. Some commentators hold that the

Continued on next page

THE STRANGER

I WAS a stranger, and ye took me in."
The Master had no time for idle words.
Fraught with deep meaning all,
Though all were of the dear familiar things—
A Jewish mother at her daily task,
A wayside plant, a lily pure, and birds.

"I was a stranger sad." Did he then know
The heartache, heavy, desolate, and drear,
And hunger of the soul,
Keener by far than body hunger is,
That comes to strangers on an alien soil,
Long separate from all to life most dear?

"I was a stranger," and to me ye gave
A welcome warm, and set for me a place
With friends and kindred dear.
For this thy welcome in that Day shall be,
"Come, blessed of my Father"—from the King—
"At my right hand shalt thou behold my face."

A stranger? When, Lord, saw we thee alone
And bade thee share our humble home and vine
Low came the answer sweet:
"As to the very least of these ye did"—
Not asking a reward of them again—
"Ye did it unto me, for they are mine."

"Yea, inasmuch as unto these the least,"
Forbid, O Master, it should be our lot,
For lack of vision clear,
To see the stranger, and not take him in;
To hear thy voice, all full of sadness, say,
"I came, a stranger, and ye knew me not!"

Ottawa, Can. ETHEL DAVIS AMES.

No Other Salt Like Shaker

Judging from the way it sells there seems to be no other salt like Shaker.

No other was ever so popular.

It is used every day in more than 2,000,000 homes. Also in the great hotels, restaurants and clubs. Wherever things are modern you find Shaker Salt served at the table.

A reason is this: It's the salt that "Always Flows Freely"

Shaker never cakes nor clogs, even in the dampest weather. Yet we use no starch or flour.

Here is another reason: It is made in a plant where we take from salt daily more than 5 tons of impurities. That "Pure Salt Flavor" peculiar to Shaker is due to that cleanliness and purity.

Shaker Salt is purified in the making. It's the only purified table salt that's produced. It's the daintiest salt—the best looking salt. There is no other like it. Ask your grocer today for

SHAKER Table Salt

Sold only in Shaker Packages with convenient spout—never in bags. 10c east of the Rockies.

Diamond Crystal Salt Company
St. Clair, Mich.

Makers of Diamond Crystal Cooking Salt—Flaked

Ask Your Grocer

(77)

Madame Schumann-Heink has selected the

SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL

for her son as the best school in America in which he can pursue his musical education. Paderewski says that the principles of instructions followed by The Sherwood Music School are the "best in years". This school has developed many of its students into successful and prominent artists, among them being Karl Formes, grandson of the famous German Baritone, Herr Karl Formes, the President of the school, Miss Georgia Kober, is widely known as a successful and sympathetic teacher, and her reputation as a pianiste is of international scope. All departments are under the direction of sterling artists. Complete courses in Piano, Vocal, Organ, Violin, Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, Musical History, Elocution, Dramatic Art, Normal Training. Children's Dept. FIFTEEN YEARS of SUCCESSFUL, SINCERE WORK has proved that THE SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL develops its pupils to their full capacity. Write for a complete catalog—FREE.

Free Book

Sherwood Music School 421 Michigan Blvd. Fine Arts Bld. Chicago

FAMILY RUNT
ansas Man Says Coffee Made Him That.

"Coffee has been used in our family of even—father, mother, five sons and four aughters—for thirty years: I am the dest of the boys and have always been onsidered the runt of the family and a offee toper.

"I continued to drink it for years until grew to be a man, and then I found I ad stomach trouble, nervous headaches, oor circulation, was unable to do a full ay's work, took medicine for this, that, nd the other thing, without the least enefit. In fact I only weighed 116 when was 28.

"Then I changed from coffee to Postum, eing the first one in our family to do so. noticed, as I did the rest of the family, hat I was surely gaining strength and esh. Shortly after I was visiting my ousin who said, 'You look so much better —you're getting fat.'

"At breakfast his wife passed me a cup f coffee, as she knew I was always such coffee drinker, but I said, 'No, thank ou.'

"'What!' said my cousin, 'you quit offee? What do you drink?'

"'Postum,' I said, 'or water, and I am ell.' They did not know what Postum as, but my cousin had stomach trouble nd could not sleep at night from drinking offee three times a day. He was glad to earn about Postum but said he never new coffee hurt anyone." (Tea is just as njurious as coffee because it contains affeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"After understanding my condition and ow I got well he knew what to do for imself. He discovered that coffee was he cause of his trouble as he never used obacco or anything else of the kind. You hould see the change in him now. We oth believe that if persons who suffer rom coffee drinking would stop and use Postum they could build back to health nd happiness." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Send No Money

Let us send this artistic piano to you at our expense. We pay the freight. You pay nothing down. Try it for 30 days. If it does not satisfy you, we will pay the freight for its return.

Reed & Sons Piano

30 Days' Free Trial—365 Days' Approval Test—3 Years To Pay

Our direct from-factory-to-home, wholesale prices save you $125 to $225 on instruments of highest quality. They won highest award at World's Columbian Exposition.

No Interest, No Collectors

REED & SONS PIANO BOOK FREE Finest Piano Book Published. Write to Reed & Sons Piano Mfg. Co. Dept 136 Jackson and Wabash, Chicago, Ill.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. "How?" Oh, something new—The MORLEY PHONE I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The MORLEY PHONE for the DEAF

made low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over One Hundred Thousand Sold. Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Building, Philadelphia your home. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Banjo, Cello, Brass Instruments or Sight Singing. Beginners or advanced pupils. One or two lessons weekly. Our only expense is for sheet music and postage and charges 1½ cents a week. We have successful pupils all over the world. Our lessons are simple and easy. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. Write today for free booklet and free tuition offer. International Institute of Music, 28 Fifth Ave., Dept. 341-B, New York.

MUSIC TAUGHT FREE

Good-Bye To Corns!

Arthur's Corn-Gel removes them in a jiffy. This medicated paste—no crowding in the shoe. Send 25 cents for full-size package—guaranteed to remove Arthur Chemical Co., 437 Congress Av., New Haven, Ct.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Continued from preceding page

language is the bride (the church) addressing Christ, referring to the incarnation and the sacrifice for humanity, the "apple tree" referring to Eden and to the divine love that foresaw and provided for the spiritual needs of the race.

J. B. N., Hartford, Conn. 1. What is the distance of the nearest fixed star from the earth? 2. What is the brightest star in our sky? 3. Has the universe a boundary?

1. Alpha Centauri, the nearest fixed star, is twenty-five trillions of miles from the earth, or in astronomical language, it is four "light years" away; that is, light traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles per second, requires four years in coming from this star to the earth. 2. Sirius, commonly called the Dog-star; eight "light years" away. 3. To this question there can be but one answer: "We don't know." The most learned philosopher that ever lived, the greatest scientist on earth to-day could give no more satisfactory one. The infinite, which necessarily is, is necessarily incomprehensible.

R. S., New York. The selection of a Roman Catholic prelate to pronounce the opening invocation at the two conventions was another illustration of the growth of that power in American politics. Ordinarily, it would have made little difference what church performed that office, as here all religions stand on an equal footing; but at this time, when the question of Romanist activity in political affairs is an acute one and widely discussed, it was palpably a bid for Catholic support by the political managers who hoped to dictate the nominations. These are by no means the first instances of the kind, however, in the history of presidential conventions.

Miscellaneous

A. T. Adam bestowed upon his companion the name of "Eve" (Gen. 3: 20).

L. S., Waterloo, N. Y. If you have an enlightened conscience and follow it as a guide in the matter spoken of, you cannot do wrong.

Subscriber, Yonkers, N. Y. Your name should be signed to your letter; but if you so desire the name need not be printed in THE MAIL-BAG.

G. W. S., Clearfield, Pa. We have heard various criticisms of the book you mention, but do not know enough about it to express an opinion. The passage in question describes a peculiar vow performed by such Israelites as consecrated themselves to Jehovah. There is nothing to indicate that it was done on the Sabbath.

Reader, Viola, Kan. While it is well to patronize local trade as far as practicable, there is a higher necessity in many families. In these times, when all foodstuffs and clothing are so dear, one is justified in buying in any market he can reach, in order to make ends meet and keep out of debt. The case of the church repairs is somewhat different, and there ought to be some way of getting the work done by local tradesmen.

M. G. A., Galesburg, N. D. There is nothing in the Scripture that can be construed as bearing on woman suffrage, even in a remote sense. In the ancient Jewish state, however, and under Roman law, women had many privileges, both in regard to her position in the household and as to property, which you will find set forth in any good encyclopedia. The subject is too large to be discussed in a MAIL-BAG paragraph.

Enlighten the Nation

I am so pleased with the article in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD on "Publicity in Religion" that I write to thank you for it, and to urge you to continue to enlighten the people, whose apathy concerning Romanism is deplorable. Your good paper is so widely distributed and has such a warm place in the hearts of the people, that I am encouraged to pray on that God will open the eyes and understanding of our nation. Our fathers fought for America to be a Christian country and we must not give it over to Romanism. (MRS.) W. S. B.
Ardsley, N. Y.

TRANSFORMED BY GRACE

The Bowery Mission's Oldest Convert Celebrates His Conversion Anniversary

THE question is often asked, "Do converts of Rescue Missions hold out?" Here is the answer: On Tuesday evening, April 2, Charles Thompson celebrated his twenty-fourth anniversary. There are, doubtless, many other converts who have passed away to different and distant parts of the world, who have been longer in the service, but Mr. Thompson is the senior of those still remaining in active work at the Mission.

No man is more respected or beloved than he. It was, therefore, a large and exceedingly enthusiastic crowd that greeted him on this anniversary occasion. He is a simple, honest, unostentatious Christian man, and the story that he told of his conversion and subsequent career was effective and convincing because of its straightforwardness and his sweet spirit of humility.

The background was dark enough. A life lived in the Bowery a quarter of a century ago, when it was probably the vilest and most vicious thoroughfare in the world. A poor, helpless victim of the twin evils of drunkenness and gambling, spending his time in the vile resorts and gambling dives that then flourished in such profusion between Cooper Union and the post office.

How he came to enter the Bowery Mission, then a small and struggling institution near Chatham Square, he never could understand. But he is sure that the Holy Spirit directed his footsteps there, for he heard a testimony that night that revolutionized his life. A truck-driver, who had been a drunkard of such a terribly ferocious type that his two children were seized with spasms of terror whenever he came near them, and the household cat would run when he approached, had undergone the great change. On this particular evening, he had dwelt upon the transformation in his life and home, telling how the children now greeted him, coming up the alley, with a kiss, and the cat would lie in peace in his lap.

It touched Charles Thompson's heart, and when, at the close of the meeting, Superintendent Childs laid a kindly hand upon his shoulders, and begged him to yield himself to God, he at once surrendered. Then began an active life of goodness. That night, in "Beefsteak John's" restaurant, he told some of his acquaintances what had happened, and afterward, standing at the lodging house desk, waiting for the key of his room, he again proclaimed the fact of his having become a Christian man.

Since then he has scarcely ever passed an inactive day. In the lodging houses, prisons, factories, and other places, he has never lost an opportunity of testifying to God's power to save. His devotion to the Bowery Mission is almost pathetic. Although he is an elder in the DeWitt Memorial Church, he gives a large portion of his time to the nightly meetings of the Mission. For several years he has been employed in the Free Labor Bureau, and in an official capacity visits city offices, stores, factories, warehouses, coal and lumber yards, and other scenes of labor, hunting for jobs for Bowery Mission converts. In this work he has been most signally successful.

A large number of his friends were by his side on the platform and gave unstinted thanks to God for the life and influence of this devoted man. His wife, his mother-in-law, his sister-in-law, his neighbor who has roomed in the same house with him for fifteen years, his fellow workers in the Mission, and many of the men for whom he had obtained employment, all joyfully testified to his useful and noble Christian life.

Nearly at the close of the meeting, his pastor, the Rev. W. T. Elsing, entered and brought these testimonials to a fitting climax by declaring his belief that "if the Bowery Mission had done nothing more than secure the conversion of such a man, it was worth all the money that had been spent upon it." J. G. HALLIMOND, Superintendent.

Get your free jar

Will you make the most of your garden and your market? Or will you allow fine, fresh fruits and vegetables to go to waste? Learn the secret of "jarring"—the new, safe, easy way of canning in

"E-Z SEAL" JARS

They are all glass—made with the glass cap. No tin tops to taint the fruit. The spring seal closes with a clamp—no twisting and turning.

No trouble, no risk—the jars that all women like. Try preserving in E-Z Seal jars—for the joy of it!

Free Jar—Free Book

Cut out this coupon, take it to your grocer—he will give you one E-Z 1-Qt. E-Z Seal Jar—FREE. Be sure and write us for FREE Book of Recipes—it tells many things you should know. Get the Jar from the grocer. Get the Book from us.

In order to secure free jar, present this coupon to your dealer before September 1, 1912, properly filled out.

HAZEL-ATLAS GLASS CO.
Wheeling, W. Va.

This is to certify that I have received one "Atlas" E-Z Seal Jar free of all cost or obligation. This is the first coupon presented by any member of my family.

HAZEL-ATLAS GLASS CO.
Wheeling W. Va.

Name .....

Address .....

TO THE DEALER:—Present this to jobber from whom you recieved E-Z Seal Jars. All coupons must be signed by you and returned before November 1, 1912.

DEALER'S CERTIFICATE. This is to certify that I gave one "Atlas" E-Z Seal Jar to the person whose signature appears above.

Dealer's Name .....

Address .....

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium

FOR THE SCIENTIFIC TREATMENT OF

CANCER

WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE.

With an early diagnosis and prompt treatment practically all accessible cancerous growths are curable. When writing for information describe case in which you are interested. Address

WALLACE E. BROWN, M. D.
(Formerly Drs. W. E. Brown & Son.)
North Adams, Mass.
Established thirty-five years.

MIDDLE AGE PEOPLE

often suffer from sourness of the digestive passages, a trouble that inactive men and women approaching middle age often suffer from. No drugs are needed to remove this condition and give a sweet breath and comfort. Only Murray's Charcoal Tablets (absolutely unmedicated), an agreeable and harmless remedy, are required. Once only, to convince you, a regular 25 cent box will be sent for 10 cents in stamps. A. J. Ditman, 2 Astor House, N. Y.

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee, Maker produces pure sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid. Box C
DR. LYONS 2201 Locus St. St. Louis, Mo.

Corns Permanent relief is secured only by removing roots and all. A-Corn Salve does that easily, quickly and safely, and costs only 15 cents at druggists' or by mail.
Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

Jesus, the Children's Saviour*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THERE are three recorded instances of Jesus raising the dead: the son of the widow of Nain, the little daughter of Jairus, and Lazarus after he had been four days dead, sometimes named the supreme miracle. We are told that all which Jesus said and did is not written, and probably he raised yet others from the dead. The daughter of Jairus was about twelve years of age. She was the child of a prominent family, because her father was the ruler of the synagogue. Her name is not given; possibly it was Esther, or Ruth, or Miriam, all popular names for little girls among the Jewish people, as namesakes of three of their most celebrated women. She became very ill, so ill that her father hazarded his reputation to call upon Jesus for help. So desperate was the situation that he went even to a feast for the Pharisees, where he was told Jesus was, in order to bring him to the bedside of his child. Jairus had heard of the wonderful cures wrought by Jesus, and in the hour of his extremity he overlooked the fact that Jesus was the despised Nazarene to people of his order. But Jairus might have been a secret believer in Jesus as Nicodemus was.

There at the feast, braving the contempt of all of the Pharisees present, Jairus knelt at the feet of Jesus, and probably kissed his robe, as that was a customary salutation, and begged that he would come and lay his hands on his little daughter, and so restore her to health.

Jesus' Prompt Response

Jesus, setting aside all questions of expediency, at once left the feast to accompany Jairus to his home, and it is said a great multitude followed and thronged him. On the way the unexpected happened: a woman was healed of a twelve years' sickness by touching the fringe of Jesus' garment; the healing was not by his own volition, but he perceived that power had gone forth from him (Luke 8: 46), and the incident caused a few moments' delay, while Jesus took note of it, and gave his blessing to the woman. In the meantime, a messenger came from the house of Jairus saying that the little girl was dead, and there was no need of troubling Jesus to come further. But Jesus comforted the father, saying, "Only believe, and she shall be made whole" (Luke 8: 50). And he went on, choosing to take with him Peter, James and John, as his inner cabinet among his apostles. When they reached the home of Jairus, the funeral ceremonies had already been commenced in the wailing of the accustomed hired mourners. But Jesus waived them all out, and took into the death chamber the father, mother, and his three apostles, Peter, James and John. And then he took the thin, little, white, cold hand in his warm, loving hand, and said, "Talitha, cumi," "I say unto thee, arise" (Jesus spoke in the Aramaic language, the popular tongue of the district). His words reached the soul of the dead child, and the breath of life was imparted, and she arose from the bed and stood upon her feet and walked, and was so thoroughly alive that she was in need of food, probably from her long fast in the fever. And Jesus commanded that something should be given her to eat.

We are told that the parents and the apostles were "amazed." We are not told about the loving gratitude of the father and mother, nor of the loving thanks of the child for her restoration, but it all must have happened. It is said that "The fame thereof went forth into all the land" (Matt. 9: 26). And the echo still rings. Parents and teachers of children have rejoiced in the occasion, and will rejoice in all coming ages to know that Jesus did not omit the children in his ministrations. Even parents who did not know Jesus have felt their children's need of such a friend.

A Strange Belief

Among the Buddhists in Japan, it is believed that the souls of children go after death to Sui-no-kawara (the stony river bed) and there they remain until they reach maturity under the care of Jizo-bosatsu, who is represented as a priest with a long cane in one hand and a ball in the other. He is said to stand in the center of the kawara, where he preaches to the children as they pile up stones, one for the salvation of their father, one for the mother, the third for brothers, the fourth for sisters, and the fifth for their own salvation. When night comes on, and the wind blows hard, a gigantic evil spirit appears, and with a huge iron rod knocks down the heaps of stones which the children have made, and they are so frightened that they run to Jizo and hide themselves in the big sleeves of his kimono, which have a miraculous way of increasing in size according to the number of children who seek refuge. Then the evil spirit disappears, and the children begin again the work of heaping up stones. Passing through cemeteries in Japan, one sees tombs that have the image of Jizo carved upon them, as the parents take that way of gaining the special favor of Jizo for their children, and one will see little piles of stones built up by the parents and brothers and sisters of the children with the hope of helping in the tedious work of the little ones in the kawara.

How pathetic is all this, and how rejoiced we should be to know that Jizo-bosatsu is giving way to Jesus Christ as the friend of children in Japan, as evidenced by the Sunday school movement, which is going ahead by leaps and bounds, as shown by the reports made to the World's Sunday School Association.

Let all teachers and Sunday school scholars in the United States, as they study this lesson on Jesus Christ, the loving friend of the little daughter of Jairus, pray not only for the children in our own land, but for those of Japan, many of whom are to-day studying the same lesson, that they may come to know what a friend they have in Jesus.

And the same prayer should be made for the children in all lands, particularly the children in China, who do not even have a Jizo-bosatsu, but instead, it is the belief that children who die before seven years of age are inhabited by souls that have escaped before their terms of punishment have expired, and when the little child dies, it is only the officers of justice belonging to the Yen-Lo-Wong who take it back to finish its punishment. This child is counted only as a vagrant soul. We rejoice that the Sunday school movement is being felt in China, and that thousands of children have learned what a friend they have in Jesus, and thousands more are on the way to learn it.

Even in our own land of Christian enlightenment there are thousands upon thousands of children who are yet untaught about Jesus as their loving Friend and Saviour, as will be seen by comparing the number in our Sunday schools, about 12,000,000 under eighteen years of age, with the enrolment, 17,813,852 from five to eighteen years of age, in the public schools for the year ending June, 1910. Seeing thus that the Sunday school has nearly

Continued on next page

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for August 18, 1912. The Ruler's Daughter. Mark 5: 21-43. GOLDEN TEXT: "And taking the child by the hand, he saith unto her: Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, Arise!" Mark 5: 41.

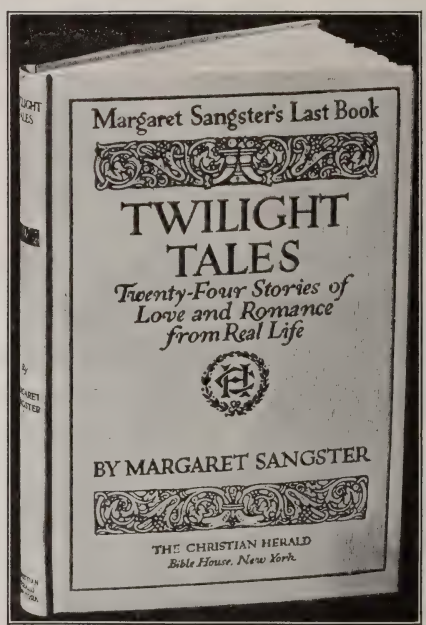
A Grand Book by Margaret Sangster!

Twilight Tales

TWENTY-FOUR DELIGHTFUL STORIES OF LOVE AND ROMANCE FROM REAL LIFE

THOSE who already know the rare literary charm of Margaret Sangster's writings will welcome this volume—the last perfect product of her wonderful talent. Twilight Tales comes almost as a parting message from one who has been greatly beloved by countless multitudes, and whose contributions for many years in the pages of The Christian Herald have made her name a household word.

Mrs. Sangster's remarkable power of sympathy and of sounding the depths of human feeling is evident in every one of these twenty-four complete stories. She is never so much the mistress of her art as when relating in her own inimitable way the progress of some love match in simple life, some idyl of the farm or the village, or a romance of the cottage, the garden, or the orchard. An ardent lover of nature in all its moods, she has put into these Tales the true atmosphere of American rural life as it is to-day, with all its charm of changeful season and its panorama of flowery lanes, ripening fruits and waving fields. Her heroes are fine types of manly character, and her women have the sweet and comely fascination, mental and physical, which we love to associate with the daintiest idea of American womanhood.



Margaret Sangster's Last Book
TWILIGHT TALES
Twenty-Four Stories of Love and Romance from Real Life
BY MARGARET SANGSTER
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York

This photograph shows the cover of the book in miniature. The actual size of the book is 5¼ in. wide by 7¾ in. long.

There is a thread of pure gold running through the Twilight Tales from which the reader may divine the author's purpose in writing the book. It is the line of God's protecting love and care which encircles all who trust in Him, and the knowledge of which gives to even the smallest detail of everyday life a purpose and significance. She spreads before us the little daily dramas, the heartaches, the disappointments, the sweet surprises and unexpected joys, the separations and the reunions, the cares and consolations of the household, the "journeys that end in lovers' meeting;"—all are unrolled like a moving picture, with the vivid action of life itself. Mrs. Sangster has crowded the best heart and soul stories of her whole career into this book. Love, romance, self-denial, ambition and the success that true character commands are here pictured with a fragrant setting of American home-life in town and country. It is a book which will exert a strong spell on the mind of the reader and which creates its own atmosphere of woodlands and old-fashioned gardens and charming American homes, and her men and women are such as we would love to meet.

The last of the Twilight Tales—"The Opposite Shore"—gives a foregleam of that blessed land to which so many of our dear ones have already passed over and to which the author was even then hastening while she wrote. No one can read this last book without feeling that it contains a personal message.

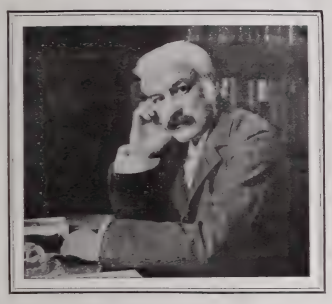
HOW TO SECURE "TWILIGHT TALES"

Twilight Tales will be sent free, postpaid, as a premium to every subscriber who sends us one NEW six months' subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at 75 cents. This new subscription must be one not now on our list, or one to replace one now on our list. This is an excellent opportunity for our readers to get the book for themselves and to send the paper to some friend not now a subscriber, for half a year. To any of our present subscribers the book will be sent with one year's CHRISTIAN HERALD renewal for $2. If your subscription does not expire for some time to come, send in your renewal now with $2, and the date of expiration on your paper will be advanced for one year. Address all orders to

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

DEATH OF A FAMOUS AUTHOR

DESPATCHES from Banchory, Scotland, announced a short time ago the death of Andrew Lang, the well-known ...ic, poet, novelist and essayist. Mr. ...ng was born ...Selkirk, Scot..d, in 1844. It ...ws in the ...ost of these ...enes on the ...nks of the ...ried Tweed ...t he spent ...k boyhood and ...ceived his ...st inspira...ns and im...pressions. He ...s educated ...the Edin...rgh Academy ...d St. An...w's Univer...y, passing ...m there to ...lliol College, ...ford. His en...e life was spent as a university ...turer and as a writer.



The Late Andrew Lang

His first works were published in ...2, and were rapidly followed by ...ers of widely varied characters. ...contributed highly scholarly criti... articles to various London publi...ions, for several years edited a ...ll-known English magazine, and in ...dition to all this made splendid ...nslations of Homer, wrote history, ...ered the field of anthropology, pro...ing two books which attained ...eat popularity, and compiled and rewrote a great many fairy tales for children. In his death, lovers of literature lose a writer of singular charm and power and of the most astounding versatility. He has been thus described by a well-known critic:

"A scholar without pedantry, a master of light yet polished verse, a profound student of folklore and anthropology, a journalist capable of all save dulness, the laureate and the chronicler of many sports, Andrew Lang is king among free lances—the Admirable Crichton of modern letters." Mr. Lang rose to a recognized position in English literary life in a surprisingly short time after his first ventures were published. Yet long before he had rounded into a position of accepted authority in the many branches of literature in which he worked, he was well known on this side of the Atlantic, as well as in London, as a contributor to the newspapers, and as a writer in lighter vein whose angling sketches were as well received by an appreciative public as his more serious work.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Continued from preceding page

...s millions less of children than the ...blic school, what active workers we ...ould become in the Sunday school, ...rinning with the class in which we ...d ourselves, to do all we can to in...ase its members, and after that take ... the whole school into our hearts, ...d then all of the children in the town ...c city where we live, and then our ...ate, and then our efforts will become ...ion-wide and we need not stop short ...c world-wide.

Not alone in the death chamber of ...e little daughter of Jairus did Jesus ...ow his loving sympathy for chil...en. One day he took a little child ...r the text of one of his sermons. ...acing the child in the midst of the ...n to whom he was talking, he told ...em that in order to be great they ...ust be as humble as a little child. ...sus meant a good child that is al...ys willing to obey and to learn what ...right, and has no selfishness in its ...art.

Another time when Jesus showed ...at a friend he was to the children, ...l gathered them in his arms and ...ssed them. Have we ever loved him ...ough for doing it? The children ...re blessed by Jesus. Let us read ...ain the story of the lunatic boy ...om Jesus healed. Matt. 17: 14-21. ...d let us read of the sick girl whom ...sus cured because of her mother's ...ayer. Matt. 15: 21-28. And a beau...ful story is that about Jesus per...tting a boy to help him provide food ...r a great multitude of people. John ...1-13.

Almost every hour in the day chil...en are dying in our own land and in ...her lands. Sometimes loving fathers ...d mothers have prayed to Jesus not ...let their sick children die, and he ...s made them strong and well again. ...metimes Jesus has answered "no" ...such prayers because he knew it was ...t to bring the little ones to their ...avenly home. One day a father and ...other who never prayed told a clergy...an that they were angry with God ...r letting their only child die. They ...ked, "If God is love, how could he do ...ch a thing?" He answered: "You ...k of me why God has taken your ...ild? Listen: he means to have at ...st one member out of your family in heaven. You cared not to enter heaven; and, had your child remained with you, you would not have suffered it to enter in. Hear now a parable: There was once a shepherd who prepared choice food in a fold for his sheep; he opened the door wide; but the sheep would not go in. He tried long to induce them to enter, but farther and farther they went away from the open door. At last he took a little lamb from the flock, and carried it in, and the mother sheep followed right away, and then all followed. The good Shepherd is Christ; the open fold, heaven; your child, the lamb. The Lord has borne away your little lamb that ye may follow after it."

They understood the saying, and it was not long before they let their hearts travel on to the better country where their child had gone. And heaven became as real as earth to them, and far dearer. And they thanked God for the anchorage he had given their souls.

There Is No Death

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

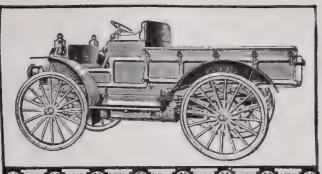
There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread,
And bears our best loved ones away,
And then we call them dead!

Born into that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them the same,
Except their sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear, immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there is no dead.

LORD LYTTON.

A modern writer, who has a faculty for presenting thoughts in a remarkably striking way, says: "There is a great mistake in teaching children that they have souls. If you do, they think their souls to be something which is not themselves. For what a man has cannot be himself. Hence, when they are told their souls go to heaven, they think of themselves as lying in the grave. They ought to be taught that they have bodies, and that their bodies die, but they themselves live on."



A Good-Looking, Dependable Business Wagon

THERE'S a look of sturdy reliability and independence about an International auto wagon that makes friends for it wherever it goes. The car is just as reliable and dependable as its looks indicate. In endurance contests it equals cars costing three times as much. In economy it stands at the head of its class. In dependability and all round utility, it beats them all.

Every day you run an International auto wagon you will find it more useful to you. With it you can make the trips you used to neglect, because you did not want to take the horses from their work. Perishable products are handled speedily, or taken to the most profitable market. Best of all, the car saves money as well as makes it.

International Auto Wagons

help make farm life pleasant. It is a pleasure to run the car and it is so reliable, so ready to go at any time or for any purpose that it soon becomes indispensable. It can be used in all seasons when the road is passable to horses. The wheels are high enough to give ample road clearance. Solid tires give good traction and eliminate many tire troubles. The engine is simple and powerful. Fuel and oil to run an International auto wagon cost less than the feed for a horse, while the wagon will do from two to four times as much work.

It will pay you in many ways to know all about the International auto wagon. A letter brings full particulars with many interesting facts and figures.

International Harvester Company of America (Incorporated)
146 Harvester Building Chicago U S A

I H C Service Bureau

The purpose of this Bureau is to furnish, free of charge to all, the best information obtainable on better farming. If you have any worthy questions concerning soils, crops, land drainage, irrigation, fertilizer, etc., make your inquires specific and send them to I H C Service Bureau, Harvester Building, Chicago, U S A without unsightly wire. Mar no walls. Secure artistic finish and always keep your CROOKED PICTURES STRAIGHT. Pictures unhook from Anchors instantly. Are leveled when hung. No ladder. No annoyance. Simple. Can be used over and over. Why not BUY INVISIBLE PICTURE ANCHORS and Always Keep Your Pictures Straight. A box of 5 complete sets sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. Send now. Discard inefficient wire and tacks.

INVISIBLE PICTURE ANCHORS

HOLD YOUR PICTURES STRAIGHT

BUFFALO-DEHN CO., 711 White Bldg., BUFFALO, N.Y.

I Was Deaf 25 Years

I CAN NOW HEAR

with these soft, pliable, artificial ear drums, I wear them in my ears night and day. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them in my ears. Write me and I will tell you the true story,—how I got deaf and how I made myself hear.

Medicated Ear Drum
Pat. Nov 3 1908
No 9 6 2 5 8 9

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUM COMPANY
Address GEO. P. WAY, Manager
G. P. WAY 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

New York. New York City. Avenue A. 63d and 64th Sts.

Have You Chosen a Profession?

There are Opportunities in Medicine, especially Homeopathic Medicine. Send for Catalog P. New York Homeopathic Medical College and Flower Hospital. Royal S. Copeland, A. M., M. D., Dean.

DEVELOPING—PRINTING—ENLARGING

Best Work, Quick Delivery, Low Prices. Developing 10 cents per roll. Prints 3 cents up. Send 2 negatives for Free prints. H. A. CLARK, 3 Plaza Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

LAW Learn at Home

Graduate correspondence students most successful at bar exams. Make your home a university. Course covers same ground as Harvard, Michigan and other big law colleges. We guarantee to coach free students who fail to pass the bar exams. Scholarships open—pay only for text and postage. Write now.

American Corres. School of Law 2492 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

No Shortcomings—Not One

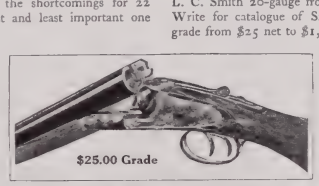
ANY shortcoming in a shot gun which seems almost trifling may cause the gun to go wrong in the field, and spoil a long-planned expensive hunting trip.

The Smith Gun has no shortcomings—not one. The six Hunter Brothers, with inventions, precision workmanship and experience, kept after the shortcomings for 22 years, until the last and least important one was wiped out.

"6 Times 22 Years Experience" gives the shooter of a Smith Gun the fullest possible pleasure in the field, and the maximum game in his bag. A Smith Gun is "two guns in one," bored to meet the combined requirements of field, blind and trap.

Ask your dealer to show you the new L. C. Smith 20-gauge from butt to muzzle. Write for catalogue of Smith Guns—every grade from $25 net to $1,500 list.

"No Shortcomings."



$25.00 Grade

"6 Times 22 Years Experience."

L. C. SMITH GUNS

HUNTER ARMS COMPANY, 84 Hubbard Street, FULTON, NEW YORK

Rexall

"93" HAIR TONIC

Two Sizes, 50c. and $1.00

Keeps scalp and hair clean - promotes hair health

Your Money Back if it Doesn't

Sold and guaranteed by only one Druggist in a place. Look for The Rexall Stores

They are the Druggists in over 5000 towns and cities in the United States and Canada

UNITED DRUG CO. BOSTON, MASS.

Branches: Chicago, St. Louis, Atlanta, San Francisco, Toronto, London and Paris

COPYRIGHT, 1910, UNITED DRUG COMPANY

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, AUGUST 14, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 33. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Copyright by Detroit Publishing Co.

"A COZY CORNER"

From the painting by Francis D. Millet in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

Reader, Keyport, N. J. What is the strength numerically of Christianity in Korea today?

There is a substantial and growing self-supporting and self-directing Christian Church in Korea, with 300,000 nominal Christians, of whom two-thirds are enrolled catechumens and one-third baptized. There is a union college of 300 Christian students, about twenty academies and hundreds of primary schools, and a theological seminary with 154 students and 58 graduates. All this is the result of twenty-five years of earnest Christian work.

J. D. T., Pollock, S. D. At the prayer and teachers' meeting not long since, the minister asked if it were possible that Jesus could have fallen under the temptation of the devil. I had never heard the question brought up before, but answered emphatically, at once, "No." Was I right?

Jesus submitted to all the liabilities of the human condition; we are told expressly that he "was in all things as we are." The appeal of the tempter was to his ambition, and the purpose, as some commentators conclude, was to excite in his mind the desire for worldly power and dominion. Even his own followers had cherished visions of an earthly kingdom. The question whether he could by any possibility have yielded has often been asked, but it is one that must remain unanswered. To say that it was impossible would imply that he was not wholly subject to human conditions and temptations; while to admit its possibility would make him less than divine. The incident shows to us that while the vision of sudden power may have been alluring, it could not move him from the fixed and beneficent purpose of his great mission, which was to establish his kingdom in the hearts of men by love and sacrifice, and by the example of his perfect humanity. Contrasted with such a kingdom, all the glory of worldly pomp and power are trivial, transient and unsatisfying.

J. W. McK., Greeneville, Tenn. 1. What is the total number of voters in the United States? 2. What is the number of voters in the United States who are Roman Catholics? 3. How many Roman Catholics are there in the United States?

1. At the last presidential election in 1908 the total vote cast was 14,888,442. 2. Somewhere between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000, estimated. 3. According to the last census, 12,321,746.

Reader, Berryille, Va. A preacher in his sermon states that during the Passover supper (before the institution of our Lord's Supper), "Judas went out to betray him to the Jews." Now, Luke 22: 14 to 22 reads to me very plainly that he was present. Please explain.

Judas was present at the beginning of the Last Supper. He heard the Master's sorrowful words: "One of you shall betray me." He heard the disciples asking in turn, "Is it I?" He, too, asked the same question (Matt. 26: 25); but no other ears save his heard the answer, although John and Peter understood the situation (John 13: 26). Then he heard the final words: "That thou doest, do quickly," and went out to complete his evil work.

Subscriber, Bristol, Tenn. Please give the Mizpah benediction.

"The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another." Gen. 31: 49.

G. E. N., Essexville, Mich. 1. How many kinds of leprosy are there? Describe them. 2. How many lepers are there in New York City? 3. How many in the United States? 4. How does the mortality of leprosy compare with that of tuberculosis, typhoid, and other malignant diseases? 5. Is it true that Asiatic nations pay little attention to it?

1. Two, tubercular and anesthetic, the former characterized by large tubercles, composed of masses of cells, on the face, neck, shoulders and lower extremities of the body; in the progress of the disease these tubercles soften and break, forming ulcers which gradually penetrate into the flesh, destroying tissue, until fingers, toes, hands, feet, arms and legs fall off by a kind of spontaneous gangrene. Anesthetic leprosy usually manifests itself by pain in the limbs, and the flesh, which at first is highly supersensitive, becomes so anesthetic that needles can be inserted without the victim feeling pain. Mahogany-colored spots appear on back of hands, arms, nose, brow; the pupils of the eyes contract, the hair falls out and the whole facial expression is strangely altered. 2. Only a few cases have been discovered from time to time in New York City; we understand there are a couple of lepers at the present time on North Brother's Island in the East River. 3. There are two settlements of lepers in the United States, one in Massachusetts and the other in Louisiana, but probably there are not more than 2,000 lepers on the continent. There are 1,200 on the Island of Molokai in the Hawaiian group. 4. The mortality from leprosy is small compared with the diseases you mention, owing to the smallness of the number infected. Leprosy is a very lingering disease, the victims sometimes living for many years from time of infection. While consumption annually carries off over 100,000 and typhoid about 40,000 in the United States the deaths from leprosy only amount to a few hundred, taking in all the settlements. 5. Until recently Asiatic countries, especially China and Japan, were lax in regard to leprosy, and even India took little precaution to segregate the tainted. Now, segregation is the rule almost everywhere and science is doing its best to prevent the spread of the dread malady, though as yet it has not been able to grapple with it in the way of cure.

Dunbar Creek, With the Flood at Its Height

A HEAVY rainstorm, which at stages reached the fury of a cloudburst and which caused loss of life, great property damage and the crippling of transportation facilities throughout the Pittsburg district, took place on July 24. The dam of the Cool Spring Reservoir, the largest in Fayette County and situated in the mountains, gave way, pouring a torrent down the beds of the creeks upon the towns below. At Evans Station, Mine No. 2 of the Superba Coal Company was flooded and fourteen men were trapped and drowned thousands of feet below ground. Dunbar, a town of several thousand inhabitants, caught the full brunt of the flood. The water rose so rapidly that hundreds had to flee for their lives. There is no doubt that many of these would have perished had it not been for the heroism of three telephone girls who remained at their posts giving warnings of the approaching danger. The property damage in the little city will mount up into many thousands and seventy-five families were made temporarily dependent on outside aid.

Mrs. M. V. S., Lowell, Vt. I like to try answering the lists of Bible questions, but do not think I clearly understand the rules governing the contest. May we simply answer the questions from memory, and then use the Concordance to locate the place where the answer is to be found; or must we tell with the aid of the Concordance?

You are at liberty to use all the aids and facilities at your disposal in answering the Bible questions, Concordance and helps included. They are not intended as puzzles, but as an incentive to seeking closer acquaintance with the Bible.

E. W. S., Rives, Tenn. The ablest scientists hold to the unity of the race, and in this they are in accord with Scripture, which declares that the Creator "hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts 17: 26), and that the "free gift comes upon all men to justification to life." Climatic variations extending over long periods account for physical differences. The negro is the descendant of Ham, the head of one of the three great divisions of the human race. He was the progenitor of the Egyptians, the Cushites and the African nations, and his descendants were the founders of great empires in Ethiopia, Babylonia, Arabia, Abyssinia and, according to some authorities, in a considerable part of Asia, as far as the Euphrates and the Persian Gulf. No one has the slightest warrant for asserting that the negro has not a soul. Christian converts from Cyrene in Upper Libya were among those who were identified with the formation of the first Gentile church in Antioch. Mark the evangelist labored during a large part of his missionary career in Africa. Simon, who bore our Saviour's cross (Matt. 27-32), was a Cyrenian and a native of Libya. The Copts, who were active in the early days of Christianity, were a mixed race, chiefly negro. The Coptic Christian Church is one of the oldest in existence and possesses some of the most valuable early Christian manuscripts.

H. M. C., West Pittston, Pa. Chronology is one of the most difficult studies in connection with events that took place before recorded history. Many tables have been compiled, but these are only approximations. Thus, one table gives the period from the Creation to the Flood as between 1,600 and 1,700 years, but the Bible itself, referring to the Creation, gives simply the words "In the beginning." Ussher made the calculation that from the creation of Adam to the Flood was 1,656 years. Bunsen and other scientists have assigned a much longer duration to this period. How the years were reckoned in prehistoric times is now largely a matter of conjecture, although they were probably reckoned according to the cycle of the seasons, which may have been longer or shorter than now.

J. A. H., Chester, S. C. Do you find anything in the Bible to justify the position that it is right to choose the lesser of two evils? If so, kindly refer me to the passage.

The passage you evidently have in mind is not Biblical. It is from a translation (or imitation) of Horace by Prior and the exact quotation is: "Of two evils I have chosen the least." It has no Scriptural foundation.

Reader, Atlantic, Ia. 1. How would you solve the following problem orally? If 5½ pounds of sugar cost $1, what will one pound cost? 2. What are the integral orders? I know them up to one hundred billions, but what comes after that?

1. Mentally reckon how many half pounds are in 5½ pounds and how many half cents are in $1; then you will have the number of pounds and their cost in like denominations, and the answer will be obtained by dividing the price by the number; thus: 200 divided by 11 gives the answer, 18 2-11 cents per pound, which despite the high cost of living, is certainly a amazing amount to pay for a pound of sugar. 2. The orders or periods in our notation extend indefinitely. They are reckoned in three figures and their names are derived from the Latin. After one hundred billions come units of trillions, then tens of trillions and hundreds of trillions. The trillions period is followed by quadrillions, quintillions, sextillions, septillions, octillions, etc.

Reader, Detroit, Mich. That the trusts constitute one of the great problems of the time is shown by their remarkable growth in the last fifteen years. The figures given are from Moody's Magazine:

Year	Number of Trusts	Number of Plants	Capitalization
1897	38	672	$1,419,428,50
1898	48	837	1,679,582,50
1899	88	1,746	3,027,910,56
1900	98	1,862	3,249,001,06
1901	117	2,980	5,202,350,56
1902	136	3,264	5,723,741,56
1903	146	3,469	5,941,042,56
1904	153	3,687	6,576,918,50
1905	163	3,846	6,843,891,76
1906	178	4,018	7,284,750,76
1907	186	4,068	7,367,745,00
1908	194	4,157	7,506,004,00
1909	200	4,210	7,608,426,00
1910	206	4,245	7,706,621,10
1911	224	4,426	8,066,290,86

A. K. O., McColl, S. C. 1. What was the last miracle of our Saviour? 2. Was he visible to others than his spiritual followers after his resurrection?

1. His ascension. Acts 1: 9. 2. See I. Cor. 15: 5-8. Paul at the time referred to in verse 8 was a persecutor and unbeliever.

Miscellaneous

M. E. B., Brookstine, Texas. Fancy work is sold with a subscription only.

Perplexed Reader, Bridgeport, Conn. If you will send your name and address we will try to answer your queries by mail.

Reader, Mottville, Mich. Yes; the Gospel invitation is a universal one. Whosoever will may come. He is able to save to the uttermost. He will abundantly pardon. He is more ready to grant forgiveness than we are to ask. Whatsoever we ask in Jesus' name, believing, we shall receive. Come boldly, in all sincerity, pleading Jesus' redemptive work and promise, and you will not be denied.

N. A., Dows, Ia. 1. The story is sensational and unworthy of belief. 2. Unitarian. 3. Episcopalian. 4. Roman Catholics are obliged, by their religious vows, to obey the church in preference to the State. Instances are coming to light in which this obedience extends into public affairs, showing that the Church of Rome is exceedingly active in politics, and does not hesitate to utilize its adherents to its own advantage.

T. H. S., Martha, W. Va. Baptism is a sacrament which is enjoined upon all Christians alike, and should not be neglected. This is repeatedly stated in the Gospels and is emphasized in the Christian Church to-day. We cannot set any limits to the divine mercy or to God's goodness in pardoning the sinner; but where a duty is so clearly set before us, it is incumbent upon us to perform it, all arguments to the contrary notwithstanding.

Reader, Wilkesbarre, Pa. The statement you quote is a sample of the false logic which is sometimes employed to take the place of truth because it can be distorted to the semblance of truth. There is nothing in the quotation from Wesley to justify such an application. In his Book of Discipline, which governed his followers, he demanded total abstinence for the individual and the non-use of liquors generally except in cases of extreme necessity.

Reader, Martinsburg, W. Va. Every wife has financial rights which a husband ought to respect as far as his means permit. It should never be necessary to take money. In properly regulated households of means, such as you describe, the wife usually has a regular allowance to cover home needs and personal expenses. Her share in upbuilding the home, in bearing the burden of struggle and in many cases in materially aiding in her husband's success, should not be overlooked.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 14, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

The Bab-el-Zuwryla Gate

A Typical Egyptian Village Scene

An Arab Slipper Shop

A LITTLE TOUR IN OLD EGYPT

BY A. W. CUTLER

A Beggar

A Vender

OUR little party landed at Alexandria, Egypt, about the middle of February, after an exceptionally rough, cold and cheerless voyage out from Liverpool. Here at Alexandria it was warm and delightful—like an English June. In driving from the docks to the station I experienced that glorious sense of comfort so often felt on a still, clear spring day, when the weather is "just right."

It is three hours to Cairo by train, and every inch of the way is interesting. Even on the outskirts of Alexandria we passed nomadic groups of Bedouins, camping by the side of the Mahmoudieh Canal. Out in the fields men and women, dressed alike in the loose cotton gown of the country, were busily at work. The fields were dotted with curious doorless structures made of cornstalks. They are used as temporary homes at certain seasons of the year, as, for instance, when the crops are being gathered. Later on I entered one and found it to be not more than five feet square; one could not stand upright inside. The place contained nothing but a few jars and cooking utensils. In the winter the occupants wrap themselves up in their clothes at night, covering the heads also, but leaving the feet bare. The hut I saw was occupied by a man and his son. These people, of course, are the fellaheen—the peasants—the pure Egyptian of the poorest class.

This stretch of country between Alexandria and Cairo is typical of all Egypt, in that it is as flat as a pancake. As the train rushes along you get the impression that you are traveling through a limitless expanse of cultivated prairie. For miles around you have the same uninterrupted view that you have from the deck of an ocean liner. The eye follows the land until sky and horizon blend into one. Sometimes the horizon is marked by a fringe of palm trees.

We must have been half way to Cairo before we saw the first camel. It was standing all alone in the center of a big field, and looked as it must have felt—very out of place. We saw lots of water buffaloes pasturing in the fields, invariably tended by a small boy or girl. These buffaloes are used for plowing, but more especially for operating the sakiyas, one of the ancient methods adopted for local irrigation. Two large cogged wheels connect by a shaft with a third wheel, around which are fastened a number of earthen jars. As these wheels are revolved by the animal harnessed to the arrangement, the jars descend and ascend a deeply sunken well, and as they come to the surface discharge the water automatically into a trough, which, in turn, feeds a network of tiny canals intersecting the field under irrigation. Frequently we saw camels working these sakiyas, and, in almost every instance, the animals were blindfolded. The idea apparently is to keep the poor beasts on the job. Once started, they will continue going round and round indefinitely, believing, no doubt, that somebody is behind them all the time to urge them to the unwelcome task.

We passed a constant stream of men, women and children, walking along the canal banks, or on donkeys—occasionally a whole family on a donkey! At the railway stations men and boys in a great variety of flowing robes of many colors and gaudy skullcaps or turbans came to the carriage windows with fruit, sugarcane, and cakes of all sorts. Eggs were also popular. A man sitting opposite me bought two eggs and a little salt. He offered me some salt, which I declined, and all the rest of the way to Cairo he kept glancing at me as if he thought me a very ill-mannered person.

An Arabian Slipper-Maker of Cairo

But what interested me most was the villages we came to from time to time. These were often situated near a grove of palm trees, and on artificially raised ground, this being done to escape the annual inundations caused by the rise of the Nile. The houses were low, one-storied structures, made entirely of sunbaked mud, with flat roofs ornamented by a curious little dome. In some of the villages the roofs were thatched with cornstalks and covered with great piles of rubbish—an extraordinary custom of the fellaheen. The streets were in an indescribable state of filth owing to recent rains. Groups of women and children were squatting on the muddy ground, with their backs against the walls of the hovels.

Upon my arrival at Cairo I was beset by representatives of the different hotels, and once outside the station a delegation of donkey boys surrounded me, quite sure that the first thing I should want to do would be to ride a donkey. Each and every boy assured me that if I would ride his donkey it would certainly "make me much happy."

Finally I extricated myself from all these friendly folks, and having ensconced myself and belongings in a comfortable hotel started out to see something of the life of the streets. I found I could not move a yard without being accosted and followed by guides, dragomans, postcard men, and men selling scarabs, mummies, sphinxes and pyramids. This was very amusing for a while, and then it got tiresome. But I soon discovered a way of shaking off these human barnacles without getting excited. I posed as an unfortunate individual—deaf, dumb and blind. It worked like a charm. Verily is necessity the mother of invention.

Continued on next page

A LITTLE TOUR IN OLD EGYPT

The Bazaar Silk Merchants

A Scene on a Canal Bank—Egypt's Most Traveled Highway

An Ancient Arabian Silk Loom

What were my first impressions of Cairo? Perhaps I was rather disappointed, or perhaps it was merely that I was feeling decidedly shaky as a result of the desperate passage from Liverpool. At any rate, it struck me at first that the whole place was frightfully modern. The street cars, the hotels, the carriages and automobiles with their fashionable English and American occupants, even the pedestrians, seemed prosaically up to date. But this was an impression which did not last; for in the native quarters of the city you may see Cairo today as it was a thousand years ago, and even on the most fashionable thoroughfares you will frequently witness scenes which will carry you back into bygone ages—scenes which the dominant modern note merely serves to throw into strong relief.

I have specially in mind the old water-sellers, with their ancient jars and goatskins slung over their backs. This custom is as old as Egypt, a charmingly primitive custom which I hope may last forever. The jars contain drinking water, the goatskins wash water, which is sold to the native houses where there is no running water. The men with the jars always carry a couple of brass plates in one hand, and as you go along the street you hear from time to time the clinkety-clink-clink-clash which announces the proximity of a water-vender.

A Blindfolded Camel

It is indeed interesting to see these old fellows parading up and down on the sidewalk, mingling with the up-to-date citizens of the present day. The same contrast is noticeable out on the street. An automobile of the latest design is followed (more leisurely!) by a camel mounted by an Arab of the desert. Below the waist his body is absolutely rigid. The upper part of his body sways to and fro in rhythmic accord with the absolutely noiseless tread of the great clumsy animal. And the man himself gazes silently and steadily straight ahead, looking neither to the right hand nor to the left, as if there was nothing in front of him but limitless miles of sand. One cannot fail to be impressed by this striking blend of ancient and modern.

One afternoon I took a cab to the bazaars. Fortunately cabs are cheap, as it is frequently necessary to take one. The cabmen drive along in the most reckless way, cracking their whips the whole time and yelling out "Ohrigoleck!" which means "Mind your feet!" You expect every minute to be dashed to atoms, as the same speed is maintained in the narrowest streets.

The bazaars are really very interesting. The streets are exceedingly narrow, and the stores of the merchants are often no larger than a good-sized cupboard, without doors, but with shelves on which the goods are displayed. The merchants squat down on a little platform in front. You see here the workers in gold and silver; weavers of silk fabrics, and slipper-makers, doing their work in the same way it was done hundreds of years ago. The oldest bazaar is that of the scentmakers. They have a whole street to themselves, and when you get within a hundred yards or so the only guide you need is your nose.

These narrow streets are crowded with a ceaseless throng of natives; women with veiled faces; men, women and children on donkeys; curious flat carts drawn by donkeys, on which squat women enshrouded in black—nothing visible but one eye; and occasionally along comes a great lumbering camel, quite as large as half a dozen of the native shops. Cabmen drive past with studied indifference to life and limb, and rather than get hurt you crowd yourself into a bunch of natives, at the risk of having your pocket picked or being covered with vermin.

I perceived at once that it would be impossible to photograph any of these bazaars without very efficient help. By great good fortune I ran across an excellent dragoman a couple of hours later. He could speak English well, and his terms were reasonable. I explained to him what I wanted to do and he said he could manage it, so I promptly engaged him, and the following afternoon found me again at the bazaars. Here, in spite of almost insuperable difficulties, I secured several good photographs. No sooner had I taken my camera out than I was literally hemmed in by a crowd of curious people, and before the photograph could be taken these had to be kept back and the traffic stopped on either side of the subject being photographed. The difficulties involved may possibly be imagined, certainly not described. Once a native policeman came to my aid, thrashing right and left with a rope end. The ubiquitous small boy who wears nothing but the afore-mentioned cotton gown, went off howling. When the photograph had been taken everybody wanted baksheesh, and my dragoman had to fight off all those not entitled to a fee. I was glad to pay the men who frequently volunteered to keep the crowds back.

The Watersellers

Toward the close of the afternoon I photographed a typical Egyptian cemetery, which looks rather like a collection of mummies. The sun was just setting when my dragoman excused himself, saying that he would catch me up in a few minutes. After going on a hundred yards or so, I looked back to see what he was doing, and there was the man down on his knees on the outskirts of the weird-looking burial ground, going through the various motions incident to his form of prayer.

Thus a very interesting day closed in prayer.

A NEW MIKADO RULES JAPAN

Empress Sadako

MUTSUHITO, for forty-four years emperor of Japan, died early on the morning of July 30, and on the same day the crown prince Yoshihito Haru-no-miya, his eldest son, was proclaimed in his stead, though the latter will not be crowned as emperor until probably a year from the date of his father's death.

There was universal grief throughout the Island Empire of the Orient on the passing of the great Mikado, who was beloved by all his subjects both at home and abroad and regarded in the light of a father as well as that of a ruler. Certainly during his reign Japan emerged from the darkness of centuries into a white light of civilization and progress which reveals her to-day as one of the leading powers of the world, commanding not alone the respect but the admiration of sister nations. The reign of Mutsuhito was termed the era of Meiji—that is, of intelligent administration—and no one can dispute that the term was aptly applied. The great Mikado came to the throne but a lad, yet he gave promise of what was in him, and no necromancer was required to forecast that he would accomplish great things. The young Mikado worked unceasingly as well as enthusiastically for the cause of his country.

Besides being a ripe statesman who kept himself posted on national affairs throughout the world, the dead ruler was an artist and a poet of much genius. He had a pleasing personality and powerful physique; indeed it seemed that the latter signified he should rule, for he was a giant among his people, being six feet one inch tall and weighing over two hundred pounds. It was in 1904 that he first showed symptoms of breaking down. Diabetes was his first complaint and remained with him to the end. In 1906 chronic kidney trouble developed, and from this time forward, although his strong constitution rallied now and then, he was a doomed man. The beginning of the end manifested itself on last July 19. Acute nephritis or Bright's disease set in and this complicated with diabetes brought about the death of the popular emperor. Cablegrams of condolence came to the bereaved wife, Haruko, now Dowager Empress, one of them from President Taft, expressing his own personal sorrow at the passing of the emperor, whom he had met about half a dozen times, as well as the sorrow of our nation.

Emperor Yoshihito

Yoshihito comes to the throne of his fathers popular with all classes, and it is believed he will do his best to carry out present policies. His reign is to be styled the era of Taisel—that is, great righteousness—and it is hoped the term will be in no sense a misnomer. He has been trained in the art of statecraft and has seen service on the field. He is more approachable than was his father, is devoted and affectionate, genial and familiar with his friends, and courteous and gentlemanly to his subjects. He speaks English, French and German fluently. In 1901 Yoshihito was made lieutenant general in the army and afterwards an admiral in the navy.

The Pope and the "Ne Temere" Decree

ST. LOUIS, Mo., has been called "The Rome of America." In that city there has been in many respects a more marked development of the official power of the Roman hierarchy than in any other city of the West. Consequently it was not a surprise when, on July 27, the announcement came from Roman Catholic sources in St. Louis of an important change of attitude on the part of the Papacy on the question of mixed marriages. On that date a telegraphic despatch was sent to the daily newspaper press from St. Louis, reporting the Acta Sedae, an official Vatican publication, to the effect that the Pope had repealed that portion of the decree, Ne Temere, which dealt with the question of mixed marriages and the religious training of the children of such unions. The statement was as follows:

"Protestants wishing to marry Catholics need no longer sign an agreement to rear their children (resulting from the marriage) in the Roman Catholic faith. Either will they be obliged to pledge themselves to refrain from interfering with the Catholic consort's performance of religious duties. The change has been brought about by the repeal by Pope Pius of that portion of the decree Ne Temere, and the repeal becomes effective at once.

"Ne Temere was a decree issued by Pope Pius himself on Easter, 1908. It obliged every Protestant wishing to marry a member of the Catholic faith to sign an ante-nuptial promise that he or she would refrain from interfering with the Catholic in the exercise of his or her religious duties. Further, the non-Catholic was required to pledge himself or herself to have all the children resulting from the marriage baptized Catholics, and to have them educated in Catholic schools. The decree required that these promises be made and signed before the priest who was to perform the marriage ceremony. In cases where non-Catholic persons refused to so obligate themselves, no priest was allowed to marry them, under punishment of being suspended himself. If the couple went to a Protestant minister and were married, the Catholic party to the marriage was excommunicated.

"According to the instructions said to be contained in the repeal of the Ne Temere, the non-Catholic party will be asked to sign the ante-nuptial promises, as was previously the custom. Should he or she refuse to so obligate himself or herself, the priest may perform the marriage notwithstanding the refusal."

This startling news, indicative of an amazing backdown by the Roman Church in deference to an overwhelming public opinion in Europe and this country, soon became the theme of general discussion in religious circles, Protestant as well as Catholic. Rev. D. S. Phelan, a prominent Roman cleric, is quoted as saying on this point that, by the refusal to sign this pledge, "families have been estranged and no end of enmity and discord has been engendered." He added:

"Pope Pius's action in this repeal is sure to create a stir in Catholic circles throughout the country. Protestants marrying Catholics have always regarded the enforced signing of the ante-nuptial promises as a hardship and an unnecessary humiliation. The Court of Appeals of St. Louis recently decided that the promises had no legal force. The law requiring the promises is older than the Ne Temere, which simply enlarged on and confirmed the law.

Within twenty-four hours after the semi-official statement from Catholic sources on the strength of the announcement in the Vatican journal, the whole situation underwent a sudden change. There had been a mistake somewhere, or at least a grievous misconception, and the Vatican set about its immediate correction. On July 28 this authoritative statement came by cable from Rome:

"The report that the Pope has revoked the decree Ne Temere unfounded, nor is he likely to revoke it, as it embodies provisions which have governed church procedure for two centuries. It is probable that the misunderstanding with respect to the revocation of the decree arose through the suspension of the provision relating to mixed marriages in Germany and Hungary. The other provisions, however, are in full force in those countries. In the United States and England the decree still applies in its entirety. By its terms a marriage between a Catholic and a Protestant without the sanction of the parish priest is void. It is declared that possibly the United States and England may obtain a modification of this regulation.

This left the whole situation practically in statu quo, but the explanation was by no means a complete or satisfactory one. Shortly after the original promulgation of the Ne Temere decree, the Prussian minister in Rome requested information of the Vatican concerning its scope. He asked, in plain terms, whether it was intended to apply to Germany, and the Vatican's representative, appreciating the significance of the situation, replied that it was not intended to be enforced in Emperor William's dominions. The answer was concise and satisfactory, as far as Germany was concerned, but there were other governments to be reckoned with. In England, where the decree was presumably intended to become effective, the "Vatican method" of dealing with mixed marriages was repudiated by the people. Huge public demonstrations were held in London by the Evangelical Alliance, at which the overriding of the civil law by Rome to the detriment of British subjects was unsparingly denounced. At one of these gatherings, the following resolution was adopted:

That this meeting of three thousand citizens, representative of our national Christianity, protests against the publication in the British Empire of the Decree of the Council of Trent known as Ne Temere, whereby mixed marriages contracted according to the rites of the Protestant churches and the law of the State are declared to be null and void, and British subjects who have openly and honorably entered into such marriages are held up to public reprobation as living in sin, and their children branded as illegitimate; this meeting also repudiates the pretensions of the Church of Rome to regulate the conditions determining the validity of marriages legally solemnized between British subjects in any part of His Majesty's dominions.

Other resolutions were adopted requesting the British Government to take steps for the relief of those who were suffering through promulgation of the decree which put upon such marriages the stigma of illegality and upon their helpless offspring the shameful brand of illegitimacy.

In the Dominion of Canada there was also serious trouble over the Ne Temere decree. The Supreme Court of Quebec took up the question of the validity of the marriages of Roman Catholics before Protestant ministers, and while disagreeing on some details, all five judges held that mixed marriages were valid whether performed by a Catholic or Protestant minister. It was decided that the Ne Temere decree had no legal force in the Province of Quebec. The recent suit brought by Mme. Morin, wife of a professor of McGill University, Canada, against the editor of the Catholic journal, Le Croix, was a direct outcome of the decree. Mrs. Morin was a daughter of the late Father Chiniquy, who left the priesthood and became a Protestant. He married Euphemie Allard. Le Croix, on November 18, 1911, referred to Chiniquy as an apostate, who, having been bound by his religious vows, had no right to marry, and consequently his wife was "nothing but a concubine." Mrs. Morin held this to be a slander both upon her mother and herself, and sued Joseph Begin, the editor and proprietor of the paper, and won her case, securing a judgment for $3,000 damages. Justice Greenshields, in delivering judgment, characterized the article as "grossly defamatory and libelous. . . . No man or no paper, Anglican or Roman Catholic, has the right to say of or concerning any woman that she is a concubine, or her children illegitimate." Such was the attitude of the Dominion courts on the validity of the Ne Temere decree in Canada, under cover of which three persons were grossly slandered and the functions of the civil courts and of all ecclesiastical authorities other than Roman Catholic were held up to contempt.

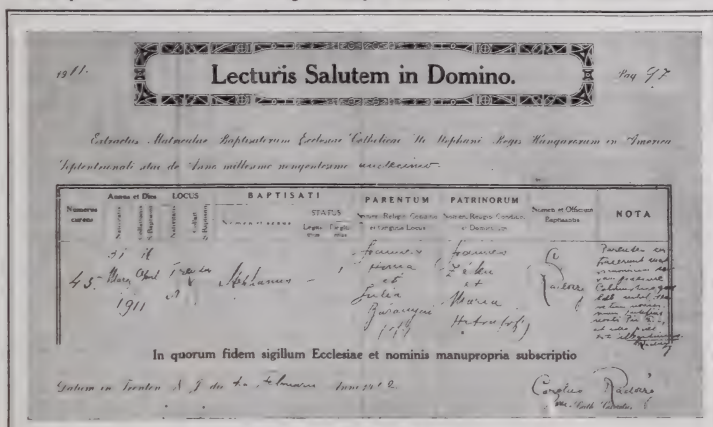
In this country the Ne Temere decree has been productive of great injustice to the principals in mixed marriages. Several cases have come to light in which the children of such marriages, when presented for baptism before a Catholic priest, have been entered on the official baptismal record as illegitimate, although their parents have rendered obedience to the marriage laws of the State.

A certificate of this character—the original document and not a copy—has been sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and is reproduced on this page in fac-simile.

This dreadful stigma, which the Roman Church has stamped upon father, mother and child in this case, is something against which every fair-minded person must revolt with indignation. That any church should have the audacity so to defame those who have complied with the laws of the land seems almost incredible; yet here is the positive evidence that Rome claims this right and exercises it here in this Republic. She dare not do it in Germany; she meets opposition in England; her right to place the stamp of infamy upon mixed marriages is authoritatively rejected in Canada; but she does it here in free America, and apparently with impunity, making no secret of it.

A similar case comes to us from Perth Amboy, N. J., where, in a baptismal certificate dated November 6, 1910, given in the Church of the Holy Cross of that place, Anna Suzanne, the infant child of Stephen Dagonya (Catholic) and Mary Csoma (Reformed) is recorded as "illegitimate," and this degrading remark is appended: "The parents are living in concubinage." This certificate is signed by Franciscus Gross, rector of the Hungarian Catholic Church. The humiliated family is probably poor and helpless, and without the means of taking the case to court for vindication; so the father, mother and daughter must go through life with the finger of scorn pointed at them, although the parents have complied with the laws of God and man in their marriage relation. These cases are examples of hundreds of others in which American citizens have been defamed by virtue of the infamous Ne Temere decree.

A Baptismal Certificate Condemning a Family to Shame, Under the "Ne Temere" Decree



1911. Lecturis Salutem in Domino. Pag 97

Extractus Matriculae Baptisteriorum Ecclesiae Catholicae St Stephani Regis Hungarorum in America

Septentrionali sita de Anno millesimo nongentesimo undecimo.

BAPTISATI — PARENTUM — PATRINORUM — NOTA

In quorum fidem sigillum Ecclesiae et nominis manupropria subscriptio

Datum in Trenton N. J. die 4. Februarii Anno 1912.

[TRANSLATION]

To Those Who Read, Health in the Lord

1911 Page 97

Taken from the Record of Baptisms of the Catholic Church of St Stephen, King of the Hungarians situated in North America, in the year 1911.

Number	Year and Day of Birth	Year and Day of Baptism	PLACE of Birth	PLACE of Baptism	BAPTIZED Name and Sex	STATUS Legitimate	STATUS Illegitimate	PARENTS Name, Religion, standing and where they date from	SPONSORS Name, Religion, Standing and Residence	Baptizing Official	REMARKS
6	March 31 1911	April 16 1911	Perth Amboy N J	Perth Amboy N J	Stephen	—	1	Joannes Hamy and Julia Baranyai	Joannes Zeku and Maria Hay	C Radoczy	Parents contracted marriage before a Calvinistic preacher which is nothing, really, the latest Reformed Church of Pope X, therefore the child is illegitimate. Radoczy

In the faith of which, the seal of the Church is attached, and the name is subscribed in proper hand.

Signed: Casimirus Radoczy, Rom. Cath. Curate.

[SEAL]

Given at Trenton N. J., Feb. 4 1912

THE GIFT OF GOD IN YOU

A SERMON

BY

Rev. Richard Braunstein, D.D.*

TEXT: "I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee." II. Tim. 1: 6

THE extent of the usefulness and achievement of any person's life depends very largely upon that person's conception of what life really is. One great reason why so few people ever make a true success of their being, is because by far the greater majority fail to regard life in the light of its tremendous capabilities and possible achievements. Most men are insensible to the highest and best things within and about them. They are dead to the rich gifts of possibility which God has implanted in every human breast. They are deaf to the myriad of voices that are pleading for their advance, and blind to the lofty heights above them, which beckon upward.

The two great conceptions of life are well illustrated by the manner in which two men will regard a little child. One sees wrapped up in the little body, as it lies sleeping in the cradle or folded gently in its mother's arms, simply a little bundle of flesh and bones. He sees only a little child, with childish fears and faith, with but the beginnings of ambition and thought, simply a child and nothing more. Another man of truer sense and sounder faith, regarding that same child, sees in him amazingly more than the weak materials and fancies of child-life; he recognizes that wrapped up there in that spark of life are all the possibilities of the man, all the signs of enormous achievement, of accomplished usefulness and of realized hope. He beholds in him great latent energy, dormant power, intrinsic vitality, waiting only for time to give it expression, for opportunity to give it vent, for development to awaken it to consciousness and form it into lasting action.

Life and Its Promise

It is very much as when one man of narrow mind regards a kernel of corn or seed of grain, and forgetting that rich property whereby it is capable of unfolding into manifold life, thinks the seed complete in itself, while a second man of broad faith and quickened forethought sees combined in the little germ all the possibilities of matured life and ripened fruits. The acorn of the forest, as he holds it in his hand, bears to him the image of the ponderous oak, and reflected in its little shining surface he sees the spreading branches, the mighty trunk and tenacious roots of the tree that will be; the tree which one day, if the acorn grows, will brave the storms and defy the tempest.

So, friends, is he who regards his own life and the lives of those about him aright; life to him is a gift from God; it is capital, stored-up energy, latent power, dormant force. It is replete with possibilities of improvement, with ability of unfolding into grace and grandeur and usefulness. It is at every moment to him a reflection of what may be, an image of what will be, and though at present incomplete, he presses into the unknown future with hopeful assurance that the possible in his life will become the actual. The happiest hour in all of a young man's existence is the hour in which he awakes to consciousness, feels his strength, learns his gift, hears his calling, is sure of his mission, and, sensible to all the capabilities of the forces upon which he may depend, presses into his truer life with zealous hope and an unbounded faith.

The Revelation of Christ

And now one of the brightest and best of all the revelations that we may find in Jesus Christ is this very revelation of ourselves; not ourselves as we are, but ourselves as we ought to be, as we may become. God holds up in Jesus our life, and bids us behold in him the rich possibilities of our nature. "See," he says, "what purity, what trust, what tenderness, what humility, what usefulness, what devotion to the Father's will." Behold, all these priceless principles of character are the ripened fruits in Christ of which you possess the seeds, they are the ends to which you possess the means. And how beautifully all this revelation in Christ of man's possible self appeared when Jesus was upon earth! Every one with whom he came in contact seemed to be aroused into conscious possession of something within him of which he was unconscious before. Christ came into the old world of men's lives and immediately they became new. The blind and deaf and dumb saw and heard and spoke; to each the old earth seemed to burst forth into vigorous life; new beauty and divine possibility were everywhere seen in that light of God. Weeping Mary with forgiven sins, doubting Thomas with newly found faith, wavering Peter with final trust, John with amazing love, Paul with boundless zeal, are a few of the representative names of souls who found themselves when they found Christ.

Paul's Plea for an Awakening

Here, then, I take it, we have much light thrown upon the meaning of the apostle Paul, when he made appeal to the gift of God in the heart of the young Timothy. Paul had the true conception of life, and he saw in the youthful disciple, as in a child, as in the seed or acorn, tremendous possibility, wondrous energy, phenomenal power; and more than that, as that disciple had come into possession of the Christian life, had Christ formed within him, had been baptized with the holy Spirit of God, Paul saw that all his wondrous possessions and possibilities and powers were unfolding in the direction of useful service for the kingdom of God. But as yet those powers were inactive, those forces were sleeping, that gift within him of becoming an expression of Christ was dormant and Paul appeals for their arousing. Stir up, he says, that gift, fan into flame that spark, beget into life that hope that is within thee. Become transformed into the complete likeness of your Master and bring into subjection every faculty of your soul and yield over to the magnifying, multiplying power of God every talent in your possession. Paul himself had found the high achievements of which a life with God is capable; he had stirred up God's gift to him until he had become a delightful image of his Master. He now calls upon Timothy to do the same with his God-given gifts.

Our Sleeping Talents

And it is right here that we find our lesson. We, too, have had given unto us the gift of God, the capital for right investment, the capacity for richer development, the possibility of highest usefulness. We, too, have had set beside our own incomplete lives the great life of Christ, and we see in him the great unoccupied territory of possible achievement. But how many of us have truly, in the apostle's sense, stirred up into being and realized life our gift from God? In many of us, yes, in most of us, is it not too true that that gift lies unimproved and dormant? Or if it has been stirred, has it not been partially, rather than thoroughly, stirred? Not one of us can stand forth and properly claim that he is at the end of self-improvement, and that he has achieved all with his gifts. In each of us the faculties which God has given us are still capable of greater expression and development.

There is the gift of our social nature, with its illimitable possibility of growth. Society is pressing its demands upon us for purity. In every community in which we may enter, there are portions, at least, which will not bear the searchlight of scrutiny and inspection. They are contaminated with almost every conceivable form of sinful practice and secret crime, and it is our duty in the little world which surrounds us to so thoroughly stir up the gift of our social light-bearing as to be reflections in purity and moral stability of our Saviour. Society also demands our sympathy. Paul well knew the need of this feature to the Christian character, and doubtless had it in mind when thinking of the latent gifts of Timothy. Each one of us owes a great deal to society in the way of sympathy. We are inclined to forget that God is our common Father and that all we are brethren. If there are any sick, needy, discouraged, sorrowing, mourning, like so many entreating voices, they appeal to our interest and helpful effort. Listen where you will, and you will always hear the cry of need, a call for your endeavor. In the midst of such demands, behold your Saviour, with every fiber of his being bent upon the relief of suffering, and with such compassion born of God do you go and do likewise.

Not only are we to arouse the gifts of our social nature, but we are to awaken and set into lively action the abilities of the intellect. We are social beings, and we are also intellectual. Paul beautifully demonstrated in his own character the extent to which sociability and mind may develop in the Christian. Stir up your mental gifts; study nature and humanity. Above all, study God. Make every possible effort to rise into the highest realm of intellectual activity; make the best of every opportunity, ennoble yourself with the loftiest ideals and purest purposes, and be assured that you are never too old to learn; in no instance whatever can ignorance be bliss; it can never be folly to be wise. The loftier our attainments in the world of knowledge, the better we are prepared to think the thoughts of God and to be in harmony with his truth. Therefore, stir up vigorously, energetically, enthusiastically, every feature of your intellectual being.

Our High Calling Unto God

But higher than all are the gifts of our spiritual nature. These are the crowning graces of the soul. The spiritual side is the farthest away from earthly things. Many there are who never even enter this sphere of spiritual activity because their gifts have been deadened by disuse, and while they may be social and intellectual giants, they are spiritual dwarfs. But there is the possibility of wondrous development in this direction of the soul. The perfectly rounded, symmetrically developed man is he whose religious, intellectual and social natures are all equal. One cannot be stunted except at the expense of the other two. The talent in each which God has given us are capable of like increase. The higher we reach into God, the larger and broader will be our characters. To stir up the highest and best gifts will make the activities of the lower more capable of perfection, and he who will employ to the best advantage the presence of the Holy Spirit of God, the truth of his word, the many means of grace, will gradually discover that he is unfolding like the oak from the acorn, like the stalwart man from the tiny child into the glorious character of his Lord. He will discover his own life reflected in the Saviour, and will begin to understand the mysteries of his own being by the solution which he finds in the life of Christ.

As when one holds the seashell close to his listening ear and hears, not the beatings of the waves upon some distant shore, but the reverberations of his own heart-beats resounding there, so he who gets in closest contact with the living Christ will hear, not the life-beats of some distant divine echo, but to his amazement he will hear his own true life beating in each heart-throb of his Master.

PRIZED THE RED-LETTER BIBLE

The Red Letter Bible you sent me for my daughter is the most beautiful book. Its elegant binding, clear print, and splendid material put together in such a substantial manner make it one of the most desirable books I have ever seen. May your magnificent Bibles be placed in many a home to attract the reading public and point the way to the great Beyond, is the wish of your more than pleased reader.

E. S. WOOD,
Superintendent of Public Schools.
Fulton, Mo.

* Pastor M. E. Church, Ashland, N. Y.

MY DUTY

OD called me forth to serve; I could not go
Far out upon the height, or midst the throng Iould not cheer amidst the battle's van,
r join the multitude in victory's song.
own small sphere was all too large for me—could not leave it for the busy mart—he had called me to his harvest field, nd I could not refuse to do my part.

oked about me for a work to do;
found it lying at my very door;
ery of need that I had often heard,
he weakness and despair I'd seen before.
re was a time to say a word to one n sin, and there a chance to lend a hand; moment here and there in which to pray,
o hear and sympathize and understand.

en, while the multitude in chorus swell he praise of wreath-crowned victors true and brave,
me go forth upon the field of life,
nd succor those my Master died to save.
duty this: to give the rare, sweet flower
f love and kindness while 'tis yet to-day;
lend a hand to pilgrims on the march.
nd speak a word to cheer them on their way.
iedom, Ind. ASA LEE KENT.

The Hope of the Future

HOUSANDS of homes in the slum districts of Chicago are Christless nd prayerless. Cruelty takes the ace of kindness, oaths are heard in ead of prayers, and neglect and in fference abound where moral and ligious instruction should be given. r. J. F. Atkinson, the superintendent the Chicago Boys' Club, with his lpers, is laboring in some of the ost benighted parts of this great odom, Chicago, to save the boys, any of whose homes are worse than homes at all. The purpose of this oys' Club, with its three branches in ie slums, is to provide for poor, agged boys places where they can me freely and regularly into an at osphere of love, sympathy and help ilness, where they can receive the atherly counsels and be surrounded the wholesome Christian influences prayer and spirituality which they annot get in their own homes.

Five evenings of each week and on unday afternoons hundreds of these oys come from the tenements and om the streets. They are given op ortunity for wholesome amusement nd exercise in gymnasiums and game ooms, for mental culture in libraries nd reading rooms and for industrial raining in carpenter shops, freehand rawing classes, basket-weaving, print ng departments, etc. Two evenings f each week are given over to heart -heart talks, stereopticon lectures nd Gospel services. Even on the ights when industrial classes are in rogress the boys are gathered at the lose for a season of song, prayer and estimony. These Boys' Clubs provide hat every boy needs, but many fail to et: physical development, mental raining and a moral and spiritual plift. J. G. L.

Colorado's Woman Pastor

MRS. MINNIE WARD PATTERSON has the distinction of being he first woman minister in Colorado Springs. She has received and accepted a call to become permanent pastor of Hillside Congregational Church, succeeding her son, the Rev. J. L. Patterson, who has resigned to become field secretary of the Florence Crittenton Association. Mrs. Patterson has frequently substituted for her son in the pulpit, and when he resigned the congregation was practically unanimous in extending the call to her. She graduated from Hillsdale College, Michigan, with the degree of Master of Arts. One of her classmates was John C. Patterson, whom she married. She is a Greek scholar, and an artist of ability.

A Sunday Feast

Coming early each week, I save my CHRISTIAN HERALD for a Sunday feast. After long acquaintance, each succeeding issue seems better than the previous one. Nothing affords me greater satisfaction than its introduction to other home circles. GEO. D. DODGE.
Hampton Falls, N. H.

Waiting in a Hurry

THE world is speed crazy, and growing more so day by day. Ocean liners are built to clip a few minutes off the previous best record time for a three thousand mile trip. Railroad trains are advertised with record-breaking speed between given points as the chief attraction. Mountains are tunneled or cut away, costly bridges are built, and roads are straightened solely to reduce the time of a journey by a few moments. Automobiles and aeroplanes become noteworthy in proportion to their speed. New means of communication base their claim for attention on greater speed. Everybody calls for speed, speed, speed, and the more they get the more they demand.

The same mania disturbs every department of business. It keeps social life and even home life in constant turmoil. "Rush!" is the lash which every business man feels on his own back, and it is the lash which he applies to those under him. In contracts we find the words, "Time is of the essence of this contract." The work must be completed on a given date, or a penalty is incurred; whereas for a day gained a bonus is earned.

Rush to build the house; rush to get the paper out; rush to plant the corn; rush to fill the orders; rush to catch a train—from morning to night, if we yield to the current, we are swept on in the constant rush, rush, rush, which exhausts both body and spirit and destroys in us all true sense of perspective.

It might almost be said that we are living explosive lives. No sooner is a plan conceived or a wish formed, than we must achieve it at once. The old motto on the savings bank pass-book, "Take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves," does not suit the temper of the present age. We are liable to be impatient of the small change and call it "chicken feed." The day of small things is contemptuously rejected in many business enterprises, and plans "to get rich quick" find favor. Even in legitimate enterprises, to which one would never dream of applying that insulting phrase, the same spirit of haste causes many an honest man or concern to ride to a fall.

. . .

QUICKLY come, quickly go. Nothing endures that has too sudden a birth. "Up like a rocket, down like the stick." A business that is launched full-grown, without years of slow, tedious growth to give it deep root or foundation, seldom endures the storm of competition, the turmoil of internal dispute, the strain of hard times, or the draining waste of inexperience. When you find a newly organized concern just starting in business on a big scale, with elegantly appointed offices, a large staff of employees, and elaborate stationery, keep your weather eye open for an auction sale.

A mushroom springs up in a night and finds its way to the frying-pan the next day. An oak tree may still be in its childhood after a hundred years. The famous Cowthrop Oak, at Cowthrop, Yorkshire, England, was planted about the time of the Norman Conquest, and is at least eight hundred years old to-day, cared for and venerated by the English nation. Some of the great redwoods of California were shaking their branches in the wind when Moses wandered with the children of Israel through the wilderness three thousand years ago. These noble veterans of the forest have never been in a hurry. They have waited in calm majesty as the seasons and the years have passed in long procession, and the only rush they have felt has been the rush of the tempests, by which they have never been moved. A wholesome, healthful thing it is for body and soul to spend some of the vacation hours looking up at the trees and learning from them the truth of Milton's words, "They also serve who only stand and wait."

. . .

GREAT enterprises grow by the accumulation of countless little things and by the combined force of many smaller powers. This is equally true whether it be a great business enterprise, or the greater enterprise of building a character that shall stand the test of eternity. Some one has said that character "is not built by a powerful effort, but by long-continued accumulation of small acts. A great soul does not swell out into grandeur in a day; it grows bit by bit, and fills up every little space of time with something of growth. The giant tree can weather the fiercest storm; but the whole of its mighty force once flowed in microscopic particles dissolved in its rising sap."

Whether it be business success, or personal influence and reputation in the world, or a strong, pure character, and "conscience void of offense," it is to be gained, not by any single brilliant coup, but in the way Longfellow says in his Psalm of Life, "Still achieving, still pursuing, learn to labor and to wait."

Right here the easy philosophy of a writer is in danger of clashing with the practical experience and insistent demands of the man who is battling in the world. "I have no time to wait; I'm in a hurry!" he exclaims. "Life is short; my creed is 'hustle!' All things come to him who waits only if he hustles while he waits." The waiting lesson is the hardest of all for eager souls to learn. It is all the more hard because it is so often misunderstood.

The right kind of waiting does not mean idleness; it means patience. Waiting may sometimes join hands with hurry, but never with worry. While we toil on with all our might, using every moment and every opportunity for its full worth, we can keep our hearts in peace and wait patiently for the result. "I worked with patience, which means almost power," said Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

. . .

EVERY good worker looks forward to some desired achievement. Too much haste, too much speed may bring him to wreck on his way. A spirit of impatience hinders his progress. "Make haste slowly" is a safe rule. It is necessary at times to put on the brakes, and try waiting in a hurry. Stop the rush and take time to think. Quiet thought steadies and refreshes the tired, worried worker. No great task need be finished in a hurry. Completion is not the most vital thing. The one essential is that whatever we do shall be well done as far as we go. This life is but the beginning of endless usefulness. We can afford to be patient, doing our best, and wait to hear the words, "Well done. . . .

Thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many."

Poems Everyone Should Know

COMFORT

SPEAK low to me, my Saviour, low and sweet
From out the hallelujahs, sweet and low,
Lest I should fear and fail, and miss Thee so
Who art not missed by any that entreat.
Speak to me as to Mary at thy feet!
And if no precious gums my hands bestow,
Let my tears drop like amber while I go
In reach of thy divinest voice complete
In humanest affection—thus, in sooth,
To lose the sense of losing. As a child,
Whose song-bird seeks the wood for evermore,
Is sung to in its stead by mother's mouth
Till, sinking on her breast, love-reconciled,
He sleeps the faster that he wept before.
ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

Advice to Young Preachers

REV. PROFESSOR DAVID SMITH, D.D., in the British Weekly, gives some practical hints for the encouragement of young pastors, who find their ministry waning in spiritual vigor and feel that they are gradually coming down to a dull, dead level, which gives discouragement both to preachers and congregations:

"Let me offer to my younger brethren who are enduring the ordeal several counsels which I know to be good. 1. Recognize your place, however narrow, as the heritage which God has given you, and your work, however disheartening, as the service which he requires of you. 2. Amid the poverty of your actual keep before you the grandeur of the ideal. The church at the best is so imperfect, and often so squalid in its worldliness and pettiness that one could hardly endure it if one did not see the divine ideal of the Kingdom of Heaven hovering above it and shedding glory upon it. Try to see as God sees. View your people as 'heaven's possible novitiates, angels who have not found their wings.' It makes a world of difference in our feeling toward the dullest and least engaging when we recognize him as an immortal soul, the purchase of our Saviour's precious blood. You may accomplish little, but it is something to touch the dormant sensibility in a human breast; and patient faith and love will do it. 3. When you have little encouragement without, retire into the inner sanctuary, and find refreshment there. Of course, it is not given to every man to enrich literature with the fruit of his study, but it is possible for every man to enrich his own mind and redeem his ministry from futility. 4. Never let your surroundings set your standard. Put your heart and soul into every sermon. Study as diligently for fifty peasants in the little sanctuary of a poor hamlet as for a thronging multitude in a cathedral; and prepare every sermon as though you would send it to the publishers to be read by the world. It is not the judgment of your hearers that you should consider, nor even your own ideal of workmanship: it is the verdict of your Lord. Prepare and preach your sermons 'as unto him.' Remember always that the King is in the audience."

Anvil Sparks

..WEARING a sour face is a libel on religion.

..WEAKNESS is not so bad as blindness to it.

..A WISE man is not over-confident of his wisdom.

..PEACE is valuable enough to fight for if necessary.

..THE biggest help we can ever give another is just love.

..INDECISION is a great blockade in the way of progress.

..THERE are no changes of fashions in the garb of righteousness.

..SOME folks never have a chance because they just fool around and will not take it.

..WHEN a duty looks to be beneath your dignity, your dignity needs to be lowered a few notches.

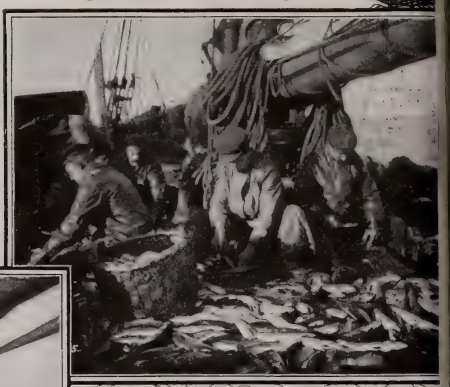
..WE DO have many solemn duties, to be sure, but it never adds to their importance to look too solemn because of them.

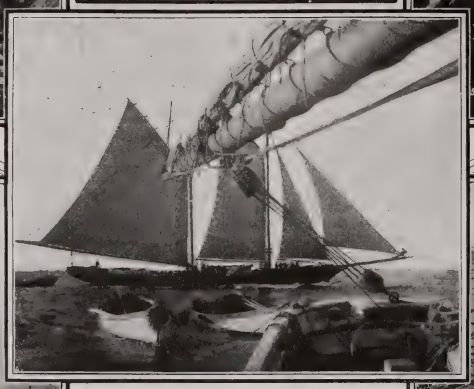
THE HARVEST OF THE SEA

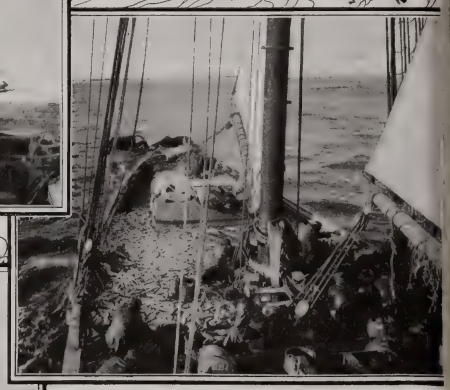
THE DAY'S CATCH

THE LAST TACK

THE DAILY CLEANUP







Photographs by Levick

LETTERS FOR HOME

HEY, you Novie! Wut the great horn spoons air you foulin' up my roddin' fer?"

"Hoot, mon, who's foulin' yer roddin'? Mickle ye care uf ye can but draw yer knife an sim ither budie's whun he is na lookin', ye shrimp-faced Glooster loon!"

A Massachusetts Portuguese and a Quebec Frenchman guffawed their delight over this tiff between Gloucester and Cape Breton, and a Nova Scotian lad from Lunenburg was just poised ready to add his lively tongue to the dispute when a high-keyed Cockney voice broke in with "Dip, you bloomin' 'eathen, dip! 'Ere's the fish."

In a single instant it seemed as if the sea were alive with tiny fish, and behind them came the omnivorous cod, jumping like salmon for a fly as they devoured their smaller brethren and fled in terror to escape the cavernous jaws of three or four great drab-backed whales that followed close on their trail. The water fairly seemed to boil, it was so full of fish, and the air was as full of shouts of precaution and advice, while every man plied his dip-net as fast and furiously as he could, fouled his neighbor's anchor line and said what was in his heart without let or hindrance.

There were ten wild minutes of shouting and dipping, then the sculpin had gone and only the song—popular on the hotel verandas of Gloucester the summer before—of a New England boy rose above the splash of the sinkers, the flapping of the monster codfish and the dull thud of the muckles as the fish were stunned and taken from the lines. Great green-backed rollers, almost a half mile from crest to crest, would silently lift a line of dories to make a frieze against the sky line, then leaving them behind, swing up a new set with moving men like figures in a pantomime.

Mid-August had brought all the diversified fishing boats of the Grand Banks fleet together in one great group for the schooling of the cod that gives them their easiest catch of the season. That morning the first level beams of the sun had splashed with pink and gold and pearly-gray and white the riding sails of a hundred little ships as they lay in a three-mile circle around that terror of the North Atlantic, the Virgin Rock. As Newfoundlander and Frenchman, Bluenose and Yankee, slid gracefully over the long unbroken swell, their many-colored dories dropped from their sides, and mid the rattling of ropes and blocks, the splashing of oars, and the shouts of the rowers, made off for the charmed circle where the cod were sure to come. All day the fish swam steadily by in little schools, and bit as steadily as they swam. The men fished and chaffed one another and sang in every phase of English that's spoken from Connecticut to Labrador, to say nothing of Italian, Portuguese, Gaelic and French. All day the dories filled with gleaming fish, and relief boats ferried the precious harvest home to the mother smack, where tables and knives were ready for the cleaning process, and the "wetting of salt" in the hold that would take far into the darkness to finish.

HOMEWARD BOUND

The long twilight crept up out of the east, and like bees to the hive, heavy with their freight, the dories gathered home, to be swung aboard the schooners for the night. From scarlet and gold the western sky paled to amethyst and lemon-yellow, and the sea stretched out to meet it, a shimmering opal of blue and green. The smell of bacon and fried cod's tongues floated across the water till supper was over. Then, with many moving lanterns, decks were cleared, dories washed, and the day's catch cleaned and sent to fill the yawning space below deck, where layer on layer, with salt, lay several thousand of their fellows.

The darkness gathered, and into its gray and purple depths the news of the catch was passed from ship to ship, growing fainter and fainter as it sped to those that were but far-off voices in the night. Red and green port and starboard anchor lights soon blinked on the very water line, and a hundred bright stars winked and gleamed where a hundred lanterns made long, graceful arcs, swing ing at the peaks.

THE RICHES OF THE SEA

With the dawn came fog—great silent banks rol ing like heavy wind-driven smoke. A burnishe copper shield, the sun rose, only to be quenched i the leaden gray that settled over all the flee From every deck there rose the raucous voice of foghorn, while from the scattered dories answerin notes on conchs and all varieties of tin horns tol those left behind the whereabouts of their fellow Redoubled blowing marked the evening hour whe the dories crept home through the dripping gloom.

Darkness came, and each in the isolation of th fog set his lights and anchor watch for th menace of the night. Feebly the lanterns strov against the bulwark that shut them round. A fe short yards their light fought its way through th fleecy barrier; then there was darkness. The lon swell rose till, with a roar like a voice of fate abov all man's puny sounds, the waves broke about th Virgin Rock. In its silences, the wails and groan of the foghorns warned the small and pleaded wit the great who might be abroad on such a night.

The leaden hours dragged on to midnight. Th rime grew white on the beards of the watch, an little pools gathered in the stiff folds of their oil skins as they leaned at the rail watching an listening.

Then it came, the deep sonorous bellow of steam siren. A rhythmic pulsing of the air told o a great ship feeling her way through the dark, th fog and the fleet, surrounded by sounding horns, ye unable to tell how near they were. Suddenly ou of the blanket of mist rose the white numerals marking the feet on the bow of a liner. Then th startled and startling cry of the lookout, "A ligh five points under port bow, sir," and the steady voice on the bridge, "Hard-a-starb'rd." The swis of imprisoned water; the grating of wood and steel the flashing of lights from the portholes; the fac of a child in the light, and she was gone into th night that brought her with her freight of life an light and her menace of death and the dark.

Of such are the dangers of deep sea fishers. S close death comes and passes. With a changing wind came morning and sunlight and the old tas of taking fish. All the standing jokes of the fleet come out for their annual rejuvenation. The

Continued on next page

RAILROADING IN CLOUDLAND

BY CHARLES M. PEPPER

BOLIVIA has taken a unique way among South American countries of observing its national birthday. It proposes to celebrate by opening a railway which will give it a short line across the coast range of the Andes down to the ocean. Bolivia's July 4, that is, its independence day, comes on August 6, and this is the day set for opening the railroad which connects the capital La Paz with Arica on the Pacific.

Bolivia itself is one of the most interesting countries in the world. It sometimes has been called the imprisoned country because it had no coast line. Its great tableland or plateau sustains more than one million inhabitants at an altitude of nearly two miles. There is no part of the world where so large a number of people find the means of subsistence at such an elevation. Tibet, as is well known, has very few inhabitants.

The opening of this short route, or air-line, will mark one of the most notable triumphs of railway engineering. The vast wall of the Andes, which stretches for thousands of miles along the Pacific coast, has seemed to defy railway builders. Yet their genius time and again has pierced the wall.

A year or so ago the first short line from the Pacific to the Atlantic was signalized by the railway through the Uspallata Pass which joined the systems of Chile and the Argentine Republic. Other lines climbing right into the heart of the Andes had been built in Peru and Ecuador. There was also a winding line from Antofagasta up from Chile to the Bolivian tableland and the Peruvian route by way of Lake Titicaca. But the La Paz Arica line is by far the shortest. A great advantage will be for passengers to be able to get from the coast to the heart of Bolivia in the midst of the perpetual snows of the Cordilleras in about fifteen hours.

The Arica La Paz line starts from Arica, or rather from Tacna, for there has been a line across the valley from Arica to Tacna on the edge of the sandy desert for many years. Arica is notable both from the picturesque point of view and from its history. A tremendous crag or spur of the mountain —the Morro—beetles right out over the sea, but at the base there is smooth water, practically a sheltered harbor. Far up in the Andes sometimes can be seen the glistening snowcap of Mount Tacna, which is 19,000 feet above sea-level.

Arica's written history goes back nearly 350 years, for Sir Francis Drake wrote in the log of the Golden Hind that he found at this point a small collection of native huts. That is about the only record of early history, although the Spanish voyagers also make mention of landing there.

Numerous earthquakes and so-called tidal waves have been recorded. In 1868 the United States frigate Wateree was carried a mile inland and her companion ship, the Fredonia, was destroyed. In the American navy to-day and on its retired list there are officers who recall their experiences on those ships.

A Street Scene in La Paz

The new railroad climbs up from Tacna a pretty steep wall in surmounting the volcanic chain of the Andes. In some places the grade is six feet. In consequence the rack and cog system has to be used. The place where the ridge of the coast range is crossed is a little more than 14,000 feet. A novel idea is to be introduced on this road for the benefit of passengers. I have frequently described the soroche, or mountain sickness, from which few travelers in the Andes escape. It is sometimes called the land form of sea-sickness. One gets over it in a few days, but in a short journey the sickness is very acute and for persons of weak heart it is somewhat dangerous. To overcome the effect of the quick ascent and the great altitude it is proposed to have oxygen compartments in the passenger cars. Passengers in these compartments will have in the air they breathe the same proportions of oxygen as at sea-level.

How far the new line will serve for freight is not yet settled, although it will be used to some extent. It follows the route which used to be taken for transporting freight by mules and burros across the volcanic desert and through the pass to the tableland. It will not, however, displace the llamas, which are the native beasts of burden in the Andes and which serve as freighters in regions where even the burros and mules can be used only to a limited extent. The llamas sometimes have been called competitors with the railways. They are hardly that, since they really bring traffic to the railways from regions which would otherwise be inaccessible.

The Arica La Paz line will not afford much of native life to see until it has crossed the pass and dropped down to the great plateau. It is on this plateau that the native Bolivian Indians, both the Quichuas and the Aymaras, or primitive races, are found living about as they lived when the Spaniards came four centuries ago.

The Arica La Paz line is only one chapter in the national railway development now going on in Bolivia. Recently a railway was completed to Potosi in the heart of what three centuries ago was the most famous silver mining region in the world. Mr. Ignacio Calderon, the Bolivian minister in Washington, says that when the Mayflower arrived on the coast of New England in 1620 and Boston was not yet in existence, the city of Potosi, founded in 1545, had a population of more than 160,000, and could boast of several multi-millionaires. With the working out of the silver mines the population diminished and until within late years has been less than 10,000. It is expected that the opening of this railway branch, by cheapening the transportation of supplies and machinery for the silver mines and improving the means of transporting the ore, will cause the revival of silver mining in this district.

While Bolivia has copper and gold and other minerals as well as silver, her greatest wealth is in tin. There is as much romance in tin mining in Bolivia as in diamond mining in South Africa and gold mining in our own country. Fortunes just as large have been made. One man who a few years ago was a prospector now has an income from his tin mines equal to that of the bonanza kings of California or the South African mining magnates. He has recently offered to build a railway line which the government itself did not feel able to undertake.

In all the world last year there were only 110,000 tons of tin produced and to this quantity Bolivia contributed one-fifth, so the value of her tin deposits can be understood. Some of this tin is mined as high as 17,000 feet. When I was in Bolivia a few years ago a mine owner gave me some tin crystals which he said one of his Indian workmen had brought down from an altitude of 17,500 feet. Most of the mines, however, are worked at altitudes of less than 15,000 feet. Tin mining has thus the distinction of location at one of man's most lofty permanent dwelling-places as well as beneath the bed of the sea. This opposite extreme is found in the world's oldest known tin mines in Devonshire, England.

The Ever-Present Llama—the Beast of Burden of All the Upper Andes

THE HARVEST OF THE SEA

Continued from preceding page

chronic grouches and the lords of unassailable happy temperament must stand for the caustic or good-natured raillery of their neighbors. Small boys out for their first year with the fleet go through their initiation and fall victims to the strawberry weed, that beautiful poison ivy of the deep. Rival claims to first honors at seamanship are argued pro and con.; for in the last good blow the Lolla W. dragged her anchor, and with the dawn came slipping back shamefacedly to the jibes of the laughing fleet.

"Hey! git a ring on bottom ta hitch to, why don't ya?" and "How're the folks ashore this mornin'?" . . . "Oh, I thought you'd been over on a visit." Then the ubiquitous youngster, "Say! Gotta piece o' cable ye're not usin'?" and from the drifted schooner now safely again at anchor, "Ye young rapscallin'! I'd like ta use ut over your back!" "Well, why don't ya stick round when the chances is good?"

Keen but silent rivalry urged on the fishing, for great is the honor of that ship which shall first stand off for home with a full catch.

As August waned, one little schooner after another battened down her hatches over a full cargo, took letters from those left behind, shook out her canvas and sailed away for St. Johns, Halifax or Gloucester, a season's work well done. Through mist and rain, through storm and calm, through moonlit nights and over sunny seas, back to the home wharfs the stanch little ships are drawing, back to mothers, wives and sweethearts with the harvest of the sea. THEODORE RAND-MCNALLY.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

OTTO KOENIG, President — GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor — THEODORE WATERS, Secretary

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by "The Christian Herald," at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

Subscription Price, $1.50 a year, in advance.
Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.
Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.
Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.
Change of Address.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Progress Heavenward

WE WATCH the beautiful motions of the sea birds following a ship—now floating on the wind with no apparent exertion, now flapping their wings in upward flight, now dropping to catch from the crest of a wave a morsel of food thrown from the ship, now outstripping the wind to recover the distance lost, now wheeling with graceful curve to right and left, and ever crossing and recrossing one another as if in joyous dance. Watching them, one forgets that they have any other motion. Yet all the while they are traveling onward twenty knots an hour. Those various motions among themselves do not suspend at all their steady flight across the deep. God means that we shall have life's movements among ourselves. That is the truest, most beautiful Christian life, in man or woman, which, diligent in whatever station Providence may have assigned, with cares of business, cares of children, cares of society, cares of friendship, is yet amidst all making steady progress heavenward; now stooping for food, now soaring in thankfulness, now sweeping hither and thither in the exercise of God-given faculties, and ever with friendly heart mingling in beautiful harmony with the kindred flight of others; yet in every one of these motions regulated by the purpose of an all-controlling flight onward, ever onward, to the desired haven.

No man's faith is right, no religion is of the worthiest type, if "mine" and "here" and "now" are its bounding terms. No man's prayer is according to Christ's standard if it does not sweep with its vision the nations of the world and the ages of the future—all his heart rejoicing if he may be identified, in however humble and unnoticed a way, with the interests of Christ's universal and everlasting reign. Here is the nobility of Christian living—to take this larger view; to look at ourselves through the small end, and at God's kingdom through the large end of the field-glass; to see with sweet content a future good which is not for us, and cheerfully to give our energy, make our sacrifices and endure our sufferings in order that the coming man and the coming time may be better than ourselves and our own time; that those who catch the torch from our falling hands may lose no time in kindling it afresh, but leap forward with shouts of victory to the goal.

The Dead Mikado

THE sympathy of the whole world has gone out to the people of Japan during the last few weeks. Mutsuhito, their beloved emperor, is dead, and not alone as a great national loss does this blow strike them, but each and every Japanese feels a keen sense of personal bereavement. As Mutsuhito's reign was the Victorian era of Japan, so the ruler himself was beloved for his kindly wisdom and his sterling character as Victoria the Good was dearly loved by her subjects throughout the British Empire. His name, as hers, had found its way into the nursery rhymes of the people. Many a man in the prime of life can remember no other ruler. All the youth of the land has been reared in an atmosphere of loyalty that has made the phrase "For the Emperor" carry the same thrill to their hearts as an appeal in the name of Old Glory to the loyal American. There is a sob at many a heart and many an eye is wet, for they feel that they have lost a great national father.

Down through history from Grecian times to our own, we find, here and there, a man whose name looms large in his nation's story called the father of his country. Surely none has ever more truly deserved such distinction than the late Mikado. As a boy of only fourteen years he ascended the throne, which we have every reason to believe his fathers had occupied in unbroken line of descent for 2,570 years. He found himself monarch of an isolated land—a land that had stood still—and hedged about by a power greater than his own. Within a year the Shogunate was abolished—the military power which since 1199 had overshadowed the throne. Then each succeeding year marked a stride toward progress. In 1871 the feudal system was abolished. Eighteen seventy-two saw the completion of Japan's first railway. In 1873 the Gregorian calendar was adopted. The Satsuma rebellion, the last effort of the old régime, was suppressed in 1877. Two years later the Mikado granted his people a constitution and the next year established a Diet. In 1894 came the victorious struggle with China. Then after ten years of commercial and industrial progress the war with Russia. The following year, 1905, marked the realization of one of Mutsuhito's great ambitions. The treaty of alliance with Great Britain was signed, and the phrase "political inferiority," which had been diplomatically dropped by the other nations in 1901, was forever wiped out.

It has been stated that Japan would have advanced to her splendid position among the nations under any other leader—the development was due. Even so might it be said the thirteen colonies of North America were due for political separation from the mother country in 1776 and the event would have taken place without the wise generalship of George Washington. Yet as Washington guided the fortunes of the revolution, so has Mutsuhito guided his people from the depths of medievalism to the light of modern civilization.

Mail Swindlers

IN SPITE of the fact that the Post Office Department has been unusually vigilant in its supervision of the mails, to guard against swindlers, the extraordinary statement is made in a report to the Postmaster General last month that during the past year the American people were victimized to the extent of $120,000,000, chiefly by bogus mines and worthless land projects. In the preceding twelve months, over $70,000,000 were secured by similar swindles. There have been over one thousand arrests and 452 convictions for the year ending June 30, while many cases are still awaiting trial. It is a difficult undertaking to protect the people against these specious frauds. Coming in the guise of legitimate enterprises, they usually succeed in cozening large sums out of the pockets of the credulous before their real character becomes apparent. There is practically no limit to the ingenuity of this class of freebooters. Their wholly imaginative descriptions of enterprises read like a page from the Arabian Nights, and fascinate the unwary, and their skill in finding victims among all classes—professional and business men, farmers, preachers, tradesmen and thrifty mechanics—puts vulgar rascality to the blush and elevates swindling to the dignity of a fine art. Their dupes for a little while live in a fool's paradise, but the inevitable exposé comes some day when the coffers are full. Then there is the usual scurrying of the rascals to cover, their mail is stopped, their offices deserted, their help unpaid, while thousands of silly men and women all over the country lament because they didn't take the sensible advice of the philosopher who wrote the warning couplet against the lure of sudden riches:

> Though it seem like a fortune to other hands thrown,
> Take counsel from caution and—let it alone!

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, August 14, 1912

	PAGE
"A Cozy Corner"	Cover
Painting by Francis D. Millet
Our Mail-Bag	790
The Flood at Dunbar Creek (Illustrated) . .	790
A Little Tour in Old Egypt (Illustrated) .	791, 792
By A. W. Cutler
A New Mikado Rules Japan (Portraits) . .	792
The Pope and the Ne Temere Decree . . .	793
The Gift of God in You. Sermon	794
By Rev. Richard Braunstein, D.D.
Waiting in a Hurry	795
The Harvest of the Sea (Illustrated) . .	796, 797
By Theodore Rand-McNally
Railroading in Cloudland (Illustrated) . .	797
By Charles M. Pepper
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	798
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated) . .	799
Missionaries' Mountain Homes (Illustrated) .	800
By George N. Thomssen
Child-Prayer at Mont-Lawn	800
A Baby of the Frontier (Illustrated) . .	801, 802, 806
Serial Story by Cyrus Townsend Brady
Crime and Graft in New York (Portraits) .	803, 804
Sunday School Lesson	804, 805
By Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
A Practical Danish Girl (Portrait) . . .	806
Our Younger Readers (Illustrated) . . .	807

The Reign of Crime in New York

DISTRICT ATTORNEY WHITMAN of New York has conducted almost single-handed the investigation into the Rosenthal murder and has let in the light on a chain of crimes that shock the metropolis. In his possession are confessions by three of the men implicated in the case, which point conclusively to the existence of an extensive system of criminal collusion between the police and the gambling fraternity. Blackmail to the amount of more than $2,400,000 a year has been levied upon the gamblers, and the confessions show that it has reached the hands of officials whose names are in Mr. Whitman's possession. Becker, the disgraced and incriminated police lieutenant of the "Strong Arm Squad"—the leading spirit in the collusive arrangements and the instigator of the murder of Rosenthal—is behind the bars and can hardly save himself from the full penalty of his misdeeds by confession now. Meanwhile, the Police Commissioner and the Mayor, who have been practically inactive until now, are beginning to take the situation seriously, which they should have done long ago. It is the universal hope that the infamous system which has disgraced the metropolis and which preyed upon and protected the gamblers and gangsters who have lately overridden the city and defied the law, will be permanently uprooted. The plunder wrung from criminals is being traced from hand to hand and men "high up" are involved in the disgraceful revelation. It has been said with truth that New York is the greatest hotbed of crime of any large city on the globe. Here rascality of every species seems to flourish better than anywhere else. More than one hundred gambling houses were wide open on the day of Rosenthal's murder. Gangs have multiplied and crimes have increased to an extent that is unprecedented. The methods of the underworld have their parallel in business and we find here turpitude in many quarters which would not be tolerated elsewhere. The hour has struck for a wholesome reformation, and we trust that the cleaning-up process so energetically begun by the district attorney will be continued with redoubled vigor until not only the gamblers and confidence men, the burglars and footpads and other professional rogues are suppressed, but the frauds in every kind of business, who prey upon an unwary public, are dealt with according to law. The eyes of the nation look toward this one brave official, who is fighting the people's battle against the criminals.

Forbidden Pleasures

SIR GEORGE SITWELL, an author of repute, tells of a lovely, though deadly, garden in Italy. He writes that there is a pool in the garden with surroundings like a very wonderland; but the traveler who wanders there alone and succumbs to the drowsy influence of the place is in danger, for in the shaded alleys of the garden there is a miasmatic influence that death to those who sleep there. In this strange garden, with its fatal influences, one sees a type of the danger of yielding to forbidden pleasures. Sin allures, then enslaves and at last destroys. He who yields to the temptations of the sensuous life suffers a spiritual as well as a physical deterioration which can only end in complete loss of all that is noble and beautiful, and unless providentially rescued, in the wreck of the soul as well as the body. There are sins that masquerade in the garb of purity and harmlessness and whose character we cannot detect until we find ourselves enslaved. It is well to resist the first approaches of such allurements and to remember that vice, in its earliest forms, hides its true nature and deadly purpose. Test your pleasures and see that they are clean and wholesome, and avoid those that are not. No matter how innocent they may seem at the beginning, if we yield, we shall surely find that an hour will come when it is too late to liberate ourselves without a terrible struggle.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Joy Ride for Children

NINE hundred children, who filled eleven large automobile omnibuses, rode from Washington Square, New York City, up Fifth Avenue to the end of the park, and nce west and down Riverside Drive and Fifth enue back to the square. Fifth Avenue stood ll and approved when the procession of automo- es went by decorated with flags and bright- ored bunting, and adorned with almost a thou- d human bouquets. It was the first joy ride of ven of the schools of the National Daily Vaca- n Bible School Association. The Rev. Dr. Rob- G. Boville, the national superintendent, and illiam F. L. Edwards, city superintendent, had arge of the parade. There were two or more achers to each omnibus. Only those children re allowed to go on the ride who had not been sent from the morning session once in three eks, and who did not have a single black mark ainst them. The procession was led by Old inity School, followed by three of her chapels. her schools were Calvary, St. arks, the Church of the Heavenly est, House of Aquila, Spring reet, Judson Memorial, and Ken- dy House. After the joy ride e automobile omnibuses took the ildren back to their respective hools, where they were treated to e cream, cake, lemonade, etc., and e children all voted the day a orious success, and those who rovided the entertainment were st as happy as the children. It ust not be forgotten that this joy de was provided by the teachers the Scripture to the little stu- nts of the Bible. The idea that here is anything gloomy about e study of the Sacred Word or a eligious life should be banished rom the mind. The Bible is a ook of remedy for sin, of joy in orrow, of genuine happiness in the ractical duties of life. If any one n earth has a right to a happy eart, a radiant face, and a glori- us life, it is the one who has ouched Christ's heart and been hrilled by his joy. We are sure hat Christ prompted and com- ended the joy ride for the Bible hildren, and the entertainment hat followed, and led teachers and upils to realize somewhat of the ruth of the Saviour's saying:

These things have I spoken unto you, hat my joy might remain in you, and that our joy might be full. (John 15: 11.)

World's Seven Wonders

A CERTAIN magazine recently took a vote of scientists as to he seven wonders of the modern world. Wireless telegraphy came irst in the vote, followed by the elephone, the aeroplane, radium, ntiseptics and antitoxin, spec- rum analysis, and the X-ray. From the nearly even hundred replies from as many noted men of cience in all countries, wireless received 244 votes, with 185 for the telephone, the nearest rival. The X-ray received 111. The Panama Canal got 100 votes. The seven wonders of the ancient world made up by Antipater were the Pyramids, the Pharos ighthouse at the entrance of Alexandria harbor, the hanging gardens of Babylon, the statue of Jupiter by Phidias, the Mausoleum of Artemisia, and the Colossus of Rhodes. Farmers, merchants, manufacturers and men of the learned professions would have left out some of those wonders the scientists named and included others they omitted, according to their ideals or experiences. The seven wonders of the ancient world were nearly all expressions of magnitude and power. Most of the seven wonders of the modern world chosen by any circle of voters greatly multiply the convenience of civilized living, add enormously to the volume of wealth, and the welfare of the common people, and some render beautiful service in easing pain, curing disease, prolonging life, and contributing to the happiness and development of mankind. The wonders in the material world are types of the marvels in the spiritual realm. Some who have had weak faith, who have been inclined to reject from their creed that which was mysterious or supernatural, who have been unable to see how men and women could talk with God and walk with him on the earth, have had their spiritual faith greatly strengthened by the discovery of the wireless, the telephone, the phonograph, the moving pictures and such wonders of the world. The wonder of wonders, the miracle of miracles, the Messiahship, is thus mentioned:

This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes. (Ps. 118: 23.)

Bumper Harvests; Hands Needed

IT IS harvest time in the grain fields, and bumper harvests are promised. There is great difficulty in getting hands in sufficient numbers to gather in the wheat and oat crops. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and other States, as well as in districts in Canada, free carfare and the highest wages are offered as an inducement, but as yet the supply is so much smaller than the demand that there is danger of great loss to the farmers. The Board of Trade of Watertown, S. D., at the request of the banks of that place has issued a call for 2,000 hands for immediate help. In the Red River Valley and in Saskatchewan and Alberta, the great wheat-growing provinces of Western Canada, there is an imperative need of 50,000 farm hands. It is a pity to the men themselves and the public welfare that so many will swelter and trample on each other in the hot crowded city and earn the scantiest living, or loaf or dead-beat their way in the congested neighborhoods, or spend more energy in tramping the road and escaping profitable labor than they would in the harvest field. They are only a picture of the many who will idle or loaf their time away while the white wheatfields of duty and opportunity are everywhere calling for reapers. This is the picture which Christ saw when he said:

The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. (Matt. 9: 37.)

The Motor 'Buses with 900 Joy Riders in Front of the Metropolitan Museum of Art

Daubs Painting in Louvre

AN ATTENDANT at the Louvre the other day caught a young woman in the act of smearing the valuable painting, "La Femme," by Boucher, with red ink. She had given the eyes and the nose a good coat of red when she was discovered. At the police station in Paris she gave her name as Polaine Delarre. She said: "The picture displeased me, and I wished to correct what I considered wrong. I am miserably hungry and have been unable to find work. I often go down to the Louvre, and the sight of the young woman in the picture, with a happy, disdainful smile and luxurious clothes, maddened me. I decided to mutilate her hateful face in the hope that perhaps after that the people would notice me and save me from starvation." This young woman was unquestionably crazy, and yet her envy, jealousy and malice are often possessed by those whose sanity is not questioned, and they put red ink on the eyes and nose of beautiful pictures and do all in their power to stain or deface the successful work of others. The measure of the responsibility of the discouraged seamstress that defaced the portrait may be small, but that of many others who do similarly is far greater. It is not sure that the red ink can be gotten out, or the picture preserved in its beauty. The damage done by those who deface beautiful acts, or besmear reputation or character, is hard to be repaired. By her own admission jealousy was the base impulse that prompted her deed, illustrating the truth:

Jealousy is cruel as the grave. (Solomon's Song. 8: 6.)

Sees Brother Drown

MR. LEE DEATHERAGE, engine driver on the Vandalia line, passing through Vandalia Swamp, recently saw from his cab window a boy twelve years old in the struggles of drowning. He saw three or four men near, and he said to himself that they would save the lad, and he did not stop his engine and try to rescue the boy. When the engineer got to the roundhouse in East St. Louis he remarked casually to a companion that he had observed the struggles of the boy, and hoped that he was rescued. Five minutes afterward he received a telegram notifying him that the boy drowning was his brother, and that his body had been found. The man was overwhelmed with sorrow and regret that he had not stopped his engine and swum to the relief of his brother. In these times when the schedules are so imperative and so many lives are at stake in carrying them out to the letter, an engineer cannot stop his engine any time he may have a mind to, but if the man had known that it was his brother that was drowning he would have taken the risk of stopping the train and attempted the rescue of his loved one. We feel more closely to those who are attached to us by the ties of blood, and a greater obligation to care for their bodies and souls. And the remorse will be deep and the accounting will be strict if it shall be proven that any of our own people shall have been lost by our failure to rescue them. It must not be forgotten that all men and women are our brothers and sisters. It is the imperative command of Christ that we are to do all we can for their happiness and salvation. The question the first murderer asked in insolence is the one we are to ask in all seriousness.

Am I my brother's keeper? (Gen. 4: 9.)

Diver Caught by Octopus

A NAVAL diver at Toulon had a terrible experience while under the water. He was surprised by a gigantic octopus. Being without his knife he was unable to defend himself, and promptly gave the hoisting signal. Meanwhile the octopus had wrapped a score of feet of his tentacles about the diver, and when the man and beast had been hauled to the surface, the man was unconscious, and the foul creature would have completed its work of death, if those who rescued the diver had not cut it into pieces with knives. The sea of life is full of cuttlefish with long arms, and devilfish with murderous tentacles to destroy the soul. The spirit of evil is incarnated in the vision of John as a beast of the sea.

And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. (Rev. 13: 1.)

MISSIONARIES' MOUNTAIN HOMES

IN SPITE of disappointments or the strange and often uncongenial living conditions the life of the missionary in any land is not without its purely human recompenses and many of those whose fields are in the torrid plains of South or Central India feel that they have an extra compensation in the mountain homes to which they go in the summer. Neither kings nor presidents have summer homes amid more beautiful surroundings, and as a few annas will here buy as much labor or service as almost an equal number of dollars in Europe or America pretty grounds and many of the comforts of life may be had by even those who feel that every coin that passes through their hands is a trust to be made the most of.

A Missionary Mountain Home

At the present time many of the missionary societies support sanitaria in the mountains where their missionaries may go for rest or to fight the fevers that so often attack them in the plains. It may seem like a terribly cold-blooded calculation, but considering the missionary as an investment of money for the Great Cause it pays to let him rest a while during the months when summer's terrific heat in the plains makes it next to impossible to do any work. So all who can flee to the blessed coolness and beauty of the mountains. It is this annual vacation that makes it possible for missionaries to spend from seven to nine years in lower India, while the British Government officials and foreign business men often follow the rule of going home once in every three years.

In South India, especially in the glorious Nilgiris or Blue Mountains, there are a number of these beautiful homes for the tired or temporarily disabled missionary. Probably more missionaries gather annually at Kodaikanal, Outacamund and Coonoor than any other hill stations. In these missionary sanitaria three or sometimes more families will occupy a single dwelling, and this fraternal intermixture of all sorts and conditions of missionaries in perfect harmony leaves an abiding impression on the hearts and minds of the surrounding heathen. Up in these mountain houses the children of missionaries are frequently born, and it seems no wonder that they are often as bright as the sun and as beautiful as the moon. The missionaries are truly and deeply grateful to all in the homelands, who, by warm-hearted generosity, make it possible, during the season of blazing heat when soul and body alike are weary, for them to say literally:

I will lift up my eyes unto the mountains
From whence my help shall come.
My help comes from the Lord,
Who made the heavens and earth.
The Lord is my keeper!
The Lord is my shade upon my right hand.
The sun does not smite me by day,
Nor the moon by night.
The Lord keeps me from all evil,
God keeps my soul.

The "Oxomobile," the Slow, Slow Oxcart of India

Formerly one traveling to the mountains had a long and wearisome journey up the hills by "oxomobile"—the deadly slow, yet expensive oxcart. Now a beautiful and convenient new government railway conveys the missionary and his luggage in comfortable coaches to his destination in the hills. Speed is not an object on this railway, and as the train crawls upward at a rate of ten miles an hour, all may have a foretaste of vacation in the splendid views of the mountains in all their glory and may cast happy farewell glances through the opening vistas into the burning plains and their heat-glare far, far below him.

GEORGE N. THOMSSEN.
Bapatla, India.

CHILD-PRAYERS AT MONT-LAWN

IN NO previous summer during its eighteen years of existence has our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn been more beautiful, more joyously The Little Haven of the Poor or more necessary in its helpfulness than it has been this saeson. There is no reckoning its value as a blessing for the little children of the poor. More children than ever before, in a given time, have been rescued from the dangerous streets of the lower East Side of New York City and given a happy holiday at the "Children's Paradise."

During the recent cruel heat no effort was spared to help as many little tenement waifs as possible. Who can tell how many little lives are saved yearly through the open-handed hospitality of Mont-Lawn, while thousands of children are perishing from the deadly summer heat in the close and unwholesome tenements of the big city? Tiny elder sisters and brothers, scarcely larger than the babies they were caring for, were sought out in the congested districts and taken away to the sweet, green country where birds sing and flowers grow, to regain health during a ten days' outing.

After the first hot spell it never gets cool in the tenement quarters of New York City while summer lasts. The porous red brick buildings hold the heat night and day. Showers that cool the country and refresh the more open quarters, bring only a greater heat and mugginess almost impossible for underfed children to weather. These little people, practically helpless so far as escaping from conditions that surround them is concerned, need our sympathy, our prayers and our material assistance. We can sweeten our own summer by sending just one child from the streets and alleys to spend ten happy days at our Fresh-Air Home on the banks of the Hudson, where things are beautiful and clean and sweet.

A recent visitor at Mont-Lawn remarked that "Johnny in the country sees evidence of God a hundred times to Johnny in the city's once." It is evidence of God in kindness, cleanliness, abundance, in stories, songs, games, gladness, that these children need. We who treasure memories of a happy childhood and rejoice in the recollection of a story hour, and lullabys, songs, games, and prayers, with blessings before our food, should remember what it means to look back upon these things.

Mary Dillon is a typical Mont-Lawn little girl. She lives in the vicinity of St. Mark's Square in lower New York. Her face is very wise and she is very quiet for a little girl of twelve. But Mary is neither ill nor dull; she is a most capable and thoughtful little girl. Life has been pretty full and serious for Mary. Her mother died when she was seven and she has kept house for her father ever since. Mary walked determinedly up to the kindly-faced minister who had been talking to the children underneath the big Mont-Lawn elms, last Sunday afternoon, and said, "I want you to say something to God for me, please. My voice is so little I think he could not hear it way up in heaven. Your voice is big and he will surely hear you," she continued quite frankly. The kindly man took the earnest, anxious little girl upon his knee and asked what it was she wanted so much. "Ask him," she said, "to make Tim and Lydia come, too. Tim had his leg cut off with an automobile, and Lydia she minds him. They live in the alley next to me and we play Mont-Lawn together. You see," she explained further, "Sally Martin told us all about it. She came here last year, and we play songs and Fort Plenty. If Tim can't come on account of his leg, I'll mind him, tell God, till Lydia gets back."

Andy, a lean, freckled-faced boy with carroty hair and restless, keen blue eyes, succeeded in making himself so useful during his first visit at Mont-Lawn, keeping walks clean and weeding flower-beds, that he was invited for a second visit. When the time came for him to go home and the Mont-Lawn stages were waiting at the door of The Homestead to take the last relay of boys and girls to the ferryboat on their way back to the city, Andy was missing. No one could find him, though the grown-ups hunted everywhere about the houses and cottages, and the children spied into every nook and corner on the grounds. The housemother opened the dormitory door of Sunshine Cottage, and there, in the far corner, behind his own little bed, and face to the wall, was Andy, absolutely oblivious to everything. This is what he was saying:

"Dear God, I am going back home. There ain't no gardens, nor songs, nor flowers, nor games, and there ain't no God there, neither. Good-by, God, I bid you good-by."

All we can do is to add our prayers to Andy's and Mary Dillon's and to give our help to those homes where God is not, by sending as many little people as possible to the haven of Mont-Lawn while the summer is sweet and green and the city is hot. Our Children's Home is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions. Three dollars pays for the support and transportation of a child during a ten days' outing, but even smaller sums will be gratefully received. Address The Children's Home, care THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. The following sums are acknowledged:

Mrs. M. J. French	5.00	Samuel F. Hitt	5.00
Mrs. M. Fryer	3.00	Alice B. Hodges	3.00
S. M. Fullem	2.00	Mrs. Chas. S. Hoffman	5.00
J. M. Fullmer	3.00	Jacob M. Hoke	2.00
Mrs. M. E. Gaines	2.00	Maude Holbrook	1.00
M. E. Gallup	3.00	L. W. & M. J. Holden	3.00
Jacob Galster	1.00	John Holihan	1.00
John S. Gardner	1.00	B. L. Holmes	1.00
Mrs. Maud M. Garnaut	1.00	Daniel Holmes	2.00
C. S. George	1.00	Maude E. Holmes	21.00
Mrs. D. Gifford	1.00	A. M. Hoover	5.00
C. M. Gildemeister	3.00	M. A. Hostetter	10.00
Ellen Goff	2.00	J. C. Houser	6.00
C. Gonder	1.00	Mrs. G. G. Howard	1.00
W. L. Good	1.00	E. H. Howe	1.00
H. D. Gordon	1.00	Mrs. Jas. Howell	1.00
Mrs. Elvira R. Gould	5.00	Lizzie W. Howland	1.00
Mrs. W. A. Gould	6.00	Mrs. Paul H. Hudson	10.00
J. O. Govan	1.00	Atkins Hughes	5.00
David W. Gowan	5.00	Mrs. C. Hulsmar	1.00
Mrs. Henry Gray	3.00	Miss C. Hultin	2.00
Mrs. G. M. Green	10.00	Mrs. E. Humphreys	3.00
Charles Greer	10.00	Chas. Hunt	21.00
Mrs. W. H. Griffing	3.00	Lillian M. Hunt	3.00
Thos. W. Griffith	10.00	Mary J. Hunt	3.00
Mr. & Mrs. W. Griggs	6.00	H. W. Huntzinger	25.00
Mrs. Annie M. Grover	5.00	David K. Hyatt	21.00
Louise B. Grover	3.00	Mrs. F. H. Hyde	5.00
E. Gunn	5.00	William J. Hyde	5.00
Mrs. H. C. Gurney	3.00	A. L. Ingeson	3.00
E. A. Gurtner	1.50	Mr. N. Jacobson	1.00
K. Hachitani	1.00	C. N. Janes	1.00
Mrs. Gilman Hall	2.00	Mrs. F. E. Johnson	2.00
J. T. Hall	1.50	Geo. Johnson	1.00
Miss M. E. Hall	1.00	Harvey L. Johnson	1.00
Mabel Hallifield	2.00	J. Wm. Johnson	3.00
Alfred S. Hamilton	2.00	Mrs. S. Johnson	1.00
Mary P. Hamilton	1.00	Carrie L. Jones	21.00
Mrs. J. F. Hammen	1.00	Mrs. Emily G. Jones	75.00
Martha E. Hammer	1.00	Rodney Wilcox Jones	5.00
M. I. Harding	1.00	Mrs. Jones	1.00
Mrs. A. P. Hardy	3.00	R. A. Jordan	2.00
Dr. S. M. Hardy	1.00	Mrs. L. Joslin	3.00
Mrs. J. S. Harris	3.00	A. H. Kanagy	2.00
H. G. Harrison	21.00	Christ Kastner	1.00
E. Frank Hart	9.00	H. Katz	1.00
R. M. Hart	4.00	Sam L. Kauffman	1.00
Alice Hatfield	6.00	Lydia E. Kaup	5.00
L. Havemeyer	6.00	Emanuel S. Kehler	1.00
W. A. Hawes	3.00	A. J. Kemalyan	2.50
Mrs. Sarah Haworth	1.00	G. Kemble	5.00
Mrs. G. Hegwood	1.00	Mrs. David Kennedy	5.60
W. J. Heineman	3.00	Lizzie Kennel	5.00
Mrs. R. P. Henderson	1.00	Minna M. Kern	1.00
Edgar S. Hengst	1.00	Mrs. Anna M. Kingan	5.00
Theodore R. Henning	3.00	Willis G. Knight	3.00
L. E. Herr	5.00	L. A. Koeller	5.00
Caroline K. Herrick	1.00	Miss P. Kolb	1.00
Mrs. I. J. Herrman	1.50	E. L. Krafft	1.00
C. F. Hess	2.00	P. N. Kraybill	1.00
U. M. Hibbetts	6.00	Mrs. M. E. Kroeger	3.00
Thos. Hick	1.00	B. W. Kunkel	3.00
Mr. & Mrs. M. W. Hicks	1.00	Mrs. S. A. Kykendall	2.00
Mrs. Frederica S. Hill	3.00	Fannie L. Lake	21.00
Julia A. Hill	10.00	Lewis A. Landers	2.00
Noah Hingley	3.00	Mrs. C. S. Langdon	1.00
Susanna Hirschy	6.00	J. W. Latimer	5.00

A BABY OF THE FRONTIER

BY CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY

Author of "For the Freedom of the Sea"; "The Two Captains"; "Hearts and the Highway"; "As the Sparks Fly Upward"; etc.

ILLUSTRATED BY GAYLE PORTER HOSKINS

"THE LEADING INDIAN WAS UPON THE CHILD: HE LEANED DOWN IN FRONT OF HIS HORSE; HE SWEPT HER UP AND HELD HER HIGH IN THE AIR"

CHAPTER I

THE BABY GETS "ESCRUGED"

LITTLE Miss Ethel Benton Compton had successfully negotiated her escape from the dining-room of her father's quarters at Fort Sullivan. Lieutenant-Colonel John H. Compton, United States Army, who commanded the post, had been exceedingly distrait and preoccupied during the meal. The colonel of the regiment was on detached service, and the command of that splendid body of hard fighters and gallant horsemen, the Fourteenth Regular Cavalry, had devolved upon the youngest officer of his rank in the service; and with the command of the regiment came the command of the post.

Fort Sullivan was not much of a post. It was one of those many little frontier forts with which the Western country was dotted, being intended to house three or four companies of infantry, or a troop or two of cavalry, seeking to overawe and control vast expanses of territory that were filled in those days with roaming bands of savage Indians, not yet broken to the law and totally unable to realize the power of the United States from the petty manifestations of it to which they were accustomed.

To this post, three years before, Colonel Compton had been ordered, with his wife and little daughter, the latter then an infant in arms. Fort Sullivan was situated among the foot-hills of the Big Horn Mountains. The enormous mass of snow-capped Cloud Peak was easily visible from the parade. The fort itself was nothing more than a rambling stockade, in which were contained the officers' quarters, storehouses and barracks for the men and a watch-tower.

Adjoining the stockade was a less defensible enclosure, the corral, containing the cavalry stables and the yards for wagons, mules and miscellaneous live stock.

The stockade was impregnable against anything but artillery. Soldiers with fieldpieces could have knocked it to pieces in an hour; but against Indians it would serve. Outside the post, extending for nearly a mile toward the mountain range, lay a broad expanse of untimbered meadow. It was used as a cavalry drill ground and its proximity to the knoll on which the stockade rose, together with the mountain brook to the left, had determined the location of the fort. Except for this open, the land about the post was heavily wooded.

The country, all through that long summer, had been in a state of feverish unrest. The Sioux and Cheyennes had grown menacingly bold and reckless; they had gone on the war-path early in the spring and they were still out. The whole frontier was ablaze; settlers had been massacred; and, if they had wives or children, they had been treated with atrocity too frightful to dwell upon.

Every available soldier in the Northwest had been hurried into the field except Compton and four troops at Fort Sullivan. They had been retained where they were as a sort of reserve, to afford a rallying point in case of disaster. The four troops also had to guard an immense section of the country. The main trails to the front passed by the stockade. There had been many small brushes with the Indians, while these cavalrymen were escorting wagon-trains to the next post across the range. The work was important; but both the colonel and his men pined for a chance to take the field. There was no help for it, however; orders were orders, and they had to remain at the post during this escort duty, which was exciting enough and dangerous, too.

Mrs. Compton, while she sympathized outwardly with her husband's disappointment at inaction, rejoiced in her heart that Colonel Compton was spared the dangers of the field. She was very contented that summer, save for the anticipation that some other detachment would be ordered to garrison Fort Sullivan and the fresh men of the Fourteenth Cavalry would have to take the field. That this was certain to come about sooner or later, she and everybody else knew; meanwhile she would enjoy the day.

She was not the only woman at the post. Two or three of the officers were married and there were twice as many children as wives there, so little Miss Ethel Benton Compton did not lack youthful companionship. Then, too, there were a number of married non-commissioned officers stationed at the post. There were also three or four maids—mostly pretty young Irish or German girls—who found life at such a post, surrounded as they were by the attentions of two hundred or more gallant, dashing young cavalrymen, very delightful.

The colonel's wife's maid was a jewel. Molly McNeil was as pretty as the proverbial Irish girl of the story-book. Her hair was black, her eyes were blue and her skin was fair. As a maid she was a veritable treasure; but had she been as incompetent as she was capable, Mrs. Compton would have kept her, if for no other reason than because she was devoted, heart and soul, to baby Ethel, who reciprocated the affection she inspired so completely that the young mother sometimes had to fight down a more than passing throb of jealousy.

Continued on next page

A BABY OF THE FRONTIER

Continued from preceding page

Molly McNeil's devotion to Ethel junior, however, could hardly be described as whole-hearted, for the young Irish girl also cherished a growing admiration for Private Danny Meagher, one of the likeliest young men in "B" troop. She would rather have died than allow her preference to become known to anybody, even to the object of her affections. Molly was liked by all and loved by many, and she took pleasure in treating all with equal courtesy. Although knowing that Danny was hopelessly in love with her, Molly was disposed to think of marriage, if at all, as something yet far off and a problem for the future years. Handsome and clever, she was the social leader of her little circle at the Fort. It was an extremely lively circle, too, and Colonel Compton used to declare whimsically that he had more trouble on account of the maids of Fort Sullivan than he would have had with an army; but the trouble evidently was not one that bore heavily on his mind.

Molly's heart was a big one, however—indeed, it seemed sometimes to the keenly observant and not a little amused officers that it was large enough to take in the regiment!—and baby Ethel enjoyed a share entirely disproportionate to her own small person.

Colonel Compton had been distrait and irresponsive to his little daughter's advances at dinner, that late autumn day, because he had received tidings of the burning of a settlement a few miles from the post, by a larger and more formidable company of Indians than had hitherto ventured near the post. He had promptly despatched one of his best captains, with his troop, to the destroyed settlement, praying that some of the settlers might have escaped, and hoping also that the arrival of the cavalry might possibly save other outlying settlements, or at least give the ranchers and their families an opportunity to get to the post under a safe escort.

This troop had been gone a day and a half and nothing had been heard from it, which was very disquieting. Whether to wait any longer, or order out another troop to seek for it, or go with heavier force, were problems which weighed upon him deeply. Contrary to his usual habit, he had paid no attention to Miss Ethel's prattle. He answered her in monosyllables and at random. The young lady was not used to being so disdainfully treated and she resented it in her own fashion by bursting into a sudden torrent of weeping.

"What's the matter with you, baby?" he asked.

There was no answer. When she got started screaming, Ethel could outmatch the capacity of Bottom the Weaver, who boasted his qualifications for playing the lion's part. Like the immortal Webster, she demonstrated that she could do it extempore, too, since it was "nothing but roaring."

"Ethel, what do you want?" at last insisted Colonel Compton firmly.

"I dess want to be escruged," Miss Ethel at last managed to choke out between her vociferous sobs.

"Well, in heaven's name, 'escruge' her Mary," said Compton to his wife. "I've got troubles enough without having this child on my nerves in this way."

"Molly," said Mrs. Compton with dignity, "take Miss Ethel out."

"I don't want to do in de kitchen wiv Molly," roared the little lady.

"For goodness' sake, take her anywhere—out on the parade ground or anywhere else," said the distracted officer.

Molly, shooting a rather indignant glance at him—for had he not been harsh to her darling?—looked to Mrs. Compton for confirmation. She took her orders from the mistress, not the master.

"Yes, take her out on the parade; the colonel is very much troubled to-day," she said.

Molly nodded; she hadn't lived at the post a year without comprehending some of the troubles of the commanding officer and eke the commanding officer's wife. She gently bundled the small miss in her arms and the two made their escape.

"What is it that troubles you, John?" asked his wife, coming around the table and sitting down by his side.

"The old situation, my dear," he replied. "Not hearing from Calmore"—Captain Calmore was in command of the troop that was missing—"the fact that the Indians had the audacity to raid that settlement so near us—their numbers, according to the report of old Marnett, who brought the news of the attack. We had no reason to expect anything of this kind and it looks as though the troops to the westward had been defeated or outgeneraled, else the Sioux couldn't be in such strong force hereabouts."

"Are there many of them?"

"There must have been three hundred in that war party. You know Marnett is a most reliable man—"

"He went back with Captain Calmore, didn't he?"

"Yes, and his presence with that force makes me a little less anxious. Calmore is a splendid officer; but Marnet knows more about Indians and Indian fighting than any man on the frontier, and he loves it, too."

"I wonder why he didn't go to the front with General Crook or—"

"Well, Marnett is getting old and he's mighty fond of a young woman not far from here with whom I, too, am mightily smitten."

"Nonsense, John," said Mrs. Compton, looking greatly pleased, nevertheless.

"And Marnett has told me that he rather expected that all we'd have to do to get in the fighting was to sit tight and wait until it came to us. I laughed at the idea at first; but I begin to believe he is right, now. Well, I must go into the office."

"Don't go right away, John," pleaded his wife. "Stay with me a little while. I'll let the table wait for Molly. Come, we'll go into the parlor and I'll play for you. You look so tired and worried. I can't bear to see that expression on your face."

"And what would my command say if they knew, when I ought to be about my business, that I was listening to you at the piano?"

"Well, they would probably say they wished they were where you were if they got a chance," answered his beautiful young wife brightly.

"And well they might," returned Colonel Compton. He looked at his watch. "I can spare you a half hour."

"Spare me!" smiled the girl brightly. She was still only a girl, although five years a wife and almost four years a mother.

"Spare myself then, you little witch."

And although she was rather a substantial "little witch," he picked her up tightly in his big, strong arms and carried her into the room adjoining the dining-room. Like every other frontier room, it was bare and sparsely furnished; the only piano in the territory, it was believed, had lodgment there, and the whole garrison rejoiced thereat.

Presently, the music of Mary Compton's clear, sweet soprano floated out into the room, and a little after, Compton himself joined in some old song with a tenor not classic, but creditable. The half hour was soon gone and something more besides. For a little time Compton had forgotten his responsibilities and his cares. The orderly who opened the door, having knocked once or twice without arousing attention, thought they made a very pretty picture, the girl at the piano, the colonel standing back of her, his arm resting lightly and tenderly on her shoulder. It was a pity to disturb them, but he had news that could not wait.

"Beg pardon, sir," he said sharply.

Compton wheeled on his heel on the instant and looked at him, frowning.

"I knocked several times, sir, but could not make you hear," exclaimed the orderly quickly.

"Oh," returned Compton, "I understand."

"The officer of the guard reports that there are Indians on the hills to the westward."

"John!" cried Mrs. Compton, as he turned, snatched a hasty kiss, grabbed his cap and, followed by the orderly, fairly ran from the room.

In one corner of the post a tall watch-tower of logs had been built. Compton broke into a run as he stepped off the low porch in front of his quarters. He crossed the parade on the double-quick, and sprang up the rude stairs of the watch-tower with the agility of a boy.

Hadden, one of the junior lieutenants who was the officer of the guard, was already there with the sergeant of the guard, Schmidt, a veteran of many campaigns.

"Where are they?" asked the colonel quickly.

The officer lowered his field glasses and pointed across the meadow to the hill.

"There, sir," he cried, proffering the binoculars to the colonel.

"Cheyennes," growled old Schmidt.

He had seen them often in the field and recognized them even with his naked eye.

"By George!" exclaimed Compton after a quick stare through Hadden's field glasses, "you are right. Where can Calmore be?"

"He should have been back long ago, sir," ventured Hadden.

"Yes. Sergeant of the guard!"

"Yes, sir," answered Schmidt saluting.

"Have the trumpeter sound 'Boots and Saddles.' Let the men get their horses in a hurry. Mr. Hadden, tell the adjutant to see that every man has all the ammunition he can carry."

"Very good, sir," cried old Schmidt, turning and plodding down the stairs.

The next moment the blare of a bugle was heard throughout the enclosure. Hadden had turned to follow the sergeant to carry out the orders he had received with reference to the adjutant; but ere he could leave, Compton caught him by the shoulder. He dropped the binoculars to the floor with a crash as he did so.

"Hadden," he cried hoarsely, "look there!"

CHAPTER II

Miss Ethel Is Taken by the Enemy.

THE colonel's face was as white as a sheet. Hadden stared at him in amazement, not comprehending.

"There! there!" cried Compton, fairly shaking with emotion.

Away off near the farther end, evidently just having come out from the trees to the northward, Hadden made out a tiny little figure toiling through the tall grass. He recognized it at once.

"The baby!" he exclaimed. "What is she doing there?"

"I don't know. Look yonder."

The Indians, too, had caught sight of the little figure. A number of them detached themselves from the mass on the hills, and galloped down the slope to the eastward that led toward the meadow and the post. Compton was paralyzed with horror.

"I'll get her," cried Hadden.

He threw himself down the stairs. Some of the more alert of the men were already assembling on the parade when Hadden burst into the midst of them.

"A horse, for God's sake!" he cried.

He seized the bridle of the nearest one.

"Everybody that is armed and mounted, follow me," roared the officer. "Open the main gate!"

The troopers off guard, dismounted of course, had not realized what had happened; no one could see over the stockade. They knew that something serious was up and they lost no time in mounting and obeying the lieutenant's orders. Throwing open the main gate the lieutenant, followed by a score of soldiers, dashed through it.

Hadden was a superb horseman, and he happened to have got a good horse; he had the lead, too. He knew just what he wanted; the others had to find that out. They followed blindly with the courage that the American soldier always manifests when his officer leads him, and it was not until they opened out on the meadow that they saw what they were after. The colonel's daughter was the pet and the pride of the regiment. Every man in it loved her and she loved them all in turn. She was utterly unconscious of her peril; but they realized it and rode like madmen toward her.

Ethel raised her head presently and saw the Indians, who were nearer than the soldiers, since they had a much shorter distance to go to reach her. Their presence did not frighten her. She was absolutely fearless. She had seen Indians before, and the bright plumes of the magnificent war bonnets of the Sioux and Cheyennes pleased her greatly. She waved her hand at them in childish glee. She did not see the troops racing furiously on, gritting out curses and prayers as they pushed forward, sparing neither their horses nor themselves in their frenzied endeavor.

It was a hopeless attempt from the first. The Indians had too great a start; there must have been two hundred and fifty of them riding toward the baby, yet Hadden and the twenty heroes raced on. They were not the only persons in the drama, for a trooper on foot, his face deathly white, suddenly appeared back of the galloping squadron, running in their wake. The speed with which he went was amazing; of course he could not keep up, or overtake them on horses, but he made a gallant run for the baby. It was Private Danny Meagher of the guard.

Back in the fort, pandemonium was let loose. Compton turned and called over the parapet of the tower:

"For God's sake make haste and get your companies out, gentlemen; my little daughter is there in the meadow, and—" He could say no more.

Never in the history of the regiment were three troops of cavalry mounted and moved out so quickly. With frantic haste, the men saddled their horses and fell in line. Dexter, senior captain, raised his sword two minutes after Hadden had burst out, and cried:

"All ready, sir."

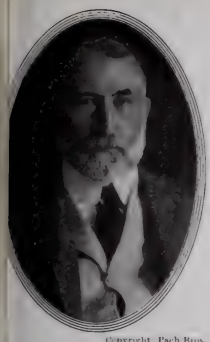
"Go!" said Compton. "Get the child if you can, but don't bring on a general action. Stand by for signals from the post; don't leave the meadow."

He was a soldier, this colonel; he realized that although his child's life might be forfeited, there were other women and children there, and gallant men whose lives should not be thrown away. By

Continued on page 806

CRIME AND GRAFT IN NEW YORK

The Nation Shocked by the Extraordinary Revelations Following the Rosenthal Murder



Copyright, Pach Bros.

Mayor W. J. Gaynor

SINCE the memorable exposures of the corrupt Tweed Ring and the notorious Broadway franchise bribery, New York has not gone through any experience of such startling importance as the disclosures connected with the Rosenthal murder. That the sudden taking off of the gambler was part of a deep-laid plot to cover up the tracks of officials who were in league with gamblers and confidence men was well known from the day of the tragedy; but not until the arrest on July 29 of Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, chief of the Strong-Arm Squad, on a charge of murder, did New York really appreciate the fact that something of tremendous import was happening at the district attorney's office and police headquarters. The city was full of ugly rumors, each of them having graft as an ominous background. For weeks the hunt had been going on for the slayers of Rosenthal, and a number of arrests had been made; but it was admitted that the actual assassins were still at liberty. On Tuesday, July 30, the storm which had been gathering ominously over the heads of the police department suddenly burst, and New York was plunged into the midst of the biggest exposure of official graft that it had ever encountered. Three of the men under arrest charged with complicity in Rosenthal's murder, being anxious to save themselves, volunteered to confess and lay bare the whole story of the murder plot and the appalling record of official corruption that lay behind it. These men were "Jack" Rose, "Bridgie" Weber, and Harry Valinsky or Vallon, and their stories not only implicated Lieutenant Becker but higher officials in the police department. It is a long story and here we can give it only in outline, the original being in the hands of District Attorney Whitman. These confessions, unless conclusively refuted, form a perfect chain of evidence against Becker as the planner, instigator and secret director of the murder.

Rose, in his confession, stated that the rendezvous of the gang—which has long been notorious but had been permitted to flourish under police protection—was at Weber's gambling room at Forty-second Street and Sixth Avenue. The actual murderers, he said, were members of "Big Jack" Zelig's gang—a notorious group of "gunmen," who had been guilty of several daring crimes. When Rosenthal had begun his disclosures of police graft before the district attorney, it was decided to stop him before he went too far. Lieutenant Becker, who was on familiar terms with the gamblers, told Rose (according to the latter's statement) that Rosenthal must be got out of the way. "Becker said Rosenthal had lived too long," continued Rose, "so I dropped the hint here and there." He made it clear that Becker had determined on Rosenthal's removal long before the latter had begun his exposures to District Attorney Whitman. Becker not only instigated the murder, Rose said, but he also promised protection to those who were to be concerned in it. "If you don't kill this man," he told them threateningly, "I'll frame you up as I did Zelig." He assured them that he had ample power to protect them.

There was a unity of interest between gamblers and police, Rose declared. They dreaded the further revelations promised by Rosenthal. The demands of Becker to have him "silenced" grew more and more insistent; but the gamblers, conscienceless though they were, hesitated at actual murder. Ten days before the crime occurred, it was planned to kill Rosenthal in the Garden Restaurant, Broadway and Fiftieth Street, while he was dining with his wife, but the band of "gunmen" were stampeded by seeing, as they supposed, a Burns detective watching them. Becker was furious and called them cowards, declaring he would have to "do the job himself." He hounded them daily with threats of sending them to Sing Sing unless they "got rid of Rosenthal." A week later a conference was held at which Lieutenant Becker, "Jack" Rose and Weber were present. Rose bluntly told the lieutenant that the "gunmen" would not attack Rosenthal on his (Rose's) order, whereupon Becker turned to Weber sharply and said: "You've got the money and I've got the power. I want you to give the order." And Weber did so, adds the confession. To enable the murderers to get out of town, Weber gave Rose $1,000 in $100 bills, which the latter handed to Sam Schepps (an intimate of the gang) who paid it over to the assassins in Seventh Avenue in open daylight, the day after the murder.

Rose, in his confession, gave the names of the men who did the shooting at Weber's bidding. They were, so he alleged, "Lefty Louie," "Whitey" Lewis, Harry Horowitz (known as "Gyp the Blood") and "Dago" Frank—all members of the Zelig gang. On receiving the blood-money they fled. "Whitey" Lewis and "Dago" Frank were caught after considerable effort. On August 2, the others were still at large.

Even after the black deed had actually been done, Becker's conscience did not seem to trouble him. He was still confident that the power of his "pull" would bring everybody out safely. The "get-away" of the assassins had been skilfully managed. When Weber and Rose expressed fears to the lieutenant who met them after the event, he was angry and exclaimed: "Isn't it proof enough of my power that the murderers got away without difficulty?"

But while the story of the murder plot and its tragic culmination was sufficiently shocking, Rose and his associates had something even more startling to follow. Having decided to confess, they were resolved to make a clean breast of it and spare none. Jack Rose was the spokesman in a further confession to District Attorney Whitman, but he was supported at every point by Vallon and Weber. Rose told of his long association with Lieutenant Becker, who employed him as the collector of gambling graft for the police. In one year, Rose said, he personally had collected $600,000, and this, Becker told him, was divided among higher officials. In a single year the gross amount of blackmail paid over by the gamblers and other lawbreakers for police protection in their criminal business was over $2,400,000—and this huge sum was turned over by the collectors, each of the four ultimate recipients getting $600,000.

In making these remarkable disclosures of official corruption, Rose gave the names of three officials connected with the police, two of them of high rank. The $600,000 which each of these men received, Rose intimated, was in turn shared with others. Just how far the "graft" system extends in the police department will be made clearer hereafter, but that it takes a very wide range is already apparent. Rose, in the course of his strange story, stated that Becker made the admission that there were four "splits" of the graft netted by the system. It was recalled that Rosenthal, only a few days previous to his murder, stated that Becker had admitted to him that he had made $75,000 in the last six months. Rose has agreed to furnish complete lists of the collections he made of money that passed into Becker's hands. The assessments of gamblers and others on the police list he alleges ranged from $50 to $500 a month. An opportunity will be offered to Becker to tell all he knows, and he may accept it as the only way of escaping the full penalty of his crime. In any event, it is believed that nothing can now avert the complete exposure of the ring of grafters, nor prevent them from being brought to justice.

Weber and Vallon, who were confined in the Tombs, have been removed to the West Side Court Prison since Rose's confession, fearing that the vengeance that is unhesitatingly dealt out to "squealers" might reach them if they remained there. In view of the valuable assistance they are rendering in the investigation, they will be accorded leniency. Lieutenant Becker, who now occupies a cell in the Tombs next to that lately tenanted by "Jack" Rose, his former confidant and graft collector, still maintains a bold front and declares his innocence, but as the toils wind closer about him daily and hourly, it is fully expected that he will make an effort to save himself by telling the whole shameful story.

In the police department, the disclosures seem to have paralyzed activity. Commissioner Waldo makes this statement:

"The more the police department is investigated the more confidence the people will have in its general efficiency and honesty. I can assume no responsibility for the acts of individuals."

In the dark underworld of crime in New York—where gamblers and evildoers flourish in the protection of the "System," there is something akin to a panic. They feel that the "System" has been rudely shaken and is in danger of falling to pieces, which would mean ruin to their nefarious business. This "System," as it is universally called, is simply a compact or secret understanding between criminals and police officials whereby the former are allowed to run their places "wide open" in return for the payment of regular tribute. This tribute, which is nothing less than sheer blackmail, varies in amount, the small-fry gamblers paying from $50

Con'd on next page

Detective Wm. Burns

Herman Rosenthal

Police Lieut. Charles A. Becker

The supposed head of the police blackmail system, now under arrest charged with murder in the first degree

The Hotel Metropole

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

District Attorney Whitman

Police Commissioner Waldo

"GOOD NEWS TO THE POOR"*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THIS story teaches—to sum it all up in a sentence—that the living, present Christ fulfils, not Bible prophecies only, but especially all human needs.

"He came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up." This is a wonderful glimpse of Christ's humanness, which fulfilled at once the prophecies of the Old Testament and the needs of the human heart. If the Messiah was not to be human there would be no advance upon the Old Testament dispensation of angels. The purpose of the Messianic prophecies was to usher in a period when God could get nearer to man's confidence and love than in the days when he was known only as a divine being, communicating with men by angel messengers. The Israelites, reading the prophecies through the deceiving glass of pride, though they saw a human being, did not see a lowly one. They missed both extremes, the divineness and the lowliness, and saw only a greater Judas Maccabeus, who should more completely and permanently deliver them from the Romans and put the Israelites in their place as world-rulers.

Frequently in the Old Testament the Messiah is called "the Branch" in token of his lowliness. The Hebrew word for branch is the same as the word for Nazareth, and so the New Testament, interpreting not the meaning of the prophet but the meaning of prophecy, tell us that these prophecies meant that Christ should be "called a Nazarene," a name by which his followers are still derided by Mohammedan children in the streets of Nablus —"Nazarini." The writer himself, with others, was so taunted there. How near it brings the Messiah to the poor and despised to know that he was not only a man but one of the lowliest of men!

So great are the miracles the Christ of history has wrought upon nations as well as individuals that we need his thirty years of utter humanness at Nazareth—a few of them given to meager schooling, most of them to hard toil, all of them to poverty and obscurity—that we may not forget that he was the Son of man as well as the Son of God.

The Divine Workingman

Nothing in all the land he made holy made his lowliness so real as the rough carpenter tools we brought from Nazareth—tools such as he used as "a man with men." He was not only tempted as we are, but he toiled as we do—as do those whose toil is hardest. "He was in all points made like his brethren" that in all points his brethren might be made like unto him. He was "touched with a feeling of our infirmities" that he might be "a merciful and faithful High Priest."

Often it happens that the one who pities us has no power to help us. But Nazareth teaches us that he who has "all power in heaven and in earth" has infinite pity also. "Jesus wept," and therefore we come to him in our tears. Jesus worked, and therefore we turn to him in our weariness, as he says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will rest you."

Labor's Best Boon

One of the chief fulfilments of that promise of "rest" to the "heavy laden" is the Christian Sabbath, Christ's regular observance of which the next clause describes—and the reminder is needed on this August Sunday when so many Christians away from home forget their "custom" and belie their faith.

"He entered, as his custom was, into the synagogue on the Sabbath day." The writer, speaking to the International Convention of the Knights of Labor, some years ago, held up as a link between the preacher-reformer and those workingmen a saw he had brought from Nazareth, which works only on the back stroke, making the toil of an Oriental carpenter much harder—as did others of his tools also—than that of a carpenter among us, and said: "Surely the church that was founded by a carpenter can never be indifferent to the real interests of workingmen, chief of which is the preservation of one unbroken day in every week for rest and home and culture of conscience." "The Church and Labor" should unite their forces in defense of their common citadel, now more attacked and less defended than ever before. It should be defended especially against Sunday sports, which, in Continental Europe and Spanish America, have proved the "thin edge" which has split open a way for Sunday toil and traffic. In Germany it was found by the government, a few years ago, that 57 per cent. of the factories and 77 per cent. of the establishments of trade and transportation ran seven days in the week. The toboggan slide of a desecrated Sabbath runs swiftly down the following stages: holy day, holiday, work-day, devil's day, despot's day. "Rest and let Rest on the Rest Day."

The Living Seed of the Gospel

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me." The first purpose of Jesus in reading from the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah was to show that he who, as the fourteenth verse had said, "had returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee," after his baptism and temptation, was the very Messiah that in Isaiah's prophecy was pictured as pre-eminently the Spirit-filled man, whose spirituality would grow, as a seed grows into a tree, into an abounding humanitarianism.

But the verses we are now considering (16, 18) are of chief practical value to us to-day as Christ's own description of the Gospel—a familiar word that is much misunderstood.

Continued on next page

* INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for August 25, 1912. The Visit to Nazareth, Luke 4: 16-30 (R. V.). GOLDEN TEXT: "He came unto his own, and they that were his own received him not." John 1: 11 (R. V.).

CRIME AND GRAFT IN NEW YORK

Continued from preceding page

to $100 a month, while those who run big places and make plenty of money in the Tenderloin and a few other districts frequently pay as high as $500 a month. These tributaries to the "System" have no fear of the police. A raid means to them little more than make-believe—a mere sop flung to appease the public demand for police activity. It halts their business for a few hours and then they open up again as wide as ever. Within the last two years gambling has been carried on more generally and with less restrictions than at any previous time. Political bosses of the baser sort joined their influences with that of the police in "regulating the System" and profited by it. There was no fear of the district attorney, for his powers were greatly curtailed. The whole gambling situation, and, indeed, the entire criminal contingent, came under the beneficent control of a squad of police especially detailed to the work. The city was districted for the greater convenience of the "System" and the freebooter who paid his toll regularly was as safe from interference as the honest merchant or tradesman. Moreover, in the "System" there was a methodical division of the spoils, and its mechanism was so geared that the revenues derived from crime steadily increased. The "System" has been brutal, greedy, absolutely lawless; but it kept a sort of rude faith not only with the men "higher up" but with its underlings. It was the unseen power in the local politics of New York, for politics and crime were linked closely together in an infamous partnership in the "System."

Herman Rosenthal was both a partner in and a victim of the "System." He was an enterprising gambler, and some time ago decided to play a bigger game. So he made up his mind to move into the rich pastures of the Tenderloin and also to seek as partner and protector some one of influence. Lieutenant Becker became his silent partner—so all the evidence goes to show—furnishing the money for him to go into business on a larger scale and appointing "Jack" Rose as his business representative. For his investment of $1,500 Becker was to get 20 per cent. of the gambler's profits. But the big Tenderloin gamblers resented this intrusion in their territory and used their influence to compel Becker to raid his own establishment.

When Rosenthal saw that the raid meant business and that he would be permanently put out of the field, he planned to get revenge. He carried his grievance to the district attorney. Then, when he began telling the truth about the gamblers and their tribute, the whole influence of the "System," high and low, was leagued against him, gamblers, politicians and police. He then determined on such a comprehensive exposure that they decided to seal his lips forever. The price of Rosenthal's assassination, as Rose declares, was $1,000. It was only one of twenty killings which took place in that terrible July of murders; in most of which the slayers are still at liberty—a grim testimony to the lack of law and order in New York.

But the killing of Rosenthal produced the very opposite effect from that which the "System" had expected. It instantly let in a flood of light on its criminal operations. Public-spirited citizens of means and influence have offered District Attorney Whitman substantial financial aid in his vigorous crusade for its destruction. Even in the face of personal peril—for the "System" has its characteristic ways of reaching its enemies—he will push the investigation to the last limit and will bring to justice every member of the ring of grafters — police and politicians — sparing none. The searchlight is turned on in full force and there is a decided uneasiness perceptible that recalls the scurry to shelter when the bribers and corruptionists were caught in former investigations. In the present instance, fortunately, justice's dragnet has been skilfully spread and there is little chance of escape for the guilty.

Women in Business

IT IS announced that the Central Pacific Railroad is eliminating women entirely from all its departments. The same thing is true of the Erie, New York Central, New Jersey Central and Lehigh railroads. When a railroad official was asked why women were thus discriminated against, he replied, "Women regard business as a makeshift, and not as a means of advancement. They take a position, intending to leave it just as soon as they can get a good offer of marriage." On the other hand, one of the largest employers of labor, who has hundreds of girls on his payroll, says that they average as long periods of service as do men.

MENNEN'S
Borated Talcum
FOR MINE

For Prickly Heat and Sunburn
Relieves all Skin Irritations
Sample Box for 4c stamp

GERHARD MENNEN CO.
Newark, N. J.

Save 1/3 to 1/2 on Fuel Bills
Our Payment Plan Makes it Easy for You to Purchase
JAHANT DOWN DRAFT FURNACE

Have plenty of heat wherever it is needed. We issue a 360 d Guaranty Bond that guarantee satisfaction. We sell direct paying freight and saving y dealer's profits. Install th Jahant yourself. We send co plete outfit—furnace, pipe registers, etc., with speci plans, detailed instructions a necessary tools.
Send for free furnace book.
THE JAHANT HEATING CO.
35 Mill Street Akron, O
BUY YOUR FURNACE
$10 DOWN $10 A MONTH

RESINOL
3 IN 1
TRADE MARK
"3-in-One" brightens everything about home or office; injures nothing, not even soiling hands.
"3-in-One" is the only CLEAN HOUSE OIL. Oils bicycles and sewing machines.
Good bottle and book free. Write quick. 3-in-One Oil Co., 42 CHB B'way, New York.

Twilight Tales
See back cover page for description and offer of Margaret Sangster's Last Book
Twilight Tales

Question Settled! Latest facts from best authority show that Christ was not immersed. 68p book only 16c. Mahaffey Co., Box 91, Clinton, S. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

TRY THIS WONDERFUL DISHWASHER FOR TWENTY DAYS FREE

This is the Kitchenette—a dishwasher that will wash, dry and sterilize all the dishes used by a large family in three minutes. No need to put your hands in water or perform any labor whatever, and the Kitchenette does it all and does it better. It is so easy and simple that a child can work it, and it is rigidly guaranteed.
Pay $1.00 a Month
Every housekeeper should have one at once. We don't ask you to buy it until you have tried it for 20 days and proved to your own satisfaction that it is worth its weight in gold. We don't ask you for a penny down. We ship you the Kitchenette FREE. Try it for 20 days; then if you like it, pay on the easiest of easy payment plans—$1 00 a month for a few months. If you don't like it return it to us at our expense.
KITCHENETTE CO., 42 Pearl St., Buffalo, N. Y. Dept. C
Please send me a Kitchenette for 20 days' trial with the understanding that I can return it if not satisfactory.
This coupon is to be worth $1.00 if I keep the Kitchenette.
Name .....
Address .....

HOW MANY OF US

Fail to Select Food Nature Demands to Ward Off Ailments

A Ky. lady, speaking about food, says: "I was accustomed to eating all kinds of ordinary food until, for some reason, indigestion and nervous prostration set in.

"After I had run down seriously my attention was called to the necessity of some change in my diet, and I discontinued my ordinary breakfast and began using Grape-Nuts with a good quantity of rich cream.

"In a few days my condition changed in a remarkable way, and I began to have a strength that I had never been possessed of before, a vigor of body and a poise of mind that amazed me. It was entirely new in my experience.

"My former attacks of indigestion had been accompanied by heat flashes, and many times my condition was distressing with blind spells of dizziness, rush of blood to the head and neuralgic pains in the chest.

"Since using Grape-Nuts alone for breakfast I have been free from these troubles, except at times when I have indulged in rich, greasy foods in quantity, when I would be warned by a pain under the left shoulder blade, and unless I heeded the warning the old trouble would come back, but when I finally got to know where these troubles originated I returned to my Grape-Nuts and cream and the pain and disturbance left very quickly.

"I am now in prime health as a result of my use of Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

5%

Write to-day for the Calvert Book—it is a book that everyone who is saving money or has money to invest ought to have.

It is full of interesting information for investors, and tells in detail of this Company and its 17 years of successful experience.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Company pays 5 Per Cent interest on all money entrusted to its care.

Money begins to draw interest the day it is received, and it may be withdrawn at any time without notice.

In the entire history of the Company there has never been a day's delay in the mailing of interest checks or in the repayment of principal when demanded.

It is an ideal savings or investment plan. Don't fail to write for the book.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Feet Hurt?

Is it worth while to have comfortable feet? To forget stinging, throbbing aches? You can remove all shoe troubles forever with

The Family Shoe Stretcher
FOR MEN AND WOMEN

The greatest device of the age for the foot. Prevents and cures corns, bunions, and tender spots without medicines or messy applications. Makes your shoes fit perfectly. Produces absolute ease and comfort. Lasts forever. Instructions in physicians. Send for full particulars with list of the best things for foot comfort free.

Save these bumps where it hurts. THE PEDICURE CO., Dept. 21 Buffalo, N. Y.

HAND MADE
Crochet Bow
34c in a box

Six yards different styles of lace and fabric edge; also Hand Made. High Class Hand Made goods sold at machine goods prices.

Write for Catalog

Dept. 3
YAMA CO.
104 Fifth Ave. N. Y.

YOU can earn big profits every day introducing our Family Register. Records births, marriages, deaths, family events. Nothing like it. Great seller.
W. L. BARTH, 505 Marquette Bldg., CHICAGO

Sunday School Lesson

Continued from preceding page

Spirit-filled individuals are the seed of the Gospel—"the Spirit of the Lord is upon me." The beginning of a better individual life and a better social life is a strong if not numerous group of Spirit-filled men and women. Ten such could have saved Sodom. Wesley said a hundred such could move the world. Three-fourths of the Bible is occupied with warnings and exhortations to unspiritual church members. It is "good news" for them and for all when they became dynamic with spiritual power.

The Christian City That Is to Be

But the conversion of individuals is only the seed of the Gospel. The full-grown Gospel is social regeneration, as is plainly shown by the words of Isaiah that Jesus quoted, which refer to the Jubilee year that is to come every year when Christ not only reigns but rules.

He anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor;
He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives,
And recovering of sight to the blind,
To set at liberty them that are bruised,
To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.

What does that mean? That's what it means—exactly what it says: that the influence of Christ, when fully applied to man's social life, will produce, like glorious fruits, blind asylums and other philanthropies, emancipation of slaves, prison reform, and, most of all, justice to the poor.

Some people who are most opposed to rationalism are most rationalistic in their interpretation of the Gospel, as if it exhausted itself in saving the sinner, and could not save the city. That is one of the most blighting forms of unbelief. The Gospel promises the Christian conquest of those three great provinces of social life that are now largely segregated from the kingdom of God; business and politics and pleasure. Not till those are dominated by Christ will we reach "the acceptable year of the Lord." When Jesus said, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears," he could have meant only that in his entrance upon his earthly ministry the fulfilment of that great promise was well begun. "Full salvation" in the Gospel sense is not the salvation of the individual, but "the salvation of Israel"—the salvation of the whole man and the whole community.

Be a Light-Bearer

The main work of the Christian, as of Christ, is to bring help and gladness to the poor, the oppressed, the unfortunate.

The pride of the Israelites had prevented them from seeing that the Messiah was not to be a warrior though a conqueror, but most of all a philanthropist and a Saviour. He was not to make captives, but to set captives free; not to break human hearts by wars, but to bind up hearts already broken; not to give offices to the rich, but the Gospel of gladness to the poor.

For the dear Christ dwells not afar,
The king of some remoter star,
Listening at times, with flattered ear,
To homage wrung from selfish fear,
But here, amidst the poor and blind,
The bound and suffering of our kind,
In works we do, in prayers we pray,
Life of our life, he lives to-day.
JOHN G. WHITTIER.

I need not remind you how in his earthly life Christ fulfilled Isaiah's picture of him as a bringer of gladness to the poor; how he bound up with pardon hearts broken for their own sins; brought healing and comfort to those spent with sickness and bereavement; how he gave release and liberty to captive demoniacs and to slaves of lust and covetousness.

Those are but his "beginning of miracles." "Greater things than these" has he done in more recent history, inspiring his people to build thousands of churches, to most of which the poor are absolutely welcome; and hospitals and asylums where broken hearts and broken bones are bound up with Christian compassion in marked contrast with the cruelty toward the weak that characterized the barbarism of cultured Europe before the Gospel of Christ came to it. Men talk about "the religion of humanity." There is none such except the religion of Christ. Europe, before he entered it, had no real humaneness, and Asia and Africa have none except where he has introduced it. The unchristian parts of the earth always have been "the habitations of cruelty." Even now in Christian lands,

Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn;

but wherever you find a mitigation of this inhumanity, wherever a hospital, an asylum, an orphanage, a law for the protection of the weak, there you find a footstep of Christ.

Among the Workers

—REV. J. C. LAWSON of the Industrial Mission at Dehra, Dun, Mussoorie, India, writes telling of the establishment of a new Rest Home for missionaries there. Aid is invited to make the Home a success.

—EVANGELISTIC SERVICES WERE recently held in the Immanuel Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., by the pastor, Rev. J. S. Crowley, and the Rev. W. S. Jacoby, the noted evangelist and personal worker who at one time assisted Dr. Torrey in his campaigns.

—"HEAVEN AND OUR SAINTED LOVED ONES" is the title of a booklet written by the Rev. E. W. Pfaffenberger, editor of the Western Christian Union of Boonville, Mo. These booklets are to be sold at 10 cents each, and the proceeds are to be devoted toward fitting the writer's son for the ministry. The booklet is written in a comforting and careful manner, and will tend to make the future life real and to take away the dread of death found still in many Christian hearts.

—NORWOOD'S "SUNSHINE GIRLS," a class of the Floral Avenue Presbyterian Sunday School at Norwood, O., devoted part of one session to a Margaret Sangster memorial. The class president, Miss Ruth Gordon Seaman, a Cincinnati University girl, read a sketch of Mrs. Sangster's life and the class teacher, Ren Mulford, Jr., followed with a tribute of appreciation.

—THE JENNIE CLARKSON HOME for Children, Valhalla, N. Y., has secured as its superintendent General A. C. Kenyon, until recently connected with the Children's Aid Society, New York City. General Kenyon was instrumental in building the Harlem Boys' Hotel. In that institution he cared for about one hundred boys, giving them excellent home-life and Christian training. In the Jennie Clarkson Home he will eliminate as far as possible strictly institutional features in the boys' and girls' cottages and in the administration building, and endeavor to make this charity a true home for children, welcoming not only orphans, but half-orphans, and, in extreme cases, children where parents cannot provide for their children and are willing to surrender them until they become eighteen years of age.

—HEPHZIBAH ORPHANAGE at Vineville near Macon, Ga., which has been doing an excellent work for several years, was destroyed by fire lately. The people of the neighborhood threw open their homes to the little ones who fortunately were rescued from the burning orphanage. An effort is now being made to raise money to rebuild. The loss by the fire was $11,000, only half covered by insurance. The Hephzibah Orphanage was founded by Miss Mollie A. Tyler, of Vineville, and at the time of the fire sheltered about eighty inmates.

—MR. WILLIAM ELLIMAN, of Lyons Falls, N. Y., celebrated, on the 20th of June, his fiftieth anniversary as a Sunday school teacher. He was for many years in business in New York. His residence was then at Flushing, L. I., where he was an enthusiastic Sunday school worker. Even during his summer vacations he managed to keep near enough to his home to be on hand to look after his Sunday school class. Mr. Elliman was one of the founders of the Public Library at Flushing, and was for fifteen years its president. Mrs. Elliman was treasurer of the library, and the organizer of the Woman's League of Flushing. Some time ago Mr. Elliman helped his present Sunday school class, of young ladies, to found a library and reading-room for the town of Lyons Falls. He has now retired from business and devotes all his time to church, Sunday school and community welfare work.

If Mercury and Air Didn't Go Up

Fountain Pens Wouldn't Leak

WHEN mercury in a thermometer gets warm it goes up.

When air in a fountain pen gets warm in your pocket it goes up too—up the feed tube.

Now, this "going up" habit of air is what makes all the ink-smearing trouble.

It happens like this: When you set an ordinary fountain pen in your pocket, point up, some lazy ink stays up in the feed tube—won't all run down.

Up goes the heated air through the inky feed tube, pushing the lazy ink up and out, all over the writing end of the pen.

Now, George S. Parker, of Janesville, Wisconsin, said: "I'll get all the ink down out before the heated air goes up."

So he invented a curved feed tube, which bends and touches the barrel wall. This touch sucks all ink out of the feed tube and drops it in the reservoir below the instant you set a Parker Pen in your pocket.

That is what makes it impossible for air to force ink out on the writing end of a Parker Pen.

The curved feed tube is called the Lucky Curve, and that queer force, Capillary Attraction, which makes a sugar lump suck coffee, is what sucks the ink out of the Lucky Curve.

Parker Pens write smooth as glass, for the 14k gold pens are pointed with hardest Iridium. And the Parker Spear Head Ink Controller never allows any blotting or skipping.

PARKER
LUCKY CURVE
FOUNTAIN PEN

Standard Style Parker Lucky Curve Fountain Pens, $1.50 to $250.00, according to size and ornamentation.

New Parker Jack Knife Safety Pen won't leak in any position. Carry it upside down in pocket of your white vest. Pen knife size for lady's purse. Prices $2.50 up.

New Parker Disappearing Clip grips like a snapping turtle, but slides back into its shell when you want to write.

Dealers sell Parkers on 10 days' trial. If unsatisfactory your money quickly refunded.

If your dealer doesn't keep Parkers, send us his name. We'll send you catalog and fill your order direct. Do it today.

PARKER PEN COMPANY
70 Mill Street, Janesville, Wisconsin
New York Retail Store
11 Park Row Opposite Post Office

COMFORT and EASE FOR TENDER FEET

For every woman who will wear WHITCOMB'S "FLEXSOLE" SHOES. The most comfortable shoe for women ever made. Soft, flexible, perfect-fitting and handsome. Very durable. No tacks. No Lining to wrinkle and hold moisture. No seams.

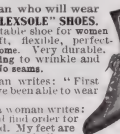
An Iowa woman writes: "First leather shoe I have been able to wear in 20 years."

A Pennsylvania woman writes: "Enclosed find order for a friend. My feet are cured entirely."



Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded.

Prices:
LACE, $3.00
BUTTON, $3.25
OXFORDS, $2.50 Prepaid.

We refer to any bank anywhere.

Send outline of foot and give size usually worn.

Can be bent double

Eastern Shoe Co., 55 Broadway, Beverly, Mass.
Agents Wanted Everywhere.
Special Inducements.

Alco Self Heating Curling Iron

AGENTS MEN & WOMEN WANTED

An absolutely new self-regulating alcohol iron which cannot burn or singe the hair, because it cannot overheat. Produces a beautiful Moist curl. A Necessity for every Woman. Ideal for Home or Traveling. Handsomely nickel plated, new black ebonized handles. Each one in a handsome box; satisfaction guaranteed or Money refunded.

A Big Summer Money Maker.

Agents Making $5 to $10 a day. Every woman wants one. Positively sell on sight. Send 25c today for sample. Exclusive territory.

GOOD SIDELINE FOR SALESMEN

The Self-Heating Curling Iron Mfg. Co., Inc.
911 Manhattan Bldg. CHICAGO, U. S. A.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
VICTOR J. EVANS & CO., Washington, D. C.

A Practical Danish Girl

THE Copenhagen newspapers which recently arrived in America contained a number of interesting accounts of the doings of Mlle. Berntsen, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Claus Berntsen, Denmark's Prime Minister. This independent little lady has just apprenticed herself to a cabinetmaker in Copenhagen, giving up that social distinction to which her father's official position would entitle her. She has announced her resolve to earn her living by building furniture. She works from six o'clock in the morning till late in the afternoon with the woman who runs the establishment where she is to learn her trade. She expects to succeed to the proprietorship of this shop, or upon having completed her apprenticeship to start one of her own. Mlle. Berntsen comes of a long line of sturdy independent peasant folk. Her father, who was born in 1844, received the education which has enabled him to rise to his present position through what is known as the "High School" movement in Denmark. This is a system which was started by a famous divine to enable the sons of comparatively poor farmers to secure educational advantages if they were willing to work. M. Berntsen has been closely identified with this movement, having headed one of its schools and actively assisted in its development.

Daughter of Denmark's Prime Minister

A BABY OF THE FRONTIER

Continued from page 802

this time the two women panted up the stairs, Mrs. Compton and Molly.

"John," cried the wife, who had heard, "is Ethel there?"

"Yes, God help us!"

"Will they get her?"

Colonel Compton took his wife by the hand.

"I am afraid so. Look!"

The woman strained her eyes out over the prairie. By this time the Indians were fearfully near; yet Hadden and his men were going like a hurricane, and far in the rear panted that desperate runner. Immediately before and below the gate, the three troops, Dexter in the lead, debouched from column into line and joined in the great race.

But it was soon over. The leading Indian was upon the child; he leaned down in front of his horse, he swept her up and held her high in the air, and as he did so, pealed out a terrible war cry. The next instant the spitting of rifles crackled over the plain, the first shot coming from the lone runner. He stopped short in his tracks and emptied his carbine into the Indians who had circled about, following their leader, and were now galloping back across the meadow and up the hill.

The range was short, the target was large; there were half a dozen empty horses amongst the Indians, especially as Hadden's men poured in a close volley on them. The Indians themselves made a quick return. They were going fast, and as they were execrable marksmen, there were only three of Hadden's men hit. Hadden himself received a scratch on the cheek; one man was killed and another had his arm broken by a bullet.

With despair in his heart, the young lieutenant checked his pursuit. He had made a gallant ride, but he had been too late! With twenty men he could not cope with the two hundred and fifty Indians in the advance. He might have attacked them, nevertheless, for he was a reckless youngster and his blood was up; but they would immediately be supported by the other savages in great numbers on the hill. It was not to be thought of.

By this time Hadden was joined by Dexter, raising the total force to two hundred. The odds were still impossible.

"Let's ride through the whole bunch, captain," cried one of the men, "and git back the baby."

Dexter hesitated.

"I'd like nothing better than to do it," he answered, "but it would be a hopeless task, I fear. Still—"

And at that instant faint and far from the tower came the bugle blowing the recall. That settled it.

To be continued

Answered Prayers

W. E. G., Hancock, Vt. "I thank God for answering my prayer in improving my health."

W. C. M'C., Knoxville, Tenn. "The Lord has been graciously merciful in answering my prayer."

F. E. H., Edmund, Okla. "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering many prayers for me."

A. E. S., Lowell, Mass. "The dear Lord has answered my prayers for a dear one and restored her to health."

Mrs. L. E. C., Greenville, S. C. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to my prayer that I should walk once more."

Reader, Mich. "I wish to acknowledge to the world that God has answered my prayers and been to me what no earthly friend could be."

Mrs. C. D. B., Pasadena, Calif. "In answer to prayer God protected me when in danger, which I wish to acknowledge before the world."

M. A. H., Sutherland, Fla. "God answers prayers. My son was sick unto death's door, and God restored him to health, through prayer."

Mrs. A. M. W., Chazy, N. Y. "I wish to acknowledge the Lord's goodness to me in restoring to health my little daughter, in direct answer to prayer."

Called Higher

J. B. Goff (79) died at his home (Oakland, Ore.) on March 27, 1912.

Mrs. C. A. Royce, Willimantic, Conn., age 71 years, passed away December 17, 1911.

In Seattle, Wash., on April 5, 1912, in the study of his friend, Dr. Garvin, the Rev. B. F. Miller (76) was summoned home.

Mrs. Jane A. Fraser, of 126 Albany Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., 100 years old, died February 19, 1912. A very dear old lady and beloved by all.

Mrs. Cornelia Nevins (79) died at the home of her daughter near Three Bridges, N. J., January 26, 1911. She had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

Miss Elizabeth F. Bastian (32) passed away March 13, 1912, after a short illness. Her friends and relatives at Home, Ore., greatly miss the joy and sunshine which she spread in her loving unselfish service.

Mrs. Mary Jane Bush, North Side, Cincinnati, O., passed away on March 27, 1912, in her 76th year. She was an active Christian worker for over sixty years.

Mrs. Mary Jane Rees, of Carpenter, S. D., age 80 years, died April 2, 1912, lived a Christian life many years and is missed by old and young. She was a devoted reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

No More Corns

No More Dangerous Paring

Nobody needs to suffer from corns since Blue-jay was invented.

Millions apply this little plaster. The pain stops instantly. Then the B & B wax gently loosens the corn. In 48 hours the whole corn comes out—root, callous and all.

Blue-jay has done that for fifty million corns, without any soreness, any trouble, any delay or discomfort.

Common treatments mean just a brief relief. Blue-jay ends the corn.

Paring a corn just removes the top layer. The main part is left to grow. And in myriads of cases paring causes infection.

All those methods are wrong. Soon or late the corn must be removed. Why trifle and delay?

Blue-jay removes it in two days. In the meantime you forget it.

Please prove this—for your own sake. It is the only right way to treat corns.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B protects the corn, stopping the pain at once.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

Blue-jay Corn Plasters

Sold by Druggists—15c and 25c per package

Sample Mailed Free. Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters (148)

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York, Makers of B & B Handy Package Absorbent Cotton, etc.

DAISY FLY KILLER placed anywhere, attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent prepaid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Wear Before You Buy PROCESSED HOSIERY

Pair sent you without charge to prove its Durability. Order any style from our Catalogue — "The Book of Stockings." Book describes wonderful "Dual Process"—just as soldiers' uniforms have been processed to stop bullets—so the "dual process" of stocking fabrics creates the unparalleled durability of "Processed Hosiery"— the New Stocking. Send for the Catalogue to-day and select your trial pair.

THE STOCKING STORE, - - 399 Broadway, New York

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

10¢ Stamps or Coin brings you a tin of GOLDEN WEST SALAD DRESSING POWDER Makes a pint of delicious Salad Dressing Address Clozet & Devers, Portland, Ore.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

YOU CAN DO What Others Do

RECORDS OF A FEW PRIZE WINNERS:

ANDREW PAINTER, Canada, -	Winner of Pony, Cart and Harness
YOUNG TAYLOR, Kentucky, - - - -	Winner of $100.00
HARRY CRUMBLING, Maryland - - - -	Winner of 100.00
PERCY HUFFMAN, Pennsylvania, - - -	Winner of 100.00
HAROLD P. CAHILL, New York, - - -	Winner of 100.00

These Boys have also Won

CREST PINS NAME STAMPS POCKET KNIVES
CAMERAS ROLLER SKATES and WATCHES

In Addition to Earning

CASH PROFITS

The Christian Herald will show you how and start you FREE.

You can Earn Money and Prizes, and need only fill out this coupon and mail it At Once.

SPECIAL COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City. Date.....

This coupon has a value of fifty cents in payment for 10 copies to be sold at 5 cents each to start you in business. Booklets about, "How to Win Profits and Prizes," sent FREE.

Signed.....

Address.....

Age..... Town..... State.....

VALUE 50 CENTS

Our Younger Readers

LITTLE YOSOSAN

IN a land across the sea, dear,
Where the dancing moonbeams be, dear,
Lives a little brown-eyed maid of old Japan.
There the sunshine spills o' day-time,
And the lotus fills the May-time
With its bloom of sweet perfume for Yososan.
Like a swaying flower she seems, dear,
In that garden land of dreams, dear,
And her skin is smooth and warm as ivory glint.
There are gay fans in her tresses
And her little silken dresses
Are like butterflies of every lovely tint.

New York. RENA CARY SHEFFIELD.

Opportunity

A LITTLE more than half a century ago Commodore Perry with a letter from President Fillmore made his way into ne closed ports of Japan and nego- ated a treaty with the Shogun grant- ng the United States permission to ob- ain provisions needed by our ships n the Eastern Seas. Our vessels night thereafter with safety anchor n Japanese waters, and humane treat- nent to American shipwrecked sailors vas freely granted.

This peace treaty marked the first tep in the opening of Japan to the vorld, to foreign commerce, and to esidents of other nationalities. With- n ten years after the treaty the hogunate passed away, and the late mperor, then a boy of fourteen years, ssumed the reins of government and ecame head of the nation which dur- ng his reign vas to march teadily for- ward from a neathen and unknown peo- ple, shut away rom the open world, to a first and foremost nation of the earth. Rarely has the world witnessed such a splendid event.

The late Mikado was in every sense of he word a pro- gressive and a true patriot.

There is no second way whereby to show
The love of fatherland.
Whether one stand
A soldier under arms, against the foe,
Or stay at home, a peaceful citizen,
The ways of loyalty are still the same, s the striking lesson of high patriot- ism that he taught his people. Like the great level-headed ruler he was, he built a modern army and navy which command the respect and ad- miration of the world. First in peace and first in war is the slogan of mod- ern Japan.

The highest Power over all nations of the earth works indeed in mysteri- ous ways his wonders to perform. No crown prince in Europe has received a more world-wide and democratic edu- cation than has the present young em- peror. Yoshihito has played with schoolboys in England and France, a schoolboy among them. He has trav- eled extensively in preparation for his reign, and is much beloved by his own people for his democratic ideals. The whole world expects him to be the greatest ruler Japan has ever had. That is a high responsibility, but there is little doubt that he will make good. American schoolboys and girls would do well to learn all they can about this splendid progressive nation and its young ruler, for in new Japan many a young American will find an opening for a great and successful career.

Japanese Chicken

ONE of the best and jolliest of games is Japanese Chicken. If you have never played it, do try it. It is really great fun. Boys and girls in Japan play it with their slippers; small blocks of wood or beanbags or little stones will do as well. Each player donates a slipper to the game, and holds up the shoeless foot in imitation of a lame chicken. They place the shoes in straight rows with spaces of about ten inches between each shoe, the players line up and in turn hop on one foot over each shoe until the end of the line is reached. The last shoe is then kicked away, the player using his "lame foot," after which it must be picked up without putting the lame foot to the ground and carried back over the same route to the first end of the line. If the player has made no slips or mistakes, he hops back again, kicks away the last shoe on the line, returns, and so on until he fails. Only one foot may touch the ground at a time. The hopping must be very deftly done, no shoes may be touched excepting the end one which is to be picked up. When "lame chicken" breaks or infringes any of the rules, he must instantly give place to another player. At the end of the game the winner has most shoes to his credit.

SUNSHINE

Parks in Japan teem with children playing lame chicken.

This Is Fun; Try It

ASK your arithmetic teacher at school to double the number of his pupils, add 3, multiply this sum by 5, add to it the number of pupils absent on that day, multiply the result by 10, add to it the number of his own aunts, and then tell you his answer. From his answer you subtract 150 and the remainder will be the correct number of his pupils present and absent and the number of his aunts as well. For example: Supposing the number of pupils is 6, doubled equals 12, plus 3 equals 15, multiplied by 5 equals 75, plus 3 equals 78, multiplied by 10 equals 780, plus 3 equals 783. Subtracting 150 from 783 leaves 633. Therefore you can safely announce to your teacher that he has 6 pupils, 3 absent pupils and 3 aunts.

The trick is charming and never fails to be accurate and amusing. Next week I will tell you about another one.

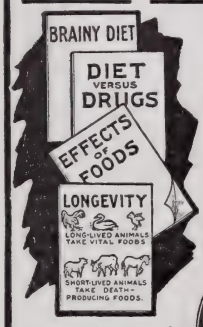
Good-Night Verse

"Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Phil. 3: 13, 14.

Lovingly and faithfully yours,

The Aunt in the Cozy Corner

Popular Educational Food Campaign



FREE: Four Booklets Which Have Taught Many People to Cure Themselves

One clever young university student writes from Lincoln, Nebr.:

"I have confidence in this system. It has relieved an unsightly skin and mental inertia through the valuable suggestions and hints in your four booklets. There is a mine of practical hints in them, enough to convince a skeptic, were he so stick to the rules faithfully and give it a trial.

"I have already gained more brain and nerve force—more efficiency without enforced exercise.

"Your little books eliminated chronic catarrh from my system in about three weeks. To put it weakly, I was astonished. I know now that butter, eggs and rich cream caused the trouble. I thank you for your knowledge, and hope to learn more of your system in the future."

Different Classes of Foods Cause Different Diseases

I have produced in myself at will from time to time such complaints as rheumatism, catarrh, fevers, kidney trouble, blackheads, sores, dandruff, etc., by eating different classes of foods to excess, proving that the waste from each class of foods produces an entirely different disease. For instance, eggs, cream, butter, cheese, milk and salt are mucus-making foods which produce catarrh. Starch and eggs (paste-making foods) in wrong combinations congest and produce headache, dullness, brain fag, etc., while lean meats, green vegetables and fresh, juicy fruits do not.

—no foods sold
—no fasting
—no exercises

G. H. BRINKLER, FOOD EXPERT

A thin man, after being out of work nearly a year through weakness, was restored in three weeks to hard work as a carpenter at full pay. In such cases the change from a clogging, death-producing diet to energizing foods caused a literal transformation.

Another patient, deaf in the right ear, owing to a discharge caused by an excess of mucus-making foods (cream, butter, cheese, etc.), was completely cured of deafness and catarrh by taking correct combinations of suitable foods.

A case of kidney and bladder trouble of ten years' standing was saved from a surgical operation, and the objectionable discharge cured within ten days, because the loss of control was due entirely to the constant irritation from certain irritating foods and drinks.

Brainy Diet

A chronic sufferer, weighing 415 pounds, unable to exercise, took correct combinations of ordinary daily foods and reduced over 150 pounds (in public life, under many witnesses) gained strength with firmer flesh, and lost rheumatism.

Correct Combinations of Foods Cure Diseases

I have always cured the above-named symptoms in a few days or weeks by returning to a correctly combined diet. The experiments have been fascinating, and the results underlie success in life.

People Write:

"My brain power and general efficiency have been about doubled this year by selecting brainy foods. I have made a fortune in real estate, and the credit is honestly yours."

"The government should investigate and teach the Brainy Diet System for the good of the nation."

"The hints in Booklet No. III, on foods for curing congested liver, nourishing the brain, etc., are worth untold dollars, although the books are free."

(1) TEST OF BRAINY DIET (3) EFFECTS OF FOODS
(2) DIET vs. DRUGS (4) KEY TO LONGEVITY

Send 10 cents for mailing. Send addresses of your sick friends.

G. H. BRINKLER
Food Expert, Dept. 3 H, Washington, D.C.

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best by 66 years' use. It will please you. Only paint endorsed by the "Grange." Made in all colors—for all purposes.

DELIVERED FREE
From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices.
INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE
Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you, with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I can save you money.

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

MONUMENTS

Over $190,000 worth of White Bronze Memorials sold through the Christian Herald
Moss-growth, chipping, cracking and crumbling, common to marble and granite, are impossible with White Bronze. It will outlast the pyramids. More artistic, less expensive. Investigate. Write now for free illustrations and prices. State approximate cost desired. We deliver everywhere. Good Agents Wanted.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 355-G Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

A portable, pure white, steady, safe light. Brighter than electricity or acetylene. 100 candle power. No grease, dirt nor odor. Lighted instantly. Costs 2 cts. per week. Over 200 styles. Every lamp warranted. Agents wanted. Write for catalog. Do not delay.
"THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, Ohio
MAKES AND BURNS ITS OWN GAS

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES

VISIBLE WRITERS or otherwise
L. S. SMITHS, OLIVERS, UNDERWOODS, Etc.
¼ to ½ M'F'RS PRICES
Shipped ANYWHERE for Free Trial, or RENTED allowing Rent to APPLY
PRICES $15.00 UP
First Class Machines Fresh from the M'f'rs.—Write for Illustrated Catalog 74
Typewriter Emporium, (EST. 1892) 34-36 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

I TRUST YOU TEN DAYS. SEND NO MONEY.
$2 Hair Switch Sent on Approval. Choice of Natural wavy or straight hair

Send a lock of your hair, and we will mail a 22 inch short, stem fine human hair switch to match. If you find it a big bargain, remit $2 in ten days, or sell 3 and GET YOUR SWITCH FREE. Extra shades a little more. Inclose 8c postage.
Free beauty book showing latest style of hair dressing—also high grade switches, pompadours, wigs, puffs, etc. Women wanted to sell our hair goods. ANNA AYERS,
Dept. A618 22 Quincy St., Chicago

Do You Want a Business of Your Own?

Why be an employee when a small capital will be sufficient to start you in business? Experience is not necessary. Write for our plan. We are a large manufacturing corporation, doing business all over the world.
KELLER MFG. CO.
21st and Lippincott Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

Ball-cup Nipple FREE

We want every mother of a nursing babe to try the only ball-cup nipple. Send us your address on a postcard, with druggist's name, and we will mail you one. Fits any small neck bottle. Only nipple with open food-cup and protected orifice at bottom—will not collapse, feeds regularly.
State baby's age, kind and quantity of food. Half Section
Hygeia Nursing Bottle Co., 1341 Main St., Buffalo, N.Y.

Buy SILKS Direct From the Mill

Save store profits and get better quality of Dress Silks, Taffetas, Satins, etc., cut any length direct from our looms. Send 10 cents for samples.
New Wash Silks for Petticoats, Waists, Dresses, Negligees, Men's Shirts. Will wash and iron perfectly. Samples Free.
Experienced CANVASSING AGENTS Wanted. Please state if agency desired.
Auburn Silk Mill
Dept. C. - - - Auburn, N. Y.

YOU CAN AFFORD

a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person; "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," Round or Shape Notes, for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 cents. E. A. K. HACKETT, 128 North Wayne Street, Fort Wayne, Ind.

MARGARET SANGSTER'S LAST BOOK

TWILIGHT TALES

[The Demand for this Book Has Been So Great that the First Edition is Already Exhausted]

The Late Margaret E. Sangster

TWENTY-FOUR DELIGHTFUL STORIES OF LOVE AND ROMANCE FROM REAL LIFE

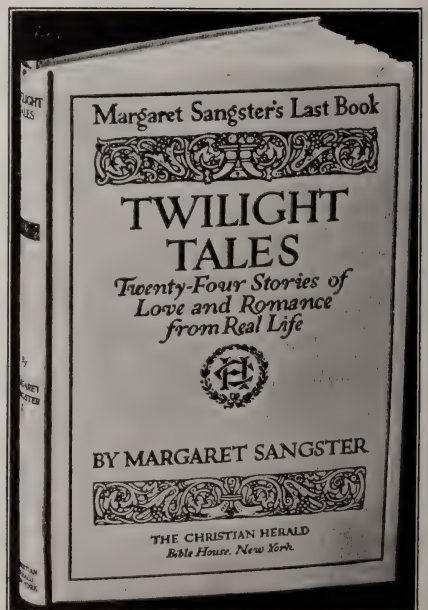
THOSE who already know the rare literary charm of Margaret Sangster's writings will welcome this volume—the last perfect product of her wonderful talent. Twilight Tales comes almost as a parting message from one who has been greatly beloved by countless multitudes, and whose contributions for many years in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have made her name a household word.

Mrs. Sangster's remarkable power of sympathy and of sounding the depths of human feeling is evident in every one of these twenty-four complete stories. She is never so much the mistress of her art as when relating in her own inimitable way the progress of some love-match in simple life, some idyl of the farm or the village, or a romance of the cottage, the garden, or the orchard. An ardent lover of nature in all its moods, she has put into these Tales the true atmosphere of American rural life as it is to-day, with all its charm of changeful season and its panorama of flowery lanes, ripening fruits, and waving fields. Her heroes are fine types of manly character, and her women have the sweet and comely fascination, mental and physical, which we love to associate with the daintiest idea of American womanhood.

Mrs. Sangster's Best Heart and Soul Stories

There is a thread of pure gold running through the Twilight Tales from which the reader may divine the author's purpose in writing the book. It is the line of God's protecting love and care which encircles all who trust in Him, and the knowledge of which gives to even the smallest detail of everyday life a purpose and significance. She spreads before us the little daily dramas, the heartaches, the disappointments, the sweet surprises and unexpected joys, the separations and the reunions, the cares and consolations of the household, the "journeys that end in lovers' meeting"—all are unrolled like a moving picture, with the vivid action of life itself. Mrs. Sangster has crowded the best heart and soul stories of her whole career into this book. Love, romance, self-denial, ambition and the success that true character commands are here pictured with a fragrant setting of American home-life in town and country. It is a book which will exert a strong spell on the mind of the reader and which creates its own atmosphere of woodlands and old-fashioned gardens, and charming American homes, and her men and women are such as we love to meet.

The last of the Twilight Tales—"The Opposite Shore"—gives a foregleam of that blessed land to which so many of our dear ones have already passed over and to which the author was even then hastening while she wrote. No one can read this last book without feeling that it contains a personal message.



Margaret Sangster's Last Book
TWILIGHT TALES
Twenty-Four Stories of Love and Romance from Real Life
BY MARGARET SANGSTER
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York

This photograph shows the cover of the book in miniature. The actual size of the book is 5¼ in. wide by 7¾ in. long.

HOW TO SECURE TWILIGHT TALES

Twilight Tales will be sent free, postpaid, as a premium to every subscriber who sends us one NEW six months' subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at 75 cents. This new subscription must be one not now on our list, or one to replace one now on our list. This is an excellent opportunity for our readers to get the book for themselves and to send the paper to a friend not now a subscriber, for half a year. To any of our present subscribers the book will be sent with one year's CHRISTIAN HERALD renewal for $2. If your subscription does not expire for some time to come, send in your renewal now with $2, and the date of expiration on your paper will be advanced for one year.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, AUGUST 21, 1912

VOL. 35—NO. 34. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

SHEEP IN CENTRAL PARK

See description in this issue

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

S. C. F., St. Albans Bay, Vt. Where was the land of Nod located, to which Cain was banished after the murder of Abel, and where he found his wife? Was it inhabited by the human race? If not, who was Cain's wife?

The land of Nod means simply "land of exile." We may gather that at the time referred to the human family had multiplied considerably. Cain's wife was doubtless some blood relative, probably a sister. From Gen. 4: 14 we may gather that, although only four persons are mentioned in the sacred narrative up to this point, the human race had increased rapidly and that Cain's fear was of punishment by his own relatives. Josephus says that the Jews held a tradition that Adam had thirty-three sons and twenty-three daughters.

A. B. C., Los Angeles, Calif. 1. Please tell me where we have authority for saying there were three wise men who came from the East to find the new-born Saviour. 2. Was the Maine blown up from the inside or the outside?

1. It is true that the Gospel account does not state the number of wise men, but simply says they were from the East. Many ancient traditions, however, have been preserved from the early days of the Christian Church, among them one which states that there were three Magian princes, and gives their names as Caspar, Melchior and Balthasar, who came with a large retinue of servants and camels, presumably from Arabia. They had been a long time on the journey and had seen the star in their own country, which had guided them to Palestine. 2. The report showed that the Maine was blown up from the outside.

Reader, New York. Is there a record of the blessing that our Saviour asked at the Last Supper?

The words Jesus employed are not recorded, but the blessing pronounced may have been that which was customarily asked by the head of the household at all paschal feasts. It is in these words: "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast created the fruit of the vine! Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who hast chosen us above all nations, and exalted us above all peoples, and hast sanctified us with thy commandments. Thou hast given us, O Lord our God, appointed seasons for joy, festivals and holy days for rejoicing, such as the feast of unleavened bread, the time of our liberation, for holy convocation, to commemorate our exodus from Egypt." As Jesus gave to the Last Supper a broader spiritual significance than the Passover possessed, it is probable that he gave to the opening words of blessing a character in keeping with his high purpose. The new Passover was not to be for the Jewish nation alone, but for the whole world.

D. B., Athens, Ga. 1. Is it true there is no danger of hydrophobia from the bite of a mad dog if the dog be killed afterward? 2. Is foam at the mouth a sign the dog is mad?

1. This is an old fallacy. The killing of a rabid dog can have no effect on his victim. If bitten, first be sure the animal is mad before slaying it, otherwise you will labor under the belief he was mad, and so worry yourself into thinking you have hydrophobia. If the dog was normal there is no danger of the disease whatever, in which case only the healing of the wound is to be considered. If you fear the dog was mad lose no time in visiting a surgeon. 2. No; a mad dog at first is listless and apathetic, then restless, and finally goes into spasms and convulsions, when very often foam appears at the mouth. Normal dogs foam at the mouth in summer just like horses from thirst induced by exertion or exhaustion and it is a humane act to give them water.

L. S., Newcastle, Pa. Is it true, as some Socialists claim, that the red flag was the one under which Americans fought for freedom in the Revolution?

There were many flags in the early days of the Revolution, but the red had never a place, for it had a sinister significance then as now. It seems that each colony, in the beginning of the revolt, adopted a flag of its own, but the rattlesnake flag with its suggestive motto, "Don't tread on me," was a general favorite. The oldest flag in America is preserved in the Free Library, Bedford, Mass. It is the flag of the Minute Men of April 19, 1775, the "embattled farmers" who fired the shot at Concord heard round the world. The ground is maroon-colored satin damask emblazoned with an outstretched arm in the hand of which is an uplifted sword, this emblem being in silver color. There are three circular figures representing cannon balls and upon a golden scroll are the words Vince aut Moriture (Conquer or Die). It is doubtful if any flag was carried at Bunker Hill; but if so, it was probably the Pine-tree Flag. The flag of the United Colonies had thirteen alternate red and white stripes with subjoined crosses of St. George and St. Andrew in a blue canton, and was raised on Prospect Hill, Cambridge, January 1, 1776, the first ensign to wave defiance to the enemy. From this banner the national flag was evolved by replacing the two crosses in the canton with thirteen stars in a circle, which arrangement was afterwards changed to horizontal lines.

The Children of the Founder of the Chinese Republic

THE children of Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the founder of the Chinese Republic, arrived in San Francisco on July 27, and were photographed just before leaving the steamer. They have been sent to the United States by their progressive father that they may have all the advantages of our educational institutions. From left to right those in the picture are Miss Sun On, Miss Sun Yuen, Mr. Sun Fo and his bride. This is not Mr. Sun Fo's first visit to America, as he was here for a time during the period of his father's activities in connection with the financing of the recent Chinese revolution.

On June 14, 1777, the American Congress at Philadelphia confirmed the adoption of this flag, and it was carried through the Revolution.

X. Y. Z. Are all sins pardonable, if the sinner truly repents and lives an upright Christian life afterwards?

Divine mercy extends to the uttermost. The invitation is that "whosoever will may come." The "unpardonable sin," which was frequently spoken of in the early days of the church, is believed to have been attributing the works of the Holy Spirit to the powers of darkness. With this exception, there is nothing in the category of human offenses that is beyond the reach of divine forgiveness. "Although your sins be like scarlet, they shall be white as snow," is the ancient promise given by God to men; "though they be like crimson, they shall be as wool." This is not to be interpreted, however, as an encouragement to sin, but rather as an inducement to repentance. If the sinner truly repents, imploring God's forgiveness for Jesus' sake; if he accepts him as Saviour and endeavors, with divine help, to live thereafter a Christian life, he will not only be forgiven, but will be kept from falling back into sin. This is the teaching of the Gospel, and it is exemplified in innumerable cases to-day. We have instances among the converts of the Bowery Mission and in Christian work everywhere of great sinners who have forsaken their evil ways and who are now living the new life, sustained by divine power.

"There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea."

We have the Saviour's distinct assurance, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." With regard to your last question, there is no punishment for sins that are forgiven. "Jesus paid it all." Remember, however, that sin leaves its indelible marks upon humanity, and these are ineradicable in this life.

W. H. B., Danbury, Conn. What is meant by the "new birth" (John 3: 7)?

It is an expression frequently used instead of "regeneration," to express the change from the natural state of sin to the new spiritualized life of the Christian. It is dying unto sin and being born again unto righteousness, a complete transformation of our moral nature, a new heart. Following after conversion and justification, the new birth or regeneration brings about a complete change of heart (see Heb. 10: 22; Gal. 6: 15; II. Cor. 5: 17; Col. 3: 9; Eph. 4: 22-24 and other passages).

Reader, Providence, R. I. What are we to understand by the battle of Armageddon, referred to in Revelation?

Armageddon is the name given to the last great battle to be fought in the world's history, in which the whole human race is arrayed on one side or the other. It is to be the final struggle of Antichrist. When it will be fought no one can tell; but that there will be a great struggle we are assured. Before that day comes "many false prophets shall arise and lead many astray . . . iniquity shall b multiplied and the love of many shall wa cold." There are to be false Christs, fals teachers doing signs and wonders, and leadin astray "even the elect if such were possible. It is to be preceded by a period of apostasy, i which the authority of the wicked one will b fully demonstrated, with the assumption divinity and the demand for universal worshi as God. In the present stage of the conflict b tween good and evil, when mighty forces a arrayed on both sides, we can see the for shadowing of the fierce struggle that is come; but we may rest assured that righteou ness will triumph in the end. (See the parall passage in Joel 3: 2-12). Armageddon is "t mountain of Megiddo," west of the Jordan, scene of early historic battles and the pla that would naturally suggest itself to the min of a Galilean writer to whom the place and i associations were familiar.

L. D. K., Morristown, N. J. Is there a d nomination known as the Pentecost Church of the Nazarene? If so, kind give the facts concerning it.

This denomination is thus described in T Christian Herald Almanac: "Its doctrine essentially in accord with that of the M. E Church; its ecclesiastical organization is con gregational; each congregation is independen in its management. Ordained ministers fro other denominations may be received on th vote of the church committee. The denomina tion has about 100 organizations, 6,657 com municants, 107 ministers, 82 Sunday school 5,039 scholars."

M. S. H., Regina, Sask. 1. What is the grea est depth that has been penetrated into th earth by sinking or boring? 2. Of wha is the center of the earth composed?

1. A little over a mile. 2. Only inference can be drawn as to the composition, densit and temperature of the interior nucleus lyin four thousand miles beneath the surface. Som think it is a molten mass, but this is untenab in view of the fact that the earth is rigid as steel ball, therefore the pressure at the dee est part is tremendously great, and conse quently no considerable portion can be liqui There must be an inconceivable heat, howeve for the temperature rises about one degree f every fifty feet of depth. At about twent miles down the most refractory metals woul melt were it not that the pressure of supe incumbent masses tends to keep them in th solid state. Volcanoes draw their supplie from reservoirs of molten rock a short distanc below the surface.

Miscellaneous

J. E. P., Brooker, Fla. Yes, he is a Christia and, we believe, either a Presbyterian or Congregationalist.

If the correspondent from Bancroft, Wis who wrote a letter some time ago to THE MAI BAG, will send his name and address we wi try to answer his questions.

A. E. K., Harmony. We quite agree wit you that for this nation to take up the Pap yoke, which Italy, France and Portugal ha thrown off, would be a crowning folly.

Mrs. Gertie Decker, Newfield, N. Y., woul be grateful to any reader who should send h the address of her brother, Arthur P. Howe who was in California twenty years ago.

W. J. T. Our answer with regard to ba tism had no reference to the laws of Moses, b to the methods presumed to be in use in th primitive Christian Church. No one can do matize on the matter, however. It is a contr verted subject purely.

J. E. M., Fullerton, Texas. Luke 21: 23-2 is a divinely prophetic passage with a doub significance. Like certain other prophecies the Saviour, it has relation not only to event impending in the near future, but also to th Second Coming and the end of the age. Th has already been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG i a recent issue.

AN INSPIRING BOOK

I received the book, Twilight Tales. I a delighted with Mrs. Sangster's work. I ha enjoyed it very much and it has been an i spiration to me. MRS. MARY PIERSALL. Winchester, Ky.

LOVED MRS. SANGSTER'S WRITINGS

I wish to let you know that I received Mr Sangster's book, Twilight Tales, and thank yo very much. I certainly do appreciate it, fo I loved to read Mrs. Sangster's writings. Darby, Pa. MRS. J. PARKER.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 21, 1912

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

A Winter Scene in Konia

The Wood Bazaar in Konia

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF ST. PAUL

THE OLDEST CITY IN THE WORLD

The Gate of the Koranic School at Konia

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor

WE NOW follow the great apostle from the Pisidian Antioch, where he had been so hardly treated, to the city which the great archeological authority, Sir William Ramsay, considers the oldest city in the world, the city of Iconium, or Konia, as it is called to-day. In this journey we are following St. Paul from persecution to persecution, from tribulations to still greater tribulations, yet we can hear him say with undaunted courage and cheerful voice, "Rejoice, and again I say, rejoice." The road the apostle must have taken from Antioch to Iconium is not far from the path of the modern traveler who would journey from Antioch to Ak Shehir, and then, taking the Anatolian railway which we left at this point in order to visit Antioch, he will proceed in a southeasterly direction until he comes to the modern town of Konia, which, unlike most of the cities of St. Paul, is perhaps of as much importance to-day as in the apostles' time.

After crossing the mountains in the neighborhood of Antioch we come at once to the borders of the great central table-land which averages more than three thousand feet above the sea, and which is such a marked feature of Asia Minor. On a smaller scale, it is not unlike the great central plateau of North America, which embraces western Kansas and western Nebraska, much of Colorado and the great plains beyond the Rocky Mountains. In reaching our own great central plateau from the east the rise is so gradual that one scarcely knows that he is going up hill until he finds himself to his surprise nearly a mile high under the shadow of the Rocky Mountains. Not so is the traveler beguiled who journeys across the central plain of Turkey. A rough, steep, dangerous road leads him from any part of the coast to the crest of the mountain ranges that almost completely surround Asia Minor, and encircle like a mighty fortress the great plain that lies between them. On a clear day one can see the minarets of Konia from the mountain heights thirty miles away, and between him and his destination stretches a level prairie, snow-covered in winter, but smiling in the spring and summer in some parts at least with an almost tropical vegetation.

From time immemorial this plain has been noted for its fertility. Wherever water can be obtained it becomes as a garden of the gods. But water is scarce in the plain of Konia, especially in these days of broken aqueducts and ancient disused wells, and not until one comes within some five miles of Konia, where the streams from the Lystrian Hills irrigate the soil, does the unusual natural fertility of the country display itself. For miles, however, in a great circle about the modern city, the gardens and vineyards, the fruit trees of various kinds and the olive orchards form as attractive a scene as the eye often rests upon.

The modern Iconium has very much to interest the traveler, and I know of no place in all Asia Minor which has left a more abiding impression upon my mind than this city which we are now approaching with Paul and Barnabas. Our visit, to be sure, was in midwinter. The snow was still piled high in some of the streets; the wind blew shrill and gustily through the narrow alleys; but a day or two of warm sunshine contended with the north wind for the mastery, and changed the whole aspect of things even in this forbidding season.

I have already spoken of Iconium as the oldest city in the world, on the authority of Sir William Ramsay the archeologist, who has done more to elucidate Bible geography than any other man. He acknowledges that Damascus rivals Konia in antiquity, but the story of both cities goes back before the dawn of recorded time.

The city derived its name from the Eikones or images of mud which, according to the ancient legend of the place, were made by Prometheus and Athena at the command of Jupiter, who, after the great flood caused the winds to blow upon the eikones and they became living men and women. Thus, according to this tradition, Iconium was the first place settled after the flood. But the traditions of the place go back even beyond the flood to the time of King Nannakos, who was told by the oracle that when he died there should come a mighty deluge in which all men should perish. Thereupon he called all the people together to a great temple and cried so bitterly and with such a flood of tears, in which his Phrygian subjects joined, that "the weeping in the time of Nannakos" became a proverb even among the Greeks of later days.

The golden age of Iconium, however, both commercially and politically, was not in the time of

The Courtyard of the Tekke or Mosque of the Whirling Dervishes

Continued on page 816

THE PROGRESSIVES NAME A TICKET

